In the second half, Williams inserted Brown into the lineup and the move paid off immediately. Midway through the period, Williams went on a 17-4 tear to lead 54-42. Hedeman and Brown keyed the run by grabbing offensive rebounds and dominating inside. The smaller Dutchwomen could get no closer than 10 points the rest of the way.

"We came in thinking Union would be no problem. In the second half, we wore them down," said Crouchley. She made all of eight of her free throw attempts down the stretch to seal the game and lead Williams with 24 points. Cadigan added 16. Hedeman cleared 20 rebounds, and Brown pulled down 10. Gina Brooks scored 14 points for Union and Robin Romber grabbed 16 rebounds.

Williams now stands at 7-2 and has one game remaining on its successful homestand. The Ephs host Vassar on Wednesday before playing in a tourney at Connecticut College over the break.

In Other Ivory Towers

Worcester Polytechnic Institute
Five workers were injured at WPI last December when the bottom literally dropped out of the Fuller Laboratories construction site there, reported the WPI Newsmag. The presence of too much wet concrete in a small area caused an eight by 14 foot section of the building's main floor to drop out. Of six men working on the floor section, five fell into the basement where they were pulled out of wet cement and styrofoam that had fallen on top of them. All five men were treated for minor injuries. The sixth man was able to save himself by holding on to the girders. Several organizations are currently investigating the incident.

Dartmouth
An unidentified male intruder entered Dartmouth's Russell Sage dormitory on January 18 and stole glimpses of two showering female students, according to The Dartmouth. At 1:45 p.m. he entered the first floor bathroom and pulled back the shower curtain. The student said she was not scared because the incident happened so quickly. She added that she called out to him that she would be finished with the shower momentarily. At 2 p.m. the intruder entered the fourth floor bathroom, but ran into one of the stalls when the showering student saw him. The Hanover police are currently trying to locate the suspect from the victims' descriptions.

University of Michigan
The price of partying has gone up at the University of Michigan after the Ann Arbor City Council has raised the fines for noise violations to $500 from the previous $100. The Michigan Daily reported that the new penalty was almost a good deal more harsh. The original proposal had included a possible 90-day jail sentence for violators. The new regulations are directed toward fraternities which border a residential neighborhood. According to Ann Arbor police officer Richard Beck, the police have received frequent reports of students "fornicating, urinating, and defecating" on residents' lawns. He said such complaints have led to stricter punishments for fraternities' disruptive behavior.

compiled by Dan Skwire from college newspapers

Come Daily in the Alley at the Elysian Fields Gallery

(formerly The Studio)
Featuring handknit woolen and mohair sweaters, unique crafted jewelry, oversized paisley scarves and shawls, silk pajamas and kimonos, and museum prints for your dorm or favorite Valentine.

Hours: Mon-Sat 10:5-3:30 and Sun 12-5:00

Elysian Fields Gallery

Eph's Alley, off Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-4707
Elyse and Jonathan Meer '83, Proprietors

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

Embarrassing moments at gene parties

"Sol! Planning on roaming the neighborhood with some of your buddies today?"

It Takes All Kinds...

BY NORMA STEINBERG/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

ACROSS
1 An ex-listing info
6 Libran symbol
11 Space
15 Sch. groups
19 Tile picture
20 In the wrong
22 About
23 —avis
24 He's an unwelcome cutter
26 He's unfriendly
28 "...against
30 Hamlet
36 Canines, e.g.
38 Pasadena
40 Dense or flowers
42 Sanctuaries
43 Kin of aves.
44 Peyton or Ark
45 Poon
46 Vernal harbingers
47 Fellowship
48 Cacophonous
49 Lot's hometown
50 Sifts
51 He's in the museum
52 Chew the fat
53 Deca
54 Pepper mint or hamburger
55 Follows
56 Set dealing with currents
57 dieu
58 (knelling bench)
59 Shoe ties
60 Lords it over
61 Long hikes
62 Be miserly
63 Germanic exclamations
64 Lunkhead
65 Denser or mawkish
66 Jousting
67 Kin of aves.
68 Omsan or Kinghi
69 He's at a tax break
70 Used a umbrella
71 Whistled
72 D sharp
73 Dri
74 Book of the Bible
75 She's a go-getter
76 Deca
77 Timetable info
78 His hard
79 Squamous
80 Is indebted
81 Zulu's "The Shop"
82 Locates
83 Spin
84 Showy flower
85 Urban's largest city
87 Cover person
88 Chum, sometimes
89 Perky rhythms
90 Wooden shoes
91 Jousting
92 He's a belligerent
93 Places
94 Vernal
95 It has skits and songs
96 Lark
97 Dialects of regions
101 "Easy..." of a second chance
102 Blackthorn fruits
103 "...Love
104 "You," 1934 song
106 American
107 Ellington's "Doll"
108 Separate
109 Germ
110 He's determined
111 He's hanging around
112 "Smile Be Your Umbrella"
113 Took off
114 —de corps
115 "Chief"
116 Brides in Barcelona
117 Helen's as pay
118 Mili runs
119 Cries of surprise
120 Viewpoints
121 More frosted
122 Welly's "Wedding"
123 Like some ends
124 Positive-thinking man
125 Religious or cooking blocs
126 Thought: Comb form and name-sakes
127 Transmitted
128 Creative pursuits
129 Info at depositions
130 Ferry's berth
131 Intestinal
132 What epigrams do
133 Jazzman Winding

DOWN
1 Dumbwaiter
2 Keys' cousins
3 Festive
4 —a tubique
5 Carlyle's native land
6 Choose
7 Minus's realm
8 Foot part
9 Eng.
10 Huges
11 Paella
12 Responsibility
13 Revolutionary
14 Smooth
15 Smooth
16 Chari-b piece
17 Ordi
18 Heat, for short
19 Easy basket
20 City on the Rhone
21 Yuppies
22 Degrees
23 Complaining
24 —a tubique
25 Is inclined
26 He has nerves
27 Charon's river
28 Uses a lever
29 Kinds
30 Pelicans
31 Uses a telescope
32 Arch of old
33 N.B.A. fume
34 Smooth
35 Chari-b piece
36 Ordi
37 Heat, for short
38 Easy basket
39 City on the Rhone
40 She gives you a second chance
41 Ventilated
42 Carpoys
43 Cocoon
44 Residents
45 Hardy villain
46 Helen's kidnapper
47 Part of a yard
48 Discrimination
49 Like some dirt roads
50 Severe
51 Containers for 52 Tag
53 "Bay,"
54 Sticks it out
55 Collis of TV
56 Desires
57 Unconquered
58 Chavez
59 Actress Sommer
60 "I am monarch —I survey" —Cower
61 Wendell
62 Off of films
63 Frocks
64 Helen's kidnapper
65 Part of a yard
66 Discrimination
67 Like some dirt roads
68 Severe
69 Containers for 70 Tag
71 "Bay,"
72 Sticks it out
73 Collis of TV
74 Desires
75 Unconquered
76 Chavez
77 Actress Sommer

ANSWER KEY ON PAGE 8

Happy Birthday!

The Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute (pictured above) will be celebrating its 35th anniversary in 1990. In preparation for this event, the galleries in the original building are being renovated and redecorated to restore them to their 1955 appearance.

College enrollment is still on the rise

College Press Service
College enrollment nationwide seems to have increased again, despite long-standing predictions that it would fall, the American Council on Education said January 5.

In all, enrollment, which nationwide should stay at about 12.3 million students, seemed to be up about 1 percent in the 14 states the ACE surveyed, ACE Vice President Elaine El-Khawass said.

She said that "increasing community college enrollment, stepped up minority recruitment, more part-time study and rising participation and retention rates among traditional-aged students" are responsible.

While waiting for the annual official nationwide head counts from the ACE and, in February, from the U.S. Department of Education, a wide variety of agencies reported terrible overcrowding.

Some of the worst cases of jammed dorms and overcrowded classrooms have been reported at the Universities of Miami, Texas and Connecticut, Clarion University of Pennsylvania, Mississippi State, North Carolina State, and Grinnell College in Iowa.

El-Khawass, like other experts, said enrollments will start falling soon, noting that 1992's high school graduating classes are expected to shrink by 12 percent.

Agencies from the ACE to the Education Department have been predicting precipitous declines in the campus population for each fall since 1981.

Prop 42 a needed change

continued from page 12
to student-athletes the message that academics are important. This weak emphasis on learning has a negative impact on their academic motivation, and thus undermines education, the ultimate purpose of attending college. A student-athlete who receives minimal education has few job opportunities (he cannot play professionally after college).

The old system therefore closes more doors for athletes than the new system; countless athletes have already graduated from college unable to read or write. Props 42 and 48 send a message of academic priority to athlete-students that they literally cannot afford to ignore.

Many question the NCAA's place in the academic arena. However, by admitting marginal students and doing little to motivate them academically (as low graduation rates for athletes indicate), the universities have proven that guidance from a source outside the universities is necessary. The NCAA therefore has a responsibility to send a clear signal of academic importance to student-athletes.

Prop 42 and 48 open doors, they don't close them. If you indicate to people that they can succeed in life without studying hard, you are hurting them rather than helping them. Like the person who would take bitter medicine in order to get better, the student-athlete is forced to take academics seriously if his scholarship is at stake. This is the point that Thompson and his supporters are missing.

Prop 42 misses the mark

continued from page 12
them. But, at the same time, many of the athletes thrive when given the chance (for the first time, in many cases) to expand intellectually. Thompson's Hoyas, for example, have posted a 79% graduation rate in his years there. Are we then to disregard this overwhelming majority, and to point our fingers instead at the few athletes who, like many of their non-athletic classmates who will not be affected by Proposition 42, do not fall in love with the books?

Improvement of the mind, a true college education also involves the development of each student's body and spirit. The idea of minimum bench press requirements or mandatory proof of moral fortitude for entrance into college seems ridiculous indeed, but is nonetheless little different from the standards of Proposition 42.

Thus, the proposition as it stands seems almost a contradiction in logic. Instead of snatching the opportunity for a college education from the hands of an athlete who has grown up with little in the way of either intellectual encouragement or financial support, we should instead do all that we can to encourage his educational pursuits. Indeed, if we must act in a discriminating manner by restricting private scholarships (which is also a questionable attitude), we should favor those who have not been exposed to the advantages of a higher education in the past.

Proposition 42 is built on shaky grounds and does not solve the problem that it addresses, and thus we hope that John Thompson's noble actions accomplish their purpose: the reevaluation of

Sports

Track team blows by Union and Hamilton

by Steve Brody
The track team found itself in Albany, New York, on Saturday, competing in a tri-meet against host Union College and Hamilton.

Both the men's and women's teams came away with convincing victories, spurred primarily by the Ephs' superiority in the running events. On Sunday, several Williams men competed in an Athletic Congress [TAC] meet at Harvard.

Hamilton took an early lead in the men's meet, with strong performances in the first field events. They also used team tactics to capture seven of the eleven points in the mile. Hamilton put two of its top distance runners in the race, hoping for a 1-2 finish. After Eph Dave Nadelman '89 led the runners through the first quarter in a slow 71 seconds, the Hamilton duo moved to the front to hit the half mile in 2:21, with Nadelman on their heels.

It was here that the race picked up, as Nadelman tried to pass on the outside, but was boxed into the inside lane. The race entered its final two laps, with the Continentals still in the lead. Nadelman was able to get outside to lane two, but the Continentals packed themselves together. Nadelman exchanged elbows with the slower Continental, Mark Duncan, and then surged ahead to take second place on the inside. However, the tactics had allowed the race leader to get away, and the Eph captain had to settle for second place.

Tewksbury brings redemption
Redemption came in the 1000 meters. Facing Duncan, David Tewksbury '89 found himself in an intense battle as the race entered the final 400 meters. He had the lead going into the last lap, but Duncan passed him and then cut inside ahead of a slower runner who was being lapped. Forced to check his stride, it looked like the Continental strategy would again prevail. Angered, however, Tewksbury put in a furious race-ending kick that propelled him to victory by less than a stride's length.

Nadelman met Tewksbury at the finish. "You beat [him] at his own game," he said, as the Continental team looked on.

"You should have more tact," said Duncan.

"You should use fair tactics," Nadelman replied.

Back on the track, the Ephs secured victory with strong showings in the 50-meter dash and the 3000 meters. Larry Smith '92 won the 50 with fellow freshman Jonathan Linley third, then took the 3000 meters later in the day, coming from behind with a furious final 60 meters. In the 3000, Brian Coan '92 led an

Eph sweep of the top three places as he cruised to victory with an impressive time of 9:12. Bill McKinley '92 and Steve Brody '90 followed him closely, as the

Tewksbury put in a furious race-ending kick that propelled him to victory by less than a stride . . .

Continental's chances for victory were shut down.

The Williams relay teams made sure that there would be no miracle comeback by Hamilton, as Rob Lake '92 outdistanced his Continental competitor for a second place finish in the mile relay. Eric Matson '92, Gil McCabe '89, Jim Simmons '89, and Dale Johnson '90, won the two-mile relay.

Wome dominate
The women's competition was completely dominated by the Ephs. Anne Platt once again won two races, this week cruising to victories in the mile and 800 meters. Christie Dempsey '89 pulled away from the field in the 1000 meters to win comfortably, and in the 400 meters, Dawn MacAuley '89 passed her Hamilton opponent in the final stretch for a dramatic win. MacAuley also won the 55-meter hurdles, and teammate Kira Shields '91 was third.

Field event competition saw more strong Eph performances. MacAuley and Shelley Torgerson '92 took first and second in the high jump, while Sue Northen '89 was second in the long jump and first in the triple jump, leading an Eph sweep ahead of Norfolk Honda '89 and Claire Manwell '89.

At Harvard, Joe McGinn '89 threw a personal record 52' 4 1/2" to take seventh in the weight throw. Brad Behr '92 ran a p. r. of 5:22 seconds in the 400 meters, while freshmen distance runners Brendan Kearse, 4:51 in the mile, and Bill McKinley, 2:40 in the 1000 meters, performed well on short rest.

Williams will face stiff competition this weekend. The men's team faces MIT, quite possibly the best team in New England, and Tufts at Towne Field House Friday evening, while the women travel to Smith for an invitational meet Saturday. A few members of the team will compete in the Greater Boston Track Club Invitational at Harvard on Sunday.

M. squash

continued from page 12
Doug Gilbert pushed his opponent to five exciting games before bowing out. Inspired by Rodriguez's display, Gilbert came out with a flourish to take the first game 16-15. His opponent then slowed the pace down in the next two games, throwing up soft lobs to take Gilbert out of his game.

"Doug needs to make each match an athletic experience," said Assaline. "It's best when he forces the match into an athletic duel which requires a frenetic pace."

Gilbert dropped the second game 15-10 and was down 14-8 in the third when he rallied to 14 all to force the game into overtime before falling 17-15.

"I [can get] this guy -- I know it," Gilbert said after the third game. True to his word he squeaked out an 18-17 win in the fourth game with several points that kept the gallery tensely on the edge of their seats. In the fifth and final game, Gilbert's opponent returned to his slowing tactics, and the Williams senior fell 15-11.

Chris Pentz '91 also stretched his opponent to five games before falling, while Rob Ilig '91 and John Birgbauer '90 won at the 10th and 11th slots.

The J.V. squad encountered a similar result against the deep team from Haver, losing 7-2. Seniors Peter J. Dubois and Julio Sachs posted 3-0 victories.

"It's as if we played Duke, North Carolina, Georgetown and Illinois in succession," said Assaline, putting the teams recent schedule in basketball terms. "Now I believe we can finish the season without a loss." The Ephs face Tufts and Rochester Saturday at home before taking time off for winter break.

Dartmouth too deep
A bad scouting report on Dartmouth underrated the strength of the Green and left the Ephs disappointed Tuesday when they fell 7-2 in a match they felt they could win. Despite playing what Dartmouth coach Chuck Kenyon called "the strongest team in Dartmouth history" the Ephs were unhappy with what they considered a flat performance.

The bright spots in the match occurred at the number two and six slots where Hopper and captain Lewis Fisher '89 both came away with 3-0 victories. For Fisher it marked the beginning of a comeback from injuries that have plagued him all season. For Hopper the match was a display in high velocity geometry as his Green opponent rifled shots into all corners in an attempt to frazzle the young freshman. Hopper, however, was unfazed and crisply returned the tough shots.

The J.V. squad encountered a similar result against the deep team from Haver, losing 7-2. Seniors Peter J. Dubois and Julio Sachs posted 3-0 victories.

"It's as if we played Duke, North Carolina, Georgetown and Illinois in succession," said Assaline, putting the teams recent schedule in basketball terms. "Now I believe we can finish the season without a loss." The Ephs face Tufts and Rochester Saturday at home before taking time off for winter break.

Presidents weak on activism

College Press Service

College presidents are too involved in day-to-day administrative chores to strive toward major improvements on their campuses, two national college leaders charged at a recent symposium. University of Wisconsin-Madison Chancellor Donna E. Shalala, an outspoken advocate of administrator activism, used the words "meek" and

"scaredy cats" to describe college presidents, when it comes to using their power to reform colleges.

"If you asked Americans who the country's top ten leaders are, they probably would not list a college president," asserted Shalala at a symposium on "Learning and Leadership" sponsored by the College Board, which develops many of the standardized tests given to high school and college students.

College Board President Donald Stewart agreed, and called upon college presidents to look beyond worrying about financial matters and mediating among competing interests and fundraising. Education leaders, Stewart said, should be more concerned with "shaping values" than with "immediate goals of career preparation and monetary gain."

WTF

continued from page 1
success of the theater, Renzi said.

"The future of the festival is really rosy," Renzi said. The Foundation has raised over $800,000 and announced last week that the rest of the goal of one million dollars will be raised as a memorial to the late director.

Bonnie Monte, acting executive artistic director, will be running next summer's festival with the help of senior associate directors Peter Hunt and Austin Pendleton. "[Paschopoulos] built it to last. His spirit ran that festival and will continue to do so. He did indeed build a legacy," Monte said.

"The theater will not die. He was one of the closest people to being irreplaceable, but he was the first one to say he wasn't. We will always have a warm spot for him," Renzi said. Paschopoulos was engaged to New York actress Jean Hackett. They were to be married in April. He is survived by his sister who resides in Greece.

In addition, one can only speculate at the seemingly limitless means around the proposition, many of which are more corrupt and disheartening than the problem itself: outlawed booster aid, which debases the academic power of the school, pressure on high school teachers to alter recruits' grades, cheating in secondary school in order to "earn" a C, and perhaps an increase in the number of cases of the mindless Alonzo Mourning Syndrome (the Georgetown recruit took the SAT multiple times in order to retain his freshman eligibility).

Finally, although colleges are, first and foremost, institutions established for the improvement of the mind, a true college education also involves the development of each student's body and spirit. The idea of minimum bench press requirements or mandatory proof of moral fortitude for entrance into college seems ridiculous indeed, but is nonetheless little different from the standards of Proposition 42.

Thus, the proposition as it stands seems almost a contradiction in logic. Instead of snatching the opportunity for a college education from the hands of an athlete who has grown up with little in the way of either intellectual encouragement or financial support, we should instead do all that we can to encourage his educational pursuits. Indeed, if we must act in a discriminating manner by restricting private scholarships (which is also a questionable attitude), we should favor those who have not been exposed to the advantages of a higher education in the past.

Proposition 42 is built on shaky grounds and does not solve the problem that it addresses, and thus we hope that John Thompson's noble actions accomplish their purpose: the reevaluation of

Proposition 42 is built on shaky grounds and does not solve the problem that it addresses, and thus we hope that John Thompson's noble actions accomplish their purpose: the reevaluation of

Skiers' day at Bates is average

by Marc Beltz and Jeff Blersack

"The more things change, the more they stay the same," might sum up the results of the Nordic portion of the Bates Carnival held last weekend in Rumford, Maine. At Bates, the first NCAA qualifying meet of the year, the University of Vermont vanquished all comers with strong performances from their Scandinavian skiers.

Sturla Hagen and Soor Krogstad, both hailing from Norway by way of UVM, placed first and second, respectively, in the individual race on Friday. Hagen's time of 47:54 for 15 kilometers put him a good two minutes ahead of Krogstad and almost four up on the next finisher. The machine-like pace of the Norwegians may be best described by Williams assistant coach Peter Weiss: "Sturla came up the last hill like he was shot out of a cannon."

Npt quite as explosive, but equally impressive, was Williams freshman John Coequey's eighth-place effort. A scant 15 seconds behind, Coequey was Williams captain Mac Nadeau '89, skiing with one hand out of the strap to protect his dislocated shoulder. Local skiing legend Todd Neldecker '90 rounded out the score for the Ephs with a powerful 13th-place finish. The tally after the individual contest put the men's squad in position to take third.

The women had equally bizarre results. As the first leg skiers came round, Williams supporters were delighted to see an Eph holding a strong second. Unfortunately, it was the wrong Eph: freshman Kim Boves skied second string due to a lingering head cold. All was not lost, however, as a second Williams skier came into view in fourth. Froberg had skied a heroic lead-off for Williams; after losing her pole and seven places at the 3K mark, she had battled back to fourth.

Bokman set things straight, pulling the Ephs into second by the time she tagged off to anchor Seemann. Seemann, drained by her stellar performance in the individual race, was caught by Dartmouth and Middlebury over the hilly course. She held onto fourth, giving the women's Nordic team second overall. The women's B relay team rounded out by sophomores Carrie Van Winkle and Wendy Thug placed an unexpected seventh.

Head coach Bud Fisher was pleased with both teams, but hopes that next

A wind chill factor of -30 delayed the men's relay for an hour. When the race finally got under way the A team was led out by Coequey, followed closely by Grey Davis '89, relegated to the B team by a shoulder injury. The two were battling for fourth when the freshman went down, taking the senior with him. By the time they got to their feet they were skiing in ninth and tenth spots. They held those positions when they tagged off in Neldecker, skilling for the A team, and Marc Beltz '91 skilling for the second squad.

Downhill meet at Bates
Meanwhile, the men's alpine ski team travelled to Mt. Abram in Bethel, Maine, last weekend for the Bates Winter Carnival. The men's team took third behind the University of Vermont and Dartmouth, while the women were fourth behind UVM, Dartmouth, and Middlebury.

The solid men's finish was the result of performances by sophomores Jason Priest and Bill Crowley. Priest followed eighth-place David Bruc '92, with an eleventh-place giant slalom finish. Priest and Crowley finished seventh and ninth, respectively, in Saturday's slalom. "[They] really came through for us in both events," said head alpine coach Ed Grees.

Two of the team's strongest slalom skiers, Bruc and Linden Seed '91, did not complete Saturday's event. "We expected icy conditions with the cold," said senior Charlie Kaplan, "but the snow was soft and that hurt us." The Eph skiers had taken advantage of icy slopes at the Castleton Carnival the previous week for a team victory.

The women were led by strong skiing from senior captain Mari Omland and sophomore Amy Sullivan. Omland took 14th in the giant slalom and eighth in the slalom. Sullivan was eleventh in the G.S. and tenth in the slalom. Freshman Ariana Grosse contributed a 17th-place finish in the slalom.

According to alpine coach Ed Grees, the team's performance could be characterized as "average." When Bruc, Seed, and J.P. Parisien '90 are skiing well, the men's team has the capacity to seriously challenge powerhouses like UVM and Dartmouth. The Ephs showed depth this week by pulling out their third-place finish despite below-average performances by these three. The women's squad holds similar potential when a strong team performance is turned in, and both squads look to be serious contenders for the Eastern Championship.

M. hockey

continued from page 10
keeper, Connecticut, however, refused to give up, tying the contest once more at the 19:00 mark, when center Joe Cantone broke into the Eph zone and stuffed the biscuit past Zolin for a short-handed goal.

Down to the wire
The Ephs killed off a two-man disadvantage early in the final stanza on the strength of several sharp saves by Zolin and an impenetrable triangle defense. Soon afterwards, Williams brought the crowd to its feet when Putnam notched his seventh goal of the campaign, snuffing a rebound past the sprawling Camel keeper. This lead vanished soon enough, however, as Cantone carried the puck through the Eph zone and rocketed a low wrist shot past Zolin to even the contest at 4-4 with only five minutes remaining.

The Camels had been trying to rouse themselves and create some intensity with hasty shots and shouts of encouragement from the bench, and Cantone's goal seemed to carry the teams to even new heights, as both teams forechecked aggressively and made quick, dangerous passes. Finally, the frantic pace led to the final goal of the night, as Camel sophomore Mark Chase picked up a rebound in front of the Eph net and slammed it home for a 5-4 Connecticut lead.

Even after Chase's tally, however, the game remained in question. The Camels sustained a witless streak of penalties leading to several Eph power plays late in the game. The advantages, however, led nowhere, as Williams was unable to set up in the Camel zone and the Connecticut defenders repeatedly sent the puck down ice in order to waste the remaining ticks on the clock.

"I thought we could beat them," McCormick said. "I knew it would be a tough game, but I was disappointed in the way it turned out. Perhaps we tried to win too hard."

However, the loss did not prevent McCormick from eyeing the upcoming four-game homestand with high expectations. "This is the real tough part of our schedule," McCormick noted, "but we're looking for four wins. We can't get our heads down too low; we've got games to play, and we have to get back on track."

The Ephs will attempt to do just that when they face a powerful Holy Cross squad tonight at 7:30, and head into weekend contests with Bowdoin and Colby.

YOU QUALIFY FOR INSTANT CREDIT!
Start making credit purchases IMMEDIATELY! We will send you a Member Credit Card at once with NO CREDIT CHECK. Buy any Jewelry, Clothing, Sporting Goods, Watches, Electronics & MORE! All with installment payments out of our "Giant 100+ Pages Catalog." Take 12 months to repay. Your personal credit card is a second I.D. - valuable for check cashing, etc. plus your Students Credit Group A-1 reference will be on file to help you obtain other credit cards. So send in your $5 catalog deposit now. (refundable with your first order)
Establish your credit today! 100% Satisfaction Guaranteed (or your Money Back)
Name _____ City _____ State _____ Zip _____
P.O. BOX 4649
FORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA 33338
MEMBERS STUDENT CREDIT CARD

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
16 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-4808

West Package and Variety Store
Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081
Winter Study Specials
12 oz. Molson Golden case 14.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Heineken or Beck's case 17.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Rolling Rock Export case 11.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Hopfenperle Swiss Beer 13.99 plus deposit
Cash and Carry: 1/2 keg Meisterbrau - $25 plus deposit
For quality over quantity, check out our variety of unique beers and ales

Typing Service by published writer. Limited editing available. Typed or handwritten MS.
Word processing disk storage.
From $1.50/page.
Tel. 458-2614

The Berkshire Museum presents
John Zorn's Naked City
Friday February 3, 8 pm
This long awaited five piece band has been formed to perform all aspects of John Zorn's eclectic musical personality. In addition to performing Mr. Zorn's unique compositions, Naked City will perform a selection of material from film scores, hard core, Jazz, blues, surf music, etc.
The Berkshire Museum Pittsfield 443-7171
Tickets: $20; $15 for students and Museum members supported in part by the New England Foundation of the Arts and Drome Sound Music Store. Co-produced in conjunction with outward Visions Touring Program and Hips Road, Inc.

SAVE THIS AD & Come To DRUMMOND CLEANERS
Spring Street, Williamstown
Jim Drummond is at it again... He wants to clean you up!!
SPECIAL SAVINGS
On Drycleaning
4 for 2 similar articles for the price of 2 Jan. 16 to Jan. 21
SWEATERS reg. $3.50 Now $1.50 Jan. 23-Jan. 28
Coats & Parkas reg. $25.00 Now $4.00 Jan. 30-Feb. 5
Household Goods (Drapes, curtains, seat covers, cushion covers, etc.) 50% off Feb. 6-Feb. 11
Don't forget we're now in North Adams at The Laundry Club, 41 Union St., (413) 664-6789
Drummond Cleaners 45 Spring St. Williamstown, MA. (413) 458-4221
Meadow Landscapes 119 Park St. Williamstown, MA. (413) 458-5837
O'Dell Upholstery 45 Elm St. Williamstown, MA. (413) 458-3884

BERKSHIRE STATIONERY
Factory Outlet Store
40% off
• Thesis Paper
• Stationery
• Notes
• Typing Paper
• Letter Paper
• Jigsaw Puzzles
Windsor Mill
121 Union St., North Adams, Mass.
Open Mon.-Sat 10 - 5
Eaton FINE LETTER PAPERS

CLARKSBURG BREAD CO.
PRODUCTS BAKED FRESH FROM SCRATCH DAILY
Coffee • Tea • Juice • Soft Drinks
OPEN EVERY DAY (413) 458-2251
SPRING BREAK
NASSAU/PARADISE ISLAND FROM $299.00
PACKAGE INCLUDES:
ROUNDTrip AIR, TRANSFERS, 7 NIGHTS HOTEL, BEACH PARTIES, FREE LUNCH, CRUISE, FREE ADMISSION TO NIGHTCLUBS, TAXES AND MORE!!!
CANCUN PACKAGES ALSO AVAILABLE!!
ORGANIZE SMALL GROUP, EARN FREE TRIP!
1-800-231-0113 OR (203) 967-3330

Sports

Hockey squad takes detour

by Kerr Houston
Coach Bill McCormick and his men's hockey team looked long and hard in the mirror for the first time last week, and they were not pleased with what they saw. Entering the toughest segment of their 1988-89 ECAC campaign, the team dropped a 6-2 decision to a surprising Middlebury squad and then lost a disappointing 5-4 contest to Connecticut College, leaving fans and players alike searching for answers and signs of hope.

The week started off pleasantly, as the Ephs were riding the crest of a two-game winning streak and a 5-4 record, and senior co-captain Will Putnam was named ECAC East-West Division 11 player of the week for his part in the team's victories over Westfield State and New England College.

These pleasant memories were not nearly enough, however, to carry Williams past a determined Middlebury squad. The Panthers entered the game an unimpressive 3-5-1, but they took firm control on Tuesday night, scoring just 1:40 into the contest and eventually racking up five tallies before the Ephs could muster their first goal.

Panthers dominate
Instrumental in Middlebury's early surge were forward Mike Kelly, who chipped in a goal and two assists, and junior linemate Tim Quinn, who added three assists in the first two periods. Spurred by netminder Brent Truchon, who recorded 31 saves on the evening, the Panther defense also played well, shutting out the powerful Williams red line of Ron Van Belle '90, Sean Seguin '91 and Putnam. In the previous two contests, the three had combined for nine tallies and nineteen points.

The Ephs finally summoned a bit of offense in the final stanza, with goals by Chris Conway '89 and Bob Santny '90, but then struggled throughout the power play, a source of concern for McCormick. The Ephs' power play unit was blanked by Middlebury, and has been able to cash in on only 16 percent of their advantages so far this season. "We had no force on the power play against Middlebury, and we just weren't able to take advantage of our man advantages," McCormick said.

Different story, same ending
The Ephs returned home on Saturday night to face a talented Connecticut College team that was coming off its first loss of the season. After the teams traded several weak shots, the Camels drew first blood at the 6:06 mark, when senior defenseman Jim Brown sent a low wrist shot toward the Williams cage that deflected off sophomore goalie Matt Zolin's pads, traveled high into the air, and eventually wound up in the Eph net.

However, the Camel lead was a short one indeed, as Williams defender Rick Laferriere '91 followed a flurry of several shots with a slapshot from just inside the blue line, knotting the game at one apiece. The scoring continued minutes later, when Connecticut winger Jeff Legro nudged his own rebound past a sprawling Zolin.

Williams opened the second frame with some very solid hockey, as Chris Donato '89 led the defense with some hard-nosed checks, and Rob Abel '91 hit the left goalpost after a beautiful move in front of the Camels' net. After several penalties, the Ephs found themselves with a four-to-three advantage, and senior captain Tim Frechette and Conway strung together several sharp cross-ice passes, eventually allowing Van Belle to record his team-leading eighth goal of the year at the 7:22 mark.

Williams followed the goal with more solid hockey, refusing to take penalties and challenging the Camels with aggressive charges. After Putnam hit the pipe on a blast from the blue line, Conway gave the Ephs a 3-2 lead with three minutes remaining in the period, wristing a rebound past the Camel goal.

continued on page 9

Swimmers rebound against Smith

by Anne Joseph

The women's swimming team has apparently started to recuperate from its bout with the flu, as they dominated an uneven Smith squad during last Wednesday's home meet, winning 176-124.

"Winning the meet is great but behind it all is the health problem -- we still have people sick. Yet, we're beginning to recover," explained Coach Carl Samuelson. Despite the absence of the team's strong backstroke Dori Lebeau '91 and several freshmen, the team had a strong showing.

Beginning from the 200 medley relay, Williams established what proved to be an unbreakable lead. The relay of Trish Buenaventura '92, Elizabeth Eberhart

'92, Liz Gibbons '92, and co-captain Connie Davis '90 captured the event with a time of 2:00.59.

Although a weaker team than University of Massachusetts (to whom the Ephs fell the week before), Smith did have several outstanding performances. Smith's Jill Adams won the 1000 freestyle in 11:14.79, over two seconds before Williams' Karin Johnson '89. Smith's Kim Dickson took the 200 fly in 2:17.44, edging out Ephsman Eberhart. Eberhart, however, took the 100 fly in 1:03.46.

Decisive wins

Most events were decisively won. Smith definitely outswam the Ephs in four races. Starting with the 100 continued on page 9

Wrestling

continued from page 11

Fermon won his next match against MIT by more than 10 points.

Fermon, however, dropped his next match in the first round when he was caught unprepared in a throw and was pinned by a Haverford opponent. Losing 3-8 to a grappler from Division 11 powerhouse Southern Connecticut College in the consolation, Fermon found himself in fourth place at the end of the day's rounds.

Highlights and lowlights

In other weight classes, the Ephs struggled to close losses. James Mawn '92, wrestling above his weight in 155, closed the day with a 2-2 record, winning a pin and a decision from Univ. of Maine and Plymouth State and yielding a competitive match to a 24-year-old Coast Guard veteran, Captain John Dillon '89 pinned his Amherst opponent 15 seconds into his match using a double-leg takedown, but suffered 12-3 and 8-3 decision defeats at the hands of wrestlers from Plymouth State and Coast Guard. Dan Brayton '92 managed a criteria win at the end of a three-minute overtime match with WPI but folded in two matches against Springfield and Rhode Island.

The team faces a tough home meet against SUNY Oneonta tomorrow and expects competitive challenges against Trinity and Brandeis at home on Saturday.

PARSONS
SCHOOL OF DESIGN

Special Summer Programs

FRANCE
WEST AFRICA
ITALY
GREAT BRITAIN
JAPAN
ISRAEL
NEW YORK

International programs are offered for students, teachers and working professionals. Courses include: archaeology, architectural history, art history, ceramics, decorative arts, drawing, fashion, fiber, metal and surface design, graphic design, painting, and photography. Undergraduate and graduate credits are available to qualified students. For more information, please mail the coupon below or call:

Parsons Office of Special Programs
(212) 741-8975

Parsons School of Design, Office of Special Programs
66 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10011

Please send me a brochure on Parsons Special Summer Programs.

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____ Zip _____
Phone _____

33

Sports

Major's 1000th not enough for male cagers

continued from page 12

Major with the game ball. "Now all he's got to do," said Peck of the junior, "is get the school record." Indeed, with a season and a half left to play, Major has a shot at the record total of 1,626 set by Tim Walsh '86.

Early in the second half, I Healy put the Ephs up by ten at 50-40, but the lead was to be short-lived. After a time-out, the Ephs stormed back with twelve of the next fourteen points to pull up even with the Ephs at 52-40. Then, in spite of the clutch inside play of forward Lindsey Vaughan '92, who got four points and three rebounds in quick succession, Amherst slowly took the lead.

Jeffs pull ahead

Two three-point baskets by Hank Lynch and one by Groff extended Lord Jeff lead to seven as increased defensive pressure by Amherst forced the Ephs to take bad shots. A Williams attempt at full-court pressure backfired when Birmingham got past the defense and caught a long baseball pass for the open lay-up, and Groff dribbled out of a trap for a three-pointer.

With 29 seconds left in the game and the score 77-73 Amherst, Birmingham went to the line with a chance to put the game out of reach, but he missed and Williams came up with the rebound. With the clock down to fifteen, Mike Masters '89 went to the line with a chance to put the Ephs within two. The senior co-captain hit his first shot, then missed long off the iron. Major went up above everyone for the rebound and knocked it toward the sideline, then dove off the court to save it to Conte. Still alive with twelve seconds remaining, the Ephs called time out.

Down by three, the Ephs worked for a last three-point shot to tie it up. With three seconds left, Conte took it, but came up short, and Groff pulled down the rebound. Masters went for the desperation steal and fouled him, and the Amherst captain hit both his free throws to make the final score 79-74.

Conte engineers victory over R.P.I.
In Tuesday's blowout win at R.P.I., Conte led the way for Williams with 28 points and six steals. Major added 15 and Bill Melchionni '89 and Healy scored 12 each. The game was never in doubt after the Ephs started the second half with a fourteen point run to go up by 21. The streak included two of Conte's four three-point baskets.

In your face

Senior Mike Masters takes it to the hole as Garcia Major '90 looks on in Saturday night's tough 79-74 loss to Amherst at Chambliss Gymnasium.

Wrestlers challenged at MIT contest

by James Lee

The 10-men Eph wrestling squad traveled to Cambridge on Saturday and ran into stiff challenges at the MIT Invitational. Against tough grapplers from several Division 11 and numerous Division III teams, the Ephs posted some outstanding upset wins while yielding losses in several hard-fought matches.

The team's eight freshmen gained experience and stamina, and a couple of unexpected trophies as well, in what was mainly an individualistic event. "In a tournament like this, team score doesn't really matter," Coach Roger Caron commented. "Those who reached the final round wrestled as many as five matches on the same day."

Freshman Doug Dreffer in 177 lbs continued his winning ways throughout the day, placing third in his class. Dreffer wrestled phenomenally, downing more experienced opponents in four matches and dropping a gritty, last-second 0-2 decision against a U. Mass Boston grappler whom he had pinned earlier in the season. In the consolations, however, Dreffer avenged his loss by overwhelming a tough Plymouth State opponent to whom he lost earlier with a riding time of five minutes in a 3-2 decision win.

Fermon finishes fourth
Maneuvering with great style and technique, 118 lb. freshman Ivan Fermon beat some worthy challengers in winning three out of his five matches and earning out a fourth-place finish for himself. Fermon began the day on a positive note, turning an apparent defeat into a surprising pin. Losing 3-8 until the third round, he caught his opponent from Worcester Polytechnic in a sudden tight front-headlock to record an upset win. Later in the day, Fermon registered an even more surprising victory as he crushed a top-seeded Division 11 wrestler from Springfield in a 8-3 decision win. Nothing seemed to stop him as continued on page 10

Sports Quiz

Win a $15 gift certificate from Goff's -- enter the quiz.

- 1) Which team's mascot was prohibited from appearing at the Super Bowl?
- 2) Which college basketball coach walked off the court to protest NCAA proposal 42?
- 3) At the hands of what team did the previously #1 ranked Duke basketball squad suffer its first loss?
- 4) What is the first tournament of tennis's Grand Slam?

Submit your answers to Marian Naficy at S.U. Box 1871 or call x2972 by Sunday to enter. A drawing will be held among the entries with the most correct answers.

Ski Sale

at GOFF'S SPORTS, INC

SAVE 30%
-Tyrolia Bindings
-Sweaters
-Parkas
-Pants

SKI PACKAGES
Save an additional 10 %
From already low, low prices.

Save on Alpine and XC Skis

SAVE 20%
-Skis
-Bindings
-Boots
-Poles

ONLY AT:
GOFF'S SPORTS, INC.
15 Spring Street 458-3605

$60.00 PER HUNDRED remailing letters from home!
Details, send self-addressed, stamped envelope:

Associates
Box 309 - T
Colonia, NJ 07067

Discriminating people,
you Liberal Arts graduates

You've learned how to distinguish between Ulysses (highly intelligent, but devious) and Hercules (full of drive, but no gray matter).

You can appreciate the differences between George Washington and Benedict Arnold. You know why Othello messed it all up, why Henry V got the girl and the money.

In short, you have a solid understanding of Homo sapiens. You know what kind of animal he is, and whether he's likely to succeed or not. You know about square pegs in round holes.

So why don't you join us. We're a New York management recruiting firm. The book says you've got to be extremely ambitious, highly motivated, enterprising, assertive and articulate—with impressive interpersonal skills. Not too liberal. Not too artsy.

Find out more at your placement center. And come to our Information Session on Mon., Feb. 6, 5 P.M.

Human Resource Management

538 Fifth Avenue, 32nd Floor, N.Y., NY 10017
(212) 867-2650
30 Vreeland Road, Florham Park, NJ 07932
(201) 968-0909

You're smart enough to calculate the size of a Hydrogen atom.

And you're still smoking?

U.S. Department of Health & Human Services

It's cooler
than the Bahamas.

Why sweat in the Caribbean when you can cruise the slopes of Okemo? Midweek lift tickets are 50% off for college students, so it's cheaper than the Bahamas, too. Call (802) 228-5571 for lodging, (802) 228-4041 for general information. Okemo Mountain. So cool it's hot.

OKEMO MOUNTAIN ▲ LUDLOW, VERMONT

NOW THAT YOU'RE FINISHED
WHERE DO YOU START?

Graduation probably represents the end of a race well run. But with every company telling you how bright your future is, how do you decide where to start your career?

To begin, you'll have to ask the right questions.

What are the entry-level jobs for someone with your major? How well will you be trained? Will you be pigeonholed, or will you have a chance to explore diverse career opportunities?

The Travelers, a $50 billion insurance and financial services leader, offers positions in insurance, finance, actuarial, management, data processing and much more. We have great training to start with, and varied career paths to pursue as you develop your skills.

So, now that you're finished, why not start with The Travelers... and begin the real race?

We'll be on campus Wednesday, February 15th. To schedule an interview, sign up in the Career/Placement office.

TheTravelers
You're better off under the Umbrella™

Women cagers top defectors

by Ailif Jall

After struggling through two unemotional games, Williams College came to life in a 71-64 victory over Amherst on Saturday. Earlier in the week, the Ephs knocked off Union College 69-58.

The Ephwomen needed a big effort on Saturday to beat a strong Amherst squad, and they responded to the challenge. It was their first home victory over Amherst in four years.

"There's just so much desire in this game. For us to lose kills us and for them to lose kills them," Co-captain Nancy Hedeman '89 said after the game.

Williams scored off the opening tap and took an early 7-2 lead. However, a combination of Eph turnovers and strong inside play by the Lady Jeffs allowed Amherst to go ahead 16-10. It was the Jeffs' biggest lead of the game.

Senior co-captain Missy Crouchley took command for the next six minutes, scoring 10 points. Sophomore Becca Borden's lay-up finished a 17-4 Williams spurt, giving the Ephs a 27-20 edge. Williams went inside for the last five minutes of the first half, with Hedeman scoring the final nine points for the Ephs. Williams led 36-31 at intermission.

'There's just so much desire in this game. For us to lose kills us...'

The manner in which Williams regained and held the lead was typical of what happened throughout the game. No individual aspect of the Williams performance was outstanding, but as a group they did just enough to win.

"We finally played as a team. When we weren't shooting well outside, we dumped the ball in. When we couldn't score inside, we passed the ball out. We wore them down," Hedeman said.

The trio of Hedeman, Crouchley, and sophomore Chrissy Cadigan have been critical to Williams' victories this season and Saturday was no exception. They combined for all but two points for the Ephs in the first half and finished the game with 59 points.

Ephs hold on
Williams was unable to pull away in the second half, but the Ephs maintained the lead throughout. The Defectors, who had made up for a lousy shooting performance by crashing the offensive boards in the first half, were denied sec-

continued on page 7

Trapped!

An Amherst hoopster frantically tries to escape the stingy defense of Ephwomen Nancy Hedeman '89 (#24) and Missy Crouchley. The Ephs won the game by a 71-64 margin to put their record at 7-2.

Thomas

Groff and Amherst get by hoopsmen

by Alexander Rachmiel

Saturday night's men's basketball game at Chandler had all the necessary ingredients of great college basketball: an intense rivalry in its 150th game, a standing-room-only crowd of screaming fans, a home player's 1000th point, and a close contest between two evenly matched teams. For the home audience, only one thing was lacking to make the evening perfect: a Williams victory over Amherst.

The Lord Jeffs, behind seniors Yram Groff and Don Birmingham, overcame a ten-point deficit and the 1000th career point of Williams guard Garcia Major '90 to beat the Ephmen by a score of 79-74. Groff, the Jeffs' captain and last year's NESCAC player of the year, led all scorers with 29 points on 8-9 shooting from the floor. Birmingham, the Amherst center, added 25.

The Ephmen were led by guard John Conte '92, who scored 17, and Major, who contributed 15 points and 8 rebounds. The loss ended a five-game Williams winning streak and dropped the Ephs' record to 8-3 on the season. The Lord Jeffs' record improved to 7-2.

Five minutes into the first half, Williams center Than Healy '91 hit a pair of free throws to put the Ephs up, 14-13; they would lead until midway through the second half. The Williams lead was extended to seven when, in an incredible display of desire, Josh Lipsky '90 went into the paint for a shot, got his own rebound, then went back up for the score -- all while the 5'9" guard was surrounded by three much taller Lord Jeffs.

Major became the ninth man in the history of Williams basketball to score 1000 points.

Major milestone

With 1:48 left in the first half, Major went to the line needing one more point to become the ninth man in the history of Williams basketball to score 1000. When he sank his first free throw, the already pumped-up crowd went wild. The officials stopped the game, and in a ceremony at midcourt, Williams Athletic Director Robert Peck presented

continued on page 11

Squash captures one of three contests

by Lewis Flaher

Having completed the most difficult part of their season, the Eph squash team traveled to Boston last week where they crushed MIT in a display of near perfect squash to return with a 17-1 victory. Only one player lost a game in the varsity match, as Ephmen Chris Klipstein '89 and Rob Halligan '89 cruised to victory, allowing the Beavers just five points per game. Coach Assalanie was obviously pleased with his men and their ability to display "the mark of a winning team" -- the Ephs played with intense concentration against a weaker opponent.

Meanwhile, in a facility across campus, the Intrepid junior varsity squad was posting similar results as they finished all of their matches in under an hour to win by a 9-0 score. Coming on the heels of two tough losses to UPenn 9-0 and Dartmouth 7-2, the squad was jubilant in victory, prompting classics major Halligan to quote, "Veni, vidi, vici."

Rodriguez brings out fans
Less than 24 hours before the MIT the match, the racketmen had faced the University of Pennsylvania and it's freshmen phenom Rodolpho Rodriguez. Rodriguez, who is originally from Mexico, packed the gallery with fans. He has already beaten the top professionals in North America, thrashed the defending intercollegiate champion from Princeton, and is regarded as one of the best players in the world.

"He's the most mature freshman I've ever seen," said Penn coach Al Molloy, who has seen quite a bit in his thirty year career. "He destroys your confidence. You hit [what should be] a winner three or four times in a row [but] he returns them -- he's so quick."

Freshman Bruce Hopper drew the responsibility of playing Rodriguez. The match was an exciting challenge for Hopper, and he played well before falling in three games. Dave Wiley '89 summed up the feelings of the gallery on watching Rodriguez play with his comment, "I was captivated."

The fans that stayed for the second match on the gallery court were treated to more excellent squash when senior

continued on page 9

Close call . . .

Sue Pitcher '90 and the Eph defense fend off an outmanned attack in Saturday night's game against MIT. Three late goals by the Ephs' opponents led to a 3-1 Williams loss.

Steinman

Women's hockey downed by MIT

by Soojin Kim

The Williams women's hockey team and visiting MIT squad held each other scoreless until the third period on Saturday night, but MIT eventually danced their way to three late goals and a 3-1 victory.

In fact, the Bostonians nearly threw a shutout at the Ephwomen, now 1-5, as Williams was unable to score until the 18:20 mark of the third period, when Kristeen Moomaw '90 notched an unassisted tally after the Ephs attempted two shots on goal in the space of five seconds.

"We put a lot of pressure on MIT in the last three minutes of the game, but we just didn't get the puck in the net," said Coach James Briggs. Briggs felt that the defense was terrific, citing Kara Lynch '90 and Moomaw for playing exceptional games.

"Defensively, every one played an excellent game. Goalie Sue Pitcher '90 made some great saves," added co-captain Kirsten Neuse '89.

Neuse felt that Williams didn't get enough shots on goals, however. "MIT

We put a lot of pressure on . . . but we just didn't get the puck in the net.

had great stick control. We didn't get a break. Hopefully, we'll start connecting in the future," said Neuse.

Season Capsule

Earlier in the week, Williams trounced RPI 4-2 on January 15 at RPI. Williams led 4-0 by the end of the second period, as Neuse scored the squad's first and third goals, with assists from Jill Magnuson '90. Heidi Sandreuter '92 scored the second goal on an assist from Tamiko Kido '92, and Moomaw added an unassisted effort to round out the Ephwomen's scoring. According to Coach Briggs, "RPI was, without question, the weakest team we've played."

He said that the Wednesday night game against Colgate, which Colgate won 2-0, was an even, excellent match. "Both teams made the same number of shots on goal. We play very well, but we just don't have a really good scoring punch," he said.

At the beginning of the season, the Ephs dropped a pair of 4-0 decisions to Middlebury, a team which Williams has only beaten once in the history of women's hockey. The Ephs also lost the opening game of the season, 3-1, to Skidmore.

From the Locker Room

Proposition 42: The controversy

On January 14, Georgetown basketball coach John Thompson walked off the court at the outset of his squad's contest against Boston College. Thompson's move was a protest against the NCAA's passage of Proposition 42. The new ruling will deny athletic scholarships for freshmen year to those athletes whose combined score on the SAT is lower than 700 or lower than 15 on the ACT, or whose high school GPA is lower than 2.0 in a core curriculum of 11 subjects. Proposition 42 amends the already-existing Proposition 48, which allows freshmen "partial qualifiers" to obtain athletic scholarships but makes them ineligible to play during freshman year. Here, the Record presents two opinions about Proposition 42, which goes into effect in 1990.

Pro

by Ailif Jall and Marianne Naficy

Georgetown's John Thompson walked off the court on January 14th to protest the passage of Proposition 42, which he feels is discriminatory. Thompson is correct -- Prop 42 is racist de facto, as it mostly affects blacks. He and his supporters, however, are missing the point behind Props 48 and 42. Athletes who can't meet minimum requirements (partial qualifiers) already have an advantage over non-athletic partial qualifiers in that they are actually admitted to universities. The door to college education through athletics is still wide open. Propositions 48 and 42 simply ask that academics be a student-athlete's top priority; after all, universities are primarily institutions of higher education, not of sports.

Furthermore, Prop 42 is asking for very little -- a combined score of 700 is low considering that 400 points are awarded for signing one's name. If a student-athlete can't even make the effort to meet this minimum requirement, he doesn't belong at college (preparing for the SAT without the aid of prep courses is possible even if it is culturally biased). As Ira Berkow of the New York Times wrote on the subject, "just because someone can shoot a basketball or kick a football doesn't mean that he is therefore qualified to attend college."

Prop 42 strengthens Prop 48 in that it provides an economic incentive for athletes to genuinely work harder at academics well in advance of the college admissions process. Since there is more at stake, as Prop 42 threatens the ability of partial qualifiers to attend college at all, athletes may work harder at preparing themselves for the SAT in advance. They would be less willing to remain unprepared academically until the admissions process begins and less willing to rely on risky methods to qualify as Georgetown's Alonzo Mourning did (he took the SAT seven times). Prop 42 takes effect in 1990, which gives current high school students a year to adjust to the new system.

Thompson and his supporters say that Prop 42 will close doors to a college education for many athletes -- but what's the use of a college 'education' that doesn't benefit athletes beyond college? The old system does not adequately stress

continued on page 8

Con

by Josh Brumberg and Kerr Houston

An estimated 600 freshmen will be affected annually by Proposition 42, a measure that has already generated a storm of protest and caused as many problems and headaches as it was intended to solve. Although the proposition was born of noble hopes, it has too many holes and faults, and should therefore be reconsidered by the NCAA.

Georgetown men's basketball coach John Thompson's main objection to Proposition 42 involves its potential for discrimination. The coach points to estimates that 90% of the freshmen affected by the measure will be black, and he also cites evidence that both the SAT and the ACT are culturally biased. Temple basketball coach John Cheney went a couple of steps further, referring to the NCAA as "that racist organization," and wholeheartedly endorsing Thompson's walkout.

Although the proposition has already stirred up controversy concerning racial favoritism, it has also ignited considerable debate over the proper sphere of influence for the NCAA. Many observers have rightly begun to wonder why this athletic organization is beginning to dictate the intellectual boundaries of our country's private educational institutions. Academic standards set by individual schools are acceptable and, indeed, are to be applauded, but requirements set forth by an independent athletic organization seem ludicrous, overbearing, and unfair to the athletes involved.

"Colleges have the right and duty to offer the same opportunity to athletes as well as computer wizards. Who is the NCAA to slam in anyone's face what might be the door to the future?" Tom Wicker of the New York Times has pointed out.

Furthermore, Proposition 42 is not a solution to the problem of athletes academically unprepared for a college career; rather, it is only an impediment to both the intellectual and athletic development of these young men and women. Granted, there are athletes at many colleges who become so immersed in their athletic pursuits that they fail to take advantage of the educational potential offered

continued on page 8

Wait, My books cost how much!??

Recent changes at the Williams Bookstore have decreased both the chaos and the wait, but prices remain high. The changes resulted from recommendations of the college Bookstore Committee. (Taylor)

Textbook service improving at Dewey's

Buying books at the beginning of the semester has always provoked fear and loathing in the Berkshires. But long- and short-term measures taken by the College Council and a newly created bookstore committee, in conjunction with Williams Bookstore owner Joseph Dewey, have eased some of the problems of the Bookstore, according to some students.

Students in the past have complained of slow moving lines, out-of-stock books, and questionably high prices. Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards and College Council President Trace Blankenship '89 met with Dewey last semester and during winter study. They agreed upon certain accommodations to make buying books more efficient and convenient. The eight points of agreement were presented in an all-campus mailing from the College Council on February 1.

These accommodations included hiring more student runners, making three cash registers available, moving display tables to create more space and using printed order forms. Dewey agreed that, with a professor's approval, he would reorder out-of-stock books to be mailed by two-day air. In the case of a high price, he would make the publisher's price

Peter Sedgwick '92 went to the Bookstore on Tuesday afternoon and waited fifteen minutes to be helped and then pay for his books. "The price seemed a little high, but not excessively so," he said. He said he thought it was easier and quicker to buy books this time, compared to his earlier experience in September. "The cash register situation was good. I thought the extra runners helped a lot."

Lynne Alix '89 went to the Bookstore when it opened, at 8:30. She did not expect to wait, and did not. She received all but one of her books. "I don't know if that was the fault of the Bookstore or the professor," she said. Alix added that she did not think her books were overpriced. "I guess I'm used to it."

Peggy Kim '91 went to the Bookstore on Thursday afternoon. She had a short wait since it was not very busy. She said it was definitely quicker and easier to buy books.

Cindy Mundy '92 waited a total of ten minutes to be helped and then pay for her books. Four of her books were not in stock on Wednesday, but two arrived by Friday.

"It was considerably better as far as I know, but I went earlier," she said. "I didn't get sold any of the wrong books this time. That happened last time."

"All told, it was a good set-up," said Dewey.

Booker access

Dewey said he thought that moving the display tables from the middle of the store was a good idea. The extra space made it easier to move and gave students easier access to the cash registers.

continued on page 10

Minority consultants suggest new priorities

by Greg Hart

The college will create a new Associate Dean's post responsible for overseeing minority affairs and will also increase its yearly minority faculty and staff recruitment goals in response to the recommendations of the three affirmative action consultants who visited Williams last semester, said President of the College Francis Oakley.

In an open letter to the Williams community last week, Oakley reported the observations of the trio and also listed the consultants' specific recommendations and the steps the college is taking to implement them. Oakley also included some additional minority-related initiatives which the college will undertake this year.

The consultants were Vanessa Alleyne, assistant dean of administration at Seton Hall School of Law, Clarence Williams, special assistant to the president at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Santiago Rodriguez, manager of multicultural and affirmative action programs at Apple Computer, Inc.

They said that Williams' affirmative action program is well-designed and has substantial support from the Williams community. In particular, the consultants complemented the Galus Charles Bolin Fellowship Program, the pre-freshman Summer Science Program, the Minority Scholars Summer Research Program, the new addition to the distribution requirement and the development of the Multicultural Center.

The college generally encourages the expression of alternative viewpoints, especially minority and feminist opinions, the consultants said.

The consultants, however, did say that Williams' recruiting of minority administrators needs substantial improvement. Oakley responded that the college, which has focused most of its efforts on recruiting minority faculty members, will also vigorously attempt to attract minority administrators and staff.

"Every time there is an opening we will pursue it," said Oakley. He added that two new posts in the area of student services which necessitate expertise on minority issues have been created. "The area of student services is an area of focus; the creation of the two new positions is an indication of that," said Oakley. These openings, he said, will likely be attractive to minority administrators.

New associate dean

One of the spots will be a new associate dean's position. This administrator, according to the mailing, will be responsible for working with and advising minority students. He or she will also serve as a contact between the Dean's Office and such minority groups as the Black Student Union, VISTA, and ASIA.

In addition, the new dean will help oversee minority programs such as the pre-freshman Summer Science Program and the Minority Scholars Summer Research Program. Finally, the dean will be a member of the President's

...a substantial effort to recruit minority administrators was needed in the next few years.

Administrative Group and the Commission on Campus Race Relations.

The second position created by the college will be director of the Multicultural Center, which the college will establish next fall, according to Oakley's letter.

Towards recruiting more minority faculty candidates, the consultants recommended that the Dean of the Faculty, along with other faculty members, should visit graduate schools with a large minority representation regularly.

Oakley said, "The academic advising panel will meet to pool knowledge and target appropriate graduate schools. It will be looking for the most strategic places to focus recruiting efforts. This is a long-term goal of the school." This academic panel, which will include the new Dean, will assist the dean of the faculty and the affirmative action officer in the planning and execution of the visitation program.

continued on page 10

Scores of sophomores stress over JA process

by Mary Moulc

Although Winter Study is a time for most students to relax and escape from the pressures of the semester, those sophomores who wish to become Junior Advisors next year must worry about applications, recommendations and interviews. This year, 148 students have applied for 53 positions.

The importance of JAs to freshman life at Williams and the large number of applicants makes the selection process complicated, according to Jack Gillis '89, chair of the selection committee. "There are many more qualified applicants than places, which makes our job difficult," he said.

'There's an enthusiasm that freshmen have. When you're around them it rejuvenates your feelings toward Williams.'

Because JA selection is so competitive, many applicants experience a great deal of stress about the process. Several students hesitated to discuss the issue with the Record, fearing their comments would somehow affect the decision. Others wanted to keep their applications a secret, because they said they would be embarrassed if they were not selected.

"[The application] was definitely not something easy. You want to be honest, but you're not sure what they're looking for," Briane Colby '91, an applicant, said.

The application consists of a half-page self-recommendation, a peer recommendation, a JA recommendation and an essay that asks applicants to briefly discuss a problem that they might face and how they would deal with it. Each applicant also participates in a 45 minute interview with four other applicants and two members of the committee.

Marcia Toll '89, a former JA and a member of last year's selection committee, said that the interview format is intended to be comfortable and efficient. "The interview can only be used if it is positive," she said, "and each applicant can decide how they feel about it and if they want it to be considered."

Recommendation important

The JA recommendation is more integral to the decision, Toll said. "You have to fit it into the overall picture. It says something if all of the parts agree." She said that a negative recommendation could make a big difference, but that decisions were rarely based on just one aspect.

continued on page 5

More media images

Starting on January 23, some observations on how men feel about their bodies appeared on the display window in Baxter Hall. A student who was involved in the November "Blueprints for Women" displays in Baxter organized the latest commentary. The student, who asked not to be identified, said, "It was done to answer the complaint that nobody hears the men's side of the story." Paper and pencils were left for viewers to write responses, and the student typed up some of those responses for students to see. The display will be taken down tomorrow. Steinman

Gargoyle Society opens meetings to all students. PAGE 4

Professor Tong to leave Williams. PAGE 5

Students perform with Ghanaian master drummer. PAGE 10

The Williams Record

"We're still going under. Depositors are withdrawing everything to pay taxes for our federal bailout..."

On the Record...

"Blacks don't bring drugs into this country. They don't have planes and ships, but blacks are arrested for drugs, they die from them."

--Conrad X. Tillard, the first speaker invited by the B.S.U. in honor of Black History Month, on drugs, which he said he believes are part of a plot by this society to destroy blacks.

"We have first-strike weapons deployed in a game of chicken."

--Admiral Noel Gayler, a former commander of all Pacific naval forces and a proponent of nuclear disarmament, on the arms race.

"Sykes eliminates tenure will keep everybody on their toes. More likely it'll keep everybody on their knees."

--Dr. Jonathon Knight of the American Association of University Professors on Profscam, a book by Charles Sykes that advocates abolishing tenure. Knight said this would destroy academic freedom.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible and not more than 500 words. They must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. They must be typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-2289.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor
TRAVIS PIERSON, Managing Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor
BILL SAVADOVE, ANN MANTIL & STEPHANIE JONES, Arts Editors
JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors, BILL PHILPOTT, Productions Editor

Assistant News Editors
DAN SKWIRE, ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW
GREG HART & JUSTIN SMITH
Assistant Sports Editors
STEVE BRODY & KERR HOUSTON
Assistant Layout Editors
ELISA DUGUNDJI, SARAH OUCHI, ASHESH SHAH

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Letters

Statement about JA offensive and untrue

To the Editor:

I respect Jonathon Howard's viewpoint on the new party policy. I was very disturbed, however, to read his statement, "Mr. Hughes has completely abandoned his obligations as a JA." Being a close friend of Brian Hughes, I found this statement very offensive.

Brian has done many things with his entry that do not involve alcohol. Brian has, as Jonathon Howard suggested, organized movie and television nights, entry cookouts, and secret Santa. More importantly, Brian is there time and again when his freshmen have problems.

Brian is always there when someone in his entry, as well as anyone else, has a problem and needs to talk to someone. Now isn't that the most important job of a JA? If Jonathon Howard knew Brian Hughes or if he had talked to the people in Fayerweather, he would have seen the unity that he claims is lacking.

I know this unity, created by Brian Hughes and the other Fayerweather JAs, exists, because I have witnessed it. So for Jonathon Howard to say that Brian Hughes has abandoned his obligations as a JA is not only ridiculous, but very offensive.

Brian Stevens '90

Students at Williams not immune to crime

To the Editor:

On the night of Sunday the 29th, between 11:00 p.m. and 1:30 a.m., someone broke into my room and stole my stereo speakers. My room, which is off the rear stairwell of the old infirmary, was unlocked, as are the majority of rooms at Williams.

It is assumed that the thieves went up the stairs, found the first unlocked room, grabbed the first thing they saw and fled in a car parked just outside the back door. No one saw or heard anything that could help to catch the thief or thieves.

I am fortunate in that all that was stolen was a pair of speakers and not the rest of my stereo components nor my computer. However, I must resolve myself to the fact that what I perceive to be my home was violated. The hours I spent saving the funds for a pair of top quality Infinity speakers and the pleasure I derived from them are lost. But the greatest loss I have experienced is my sense of security at Williams.

Other people get robbed, too. Why should I be the only one? It's a hassle. I'm a nice guy. I've got nothing to worry

Alexander Gregory '89

The recoloring of campus life: the origins of racism in college students

by Shelby Steele
From Harper's Magazine (February, 1989). (c) 1989, Harper's Magazine.

In the past few years, we have witnessed what the National Institute Against Racism calls "proliferation" of racial incidents on college campuses around the country. Incidents of on-campus "intergroup conflict" have occurred at more than 160 colleges in the last two years, according to the Institute.

and the words "white power" were painted on the university's Afro-American cultural center. Racist jokes were aired not long ago on a campus radio station at the University of Michigan. And at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, a student was killed by a fellow student at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, Williams College, Penn State University, UC Berkeley, UCLA, Stanford University, and countless other and anxiety, inchoate feelings of racial shame, anger, and guilt. These feelings could be dormant in the home, in familiar neighborhoods, in simpler days of childhood. But the college campus, with its structures of interaction and adult-level competition -- the big exam, the dorm, the "mixer" -- is another matter. Campus racism is born of the rub between racial difference and a setting, the campus itself, devoted to interaction and equality.

Of course it is true that many young people come to college with some anxiety about not being good enough. But only blacks come wearing a color that is still, in the minds of some, a sign of inferiority. Poles, Jews, Hispanics, and other groups also endure degrading stereotypes. But two things make the myth of black inferiority a far heavier burden -- the broadness of its scope and its incarnation in color. There are not only more stereotypes of blacks than of other groups, but these stereotypes are by society -- will be confirmed as real. On a university campus where intelligence is the ultimate measure, this anxiety is bound to be triggered.

But this feeling of vulnerability a black may feel in itself is not a serious problem as what he or she does with it. To admit that one is made anxious in integrated situations about the myth of racial inferiority is difficult for young blacks. It seems like admitting that one is racially inferior. And so, most often, the student will deny harboring the feeling. This is where some of the pangs of racial tension begin, because denial always involves distortion.

This process generates an unconscious need to exaggerate the level of racism on campus -- to make it a matter of the system, not just a handful of students. Racism is the avenue away from the true inner anxiety. How many students demonstrating in the style of the 1960s, Guilt is the essence of white anxiety just as inferiority is the essence of black anxiety.

The nature of these incidents has ranged from open racial violence -- most notoriously, the October 1986 beating of a black student at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst after an argument about the World Series turned into a racial bashing, with a crowd of up to 3,000 whites chasing twenty blacks -- to the harassment of minority students, to acts of racial or ethnic insensitivity, with by far the greatest number falling in the last two categories. At Dartmouth College three editors of the Dartmouth Review, the off-campus right-wing student weekly, were suspended last winter for harassing a black professor in his also more dehumanizing, more focused on the most despised of human traits -- stupidity, laziness, sexual immorality, dirtiness, and so on. In America's racial and ethnic hierarchy, blacks have clearly been relegated to the lowest level -- have been burdened with an ambiguous, animalistic humanity. Moreover, this is made unavoidable for blacks by the sheer visibility of black skin, a skin that evokes the myth of inferiority on sight. And today this myth is sadly reinforced for many black students by affirmative action programs, under which blacks may often enter college with lower test scores and high school grade point averages than whites.

This generates a need to exaggerate the level of racism on campus -- to make it a matter of the system, not just a handful of students.

This myth of inferiority constitutes a very sharp and ongoing anxiety for young blacks, the nature of which is very precise: it is the terror that somehow, through one's actions or by virtue of some "person" (a poor grade, a dubious response in class), one's fear of inferiority -- inculcated in ways large and small when the battle was to win for blacks a place on campus -- might be better off spending their time reading and studying? Black students have the highest dropout rate and lowest grade point average of any group in American universities. This need not be so. And it is not the result of not having black theme houses.

Guilt is the essence of white anxiety just as inferiority is the essence of black anxiety. And the terror that it carries for whites is the terror of discovering that one has reason to feel guilt where blacks are concerned -- not so much because of what blacks might think but because of what guilt can say about oneself. If the darkest fear of blacks is inferiority, the darkest fear of whites is that their better lot in life is at least partially the result of their capacity for evil -- their capacity to dehumanize an entire people for their own benefit, and then to be indifferent to the devastation their dehumanization has wrought on successive generations of incomplete humanity. And this is what explains how some young white college students in the late Eighties can so frankly take part in racially insensitive and outright racist acts. They were expected to be cleaner of racism than any previous generation -- they were born into the Great Society. But this expectation overlooks the fact that, for them, color is still an accusation and judgement. In black faces there is a discomfiting reflection of white collective shame. Blacks remind them that their racial innocence is questionable, that they are the beneficiaries of past and present racism, and that the sins of the father may well have been visited on the children.

Even whites with hearts clean of racism benefit from being white -- benefit at the expense of blacks.

Universities should emphasize commonality as a higher goal than 'diversity' and 'pluralism' -- buzzwords for the politics of difference.

And yet young whites tell themselves that they had nothing to do with the oppression of black people. They have a stronger belief in their racial innocence than any previous generation of whites and a natural hostility toward anyone who would challenge that innocence. So (with a great deal of individual variation) they can end up in the paradoxical position of being hostile to blacks as a way of agonistic to them. Difference can enrich only the common ground.

Integration has become an abstract term today, having to do with little more than numbers and racial balances. But it once stood for a high and admirable set of values. It made difference second to commonality, and it asked members of all races to face whatever fears they inspired in each other. The word may not enjoy a new vogue, but the values, under whatever name, are worth working for.

Williams steps in the right direction with new alcohol policy

by Evan R. Moore '91

Again the issue of freshman life and alcohol policy has caught the attention of the campus, and the normal forces of resistance are out. The Record (of January 17) has carried the standard protest articles that the school is moving towards an authoritarian regime with no room for student self-determination of the social culture. Poppycock. While my position should be immediately evident, I hope the campus will nevertheless consider most of what I say.

The start of this uproar is the dean's new policy of fining JAs for "busted" parties in freshman entries. As the Record reports, the deans wish to eliminate as much freshman drinking as possible. Obviously freshman refers to underage freshmen, the great majority, and not those few who can legally purchase liquor. This is absolutely a move in the right direction, and one which the administration should have made several years ago when the Massachusetts law changed.

I do agree, however, with the Record editorial that fining JAs for the activities of the entry as a whole is inappropriate, and prefer the previous policy of fining the entry proper for their actions. Still, the new fine structure is appropriate for the administration's desire to curtail the presence of alcohol in entries.

I also agree with the Record that the administration seems to have followed a shady path in developing this new policy, a path which should not become paved. All matters regarding student affairs and policy should be well advertised before any policies take effect. The Student Handbook does a good job of this, but it is not complete, and of course is no good when policy is changed during the year. I don't question the administration's right to unilaterally decide such policy; I do oppose policy by secret decree.

If the old policy of fining entries is reinstated, I would only be proper that the fines be increased to such an extent that the impact felt by individuals in the entry is similar to that currently felt by the individual JAs. If we assume an entry of 24 freshmen, and say that one-third of them are likely to be involved in any given party, we've got eight people. Eight multiplied by $50 is $400, a pretty steep fine. Since the eighth person figure is arbitrary, we'll cut it in half to get the fine at $200. If a party has less than four people, it isn't really a party.

Given this initial fine and an increment of $100, which I'm pulling from the air, but which follows the idea of insuring the entry as a collective entity feels the cost of the fine and of drastically curtailing freshman alcoholism), alcohol in the entries would be pretty rare. These fines may seem high, but consider the fines called for by the liquor laws of this state. For the college's fines to be significantly lower would be an act of disregard for the governmental process. Do we really want a college which chooses the laws it wishes to follow? Taking the matter further: the college is justly concerned about being sued, if a

Few of us would say that we came to Williams because it offered a haven from oppressive liquor laws in other parts of the nation.

continued on page 10

Keep abortion legal, keep abortion safe

by Jeff Biersuch and Marianne Naficy

For our generation, abortion has always been an assumed right; with the Supreme Court about to review Roe v. Wade, however, we may soon lose that right. Attorney General Richard Thornburgh, Supreme Court Justice Harry Blackmun, and other experts agree that Roe v. Wade is in jeopardy. It is important that we become active now and voice support for Chloe.

Why keep abortion legal? It is difficult, if not impossible, to come to an agreement on the moral debate surrounding abortion. Ultimately, in a country that prides itself on the freedom of the individual, a couple should be free to resolve the debate for themselves. If Roe v. Wade is overturned, a couple's right to make their own informed decision is lost.

The solution to the abortion debate becomes especially clear when the real-life consequences of making abortion illegal are considered. An anti-abortion law will not stop women from wanting or having abortions. Women who desperately want an abortion will find a way to have one. Abortions will continue as they did in pre-Roe v. Wade 1967, when an estimated 829,000 illegal abortions took place in the U.S.

If Roe v. Wade is overturned, illegal and expensive abortion clinics with unlicensed doctors will spring up to meet demand. At an estimated $4,000, according to Planned Parenthood, these illegal clinic abortions will be far too expensive for most. The result: a tragic rise in the number of self-induced and "backstreet" abortions. Incomplete bleeding and infection. If we know that abortions, legal or not, are going to happen, why force them underground? To keep abortion legal is to keep it regulated and safe.

No one is eager to have an abortion -- it is a serious and painful choice to make. Abortion is a traumatic experience that will be made worse if women are placed at the mercy of the person performing the abortion. Stories of women forced to grant sexual favors to those performing an abortion for them were not uncommon before Roe v. Wade. Keeping abortion legal will help prevent these unfortunate situations.

Furthermore, an anti-abortion ruling will be economically inequitable. The wealthy will be able to afford a safe illegal abortion through overseas travel or private doctors, while the poor, those least able to support an unwanted child, will be forced to solve the problem with desperate measures.

Eight to 15 Williams students become pregnant each year,

To many Williams students, abortion is an issue to debate but not a reality to confront. In truth, the 18-24 age group has the highest rate of abortion in the nation; this does not exclude Williams students. According to Director of Health Dr. James Corkins, 8-15 Williams students become pregnant each year and the majority choose to terminate their pregnancy.

For a Williams student, a pregnancy would pose certain questions. If Roe v. Wade were overturned and you were confronted with an unwanted pregnancy, would you feel ready to become a parent or a spouse? Would you be ready to drop out of school to care and provide for a family? Would you be willing to stay on campus while eight months pregnant? The choice to terminate a pregnancy must be preserved so that people can answer these questions for themselves. Making abortion illegal will drastically change lives -- maybe yours.

Tillard tells students to continue the struggle

by Peter Kilvans
Conrad X. Tillard, the inaugural speaker in the celebration of Black History Month, told an audience Saturday night that blacks must pull themselves up by their own bootstraps. He added that racism must be exclusive in marital relationships and that drugs are part of a plan to destroy the Afro-American community.

Tillard, founding executive director of the National Black Unity Congress, was brought to Williams by the Black Student Union. He emphasized the necessity for black intellectuals to take the lead in helping blacks to help themselves.

"You're not justified in being at Williams College unless you are working to advance your people," he said. He said he feels that black intellectuals cannot

This struggle for rights, he added, has continued from the beginnings of slavery, through the civil rights movement, and continues today. "Pain produces movement," he said.

Tillard said that blacks must take responsibility in achieving equality, and cannot rely on whites to help. He cited Elijah Muhammad, who had a fourth grade education but built farms, schools and businesses. Tillard said if Mohammed could do these things with his limited education, then black intellectuals must try also.

He said to the black students, "Come down from your lofty, foolish position, to respond to history and pick up the cross that your forefathers have carried before you."

Despair and drugs

The two largest problems facing American blacks today are despair and drugs, he said. Tillard added that he feels that drugs are part of a plot in this society to destroy black people from within. "Blacks don't bring drugs into this country. They don't have planes and ships, but blacks are arrested for drugs, they die from them," he said. "Despair produces the appetite for drugs. Young blacks don't believe they have a stake in this society."

Tillard also spoke against inter-racial relationships. He said that in the past whites used black females as sex objects just as these same whites were executing black males for even looking at white females. Because of this blacks today must not have deep personal relationships with whites. He added that orientals should stay with orientals, hispanics with hispanics, whites with whites, and blacks with blacks.

Upon being questioned about this statement by a student, Tillard said that just as Jews do not sleep with Nazis, blacks should not sleep with whites. Throughout his lecture, Tillard praised Nation of Islam head Louis Farrakhan as being the only credible Black leader. "Farrakhan," he said, "has divorced himself from America and thus can save it from itself."

"The black intellectual has been bequeathed a lofty position, a prime position today. Most of the blacks in this audience have never known struggle," he said.

Colleges crack down further on smokers

by Michael O'Keefe
College Press Service

Williams College, which banned smoking in all of Sawyer Library January 1, is not the only school getting tougher on cigarette smokers. From coast to coast, campuses that began limiting student smoking as long as a decade ago have taken the last big step this school year. "Smoking is pretty much banned now," according to Big Bend Community College spokesman Doug Sly. New rules were implemented at the Washington state school January 1.

In 1976, Penn State University was one of the first U.S. campuses to ban smoking from its classrooms. On April 1, it will forbid smoking everywhere except certain dorm rooms.

"It's too strict of a rule. I have a smoking habit and I don't feel like standing out in the rain or snow [to smoke]," Penn State senior Mary Helen Moran said.

Stanford University last year banned smoking even at outdoor events.

"Some colleges have been setting the pace," Dr. John Longest, the former Mississippi State University health director said. Longest, a former official at the American College Health Association, has led efforts to combat smoking on American campuses for several decades.

Officials whose schools have banned or greatly restricted smoking privileges cite health concerns as the reason.

"We have practical, even moral reasons to restrict smoking," William Heick, director of Penn State's human services department, said.

John M. Pinney, executive director of Harvard's Institute for the Study of Smoking Behavior and Policy, said, "Colleges need to recognize young people are at a volatile point in their development of habits. Colleges can influence their young people by letting students enough, however.

"We must continue to do better in helping present smokers give up the habit and do much better in encouraging young people not to start," Longest wrote in the ACHA's policy paper on smoking, which calls for tight limits on campus tobacco use and substantially increased educational efforts.

Better-educated people, the U.S. Public Health Service found in a report re-

"The key question is how do we get to these teenagers," Longest said of the survey results. "There's so much more resounding proof that smoking causes cancers, emphysema and heart disease than we had ten years ago."

Pinney said, "Teens experiment, and they'll stop and start again. It's not until their late teens and early twenties that they really form a habit. One year does not a trend make. But this is a signal that we haven't made as much progress as we thought."

Protests few
Student smokers generally haven't resisted the latest round of restrictions very forcefully.

In 1988, University of California at Davis students protested a new non-smoking policy in the Student Union coffee shop by lighting up, but there have been few other similar protests.

"Some feel it's an infringement of their personal rights," said Patrick Henot, however, that there has been little organized protest at Penn State.

"There's been no backlash from students," Longest said. "If anything, students are telling their professors not to smoke."

"A few smokers are indignant, but most take it in stride," Big Bend's Sly said. "You see little groups of smokers now hanging around outside. You might hear people get more upset the colder it gets."

'Colleges can influence their young people by letting them know smoking is not acceptable.'

them know smoking is not acceptable.

"Colleges are employers, and as employers they have a responsibility to their employees and students to ensure a healthy workplace," Pinney added. He cited the 1986 Surgeon General's report that said second-hand smoke can lead to cancers and heart disease for nonsmokers, too.

A more recent report from the Surgeon General's office concluded that smoking can also increase one's chances of having a stroke.

Can more be done?
Some feel colleges are not educating leased in late 1988, respond better to anti-smoking efforts than less-educated citizens. The proportion of college graduates who smoked decreased from 28 percent in 1974 to 18 percent in 1985. For people without a college degree, the decrease—from 36 percent in 1974 to 34 percent in 1985—was more modest.

However, there are signs that college students may be smoking more again. Some 10.1 percent of this year's freshman class smoke, up from 8.9 percent last year's freshmen, according to the annual American Council on Education-University of California at Los Angeles survey of 300,000 students.

After 94 years, Gargoyle Society opens its doors to campus

by Helen Matthews

The Gargoyle Society, whose proclaimed mission is to advance the quality of intellectual and social life at Williams, is going public. The society, which has traditionally had a closed membership, is planning to reorganize and open meetings to all students.

The current reorganization was prompted by members who said that the group spent a large amount of time engaging in fruitful and interesting discussions but had problems initiating reform on campus, according to member Andrea de Majewski '90.

"We're having a hard time defining what our role on campus should be," Elizabeth Beshel '90, another member, said.

Philip Wick '86, a former Gargoyle member and Director of Financial Aid, said, "I sense the College Council is much stronger. There are other groups on campus that have usurped Gargoyle's reason for existing. Maybe Gargoyle is an anachronism."

Chris Nealon '89 said that Gargoyle plans to distribute an all-campus mailing detailing the group's agenda and inviting all students to meetings. He added the group hopes to cultivate a regular body of participants from the campus as a whole.

When the group was founded in 1895, new members were chosen in a "tapping" ceremony held on the science quad lawn. In 1984, the group began accepting self-nominations from the sophomore and junior classes. The nominations were reviewed by the group and new members were selected from the applicant pool. Under the new system, the selection process will be eliminated altogether.

However, said Nealon, the goal of Gargoyle, to improve the quality of life on campus, will not change. When Gargoyle was founded, it was primarily concerned with eliminating unscrupulous college politics and easing tensions caused by the presence of the fraternity

Ephs against abortion

Russell Day '91 and Jonathan Dailey '91 discuss plans for the new campus anti-abortion group. Four members of the organization marched in Washington on January 23.

New pro-life group attends DC protest

by Dan Skwire

Four students from Williams joined over 50,000 other anti-abortion protesters in a mass rally in Washington, D.C., on January 23. The students were members of Williams Against Abortion On Demand, a right-to-life group founded in December by Russell Day '91.

The rally has been held annually to mark the anniversary of the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision which legalized abortion in the United States. Day, whose father was formerly the state president of the Massachusetts Right to Life organization, said he has attended the rally every year since he was in the third grade.

While in Washington, Day and the other Williams students spent their time visiting senators and representatives to lobby for anti-abortion legislation. "If they were on our side, we thanked them, and if they were not on our side, we harangued them and beseeched them to change their minds," Day said.

He said that when he first arrived at Williams, he felt as if he were the only person on campus who opposed legal abortions. "It's taken for granted that on a prestigious liberal arts campus, you club, also attended the meeting, but said that he did not feel the group necessarily had a conservative bias. "Fewer than 50 percent of the people there were members of Garfield," he said. "Some were Democrats, so it is not reserved to Republicans."

'It's taken for granted that on a prestigious liberal arts campus, you have to be pro-choice.'

have to be pro-choice," he said. "We want to dispel that myth."

About 10 people showed up for the group's first meeting on December 6, including Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew, who is serving as the group's faculty advisor. Bob Howie '90, president of the Garfield Republican

Tara Hurley '91, secretary and treasurer of the group, is currently its only female member. "It isn't the expected position [for a woman to have]," she said. "I don't know too many females who feel the way I do."

According to Day, the official position of the group is that it opposes all abortions except those which are needed to save the life of the mother. They do not believe that abortions should be permissible in cases of rape or incest.

"The evil of abortion"
"We believe that in civilized societies, one never blames a child for the crime of his father. We know how tough it is for rape victims, and we certainly feel for them. We don't feel for compounding the evil of rape with the evil of abortion," Day said.

The group has met with some difficulties in the early going, according to Day. On December 5, the typist for the Daily Advisor inserted a personal message opposing the anti-abortion group directly above the notice for the group's meeting, even though this was not the appropriate section of the Advisor for such a notice. Day said he was never allowed to respond to that message.

On December 6, the Advisor again continued on page 6

Beyond the Bubble

FBI reopens investigation of Tower

The Senate Armed Services Committee postponed a vote that would have confirmed former Texas Senator John G. Tower for the post of Defense Secretary amid new controversy regarding Tower's personal life. Despite President George Bush's continued support for Tower, the new administration granted permission to the FBI to reopen an investigation of Tower's private life amid new allegations of alcoholism and promiscuity. Committee chairman Sam Nunn (D-Ga) said he still expects Tower will be confirmed, but said the new allegations were "serious enough for us to want to check them."

Botha resigns as party leader

South African President P.W. Botha, currently recovering from a stroke, announced his resignation as leader of the South African National Party last week. Botha, who is 73, said he would continue as president, however. The National Party, which has governed South Africa for four decades, elected Frederick W. de Klerk to succeed Botha as party head. De Klerk is currently party leader of the Transvaal Province and chairman of the Ministers Council in the white legislature. He is also considered to be more opposed to increased black rights than Botha. Far right-wing parties have been gaining in strength in South Africa in recent years.

China, Soviets announce first summit in 30 years

Nearly 30 years after the last summit between the world's two greatest communist powers, the People's Republic of China last week formally invited Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev to meet with Chinese leaders. The summit between Gorbachev and Chinese Premier Deng Xiaoping is tentatively scheduled for May. The Sino-Soviet relationship, which split over an argument about ideology, has been marked by hostility, conflict and a struggle for political influence in Southeast Asia.

Paraguay's Stroessner is deposed

A bloody coup in Paraguay last week removed General Alfredo Stroessner from power. The coup, which was led by Stroessner's second-in-command, General Andres Rodriguez, ended Stroessner's 35-year dictatorship, the longest continuous dictatorship in the world. Rodriguez vowed to establish democracy in Paraguay and to respect civil rights. The Chilean government, led by General Augusto Pinochet, said it would offer asylum to Stroessner.

Bloodbath expected in Afghanistan

As the Soviets step up bombing of the Afghan countryside and make final preparations for their withdrawal from Afghanistan, the former chief U.S. diplomat in Kabul, Jon Glassman, spoke of the possibility of a coup against the Afghan government led either by communist hardliners or guerrilla sympathizers. Glassman said, "the perception is that the current order in Kabul is collapsing and deteriorating and the regime is like a building without girders." The United States was one of many countries to close its embassy in the country. The Soviets are to complete their withdrawal by February 15.

Steinberg found innocent of murder

Joel Steinberg, who was charged with second-degree murder in the beating death of his illegally adopted daughter, was found guilty of the lesser charge of manslaughter January 30. Steinberg can receive up to 15 years in prison. The trial gained national attention with the televised testimony of Ildeeda Nussbaum, who lived with Steinberg for 12 years and claimed that she had been so abused and manipulated by Steinberg that she couldn't defend herself or the 6-year-old girl, Lisa.

Compiled by Justin Smith from The Berkshire Eagle

Tong will teach at Davidson

by Sara Dubow

Citing personal reasons, Associate Professor of Philosophy Rosemarie Tong, who on leave from Williams this year, accepted a permanent position at Davidson College in North Carolina. Named National Professor of the Year in 1986, Tong has been teaching at Davidson since September.

Tong said that her decision was a very difficult one. "I've loved my ten years at

'I can understand her reasons but the college will really feel the loss.'

Williams, and there is a sadness at leaving something you've been such a part of. When you experience the death of your spouse, it is time to ask yourself if it is time for a change in life. These ten years have been a very happy, but I asked myself if I wanted to continue the same thing or go on to new challenges," she said. Tong's husband Paul died last April.

Tong taught philosophy at Williams for all other ten years, and was also the chair of the Women's Studies program. In October of last year, she was formally reprimanded for failing to attribute a section of a speech she gave at a Connecticut High School.

File photo

Students expressed sadness, but also understanding about Tong's decision. "I can understand her reasons, but the college will really feel the loss," said Megan Jacobson '91. "She was a really terrific teacher and also an excellent person just to talk to."

"I'm really not surprised, but I will miss her. She was such a positive, supportive teacher, and also very personally involved with her students. In studying philosophy, she seemed to be learning with us, which made it seem very real," Louise Price '91 said.

Now a tenured full professor at Davidson, Tong is teaching both Philosophy and Women's Studies courses. She also holds the John Thatcher Chair in Medical Humanities there.

Judge orders Dartmouth to reinstate suspended Review journalists

by Soojin Kim

The Dartmouth Review, an independent student publication at Dartmouth, is often surrounded by controversy regarding its sometimes caustic brand of conservative journalism. But when two suspended Review staffers were ordered reinstated by the College, the debate over the Review became more intense than ever.

The controversy arose from the college's decision to suspend three Review members, two for a whole year, after a February 25 confrontation last year with William Cole, a black music professor.

The Review filed two lawsuits demanding the decision be overturned. On January 3, New Hampshire Superior Court Judge Bruce Mohl ruled that bias on the part of Committee on Standards member Albert LaValley rendered the March 1988 trial unfair, and reinstated Review editors Christopher Baldwin '89 and John Sutter '88.

According to the January 13 issue of the Dartmouth Forthrightly, LaValley signed his name to a November 1987 letter denouncing the Review for publishing "slandorous articles" and for "sexist and racist" attacks against faculty members.

Mohl's decision, however, was not a complete victory for the Review. He did not criticize the College's judicial process, rejecting Review claims that the plaintiffs' First Amendment rights were violated. Mohl also ruled that College President James Freedman and Dean of the College Edward Shanahan, both of whom were defendants in the case, had not biased the COS proceedings.

"I'm pleased with the ruling," Carlson said. "The Review editors acted rashly - a lot of what the Review does is confrontational and controversial - but what they did didn't justify a year's suspension. In many ways, the Review has gone too far. Some of what they print is racist and often insensitive and untrue, but the editors didn't act in a racist way in the confrontation with Professor Cole. The Review merely printed up a transcript of a lecture that he had actually given."

According to Howie, plans for starting a conservative newspaper here are still in the concept stage. There have been no formal meetings or discussions of funding. He added that the paper would have no formal affiliation with the Republican Club.

Howie said the paper will report on major issues affecting Williams and the nation from a conservative point of view. "We'll try to balance out the ideological and intellectual climate on campus which is clearly liberal," he said.

"There is some conservative bent on economic issues, but on foreign policy and social issues Williams is gungho liberal," added Russell Day '91, a member of the club.

Conservative paper at Williams
The controversy surrounding the case might have ramifications for other student publications. Members of the Garfield Republican Club are discussing the feasibility of publishing a conservative newspaper at Williams, according

Committee ponders JA decisions

continued from page 1

more objective than the peer recommendation," she added. "JAs are more likely to be honest, and they're more concerned with the selection process since they have a broader perspective."

Toll was asked to write several for freshmen who were in her entry last year. "There are some people whom you feel very strongly about one way or the other. The hard ones are those that you're not sure about. It's difficult if you haven't seen them in a crisis situation," she said. "You don't want it to be too generic."

She added that she has not felt that she needed to decline writing a recommendation at any time, although she knows others who have.

Toll and Gillis agreed that the most important quality in a prospective JA is the ability to get along with different types of people. "The only generalization is that we look for someone who will foster openness in the entry," she said.

"but it might upset the JA-freshman relationship, and it could have some repercussions. It frustrates me, because [the college is] getting so much from the JA system."

Despite concerns over the alcohol policy, however, the popularity of the JA program does not seem to be in jeopardy, reflected in the large number of applicants. Colby said that it was something she had wanted to do since her freshman year. "I think my JA influenced me because I admired them so much, and they were such a big part of entry life. They were great people and I really respected them," Colby said.

"There's an enthusiasm that freshmen have," Toll said. "When you're around them it rejuvenates your feelings toward Williams. I think it's a great system the way it is."

Relationship may change
There is some concern among students that the positive JA-freshman relationship ship could change because of the new alcohol policy adopted by the administration. The policy is designed to cut down on freshman drinking by heavily fining the JAs of entries that are caught hosting parties. Because the fine increases with each violation, it puts a large financial burden on those affected.

The alcohol policy has gotten both positive and negative views from those it affects. Gillis, who disagrees with the policy, said he understood the rationale behind it.

Toll, however, said the policy could be dangerous to the JA program. "I can see the administration's position that they want to cut down on drinking," she said.

"The only generalization is that we look for someone who will foster openness in the entry."

Former military man pleads for nuclear sanity

by Sallie Han

Williams students who attended "The Way Out: A General Nuclear Settlement" on January 23 were told of their responsibility in bringing sanity to the arms race. The source of this information was no less than the former commander of all Pacific naval forces and former director of the National Security Agency.

Admiral Noel Gayler expressed his fears about the present nuclear situation and his ideas about how to improve it to an audience in Chapin Hall. He stated the responsibility of the United States, especially its academic institutions, in taking action on the question.

"You are the ones who are going to have to carry the burden," Gayler told the audience. He compared the state of affairs between the U.S. and the Soviet Union to two animals caught in a net, and said that both nations bore great responsibility in their continuing political, ideological and military tug-of-war.

"We have first-strike weapons deployed in a game of chicken," he said. He pointed out that it would require just a few of the 50,000 nuclear weapons stockpiled between the two nations to destroy the earth. Gayler said, "The unnecessary chance of being blown to hell [we take] is absurd."

Gayler said he thought the slow process of debating the number of missiles each side is to have was ridiculous. "Relative numbers are not important," he said. "The amount of cheating required to make a difference is so massive [that this is not a major concern]."

"We must find political solutions in order to find any technological solutions. We have to recognize in our negotiations that it is neither we nor the Soviet Union who are the enemy, but that it is nuclear weapons."

Make peace, not war

Former commander of all Pacific naval forces and head of the National Security Agency Noel Gayler spoke on his fears about the arms race, in Chapin Hall on January 23. Thomas

He spoke about seeing Hiroshima three days after the U.S. had dropped the first atomic bomb. "Nothing in a motion picture prepares you for it,"

Gayler said. "We need never have demonstrated the use of these weapons against human beings, and we must never do it again."

He stressed that every day without the end of the atomic peril increases the probability and the consequences of nuclear conflict.

Academic institutions
Gayler said that it was the duty of the academic institution to realize and teach the truth about the present nuclear situation. "The only antidote to this incredibly dangerous situation is truth. The truth will make you free. "It is the responsibility of the academic community to understand and promulgate the issues involved. It is the responsibility of all of us to believe that we can make a difference. We are not helpless," he said.

"We have to recognize...that it is neither we nor the Soviet Union who are the enemy."

Earlier in the day, Admiral Gayler and his wife, Jeanne, spoke to several classes. Gayler retired from the Navy with a Distinguished Service Medal in 1976 after 46 years of active service; his wife is the former executive director of the American Committee of East-West Accord. They have been active in public speaking and in various projects dealing with nuclear disarmament and East-West issues.

The talks were organized by the Williams Disarmament Forum, and co-sponsored by the Lecture Committee, Interdepartmental Program for Experimental and Cross-Disciplinary Studies, Political Science, Physics, History of Science, Freshman Seminar "Current Issues in Science," the Chaplain's Office and College Democrats.

Give Blood. Get Za.

Don't make us twist your arm.

Please support.

Bloodmobile February 7 and 8.

Profscam claims tenure harmful to teaching

by Janet Singleton
College Press Service

Members of the Williams community upset with the recent tenure decisions may find support for their critique of the system in Profscam. Author Charles Sykes depicts academicians as overpaid, underworked prima donnas who are endangering the university's place as a center of learning.

Sykes said that college teachers have been made complacent by tenure, which frees them to abandon their students in favor of chasing money and prestige through office politicking, useless research and big grants.

"They have distorted university curriculums to accommodate their own narrow and selfish interests," Sykes wrote. "These interests are so trendy that they produce curriculums that look like they were designed by a game show host, he added in an interview.

"A lot of undergrads go to some of the most prestigious universities in the country, like the University of Michigan, Berkeley, even Harvard, based on the reputations of their professors," Sykes said.

"What they find is something very different from what they and their parents have been led to expect. They think they'll be learning at the feet of those professors and what they find is, if they see those professors at all, it's as a blur in the parking lot."

Sykes says in his book that all this can be changed by eliminating tenure.

Such a proposal is not without its detractors. Sykes' idea would destroy academic freedom, according to Dr. Jonathan Knight of the American Association of University Professors.

"Sykes says eliminating tenure will keep everybody on their toes," Knight

After his father's death, Sykes set out to develop the article into a book, and, in the process, came to focus on the quality of college teaching.

He found that most professors teach only seven and a half to nine hours a week. They leave instructing and guiding students to graduate assistants who, Sykes said, now comprise an academic underclass often of foreigners who can't speak understandable English.

"I have to admit I was appalled at how deeply ingrained the contempt for teaching is."

"I have to admit I was appalled at how deeply ingrained the contempt for teaching is."

said. "More likely it'll keep everybody on their knees."

Profscam grew out of a 1985 article written by Sykes' father, a journalism professor, for Milwaukee Magazine. In the piece, he accused his colleagues of poor work habits.

tempt for teaching is."

People who like and are good at teaching often don't get tenure because they may not be good at publishing, Sykes said.

"To be a teacher in higher education is virtually to commit professional suicide."

He writes, "Tenure corrupts, enervates and dulls higher education."

Knight disagreed emphatically. "Sykes believes that by eliminating tenure, you'll weed out the deadwood and the incompetents," Knight said. Yet bosses who hire incompetents often are loathe to admit later they made a hiring mistake, and untenured teachers would be unlikely to risk angering their bosses by asking to weed out their bad colleagues, according to Knight.

Consequently, it's likely Sykes' system would lead to more deadwood, not less, Knight said.

Without the job security tenure gives them, Knight added, the best professors would move on to where the real money is: private industry.

"If you're a computer scientist earning $50,000 a year at a university without tenure," Knight said, "why should you stay when you can go to the Silicon Valley and get $100,000 and also don't have tenure?"

He did concede that talented professors are dismissed when they fail to devote as much time to research and publishing as their tenured colleagues.

"Sometimes the very finest teachers are let go," Knight said.

In Other Ivory Towers

University of Washington
A prankster disrupted a human sexuality class at the University of Washington January 9 by throwing a live rooster from the classroom balcony and shouting "Suck my cock." The rooster was killed when it hit the floor. According to the instructor of the course, similar fowl incidents have occurred every term the class has been taught, but this is the first time a fatality has occurred. Campus police are investigating.

Bates College
President of Bates Thomas H. Reynolds announced on January 25 that he has approved the inclusion of a sexual orientation clause into the college's official written non-discrimination policy. This announcement marks a reversal of the Bates Trustees' nine year stance against the clause. The new clause will appear in all Bates publications in which the non-discrimination policy appears.

Union College
Union students returned from Christmas to greet a new party policy: no more weekday parties. The new policy stipulates that parties may be scheduled on Friday and Saturday nights only, except during the last week of the term before finals, when no parties will be allowed. "Are we serious about this? The answer is yes," said Union Dean of Students Joseph Mammola in the Concordia. The college also reaffirmed other facets of its alcohol policy, including restricting the number of students who can attend a single party, checking for identification at the door, serving alternative beverages and prohibiting fixed taps.

Compiled by Bill Savadove from college newspapers.

Eph pro-life group faces hostile opinion

continued from page 4

printed the notice for the group's meeting, but it committed six typographical errors in a two-line message, including an incorrect phone number for Day. There were no other typos in the entire Advisor. Day said that he spoke to Dean Edwards who contacted the College Council and informed them of the problem.

Both Howe and Day said they do not expect the group to win many converts at Williams. "It doesn't have the greatest chance of changing everyone's mind," Howe said. "It's good to get discussion on the issue. I'm hoping the club provides information and interesting arguments on the abortion issue."

"I definitely don't think there's a silent majority out there," Day said. "I think there's a very silent, small minority whom we might bring out of the woodwork, but that's not the point. There is a majority who takes for granted their position on the issue. If we go out to them, they may see the light."

Valentines... Shoebox Style!

Just a little out of the ordinary.

SHOEBOX GREETINGS
(A long little tradition of Valentine's)

Inside message: "...asking directions to my place."

McClelland's

© 1989 Hallmark Cards, Inc.

New Releases on sale:

Orbison
Replacements
Dylan & Dead
etc.

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

131 Water St. 458-5229

MINISTRY JOBS now!

We have more job openings in Christian organizations than people to fill them. You may be qualified for one of them.

Call toll free today or mail the coupon below.

CALL INTERCRISTO TODAY
1-800-426-1342

(206-546-7330 in WA, HI and Canada)

InterCristo
The Career and Human Resource Specialists
1900 Fremont Avenue North
Seattle, Washington 98133

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____ Zip _____

CLARKSBURG BREAD CO.

PRODUCTS BAKED FRESH FROM SCRATCH DAILY

Coffee • Tea • Juice • Soft Drinks

OPEN EVERY DAY (413) 458-2251

RICHARD D. SIMPSON

G. VINCENT COUSSOULE

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-4808

The student body has spoken.

U.S. Department of Health & Human Services

MassMoCAbaret lampoons Berkshire issues with song and sarcasm

by Elizabeth Greenman

Cabaret, a theater winter study project, wound up last week with three productions of a show modeled after the cabarets of the 1930s. The actors, who wrote and choreographed all the sketches, targeted local issues like the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art and teenage pregnancy for exposure through song, dance and sarcasm.

Cabarets were traditionally performed in intimate settings, like restaurants and bars, and involved a great deal of audience participation. The performers tried to replicate this with performances at Bette's Life and Times and the Williams Inn, in addition to the AMT Downstage. Posters around campus set the tone for the show, billing the production as the work of "The White Bred Coalition."

In a somewhat sinister way, everybody at Williams College is the same, and we like it that way.

The name was a stab at the complacency and homogeneity of both Williamstown residents and the Williams student body.

True to their name, the performers all appeared in whiteface. The starkness of the white pancake makeup, bright red lipstick and dark eyeliner made the actors seem unreal and vaguely menacing, and reminded the audience that they were not so very far away from the demeaning blackface song-and-dance routines of fifty years ago.

Yet even beyond being a comment on racism, the masks implied that, in a somewhat sinister way, everybody at Williams College is the same, and we like it that way. This theme of elitism continued throughout the show, in reference to race, wealth, social status and even gender.

Aside from being a political statement, the masks and indeed the costumes themselves (white T-shirts, men's boxers and white sneakers) served an extremely important function. They provided a foundation on which to build, allowing each actor to create a new character by the addition of a skirt, a tuxedo jacket, or a Williams sweatshirt, all within the confines of the cabaret format.

The coalition used the format itself to their advantage by spoofing the style of the presentation, be it country and western, rock, or all-out nightclub extravaganza, while employing it as a vehicle of social satire. Perhaps most memorable was the beauty pageant for Miss North Adams, whose winner was a fourteen-year-old, pregnant high school dropout. This was certainly the most poignant act of the night, in contrast to the often hard-edged sarcasm of the rest of the show. In fact, the scene was strong enough to hold together during the second performance, despite a touchy moment with the lines.

Unfortunately, the cabaret format was also the show's greatest weakness, as some method of tying the various scenes together was necessary. This was done by means of an emcee's patter, which at its best approached Tom Lehrer and at its worst served only as a bland introduction to the next song.

Lines notwithstanding, the second performance was far better than the first. The intimacy of Bette's encouraged audience involvement and was not as impersonal as the set playing area in the AMT Downstage. Learning from Tuesday night, which was announced as a dress rehearsal, the cast cut out an awkward

continued on page 8

Miss North Adams

Laura Krebs '90 plays a pregnant high school dropout, winner of the Miss North Adams beauty pageant, in MassMoCAbaret, a theater winter study project. (Steinman)

Trio, quartet combine for chamber music

by Sean A. Timmons

Last Saturday night, the Williams Trio gave a concert in Brooks-Rogers recital hall to a capacity crowd. The concert, their second of the year, was a departure from their usual format in that they did not play any literature specifically for piano trio. Instead, they invited the Atlantic String Quartet to join them in a program of larger chamber works.

The evening opened with one of Schubert's masterpieces, the Quintet in C Major, D. 956. For this work the Atlantic String Quartet, consisting of Linda Quan and Ryan Brown, violins, Lois Martin, viola, and Chris Finekel, cello, was joined by Douglas Moore, cello, a member of the Williams Trio.

The Schubert is a remarkable piece with a tremendous amount of energy, and this group gave a creditable reading of it, despite some ragged playing in the first two movements. The first movement, Allegro ma non troppo, has a slow introduction which contrasts the sonorities of the violins with those of the lower instruments.

The group produced a full, warm sound here, as they did later in many of the more lyrical sections. Some of that fullness was lost when the allegro proper began, however. The playing seemed to lose some of its confidence, especially in the development, where the quintet did not have quite enough bite for a truly exciting performance.

The performers gave the second movement a better reading, making much of the contrast between the simple, innocent opening and the anguished second section. The end of the movement is reminiscent of the beginning with elements of the tormented middle evident. The third movement was a rollicking, if somewhat heavy, scherzo with an introspective trio. The group played this continued on page 8

Three plus four

Members of the Atlantic String Quartet combine with the Williams Trio in a Chapin performance. (Isackson)

Hello Dali, goodbye Dali -- it's been surreal ...

by Robert Weisberg

"I really hate Salvador Dali," she said, flipping through the modern art prints at the Baxter Hall poster sale. "He's just so weird, he always makes me feel bad. I just can't stand him." This harangue was the result of an innocent comment I had made. I said I thought Dali was a master. When I heard three weeks ago Monday that Dali had died at the age of 84, I was depressed. To be sure, I was unhappy that the world had lost one of its foremost artists.

But what really made me upset is that I would never find out why the giraffes are on fire. Everyone's first experience with Dali is "The Persistence of Memory." You know, the one with the melting clocks. It's all the surrealism that a pre-teen, on his first tour of a modern art museum, common room. I had already decided upon a Lamborghini print, which I loved but knew my suitmates would despise.

And in the background, a solitary giraffe. On fire.

can handle. All of Dali's other images, the split eyeballs, the flying fruit, the people dissolving into nothingness, were lost upon me.

Ten years later, I hit the giraffes. I was at the first Baxter Hall poster sale of my freshman year, trying to find some art to decorate the walls of my suite's

Why? I've had the print for over a year and a half, and I still don't know.

Later, I bought another Dali print, "Burning Giraffes and Telephones." In this one, a faceless woman tries to fend off an attack by a creature with a camera for a torso and a giant eyeball where its head should be. And, in the background, three giraffes gallop along happily. On fire.

Why? I now have four giraffes flambé on my wall, and I still haven't the faintest idea why those giraffes are burning away quietly. Not even a clue.

I can make a little sense of some of Dali's other images. Faceless women?

continued on page 8

Arts in View

February 7 At 8:00 p.m., Ron Hudson, a Spanish/classical guitarist, will perform in Lawrence 231.

February 9 At 8:00 p.m., Cap and Bells will present The Real Inspector Hound in the AMT Downstage.

February 10 At 8:00 p.m., Mwatabu S. Okantah will give a lecture and poetry reading, in conjunction with Black History Month in Brooks-Rogers.

At 8:00 p.m., Cap and Bells will present The Real Inspector Hound in the AMT Downstage.

February 11 At 3:00 p.m., the Divertimento Concert Ensemble, conducted by Professor Douglas Moore, will play string orchestra music by Dvorak, Mozart, Purcell and Warlock at the Clark Art Institute.

From 3:30-5:00 p.m., an opening reception for the exhibit "Refuged Painting: The German Image 1960-1988" will take place at WCMA.

At 7:00 p.m., the Williams Gospel Choir will perform with guests from Princeton, Mt. Holyoke, Brown, and others, in conjunction with Black History Month, in Chapin Hall.

At 8:00 p.m., Cap and Bells will present The Real Inspector Hound in the AMT Downstage.

February Campus Bestsellers

1. The Essential Calvin and Hobbes, by Bill Waterson.
2. The Bonfire of the Vanities, by Tom Wolfe.
3. The Tommyknockers, by Stephen King.
4. The Far Side Gallery 3, by Gary Larson.
5. Beloved, by Toni Morrison.
6. The Cat who came for Christmas, by Cleveland Amory.
7. Separated at Birth?, by Spy Magazine.
8. Tales too Ticklish to Tell, by Berke Breathed.
9. The Power of Myth, by Joseph Campbell and Bill Moyers.
10. The Dark Tower: The Gunslinger, by Stephen King.

Compiled by The Chronicle of Higher Education from information supplied by college stores throughout the country. January 15, 1988. Courtesy of the Association of American Publishers.

A walk on the beach...

Alice Maurice '90, Kent Wosepka '92, Stuart Gutman '90 and Lisa Alcalá '91 dramatize psychological tensions in Icarus' Mother, a Sam Shepard play. (Thomas)

Icarus' Mother falls into sea of ambiguity

by Caitlin Osborne

On January 23-25, Cap and Bells presented Icarus' Mother, a one-set play written by Sam Shepard and directed by Robin Neider '91.

The script itself was both bizarre and provocative. The plot concerned five people on a picnic near a beach on July 4, but it took second place to a psychological examination composed of a series of monologues and dialogues and the symbol of Icarus, a plane flying overhead throughout the performance.

The relationships between the five characters were never revealed, making the action confusing and difficult to follow. The success of the play therefore hinged on the individual performances of the actors in often ambiguous roles.

Stuart Gutman '90 played Howard, the character who masterminded the psychological tensions throughout the play. He was delightfully cruel as he mocked Bill (Kent Wosepka '92) at the beginning for believing that the pilot of the plane overhead was watching the moves of the fivesome. Later, he was Pat's (Lisa Alcalá '91) tormentor, both alone and as ringleader of the others when they persuaded her to give up a walk on the beach.

Throughout the play, one sensed the power of Gutman — both his character and his performance — even at the end when the pilot crashed and he seemed responsible, yet remained stonily insensible. Wosepka, as Gutman's sometimes right-hand man and partner in cruelty, was convincingly naive and sensitive compared to the impassiveness of Gutman's character. The relationship between the two was somewhat defined, if not always completely clear.

These kinds of connections were the necessary element in making the play a success. Unfortunately, the other players did not always make clear their relative places.

Alcalá, for example, had the difficult job of reacting to the tensions produced by Gutman without having real substance in the play to go on. She portrayed the terror and anger necessary for the role of Pat admirably, but one was often left in doubt of the cause of these feelings. Clearly, Howard frightened her and frightened her deliberately, but there was never a sense of why he bothered to do so or why she was afraid of him.

Alice Maurice '90, who played the role of Jill, delivered a monologue which was a believable and enjoyable high point. She came back onstage and related how Pat and she, while walking on the beach, suddenly had to go to the bathroom so badly that they squatted down in the sand despite the plane flying just overhead.

However, Maurice also seemed to have difficulty defining the relationships of her character. Although by the end she was dealing with Pat as an equal and a friend, she had earlier shown shades of a maternal, yet typically cruel older sibling.

Rob Handel '90 gave an excellent performance in the role of Frank during the play's final monologue. He also participated in the peeing motif, when he tried to convince Howard to let him go use the bathroom in private. The others insisted that if Pat went with him, she could take her long-awaited walk, but he maintained that he'd "really like to pee alone." The lack of stated relationships was not a problem for him, as his character seemed a deliberate loner.

However, despite sound performances by the cast members, there still seemed to be something lacking in the play. Perhaps it was a firm knowledge by the cast of what the play meant to them, knowledge which would be necessary to dispel the ambiguity of the script and make a clear point.

But perhaps, as Gutman suggested, "Shepard builds to something but doesn't give reasons that make sense. [the play] is like an REM song, strong stuff that creates feeling and leaves you to figure out what is going on." In either case, the performance left the audience members feeling that they had almost gotten the point, but still frustrated that somewhere in the writing, acting or directing, they had been left out.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinemas I, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
Rain Man 7:00 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:05
Heaches 7:00 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:05
Working Girl 7:05 & 9:15 Sat & Sun 2:05
Oliver and Company

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
Things Change February 7 7:00 & 9:00
The 21st International Tournee of Animation February 8-9 7:00 & 9:00
Eight Men Out February 10-11 7:00
Bull Durham February 10-11 9:00
Crossing Delancey February 12-14 7:00 & 9:00

North Adams Cinema
Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Mississippi Burning 7:00 & 9:30 Sat & Sun 2:00
Who's Harry Crumb? 7:10 Sat & Sun 2:00
Her Alibi 9:20
Rain Man 7:00 & 9:30 Sat & Sun 2:00
Working Girl 7:10 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:00

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
Working Girl, The Accidental Tourist, Beaches, Mississippi Burning (no matinee): Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30, Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10
Rain Man 6:45 & 9:15, Sat-Sun 12:45 & 3:10
Oliver and Company, Land Before Time: Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10
The Naked Gun, Who's Harry Crumb?, Her Alibi, Twins, Three Fugitives, Physical Evidence (no matinee): 7:15 & 9:30, Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10

Berkshire Mall Cinema
Rte 8, Lanesborough, 499-2558
Rain Man 12:30 3:30 6:40 9:40
Who's Harry Crumb? 12:55 4:10 6:55 9:20
Oliver and Company 12:30 2:30
The Accidental Tourist 4:20 7:05 9:50
Mississippi Burning 12:40 3:40 6:45 9:30
Her Alibi 12:40 3:45 7:25 9:45
Beaches 12:50 4:00 6:50 9:50
The Naked Gun 1:20 4:20 7:20 9:35
Working Girl 1:10 3:40 7:15 9:45
Twins 1:05 3:50 7:00 9:30
Three Fugitives 1:00 3:55 7:10 9:25

Brookman Auditorium
An American Werewolf in London February 10 7:00 & 9:00

Song and sarcasm

continued from page 7

ward bathroom joke scene, reminiscent of Laugh In. Yung Moon said after the show, "The rest of the play did not support it. It seemed to harsh on North Adams when instead we wanted to point out North Adams' problems, like homelessness and teenage pregnancy."

To further this end, MassMoCAbaret switched back and forth between a (hardly) idyllic Williamstown and North Adams, tying them together with several pieces on MassMoCA. The museum was touted onstage as the Massachusetts Museum of Caucasian Art, and the actors mocked Williams Adjunct Professor of Art Thomas Krens' for treating MassMoCA and himself as the economic saviors of North Adams.

To prevent smug complacency, the show included a disturbing date rape court case, in which the judge did not try the accused rapist, Mr. Mary Kipp, but the victim, Miss Tim Shaw. This court scene, among others, was calculated to disturb the audience. Yet the players did not depend on content alone to shake people up. The actors directly confronted audience members, singing in their faces and at times sitting in their laps.

Unfortunately, what could have been a very effective technique did not entirely succeed, as these intimidation tactics were few and far between and did not involve the majority of the audience. Even so, the topics were disturbing enough in themselves.

Nor did the message of the audience's complacency become lost amidst the entertainment of the sketches. We were allowed to enjoy the show (and it was extremely enjoyable), but not ourselves.

Trio, Quartet double up

continued from page 7

movement very well, particularly the trio section, in which they again displayed a warm, rich sound.

The final movement, Allegretto-Piu Allegro-Piu Presto, is made up of light, dance-like elements which the quintet played with great energy and buoyancy.

The performers maintained the movement's tremendous momentum, delighting the audience with its surprising, humorous ending. It was an enjoyable performance of a truly remarkable piece.

The second half of the program consisted of the Concerto in D Major, Opus 21, for Violin, Piano, and String Quartet by Ernest Chausson. Here, the other two members of the Williams Trio, Timothy Baker, violin, and Doris Stevenson, piano, were joined by the Atlantic Quartet in a display piece for the solo violinist.

The piece opens with a strong statement of an ominous three-note motif, first on piano, then echoed by the quartet. When Baker made his entrance, he projected well and showed a musical sensibility well suited to the French late Romantic style of the piece. This movement contrasted outbursts of passionate intensity with moments of sparkling clarity, all of which were well played.

There were some balance problems in the other movements, for Stevenson seemed not to be aware that on occasion she was drowning out the quartet. In her solo passages, however, Stevenson played very well, if with a somewhat heavy tone.

Baker played marvelously, filling Brooks-Rogers with his powerful sound and his artful virtuosity. On the whole, the evening was delightful, and the large crowd was obviously well pleased.

BANKERS TRUST COMPANY INVITES YOU TO AN INFORMATION SESSION
ON WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8TH
FROM 8:00 - 9:00 PM AT THE OFFICE
OF CAREER COUNSELING, STETSON HALL.

COME AND MEET WITH OUR REPRESENTATIVES FROM CORPORATE FINANCE TO FIND OUT ABOUT "MERCHANT BANKING—THE BANKERS TRUST WAY."

COMPANY
INFORMATION SESSION
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8TH
8:00 - 9:00 PM
OFFICE OF CAREER COUNSELING,
STETSON HALL

Students interviewing with us on February 9th must attend

Come Daily in the Alley at the Elysian Fields Gallery
(formerly The Studio)

Featuring handknit woolen and mohair sweaters, unique crafted jewelry, oversized paisley scarves and shawls, silk pajamas and kimonos, and museum prints for your dorm or favorite Valentine.

Hours: Mon-Sat 10-5:30 and Sun 12-5:00

Elysian Fields Gallery

Eph's Alley, off Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-4707
Elise and Jonathan Meer '83, Proprietors

Dali's burning giraffes

continued from page 7

The loss of humanity, maybe. Camera creatures with telephone tentacles? Something about technology taking us over, no problem.

Burning giraffes? Get back to me tomorrow.

Still, I keep looking at those posters, hoping that if I squint just the right way, and the light hits the prints at a certain angle, I'll see man's inhumanity to man, the answer to refinancing the debt, or even just the message "Thank you for your support."

But I know that will never happen. I had always hoped to meet Dali and ask him what he meant by the burning giraffes. I'll never get that opportunity now. Looks like I'll have to try on my own.

And I will try. That's why I think Dali is a master: not because he answers all of the questions, but because he keeps me asking them. Even if the question is "Why are those giraffes on fire?" What an artist. What a loss.

Factory Outlet Store
40% off

- Thesis Paper
- Stationery
- Notes
- Typing Paper
- Letter Paper

Buy your sweetheart a special Valentine's Day card

Windsor Mill
121 Union St., North Adams, Mass.

Open Mon.-Sat 10-5

Eaton FINE LETTER PAPERS

Camera Ready
Resumes
$50 for $17.70

Offset Printed in just a few hours!

We do all types of printing

53 Main St.
North Adams, MA
863-3414

College Students!
Summer in Colorado

REWARDING SUMMER experience in the COLORADO mountains for sophomore and older college students working with children for a camp staff. Activities include: horseback riding, wild life, fishing, many outdoor programs. WHITE MOUNTAIN include program interests. SUNDOWN WESTERN CAMPS, FLORENCE, CO. 80516

INDIAN BLANKET
Special Offer: Buy one Indian Blanket and receive one free. All Indian Blankets are made of 100% cotton and are available in a variety of colors and designs. Call today for more information.

With coupon receive
$2.00 off our FANTASTIC FAJITA
Tender chunks of marinated beef, chicken, or both.
Sautéed with veggies and served piping hot with rice, beans, lettuce, tomatoes and hot tortillas & sour cream

not valid on Saturdays

800 State Rd. • North Adams, MA • 413-664-4757
140 Worcester St. • Pittsfield, MA • 413-499-4007

The beat of a different drummer

Obo Addy, Ghanaian master drummer, leads his winter study class in a celebration of African music. (Steinman)

Rhythm and ritual

Addy drums up interest in African music

by Tasha Norman

On Wednesday, January 25, Brooks Rogers exploded with the rhythms of West Africa. Ghanaian master drummer Obo Addy led his 22 Williams students involved in the "Experience African Music" winter study in a performance of the traditional rhythms of his people and his country.

Over the four weeks of winter study, Addy exposed his students to the ritual music and dance of the Ewe people, the Gu tribe, the Dagomba people and the Dipo initiation festival. Ritual drumming is the source of African music, just as spiritual and gospel music are the sources of Afro-American music.

Spirituality is the goal of all over the world to perform and to Addy's playing. Intense and powerful rhythms are what make the spirits tremble, one in Ghana and the other in happy, according to Addy. "Drums are the United States. He also teaches a sacred, the rhythms are sacred. There is university course when he can, in addition to studying and researching at the Ghanaian Council of the Arts.

When asked how he liked his three-

"African music is the soul of its people. Everyone gets involved, even the on-lookers," Addy explained. "Thus African music incorporates the activities of its people, for example, social dances, weddings, deaths, initiations, etc." He expressed this in the concert by including tales and ideas that celebrated the strength of his people.

Addy, a member of the Gu tribe in Ghana, has been drumming since he was a child. "I lived in a house of music. You see, my father was a medicine man."

At the age of six, Addy's excellence in drumming led him to become a master drummer—"someone who leads the drum ensemble, knows all the parts and can improvise." His skill has taken him

As in traditional African performances, Addy had his student ensemble play a processional piece called Adzomani as they walked onto the stage from the rear of the recital hall. This allowed the audience to feel and sense the polyrhythms up close as each player passed by. As Addy improvised on the lead bell, the ensemble prepared the audience for a traditional African music experience.

College responds to consultants

continued from page 1

To assist in its search for minority faculty candidates, the college has retained the educational consulting firm of William M. Boyd. Last fall, Boyd conducted a workshop on affirmative action for the CAP and the chairs of various academic departments.

Oakley has also asked the Faculty and Steering Committees to look at the composition of the CAP and the way in which its members are appointed to better aid in including women and minority faculty as CAP members.

The grievance procedure at Williams was also in need of improvement, especially with regard to women and minorities, according to the consultants. In addition, the consultants thought that the affirmative action officer should play a more well-defined role in the grievance process.

Oakley detailed the grievance procedure in the letter and specifically pointed out the role of the affirmative action officer in that process.

Better information
The consultants suggested that Williams needed to better distribute information about issues of campus-wide importance. The college, as reported in the letter, has responded to this suggestion with a variety of changes which will take effect beginning this semester.

First, the Affirmative Action Officer will have a weekly walk-in office hour during which he or she will be available to all members of the college community without appointment. This official, along with the vice president for administration, will also hold open meetings at which women and minorities within the administration and support staff will be able to voice their concerns.

Williams' grievance procedures are in need of improvement for women and minorities.

Similar meetings, held by the officer and the dean of the faculty, will be scheduled for faculty members. As a final means of improving information sharing, Williams Reports will be published more frequently.

The consultants noted that foreign nationals were too often grouped with U.S. citizens and permanent residents when the college reported its levels of minority hiring. Oakley said that the college has since taken steps to clarify these ambiguities.

A further recommendation was that the college improve channels of communication between administrators, staff, faculty, and student groups.

In addition, the college has also undertaken a series of further affirmative action initiatives, apart from the recommendations of the consultants.

First, the college has increased the yearly goal of 3-4 minority regular faculty appointments by adding a goal of 2-3 minority visiting faculty. The Committee on Appointments and Promotions has also approved three appointments of minority faculty at any seniority level over the next three years. In addition, the college is working with Howard University to establish a visiting faculty program.

The college will send annual affirmative action updates and a list of faculty openings to Hispanic and Asian alumni, and in addition approximately 1300 minority leaders in higher education will be contacted. Presently, only black alumni receive the updates.

Service faster at Dewey's

continued from page 1

He said that the printed forms had been a particularly good idea because it gave students a clear indication of which books they needed but where not yet in.

Dewey added that close to 98 percent of the books were available. Of the books which had not yet arrived, he said that there were some mitigating circumstances. All books published by Viking Penguin were delayed, he said, because that company recently moved to a new warehouse. According to Dewey, problems with Viking Penguin were not unique to the Williams Bookstore.

Dewey said that only three professors so far had called to reorder books for enlarged enrollments. Dewey added that it has been the Bookstore's policy to obtain a professor's go ahead before reordering books but that now there was more pressure to call earlier.

He said he has received no complaints on overpricing. "Well, there have been the usual groans, but I haven't actually had any complaints. And it's not so bad second semester," he said. Dewey added that many students buy books in their first semester which are used for the entire year.

Dewey said that one of the most important changes at the Bookstore was the use of extra runners. One of the reasons for slow service in the Bookstore has been too few runners in its closed-stack system for too many customers. "All the people who said they wanted to be runners showed up," he said.

The heaviest and busiest time was Thursday afternoon, when the line extended from the back of the store to the front entrance, Dewey said. He timed a student moving through that line. It took that student half an hour at most to purchase his books.

Dewey said that the real problem with the Bookstore was the building. "It's an old building and it's too small." He said that closed stacks have worked for years, but now a bigger store with room for open stacks might better meet the needs of Williams students. "It's an idea whose time has come for Williams," he said.

Gargoyle Society goes public

continued from page 4

However, present members of Gargoyle said that the new structure will allow the society to continue to be a unique and useful organization for reform. Members added that the group's strength rested on its ties to the long and respected tradition of Gargoyle and the fact that it is composed solely of students unencumbered by bureaucratic formal-ties such as minutes, selection committees and voting regulations.

Although some members said they feel frustrated with Gargoyle's ineffectiveness, they did point to some recent programs the group initiated, such as Senior Days and Peer Advising. They are currently working on establishing graduate school advising for seniors.

In 1986, Gargoyle formulated and lobbied for the adoption of the Honor Code. The group also founded the Record and the College Council system on campus. In the sixties, the group was concerned with the problems inherent in the transition from the fraternity system to the residential system. "People are reluctant to let something go that has been so much a part of history and tradition," Wick said. "I think I would worry about any organization that had an amorphous structure."

New alcohol policy is too lenient

continued from page 3

human nature. Few of us would say we came to Williams because it offered a haven from oppressive liquor laws in other parts of the nation. Why then do so many fuss when the administration finally begins living by the spirit of the law which binds them as well as us?

Of course, the idea that the Law is the be-all and end-all in deciding personal behavior is overly simple and potentially dictatorial. Still, it does represent the decisions of the government our society has produced and agreed to follow. As I mentioned before, if you disagree with the results of this process, protest, but protest where the decisions are made. The college is a fine place to discuss political theory and the merits of various drinking laws, but the place to change them is in Boston. If you're underage, which is most of us, the fact is that possession of alcohol is illegal, and the price of that action may very well be high.

I know my views are extreme and will raise the ire of many people. I'm not asking everyone to agree with me. Just take the time to really think about what I've said. Try and consider the legal position of the college as a residential institute. Forget about moral matters and common social practice. After that, if you still feel violated by the party policy, you'll probably have to trouble finding others to comfort you over a beer.

SAVE THIS AD & Come To
DRUMMOND CLEANERS
Spring Street, Williamstown

Jim Drummond is at it again... He wants to clean you up!!

SPECIAL SAVINGS On Drycleaning

4 for 2
4 similar articles for the price of 2
Jan. 16 to Jan. 21

SWEATERS
reg. $3.50
Now $1.50
Jan. 23-Jan. 28

Coupon must be presented when clothes are brought in for cleaning.

Coats & Parkas
Fur and Leathers not included
reg. $8.50
Now $4.00
Jan. 30-Feb. 24

Household Goods
Drapes, curtains, seat covers, cushion covers, etc.
50% off
Feb. 6-Feb. 11

Don't forget we're now in North Adams at The Laundry Club, 41 Union St., (413) 664-6789

Drummond Cleaners 44 Spring St., Williamstown, Mass. 01267-0501
Meyer Laundry 119 Park St., Williamstown, Mass. 01267-0501
O'Dell's Drycleaning 43 Elm St., Haverhill, Mass. 01830-0501

STUDY FOR ONE YEAR OR FOR ONE OR TWO TERMS IN OXFORD

Several colleges of Oxford University have invited The Washington International Studies Center to recruit qualified students to study for one year or for one or two terms. Lower tuition rates are available, and graduate study is available. Students are directly enrolled in their colleges and receive "in-country" living allowances. This is NOT a program conducted by a U.S. College in Oxford. Applications with an essay are directed by WISC.

INTERN IN WASHINGTON, LONDON

WISC offers summer internships with Congress, with the White House, with the media and with think tanks. Government and Journalism courses are taught by senior-level government officials who are also scholars, and by experienced journalists. Similar opportunities in public policy internships are offered (with academic credit) in London (Fall, Spring and Summer).

WISC The Washington International Studies Center
214 Massachusetts Ave., N.E., Suite 220
Washington, D.C. 20002 (202) 547-2275

CROSSWORD PUZZLE SOLUTION

ACROSS
1. MURDER
2. BLOOD
3. GUILTY
4. KILL
5. DEATH
6. CRIME
7. SIN
8. OFFENSE
9. MISDEMEANOR
10. TRESPASS
11. VIOLATION
12. BREACH
13. INFRINGEMENT
14. VIOLATION
15. MISDEMEANOR
16. TRESPASS
17. VIOLATION
18. BREACH
19. INFRINGEMENT
20. VIOLATION
21. MISDEMEANOR
22. TRESPASS
23. VIOLATION
24. BREACH
25. INFRINGEMENT
26. VIOLATION
27. MISDEMEANOR
28. TRESPASS
29. VIOLATION
30. BREACH
31. INFRINGEMENT
32. VIOLATION
33. MISDEMEANOR
34. TRESPASS
35. VIOLATION
36. BREACH
37. INFRINGEMENT
38. VIOLATION
39. MISDEMEANOR
40. TRESPASS
41. VIOLATION
42. BREACH
43. INFRINGEMENT
44. VIOLATION
45. MISDEMEANOR
46. TRESPASS
47. VIOLATION
48. BREACH
49. INFRINGEMENT
50. VIOLATION
51. MISDEMEANOR
52. TRESPASS
53. VIOLATION
54. BREACH
55. INFRINGEMENT
56. VIOLATION
57. MISDEMEANOR
58. TRESPASS
59. VIOLATION
60. BREACH
61. INFRINGEMENT
62. VIOLATION
63. MISDEMEANOR
64. TRESPASS
65. VIOLATION
66. BREACH
67. INFRINGEMENT
68. VIOLATION
69. MISDEMEANOR
70. TRESPASS
71. VIOLATION
72. BREACH
73. INFRINGEMENT
74. VIOLATION
75. MISDEMEANOR
76. TRESPASS
77. VIOLATION
78. BREACH
79. INFRINGEMENT
80. VIOLATION
81. MISDEMEANOR
82. TRESPASS
83. VIOLATION
84. BREACH
85. INFRINGEMENT
86. VIOLATION
87. MISDEMEANOR
88. TRESPASS
89. VIOLATION
90. BREACH
91. INFRINGEMENT
92. VIOLATION
93. MISDEMEANOR
94. TRESPASS
95. VIOLATION
96. BREACH
97. INFRINGEMENT
98. VIOLATION
99. MISDEMEANOR
100. TRESPASS

The Williams Record

LIVE

The Williams Record

LIVE

West Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081

Exclusive distributor of Purple Cow Vodka and Gin

12 oz. Molson Golden case $15.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Beck's case $17.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Rolling Rock Export case $11.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Hopfenperle Swiss Beer $13.99 plus deposit
Cash and Carry: 1/2 keg Meisterbrau - $25 plus deposit

For quality over quantity check out our variety of unique beers and ales

Information Services Management Training Program at MORGAN STANLEY

One of Wall Street's leading international securities firms invites Bachelor's and Master's candidates of all majors with superior academic records to apply to our Information Services Management Training Program.

WE SEEK

- SPRING GRADUATES and RECENT ALUMNI for Summer and Fall start dates.

WE OFFER

- A fast-paced leading-edge environment with high intellectual standards
- A structured training program teaching the use of Information Systems technology to solve business-related problems
- A series of challenging assignments with significant responsibility leading to rapid career progression
- An outstanding compensation program.

Williams Recruiting Date: Wednesday, February 15

Sign-Up-Deadline: Tuesday, February 14

For more information and to sign-up for interviews, visit the Office of Career Counseling

MORGAN STANLEY & CO.
Incorporated

IS College Recruiting
1633 Broadway, New York, NY 10019

Morgan Stanley is an Equal Opportunity Employer

Sports

Swimmers dismantle Springfield squad

by Anne Joseph

Nearing the end of the season, the men's and women's swim teams once again added a win to their record after crushing a mixed Springfield College team last Saturday. The men won 169-71 which, upping their record to 6-1, while the women beat the Indians 179-121, bringing their record to 7-1.

"I'm really pleased. I thought it would be a difficult meet, and we rose to the occasion. We are done with our bout with the flu. When you're healthy, you swim better," expressed coach Carl Samuelson.

The Ephmen dominated from the opening 400 medley relay with Robert Benson '90, Evan Davis '89, Chris Cleuzo '90 and Ian Maxwell '92 taking

'90, and Doug Northrop '89 capturing the first three places. The Williams team would not relent. In the following event, Snyder, co-captain Chris Giglio '89 and Curry ended the 500 free in winning succession in 4:48.82, 5:00.14 and 5:11.78 respectively.

False starts abound

Both teams did suffer from several false starts and one disqualification. The 50 free officially swam after two muddled starts in which Eph David Brown '89 and Tim Shaw '89 who came in first and third in the race were prevented from scoring due to false starts. Williams still placed first with Ivan Sigal '91 swimming a 22.61, followed by Eph Northrop with a time of 23.77.

The Williams men finished the meet with a top two finish in the 800 free relay. The relay of co-captain Michael O'Malley '89, Benson, Jordan and Snyder won the race and beat the posted pool record held by Colgate in 7:17.20. Dehmelt, Curry, Giglio and Brown took second in 7:28.16.

Giglio expressed satisfaction with the team's performance. He said, "I thought people swam well. We are looking forward to Colgate. They are the second strongest team on our schedule after University of Massachusetts. We haven't beat them in two years."

Women's Meet

The women also held the lead from the first event. The 200 medley relay of Dorl Lebeau '91, Liz Gibbons '92, Elizabeth Eberhart '92, and co-captain Connie Davis '90 secured the victory in 1:59.24, narrowly beating the Springfield College team who swam a 1:59.53. The Ephwomen also had outstanding individual performers. Sophomore Lee Schroeder once again was a quadruple winner, taking the three individual events

Long arms

An Ephwoman spreads her wings in last Saturday's home swim meet against Springfield. The women won 179-121 and the men won 169-71. (Steinman) of the 200 free, 50 free and 100 free as well as swimming the anchor leg of the winning 400 free relay. In the 200 free, Schroeder qualified for Nationals by .01 of a second. She swam a 1:58.94, making the 1:58.95 cut off time for national competition. She again qualified in the 50 free with a time of 25.03 and has previously qualified in the 100 free. The Indians did provide some intense competition. Springfield swimmer Brenda Bradley edged out Eph co-captain Michelle Freemer in the 1000 free. Bradley's 1000 split time was 10:51.86, continued on page 12

This ain't jitterbugging

Eph Chris Gemignani '92 grapples his opponent in the January 28th match against Trinity. Williams won the match 31-15. (Thomas)

Wrestlers rebound with solid win

by James Lee

The 10-men Eph wrestling squad traveled to Cambridge on Saturday and ran into stiff challenges at the MIT Invitational. Against tough grapplers from several Division II and numerous Division III teams, the Ephs posted some outstanding upset wins while yielding losses in several hard-fought matches.

The team's eight freshmen gained experience, stamina and unexpected trophies in what was mainly an individualistic event. "In a tournament like this, team score doesn't really matter,"

Coach Roger Caron commented. Those who reached the final round wrestled as many as five matches on the same day.

Freshman Doug Dreffer, 177-lbs, wrestled phenomenally throughout the day and placed third in his class. Dreffer downed several experienced opponents in four matches and dropped a gritty, test-second 0-2 decision against a U. Mass grappler whom he had pinned earlier in the season. In the consolation, however, Dreffer avenged his loss by overwhelming a tough Plymouth State opponent to whom he had lost earlier in a 3-2 decision win.

Fermon finishes fourth

Maneuvering with great style and technique, 118 lb. freshman Ivan Fermon won three out of his five matches and carved out a fourth-place finish for himself. Fermon began the day on a positive note, turning an apparent defeat into a surprising pin. Losing 3-8 until the third

continued on page 12

Women's hockey crushes Lord Jeffs by a 5-0 margin

by Soojin Kim

The Williams women's hockey team trounced Amherst 5-0 in last Friday's game at Amherst. The win offset the Ephwomen's loss to a visiting Skidmore squad last Wednesday night, a game riddled with penalties which eventually led to a successful Skidmore penalty shot and a 2-1 Skidmore triumph.

Coach Briggs expressed hope that the Amherst game might represent the end of the Williams squad's scoring drought. Following the game against Skidmore, Briggs had noted that in the seven games played, the squad had only scored seven goals.

At Amherst, the Ephwomen launched 43 shots on goal, racking up three goals in the second period and two in the third. Kara Lynch '90 led the scoring with three goals, including two second-period tallies assisted by Sarah Magnuson '90 and Amy Marr '89. She rounded out her hat trick with a third goal in the third period, off a feed from Sarah Marcus '90.

Kirsten Neuse '89 also enjoyed her evening, scoring twice on assists from Kristin Moomaw '90.

"We dominated that game. Although Amherst is a relatively new team, they played better than I thought they would," said Briggs.

Narrow defeat

The Skidmore contest was a different story, however, as the teams were remarkably well matched. "We got into an unfortunate situation and they won on a penalty shot, but, otherwise, it was a good game. The Williams defense, again, was excellent," said Briggs.

Skidmore opened the scoring in the second period. Lynch responded by skating the rink's entire length, and creating a flurry in front of the goal, but no one could capitalize on the rebound. Penalties were levied on both Williams and Skidmore, but the Williams defense killed off Skidmore's man advantage. Moomaw notched an unassisted tally at 2:10 to bring the score to 1-1 at the close of the second period.

Williams received two penalties in the third period, one for tripping, and the second for interference in a one-on-one with the Skidmore goalie. This gave Skidmore the penalty shot that lost Williams the game 2-1. The team has a chance to rebound from its loss; it plays RPI tomorrow at home.

Women's squash wins Can-Am tourney; downs Hamilton and Middlebury

by Laurie Burnett

The women's squash team improved its record to 8-4 this past week, winning matches Saturday against Middlebury and Hamilton after a victory in the Hard Ball Can-Am tournament at Vassar on January 28 and 29. The team has now won five consecutive matches. The team won its two matches on Saturday in a dominant fashion, outscoring their opponents 17 to 1 and only losing five games the entire afternoon. According to coach Gail Ramsay, Captain Allison Buckner '89 played "the best squash I have ever seen her play". The rest of the team excelled as well, but Saturday's matches were not the most difficult challenges they have faced this season.

The Ephs kept their intensity however, and maintained a top level of play.

Brayton clinches Can-Am win

More significant than Saturday's wins was the victory in the Can-Am tournament. It was filled with intense wins and traumatic losses, as well as moments of dominance for the Ephs.

The Ephs first team win of the Can-Am tournament was clinched by sophomore Lisa Brayton in the fifth game of her match against Dartmouth. Brayton was the last to finish her match and the tournament depended upon her fortune. Her victory gave Williams a 4-1 win over the Big Green and the needed points to win the tournament, ending a tough battle for the title.

Other victories in the tournament came over Vassar and New York University, offsetting a loss to Waterloo. Both Judy Kellogg '89 and Susie Piper '90 were undefeated, while Lori Schaen also played outstanding squash, losing only one match in the fifth game. And, as usual, Bruekner played well against all her opponents.

"We led the weekend with our squash," the Eph captain said. Coach Ramsay was equally ecstatic about the performance, expressing pride for her continually improving team. The team now looks expectantly to being placed in the top division of the Howe Cup.

Men's squash posts two wins

by Lewis Fisher

Like most sports teams on campus, the men's squash team had a busy winter break, facing both Tufts and Rochester on Saturday in Lasell. Despite the depleted reserves of fans, however, the Ephmen rolled past both opponents, posting identical 8-1 victories.

While victory is always sweet, Chris Pentz '91 felt the wins were "antithetical" after playing great squash against the best teams in the country (Yale, Harvard and Penn) and losing and then playing fair squash this weekend and winning. "Nevertheless, the Eph's came through with gutsy wins to improve their record to 9-6.

The day began against cross-state rival Tufts, who tested racketeers at the top of the ladder but put up meager resistance at the lower matches. At the number-one slot Bruce Hopper '92 squandered a 2-0 lead before regaining control to win 3-2.

"I was choking...I just let up a little bit, which you can't do in a game as precise as squash, but I became mentally tough again in the last game," said Hopper. Meanwhile, seniors Robert Halling, Chris Klipstein, Seth Packard and Kaveh Khoshrowshahi were all too experienced for the Bantams as they cruised to easy 3-0 victories. The lone loss of the match came at the number three slot where Adam Kimberly '89 was stretched to a fifth game and found himself down 12-4. Determined not to quit, Kimberly fought back bravely before falling just short at 15-13.

Kimberly seeks revenge. Later that afternoon, Williams paired off against Rochester and Kimberly found himself playing a former high continued on page 12

Track tunes up for Little Three

by Steve Brody

Several college track teams flocked to Towne Field House last Saturday, and all but the Springfield men's team left town with a loss to the Williams squad. The women easily dominated the undermanned opposition from Fitchburg (55), Worcester State (15), and Mount Holyoke (15), as they won the meet with 76 points. On the men's side, Springfield was victorious with 103 points to the second place Ephs' 73. Fitchburg, Westfield, and Worcester rounded out the field.

New stars shine for women

The Eph women saw some new faces in the victory column this week. Katherine Queeney '92 went to the lead early in the 600 meters with a Fitchburg opponent hanging close behind her. Entering the final lap, Queeney surged to a three-meter lead and then held off her challenger to win by 4/10 of a second in 1:49.31. In the 1000 meters, Elias Dugundji '91 led from start to finish, edging teammate Heide Beebe '91 for the win.

The 3000 meters saw a strong performance from freshman Susan Donna. Donna ran with the pack for the first half of the race, and then pulled away, erasing to victory in 11:04.1. She led an Eph sweep of the top three places, as Meeka Brzezinski '89 was second and Gwen continued on page 12

Room to spare

Freshman Jonathan Lindley '92 flies over the bar in the Jan. 27th track meet against Tufts and MIT. The Ephs defeated the Jumbos but fell to the powerful MIT squad. (Thomas)

Professors may teach fewer classes in future

by Justin Smith
A committee created by President Francis Oakley has recommended that Williams adopt a plan which would reduce faculty member workload requirements by ten percent over two years.

Professor of Psychology George Goethals, chairman of the committee, said that implementation of the plan will keep Williams competitive in its efforts to attract the best faculty and improve the quality of teaching.

However, he conceded that it will also reduce the number of courses offered and the number of sections offered per course, especially at the introductory level.

The proposal calls for the college to change the faculty teaching requirement, the new faculty teaching requirement is necessary for Williams to retain its image and remain competitive. "They definitely should do it. I think it's very necessary for them to do it."

Fewer courses offered
"There's probably going to be a very small reduction in the number of courses offered," Goethals said. "During the eighties we have added a large number of sections. In terms of average number of students per section, this would take us roughly back to 1980." Goethals added, "I don't think there's going to be much difficulty in students switching sections."

Although the plan will inflate average class size from the current level of 9.7 students per class to roughly 10.7 students per class, Goethals indicated that precautions will be taken to avoid potential problems.

"Each department would have to decide for itself whether or not to take the reduction. Each department has to think carefully about its offerings to students. We asked each department to think that through," Goethals said.

"It will probably result in many electives being cycled over a three year period rather than a two year period," Professor of History John Hyde said. He added that some departments may have to consider capping the size of certain courses to avoid any overenrollment which might result from the new faculty teaching requirement. "If the effect is to push enrollment up significantly in particular courses...we may have to consider capping courses. It's something we'd worry about, but we wouldn't want to do it."

Goethals said, "The CEP is being asked to review specific department plans to avoid any problems in general. They would have a monitoring function. The CAP will have a role in that it will consider requests from departments for additional staff, and the department would have to make a case for additional staff in order to take a course load reduction."

'Many faculty just feel as though there is a very heavy load'

ments to a 2/3/2 system, under which professors teach nine courses every two years. Presently, faculty are required to teach ten courses in that period, in a 2/3/2 system.

Despite the ten percent reduction in regular semester classes required, professors will still teach one Winter Study class every other year.

Under the current system, Goethals said, Williams faculty members have a heavier workload than do faculty at other schools. He said that this disparity reduces the college's ability to attract the best faculty. "Many faculty just feel as though there is a very heavy load," Goethals said. "This is one way to give a little relief. We hope that's going to be a relief."

As Assistant Professor of Economics, Goethals said, "I don't think it's a bad thing."

Multicultural center slated for fall

by Salile Han

The Coalition Against Racist Education's thirteenth demand has come close to fruition, as a special committee plans to recommend that Williams open a multicultural center and appoint a director to head the center. The committee hopes that the college can have a director and an open center ready this fall.

The committee, composed of members of administration, faculty, and students, will make its suggestions to President Francis Oakley this week. "The college will accept that recommendation and create the new [director] position," Oakley said, in a January 31 all-campus mailing.

According to Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards, the committee wants the center to sponsor cultural events, provide support services for minority students and offer a resource center with books, magazines and possibly films and videos. The center might also sponsor co-curricular activities with various departments. The director of the center would act as coordinator and liaison.

Presently the center is in the planning stages.

"The idea in general has been around for a fairly long time," Edwards said. "It came to a head last spring or so." She said that the college has been studying the idea of a multicultural center and collecting background information. Last summer, the college hired two students, Jillian Charles '91 and Katie Kent '89, to research multicultural centers at nine colleges.

"I see a lot of need for it in two ways," said Helen Lee '90, a member of the committee. "It's necessary for minority groups and it's something that's equally important to the community at large. It's not meant to just benefit minorities. It's not meant to be the minorities house. It's meant to benefit everyone."

John Kelsh '89, another committee member, said, "I'm hoping that it's going to be a place where people will go fairly regularly...a place to learn about other people's heritage." He said he hoped that the center could also be just a place to study or meet people. "I hope

Steinman

A center for cultures

Dropper House, which presently houses the financial aid offices, may become Williams' multi-cultural center. Planners of the center have considered putting a reading room, movie room and even a cafe in the center.

it will be very accessible."

Cultural cafe
"I'd really like to see it so exotic that people feel like they're not in Williamstown, Massachusetts, USA," said Dar-

'I'd really like to see it so exotic that people feel like they're not in Williamstown, Massachusetts, USA'

ryl Thornton '91, the third student representative to the committee. He said he would like to see the center sponsor a cafe where various foods of different ethnicity would be served.

"I see it as a great asset to the community as a whole," he continued. "I think that its success depends on how students receive it." If the students perceive the center as beneficial, he said, they will use its facilities no matter where it is located.

Hostility or indifference would make the center's success difficult to achieve. The multicultural center committee has met with various student groups such as Asian Students in Action, Black Student Union, Campus Committee on Race Relations and Vista. In addition, foreign students and the College Council were consulted. The committee will meet this week with interested faculty and staff.

Edwards said that through these meetings, the committee hoped to find out what the community saw as the role and goals of a multicultural center. The question of which of the three houses being considered, Chandler, Dropper, or Jenness, should be used was also discussed.

She also stressed that the multicultural center was something involving everyone and that anyone with interest or ideas should contact a committee member. Edwards said, "It's got to come with a lot of support from the community."

Life on the streets

Students see homeless face to face in NYC

by Sara Dubow

I didn't go to one keg party this winter study. I didn't go to any aerobics classes or attempt any knitting, either. I was, in many respects, as far away from Williamstown as you can get — New York City.

I went with a group of eight other students and one professor to New York as part of the program Sociology 029, Life on the Streets. We went to learn about the problems of homelessness, problems far away from the normal concerns of Williams students.

I learned a great deal more than I thought I would. At the same time, I came away from that experience with fewer answers than I hoped I would.

When I first started to write this story, I thought I should include everything that we did; at the time it all seemed so important. However, two weeks of retrospection in the village beautiful have led me to the conclusion that the memories of dishing up 400 cups of tuna casserole soup aren't nearly as important as the new insights and understanding that we took away. I will share mine with you.

The first thing I realized in New York was that the transit system would easily dominate much of my month. I would often whip out my huge subway map in the middle of the street, simultaneously reassuring myself that I looked as though I belonged.

My next revelation was that it is not nearly as easy as one might think to volunteer one's services. Understandably, most organizations prefer to train volunteers who will be with them for longer than three weeks.

However, I did get placed, with Jeff Low '91 and Vivian Lu '91, at the Food and Hunger Hotline, a referral service

Steinman

A new beginning

Nine Williams students who went to New York for Winter Study to help the homeless were taken on a tour of buildings homeless people were renovating prior to moving in.

for people who have no food at all and no means to get it. The hotline then directs people to the free food distribution center nearest to where they are located. Many callers had to call collect because they didn't have phones or an extra quarter. It was critical to find a place in their vicinity because many wouldn't have cash.

I was amazed at how many soup kitchens and pantries there are in New York City, and it is somewhat stunning to imagine how much money, time, and volunteers are needed to supply such a basic need.

While the hotline is definitely a needed service for the homeless, we were all disappointed not to be working with them more directly. We told our supervisors that, and we were sent to work with Homeward Bound, a group of homeless people who are protecting the New York City's shelter system by living in City Hall Park.

A school recently gave the group permission to sleep in their facilities at night and also donated a storage room. We asked one man what he thought was the main cause of the problem, and he talked about the decline in morals and the weakening of family. After being told time after time by lecturers and assigned readings that the cause was lack of affordable housing, it was inter-

continued on page 4

Sophomore parking could soon expire

by Peter Kilvans

Due to the current shortage of parking spaces and the problems involved in constructing new parking lots, Williams is considering limiting, if not abolishing, sophomore parking privileges next year. "Something has to happen," Director of Security Ransom Jenks said. "The Mission Park lot is full, the Greylock lot is full. The Fitch and Prospect lot, near the hockey rink, has eight spaces left...the B lot behind Brooks has two spaces."

Jenks added that although the D lot, including all of the parking between Stetson and Dodd, had 45 spaces left, this was due to the fact that it was a visitors and overflow parking area.

"What that tells me is that after Spring Break we'll have serious problems," Jenks said. Many students drive back from Spring Break because of the convenience of driving home at the end of the semester.

Assistant Dean William Wagner, who served last year as chair of the Ad Hoc Committee on College Parking Facilities and Policy, described the current space shortage as a problem that has increased in intensity. He said that each year the number of students with cars grows. The committee's report last spring concluded that the need for

continued on page 4

Burns and Vt. mayor debate future of Dems

by Soojin Kim

With the Democratic Party reeling from its third consecutive Presidential election defeat, two political experts debated February 5 on the role progressives should have in getting the Democrats back into the White House.

Bernard Sanders, Socialist mayor of Burlington, Vermont, and Williams College Professor of Political Science, Emeritus, James MacGregor Burns squared off in Chapin Hall over the question "Should progressives work within the Democratic Party?"

Burns asked Sanders, who is a member of the Progressive Coalition Party, to help bring the left wing of the party back into the fold. Sanders, on the other hand, told the audience and Burns that there is no reason for progressive Americans to stay with a party that has become conservative and no longer wants social change.

Sanders, who is in his third term as mayor, said that voters are disillusioned with the Democratic Party. "Fifty-one percent of the U.S. population made a profound statement by not voting. We have the lowest voter turn-out of any industrial nation," he said. "But how can we get people excited about a party whose vice-presidential candidate holds political views identical to those of Republican George Bush?"

"War and aid to the Contras couldn't have taken place without Democratic support and neither could Reaganomics — under which the rich got richer and the

continued on page 4

The Record Insider examines athletics at Williams.

Men's basketball improves record to 13-4.

PAGE 13

According to rumor mill, Images' closing imminent.

PAGE 3

The Williams Record

College should get tough on drugs

Last year, students were outraged when the administration outlawed freshman parking at Williams. The college said it was a necessary step to eliminate the parking crunch. In addition, students were told that the college would build new lot. While it was noted that future measures may become necessary if student driving continued to grow, most students thought parking restrictions would be behind them after freshman year.

Now, that may not be the case. If a present proposal being considered by the ad hoc committee on parking goes through, fully half of the students at Williams will not be able to park on campus. That would be a terrible situation.

Williams College is already divided classwise in a number of ways. The ability to legally purchase alcohol, of course, splits the senior and most of the junior classes from the sophomores and freshmen. The entry system lets freshmen meet juniors, but not really sophomores or seniors.

But, if sophomore parking is eliminated, an ever greater gulf would grow between the classes over the issue of being able to move around the area at will. Sophomores, who are relatively aware of the entertainment offerings of places outside Williams, would feel like prisoners.

Williams is well-known for its relative isolation. While no one could call Williamstown barren of interesting events, there are times when students just need to get away. Now, unless sophomores and freshmen can borrow automobiles, they will have to rely on public transportation to leave campus. If their destination is other than Boston or New York, they will have a lot of difficulty getting there.

The administration has said that the most likely lot that could be constructed would provide only 70 spaces at a cost of $160,000. That is too much, the college says.

Tough. If students from all over the country are willing to give four years of their lives to attend Williams, the least the college can do is make their stay here comfortable. And that includes the ability to get around. If students want to bring their cars here, the college should provide for that.

With alcohol, the college has the perfect right to restrict the ability of freshmen, even sophomores, to drink. That is the law. With driving, however, the college is in the wrong to deny parking permits to 1000 students who can legally work an automobile.

If this rule is established, freshman and sophomores would continue to try to get around it. People want to drive that much. In addition, there is no reason to believe that within a year or two, junior parking will be the next to go. Sure, it sounds crazy, but it could happen. The restrictions must stop here.

Sophomores should be allowed to keep cars

Last year, students were outraged when the administration outlawed freshman parking at Williams. The college said it was a necessary step to eliminate the parking crunch. In addition, students were told that the college would build new lot. While it was noted that future measures may become necessary if student driving continued to grow, most students thought parking restrictions would be behind them after freshman year.

Now, that may not be the case. If a present proposal being considered by the ad hoc committee on parking goes through, fully half of the students at Williams will not be able to park on campus. That would be a terrible situation.

Williams College is already divided classwise in a number of ways. The ability to legally purchase alcohol, of course, splits the senior and most of the junior classes from the sophomores and freshmen. The entry system lets freshmen meet juniors, but not really sophomores or seniors.

But, if sophomore parking is eliminated, an ever greater gulf would grow between the classes over the issue of being able to move around the area at will. Sophomores, who are relatively aware of the entertainment offerings of places outside Williams, would feel like prisoners.

Williams is well-known for its relative isolation. While no one could call Williamstown barren of interesting events, there are times when students just need to get away. Now, unless sophomores and freshmen can borrow automobiles, they will have to rely on public transportation to leave campus. If their destination is other than Boston or New York, they will have a lot of difficulty getting there.

The administration has said that the most likely lot that could be constructed would provide only 70 spaces at a cost of $160,000. That is too much, the college says.

Tough. If students from all over the country are willing to give four years of their lives to attend Williams, the least the college can do is make their stay here comfortable. And that includes the ability to get around. If students want to bring their cars here, the college should provide for that.

With alcohol, the college has the perfect right to restrict the ability of freshmen, even sophomores, to drink. That is the law. With driving, however, the college is in the wrong to deny parking permits to 1000 students who can legally work an automobile.

If this rule is established, freshman and sophomores would continue to try to get around it. People want to drive that much. In addition, there is no reason to believe that within a year or two, junior parking will be the next to go. Sure, it sounds crazy, but it could happen. The restrictions must stop here.

Letters

Fifty years later: memories of Williams

To the Editor:
In preparation for my 50th Reunion this June, I've been looking back on my Williams experience and recalling serving for about three years in the Honor System Committee. As the Honor System, founded February 17, 1896, alive and well? In these days of white collar crime, the 'eternal' symbolized by that system stand out in bold relief.

My hope is that you undergraduate readers appreciate the value of such a system -- and defend it as all of us do our democratic heritage.

Another source of pride in Williams: no 'paid' athletes on our teams. How well I remember starting a business in Tucson, Arizona, in 1949 -- and having a local Chamber of Commerce type invite me to contribute to the 'Tom Cat' -- a fundraising organization set up to buy good football players for the University of Arizona. I laughed in his face.

Max Berking '39

Day's remark on rape ignorant, thoughtless

To the Editor:
I would like to respond to a comment printed in last week's Record article about the new anti-abortion group being started on campus. Russell Day, the founder of the group stated, "We know how tough it is for rape victims, and we certainly feel for them." This statement not only shows Mr. Day's complete ignorance of the subject, but also implies his indifference to knowing what rape is really all about.

Anyone who has either known or been a rape victim, knows that it is not just "tough." It is a complicated, traumatic, and very confusing experience. For Mr. Day to suggest that he understands this situation is not only ridiculous, it is insulting. It seems that for him, the issue goes no further than the extent expressed in his completely thoughtless statement. I hope that from now on, Mr. Day, and other members of the community who share his view on rape, take the time to comprehend the complexities, ambiguities, and deep emotions associated with rape.

Julitta-Veronica Lozano '90

Hughes not accused of neglecting duties

To the Editor:
I would like to comment on Mr. Stevens' letter in the February 7 Record. It is a good letter, written by someone who believes a friend of his was unfairly maligned. I have only one problem with it: its basic premise is totally wrong. I agree that for [me] to say that Brian Hughes has "abandoned his obligations as a JA" is not only ridiculous, but very offensive. That is why I didn't. If Mr. Stevens would care to look in the January 24 edition of the Record, he will see that the above quotation is only part of a sentence. The full sentence said, "If the only source of entertainment his entry has is alcohol, however, 1) that's a hurling entry and 2) Mr. Hughes has completely abandoned his obligations as a JA." In other words, Mr. Stevens quoted me out of context. Now, if one doesn't mind quoting out of context, one can make anyone seem to say anything. Let me set the record straight. I do not know Mr. Hughes and at the time had no idea of what his entry was like; therefore, I qualified the statement. The above quotation does not in any way imply that Mr. Hughes must be a bad JA. Mr. Hughes may be the best JA in the world -- I don't know. My letter did not say one way or the other.

Jonathan Howard '91

doned his obligations as a JA' is not only ridiculous, but very offensive. That is why I didn't. If Mr. Stevens would care to look in the January 24 edition of the Record, he will see that the above quotation is only part of a sentence. The full sentence said, "If the only source of entertainment his entry has is alcohol, however, 1) that's a hurling entry and 2) Mr. Hughes has completely abandoned his obligations as a JA." In other words, Mr. Stevens quoted me out of context. Now, if one doesn't mind quoting out of context, one can make anyone seem to say anything. Let me set the record straight. I do not know Mr. Hughes and at the time had no idea of what his entry was like; therefore, I qualified the statement. The above quotation does not in any way imply that Mr. Hughes must be a bad JA. Mr. Hughes may be the best JA in the world -- I don't know. My letter did not say one way or the other.

I believe that Mr. Stevens must be somewhat intelligent, for otherwise he would not have been able to come to Williams. So, I am guessing that there must have been a reason why Mr. Stevens wrote his letter without bothering to read the rest of the sentence. It may be that Mr. Stevens simply did not want any shade of doubt to fall upon his friend -- an admirable goal -- but I don't think that's it. From this point, however, I have no reliable data to work on, so I will let the reader draw his/her own conclusions.

Images is one of only three single-screen movie houses remaining in Berkshire County, and partly because of its historical interest, there are a number of groups interested in saving the theater.

The College Council asked the administration to discuss the possibility of buying the building for its own use, but the President's Executive Group decided that such an option would not be feasible.

A group of citizens met informally about three weeks ago to brainstorm about ways to save the theater. The group set up a subcommittee to meet with Wassenaar and discuss the problem.

To the Editor:
I am disappointed by the recent proposal of the Freshman Council to institute a 'shuttle' service which will operate between the Williams campus and Grand Union or Price Chopper.

Don't these people know that there is already a bus service which regularly travels on Route Two between North Adams and Williamstown? Is it too much to ask that Williams students actually ride this bus along with the rest of the community? Or do we need to have our very own, nicely maintained, comfortable, private vehicle for the long ride to the supermarket?

I am appalled by the lack of sensitivity demonstrated by this suggestion. Williams certainly does not need to bolster its image as a wealthy, elitist school unconcerned with the surrounding community, yet this is just what such a shuttle service will do.

I can imagine the scene in the parking lot of Price Chopper as our purple van, with 'Williams College' emblazoned on the side, pulls up and deposits a load of eager young shoppers -- coupons in hand, Bean boots on feet, and leather jackets on backs -- ready to descend upon the aisles of frozen food and bakery products. An exaggeration? Maybe, but try to put yourself in the shoes of people who live in the surrounding community, people who cannot afford a private shuttle and for whom the bus is a necessity.

I cannot believe that this shuttle is a good idea; I only see a bunch of spoiled, demanding kids who want only the very best for themselves and who could care less about the rest of the community.

Leslie Jeffs '89

Both ends of the log Student-run courses

by Hal Horman '89

Few Williams students are aware of the possibilities for taking student initiated courses and the educational opportunities they offer. Even fewer students are aware that Williams has a process for institutionalizing student initiated courses into the curriculum. In the following paragraphs, I will briefly discuss both of these topics, paying particular attention to the internal educational dynamics of student initiated courses.

Two student initiated courses are currently part of the Williams curriculum.

The responsibility for learning falls directly on each student and on the interaction among the students.

Last summer "On Leadership" was offered, and this semester "Non-violence and Social Change" is being offered. In both of these courses there is no professor in the classroom to present the course material. Instead, the students rotate leading/facilitating the class in discussion format. Thus, the responsibility for learning falls directly on each student and on the interaction among students.

In placing the responsibility for learning directly on the students, the pedagogical model becomes active rather than passive. That is to say, the student is forced to actively engage in discussion with others to learn rather than passively taking in knowledge from a professor. Dave Yaskulka, an instrumental figure in making "Non-violence and Social Change" part of the curriculum, calls this active learning process "education for powerful citizenship," because the learning model empowers the students by making them the active agent in their education.

In addition to this, these student initiated courses force the student to interact with and confront students with widely differing views. Rather than focusing on an external body of knowledge to be learned independently of the student's personal history, the emphasis is placed upon exploring and discussing how the different students in the course from different backgrounds react to course material. With such an approach, one experiences a much more thorough exploration of the diversity, intelligence, and creativity of Williams students.

In both existing student initiated courses, each student is required to complete a final independent project of his or her choosing which relates to the course material. The student meets with a faculty advisor regularly during the semester while working on this project. The final project is an opportunity to utilize the resources of Williams in an area that is the most challenging and rewarding to the individual.

If a student is interested in studying an area in which the college does not offer a course, organizing a student initiated course is an option. The procedure for setting up a student initiated course is outlined on pages 17-18 in the course catalogue. It would also be helpful to contact Peter Berek, the chairman of the IPICS program or to talk to students involved in organizing one of the previous courses.

For those students who are interested in taking one of the two existing student initiated courses, "Non-violence and Social Change" will be offered again next year. If interested in "On Leadership" contact me at x6706 or SU 2812. Take charge of your education; take a student initiated course!

by David Reiss '89

It does seem odd that Williams faculty and administration seem to avoid, in general, dialogue with students about their teaching methods. It's also odd that some professors actively bar students from questioning standards that they as individuals and as members of an institution have created. And even further, it is odd that these adults of diverse political persuasions seem to agree on so much when it comes to educating today's youth.

Before I mention specifics, I should first admit that some of the issues I raise, taken individually, are not the most pressing -- irritants perhaps, but nothing more. But taken as a whole, and added to the great amount of silence devoted to issues of pedagogy, they may point to underlying problems with our education and with Williams as an institution.

I've had a couple of questions about teaching itself. Why do some professors lecture to small groups of students when they could hand out copies of what amounts to a speech and devote class time to discussion? I've been told that one learns differently by listening than one does by reading. Hmm... If that isn't so, it just seems like a waste of class time.

A second question: why do so many teachers ask questions to which they already have an answer? Perhaps to involve the students with the material -- but wouldn't an interesting question suffice on that account?

Onto a slightly more important level: what beliefs about students justify pop quizzes and identification quizzes in literature and humanities courses? Just to make sure I do the reading? Thanks. Furthermore, why require class attendance? I can understand giving a grade for class participation, but to require attendance seems strange. First of all, every good teacher I've had never seemed to have a problem getting students to come to class -- but then again, those teachers don't always get tenure. And second of all, if a student can do well in a class without listening to the profes-

Opinions

The Williams Record, February 14, 1989 Page 3

College pedagogy needs questioning

File photo

And the demand elasticity...

To David Reiss '89, the entrenched nature of teaching at Williams may be a symptom of a larger problem. Reiss said that Williams should allow questioning of the standard pedagogical methods.

sor, what does that say about the professor?

Finally, and most seriously, it seems that many professors are unaware of how they set the tone, in their classrooms, for "open discourse." Having listened to a number of people complain about being made uncomfortable by the situation -- without ever openly questioning whether the rule is outdated or too rigid. Placed upon this "strict constructionist" approach is a mysterious veil that hides the internal workings of the school much more than do other schools "with which Williams waves to compare itself."

I realize that the above critiques are presented quite generally and that I have moved quickly through a wide range of concerns, but I think that is fine -- what I would prefer is that my particular questions were subsumed into a more general dialogue about pedagogy in which professors presented and defended their goals as teachers and the methods they used to attain those goals. They could then expect the same honesty from students: as members of the class, many of the same kind of questions and critiques apply.

I've been told one learns differently by listening than by reading. Hmm... If that isn't so, lectures just seem like a waste of class time.

And sometimes mocking voices of a professor, one may wonder if the professor is presenting a view or a polemic.

My final question, one which applies more to the administration, is why is so much faith put into the rules of the college, per se? So many decisions are based (or at least, seem to be based)

The tenure process, for example, at some of those schools is much more open and has much more direct student input than students do here. It almost seems as if some people think that the school might crumble to the ground if we openly discussed the rules or treated them as malleable precepts that are not self-justified, but rather justified by

I realize that some might find these issues to be of the least importance. I find them to be important because if we question the way of life, the odd rules and regulations, of our little college, we will learn to do the same when we enter another system -- a corporation or a bureaucracy, or any rigidified complex -- where the stakes may be a little higher.

News

Rumors fly concerning Images sale

by Dan Skwire

If rumors appearing in the Advocate are correct, the fate of Images Cinema has been decided, and Williams College students will have to do without the theater as an entertainment alternative.

Owner George Mansour's lease with the Spring Street Associates, owners of the building Images sits in, will expire on June 30.

Last Wednesday, the StreetTalk column in the Advocate raised the possibility that Images had already been sold to a local buyer who did not want to keep the theater. On Friday, however, Winthrop Wassenaar, head of Buildings and Grounds and co-owner of the building, said it had not been sold.

The catch, according to Professor of History, Emeritus, Dudley Bahlman, was that Wassenaar and his associates have a purchase/sale agreement with a future buyer. Such an agreement would mean that if the buyer were able to secure adequate financing, the deal would go through.

Images is one of only three single-screen movie houses remaining in Berkshire County, and partly because of its historical interest, there are a number of groups interested in saving the theater.

The College Council asked the administration to discuss the possibility of buying the building for its own use, but the President's Executive Group decided that such an option would not be feasible.

A group of citizens met informally about three weeks ago to brainstorm about ways to save the theater. The group set up a subcommittee to meet with Wassenaar and discuss the problem.

Steelman

What's the story?

Rumors are rife that Images Cinema has been sold to a local developer who will not keep the Spring Street landmark a theater. Confirmation of the rumors has been elusive, however.

but they have not been able to talk with him yet.

Unreasonable price
"There are a number of different solutions," Jim Drummond, a member of the group, said. "I'd go for any of them that would save the theater." The major problem, however, is that Wassenaar is asking $400,000 for the building, a price Drummond said he feels is unreasonable.

Each year, approximately 150 Williams students, about 35 percent of the junior class, go abroad for one or two semesters.

Each year, approximately 150 Williams students, about 35 percent of the junior class, go abroad for one or two semesters.

"Citizens of other nations are learning more about us than we are about them," CIEE recently announced a new effort to get more students overseas. The United States' competitive future depends on getting students to study abroad, CIEE said in the statement describing its objectives.

Its efforts were sparked by a December council estimate that fewer than five percent of U.S. students, about 50,000 total, study abroad each year. In contrast, some 350,000 students from foreign countries attend American colleges and universities.

Each year, approximately 150 Williams students, about 35 percent of the junior class, go abroad for one or two semesters.

"Citizens of other nations are learning more about us than we are about them," CIEE recently announced a new effort brought down somewhat, which would give the group more leeway in its plans. One proposal they had considered was to find 10 people to buy the building who were willing to contribute $5000 each towards down payment, and then cover the mortgage payments through the rentals. This would be impossible, however, if the price was not reduced.

Meanwhile, no one knows whether or not Wassenaar has reached an agreement with a buyer, and until the details of that situation are hammered out, the group has its hands tied. "It may be too late," Drummond said. "All we can do is wait and see."

'Go abroad, young ones,' group says in report

College Press Service
As Williams sophomores begin to get their junior-year study abroad plans in order, a group of college officials wants to double the number of U.S. students who study overseas.

In addition, they are concerned that the students who presently go abroad are too homogeneous.

Cost has been a prohibitive factor in the past, according to officials. "There's a common belief that study-abroad programs cost more," Robert Woodbury of the Council on International Educational Exchange said. "In fact, many programs do not involve extra costs," he said.

CIEE recently announced a new effort and each year are doing so in increasing numbers," according to the report Education for Global Competence.

"We have quite rightly welcomed these students to our own shores, but have failed to encourage our own students to go abroad," it said.

The report warned that failure to expand study-abroad opportunities would hurt our prestige in the world community. It said, "We will irreversibly diminish the world status of the United States."

Woodbury said the CIEE will establish a Committee on Unrepresented Groups to help schools develop study-abroad opportunities for such portions of the collegiate community as business and law students, and poor and minority students.

The majority of students studying abroad are white, affluent women from highly educated families, according to the report. Most are liberal arts majors and spend less than six months in foreign programs.

Students from business, public health, science or math programs are greatly underrepresented in foreign study centers.

"If you look at the attitude of colleges here, international study has never been a very big part of the curriculum," Woodbury said. "It's just a 'good thing to do' rather than a part of the mainstream."

Birds and bees to be awareness week topic

by Ellen Drought

In response to an increased number of sexually transmitted diseases and other sexual concerns at Williams, the college council will sponsor a sexual awareness week April 5-9 in conjunction with the deans' office and the health center staff.

"My hope is that a number of sexually related topics will be addressed that have a common thread. That common thread is less than optimal sexual communication between students," Director of Health James Corkins said.

"It's the kind of misinterpretation and misreading of people's feelings that results in date rape, sexual abuse, failure to use appropriate methods of contraception and appropriate precautions for sexually transmitted diseases -- that whole range," Corkins added.

MaryEllen Sullivan '89, treasurer of the college council, is organizing the week. Ten-to-One, Assistant to the President Nancy McIntire and health center staff are also involved in the planning.

Sullivan said that this sexual awareness week will have a format similar to last fall's alcohol awareness week. "We're hoping to have a powerful and controversial speaker who will incite a lot of conversation," she said. "Also [Assistant Professor of Theatre] David Eppel is arranging a cabaret, which will play two to three nights at the Log."

Like the alcohol awareness week, there will be a student-wide panel addressing the topic, which will open afterwards for audience discussion. "We'd like students [to be on the panel] who are willing to be frank about their experiences at Williams," Sullivan said.

"Dr. Corkins will speak before the panel about the facts at Williams -- the incidents of pregnancies, STD's, and date rapes," she said. To make this more effective, Sullivan is planning to distribute a survey during the week that asks students to estimate what they think these numbers are at Williams. "We'll be able to contrast the fact vs. the myth,"

Tolo '89.

The committee was formed this year, according to Tolo. "It arose out of a frustration with Williams College students' denial that they could ever get AIDS. The original plan of the committee was to think of some new and different ways to educate Williams students about AIDS, to get them to realize it's a problem. That's how sexual awareness week arose."

Tolo said that the group decided to see if the college council was interested in organizing the week because its Alcohol Awareness Week had been considered very successful. The AIDS Education Committee is still involved with the planning as well.

"The committee wanted the week to be student run so that it didn't look like it was something the administration was throwing at the students," Tolo said.

'We're hoping to have a powerful and controversial speaker' age it. It's not a safe sex week, it's a sexual awareness week. The main focus is to get people to talk about their relationships."

According to Sullivan, the college council was approached with the idea for the week by the AIDS education committee, which is made up of McIntire, Eppel, Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards, Corkins, Director of Public Information James Corkins and Kristi Tolo '89.

The committee was formed this year, according to Tolo. "It arose out of a frustration with Williams College students' denial that they could ever get AIDS. The original plan of the committee was to think of some new and different ways to educate Williams students about AIDS, to get them to realize it's a problem. That's how sexual awareness week arose."

Tolo said that the group decided to see if the college council was interested in organizing the week because its Alcohol Awareness Week had been considered very successful. The AIDS Education Committee is still involved with the planning as well.

"The committee wanted the week to be student run so that it didn't look like it was something the administration was throwing at the students," Tolo said.

On the Record...

"The idea in general has been around for a fairly long time. It came to a head last spring or so."

--Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards on the planned multi-cultural center, the thirteenth demand of CARE when they took over Jenness House last spring.

"[Williams football players] would be geeks in the Oklahoma athletic dorm. They'd swagger around, and they'd be smaller. They would be like clowns."

--Coach Renzie Lamb, explaining that stereotypes are all relative.

"It is time to wake up. We have been asleep too long."

--Poet Mwatabu Okantah, at a reading of his work last Friday, calling for an increase in racial awareness, particularly an awareness of the role of African Americans in American history.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor
TRAVIS PIERSON, Managing Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor
BILL SAYADOVE, ANN MANTIL & STEPHANIE JONES, Arts Editors
JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors, BILL PHILPOTT, Productions Editor

Assistant News Editors
DAN SKWIRE, ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW
GREG HART & JUSTIN SMITH

Assistant Sports Editors
STEVE BRODY & KERR HOUSTON
Assistant Layout Editors
ELISA DUGUNDJI, SARAH OUCHI, ASHESH SHAH

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

What did you think of the Sports Illustrated Swimsuit Issue?

Mindless sexism at its best. --William Winterer '91
We haven't seen it. We're waiting for the male issue to come out. --Kristy Coombs '91 and Sara Gagnon '91

I was quite impressed with the display of aesthetic beauty of the models and the sartorial splendor of their bathing suits. WOW!! --Clifton 'Crisper' Wright '91
I think that Sports Illustrated should focus on sports and that the swimsuit issue is completely unnecessary. If you want skin buy a different magazine. --Matt Wykiet '91

No longer is February the lamest sports month. --Sai Vasi '91
I'm disgusted. Why are they wearing swimsuits? --Charlie Marquardt '90

Interviews and photographs by Miriam Marcus

Events Calendar

Wednesday
8 p.m. Geza von Molnar, professor of German at Northwestern University, will speak on "Whatever Happened to Ethics? Kantian Ethics in Contemporary Perspective." This lecture is co-sponsored by the Lecture Committee and the departments of German, Russian, philosophy and religion, and will take place in Weston Lounge.

Thursday
4:30 p.m. In Brooks-Rogers recital hall, Assistant Professor of French Emily Apter will lecture on "Cabinet Secrets: Fetishism, Feminism and the Fin-de-siècle Interior." This is part of the faculty lecture series.

7:30 p.m. "Women's Reflections: The Corporate World of Power," a discussion sponsored by the Office of Career Counseling, will be held in Brooks-Rogers.

8 p.m. As part of the philosophical events series, Anthony Kronman '68, a professor of law at Yale University, will talk on "What is Good Judgement?" Driscoll Lounge.

Freshmen disturbed by proposal to ban parking spaces would grow an average of 40 spaces per year for the next decade. This statistic was based on past trends.

continued from page 1

Wagner said that the obvious solution of building more parking spaces entails several problems that the College is not anxious to deal with. "Each space costs from two to three thousand dollars," he said. The cost varies depending on the terrain that the lot is built upon. Wagner added that a proposed lot located near the tennis courts would cost about $160,000, and the lot would only accommodate about 70 cars.

"Why do juniors and seniors need parking more than sophomores?"

Steinman

My kingdom for a space

Sophomore parking may be abolished in order to relieve the growing shortage of college parking spaces. Williams is trying to avoid building expensive new parking

Sophomores logical choice
As a result, he said, limiting the number of drivers is being strongly considered. "The most logical group is the sophomores," Wagner said.

"There are not many places on campus to build new lots," said Wagner. He added that land is available far away, but practical restraints and security risks make the value of those potential lots

Five professors receive NEH research grants

by Rajesh Swaminathan

Five Williams College professors received Fellowship awards from the National Endowment for Humanities. These year-long grants of $27,500 are given to fund specific research projects. The winners of the awards are Professor of English Robert H. Bell; Professor of French Susan Dunn; Professor of Government Gary Jacobsohn; Assistant Professor of English Stephen Tift; and Assistant Professor of English Peter Murphy.

NEH is a private organization that furthers academic work in the arts and the humanities.

Jacobsohn, who was recently engaged in research for his project in Israel, said he proposes to compare Israeli and American constitutionalism. In particular, he will deal with the enforcement of rights and the exercise of judicial power.

"I'm on leave now, pursuing the questions for my NEH project, mainly through extensive interviews with many Israelis in the legal, academic and political fields," Jacobsohn said. Such a study, while long the concern of constitutional scholars, has not been examined from the perspective of two constitutional systems that differ so markedly.

"I think I'm raising some interesting questions that have not been raised before; for that reason, I feel they are sufficiently important," he said.

Murphy said that his work, Selling Romanticism, deals with the relationship between the Romantic writers of the early 19th century, the reading public and the commercial publishing establishment.

"Before 1800, the world of publishing would have appeared very foreign to us in the 20th century; there was no market for books as we understand it. But by 1830, the role books played was very similar to the modern one. The Romantic period, then, is a very interesting connection between these two periods," Murphy said.

The other three winners were unavailable for comment, but their aims were expressed in a college press release. Bell intends to examine the comic aspects of James Joyce's Ulysses in his project, "Jocundous Joyce." By comparing Joyce's style with that of earlier writers like Sterne and Swift, Bell hopes to isolate those elements which differentiate it from Joyce's predecessors' styles.

Dunn hopes to explore the moral, ideological, and political impact of the execution of Louis XVI on 19th-century French literature and historiography. A portion of her work will appear this spring in Parisian Review and other journals.

Tift, in his project "Playing History False: The Critique of Comedy in Political Crises," investigates the nature and the political repercussions of comedy during periods of political uncertainty and tension. Specifically, he will consider literature produced during the Irish Revolution and the two World Wars. He will examine comic novels, plays, and films which were generally greeted by public outrage in these periods. He is particularly interested in understanding how politically committed writers might express themselves meaningfully in a genre long considered frivolous, and also why their audiences react to their work in such troubled ways.

NEH awards important
The awardees stressed the importance of the existence of NEH and such a monetary award.

Murphy said, "For people in the humanities, Division I people in Williams terminology, funding is tremendously important and terribly rare. The NEH is one of the very few places at which one can obtain funding. They give out a lot of money and a fair number of awards as well. And at Williams, where teaching is so important, the award is very important to a junior faculty member; it is crucial to keep one's knowledge growing. This is an opportunity to read more and to spread myself out in a way that would not be possible while teaching."

Jacobsohn added, "These institutions clearly facilitate the work of scholars in meaningful ways. What was gratifying to me was that the NEH funds projects like mine, which do not clearly fall into either Division I or II. Moreover, I was certainly glad to get some confirmation from an outside evaluation that my work is important. It gives me more time to pursue the research."

He also endorsed Williams as a good place for an academic. He said, "Indirectly, Williams has been a stimulating environment for those of us, and I think it includes most of the faculty, who value teaching and research work as well. For example, coming into contact with the Middle-Eastern experts in my department has proved to be very helpful. More importantly, the college is quite good in encouraging people to use leave productively."

Volunteers cannot end homelessness

continued from page 1
estling to hear an explanation that could have come from George Bush.

Less enthusiastic
Initially, I was very impressed with what Homeward Bound was doing. Later, I became a bit less enthusiastic. They seemed very pleased with the attention they were receiving from the press, but they didn't seem to have many long-term goals, especially in terms of relieving the permanent housing crunch.

The hotline also sent us to help at two very different soup kitchens. One served about 200 people a day, and passed out bag lunches. The other served a home-cooked lunch in an almost home environment to about 150 people once a week. Although the second one definitely was a much more pleasant place, I was very aware of the tradeoff. It took about a week for them to serve approximately the same number of people that the other kitchen fed in about four hours.

I got the overwhelming sense that this problem is being treated with short-term approaches, while the deeper roots of homelessness continue unabated. This is not due to any lack of concern by those who are helping the homeless, but simply because these greater problems cannot be eliminated by their efforts. This crisis-oriented approach is a habit of both the homeless and those who are trying to help them. The Human Resources Administration, the city's welfare department, also seemed to operate in a very crisis-oriented way.

When you are surrounded by people asking you for money, stereotypes are inevitable

I used to think that the solution would be to make this problem a top fiscal Moving in

Homeless people help renovate an abandoned building prior to moving in, as part of a program to relieve the New York housing crunch. Nine Williams students were in New York over Winter Study as part of Life on the Streets.

priority. Now I realize that while more money, more housing, and more services are all desperately needed, that is still only a beginning. Those would be fairly substantial improvements, but I believe that a systemic change on a larger scale is needed. Unfortunately, I still don't have any suggestions for that kind of change.

More government help
Another belief I held before Winter Study was that private organizations were much more effective agents of change than the government. While I was amazed by the extent of the help provided by volunteer, non-profit organizations, I think there is definitely a need for more government leadership. By depending so much on these private groups, the government is sending a very clear message on how important it thinks the problem is.

My stereotypes of the homeless were dispelled, especially when we met with a group of people who are rehabilitating an abandoned building so that they can buy it from the city and own it themselves. However, when you walk around the city every day and you are surrounded by people asking you for money, stereotypes are inevitable.

I would have thought that I would become much more sympathetic with a better understanding of the situation. But since I now know that there were places for people to go to get a meal, it was somewhat frustrating. And while you are aware of their problems, constantly being asked for money begins to annoy you after a while. One woman stopped me and asked for two tokens and $1.80. I offered her about 75 cents, which was what I had in my pocket, only to be told that "that wasn't what I asked for, was it?"

The government is sending a very clear message on how important it considers homelessness

Now that I have generalized and oversimplified, I must point out that every one in the group had very different experiences and came away with different reactions. I said earlier that I was going to discuss my new insights and understanding, but although I really have no insights on how to improve it, I only have impressions of what not to do.

Democrats debate

continued from page 1

poor poorer -- without the Democrats in Congress," Sanders said.

"Look at Reagan!"
Burns, however, said he still thought the best opportunity for realistic change was with a major party. "Look at Reagan. In the 1970's he chose not to form a third party of conservatives but to stick with the Republican party. He's succeeded in making the party more conservative, and what's more the party won. He was able to change the direction of the nation."

Sanders cited his relative success in a recent Congressional race as evidence that a third party can succeed. He gained 38 percent of the vote, just behind the Republican candidate's 41 percent and significantly ahead of the Democratic candidate's 19 percent. In addition, according to Sanders, voter turnout in Burlington has doubled since he became mayor in 1983.

"There's a difference between local and national politics. Burlington is not typical," Burns responded. He said he thought there was no way that Sanders' success in Burlington could be translated into nationwide victories. "The third party has declined under the U.S. single-district system," Burns said.

The hierarchy within the Democratic Party is responsible for voter apathy because it does not bring up important issues, Sanders said. "Questions like why one percent of the population owns 50 percent of the wealth or why the U.S. doesn't have a national health care system are not even brought up," Sanders said.

Although Burns acknowledged the existence of such problems, he argued that Sanders should distinguish between the failures of the country as a whole and those of the Democratic Party. Burns warned that a schism between progressives and Democrats would result in success in Burlington could be translated into nationwide victories. "The victories for the Republicans."

Ford Foundation funding permits more intimate intro science classes

by Anne Joseph

Students who take introductory science courses often expect to be in large lecture halls with a minimum of hands-on experience. But students who participate in the Ford science seminars find themselves out of a lecture hall and in a laboratory environment.

Due to a three-year grant from the Ford Foundation, the science departments at Williams have established seven courses designed to foster discovery and problem solving skills in small classes of freshmen and some sophomores.

"These are courses involving the discovery process instead of the old method of lecture. First semester was very successful," Professor of Astronomy Jay Pasachoff, head of the Ford Implementation Committee, said. He teaches Astronomy 106, The Sun.

The Ford Foundation money has allowed Williams to make these courses into small seminars, he added. "Williams is unique in proposing this program. We are devoting this particular grant to the sciences," Pasachoff said. The committee looked for proposals from each of the science departments and decided to offer four courses in the fall and three in the spring.

The four fall semester courses covered comparative neuroscience, computer science, geology, and light. With class size usually limited to approximately a dozen, teacher-student interaction was intensified, Pasachoff said.

Assistant Professor of Physics William Wothers, one of the two instructors of the fall course Physics 105, Discovering Light, said he aimed to give students an idea of what physics research entails. "The first day, I derived the theoretical relationship between the angle of light coming through a piece of glass and the angle coming out. The students were asked to go to the lab and check it out," he said. The students had the equipment but had to make up their own procedures.

In his Ford course, Pasachoff said, he is utilizing the high number of sun spots which can be seen for the next few years due to a high point in the cycle. Several types of telescopes have been set up for daily student use.

"The sun is the only star that one can see changes in every day," Pasachoff added. He said he hopes that people will take advantage of this opportunity.

Wothers said he would like to accommodate more students next year. Although the courses involved a short application process, many of the courses included most of the interested students, said Pasachoff.

This semester's courses in astronomy, environmental studies and psychology each have different formats. Environmental Studies 102, Introduction to Environmental Science, has more students but is team taught by professors Henry Art, David Dethier and Susan Kealey.

Student reaction to the hands-on format of the courses has generally been favorable.

"I think [the Ford seminar] is great. They should continue it. The lab took up most of the class course. Even if the theory in physics was strange, you could figure it out in lab. You could go in and work on a daily basis," Greg Hanco '92 said. He is a student in the physics and environmental studies courses.

Pasachoff said that if the courses are deemed successful, they will be continued next year. According to Pasachoff, the Ford Foundation regularly announces opportunities for schools to receive grant money for certain projects. Williams proposed introductory science classes with intensive, student-oriented labs and a low student-teacher ratio. Ford accepted the idea, and Williams is one of the only schools to offer classes in such a format, Pasachoff said. He declined to disclose the amount of the total grant.

Beyond the Bubble

Congress nukes pay raise
Last Tuesday, Congress voted overwhelmingly to kill a proposed 51 percent pay raise for federal officials. Legislators had been confident of their ability to get the bill passed without a vote, thus sparing them the wrath of an angry public. But the public outcry was so great that congressmen felt compelled to wipe out the wage hike. The House voted 280-48 against the raise, the Senate 94-6. Critics of congressional salary levels are planning to continue the fight by trying to abolish honorariums, stipends that officials can get from private sources for speaking engagements. The killed bill would have eliminated honorariums. Federal judges especially have decried the vote, saying that they are greatly underpaid.

Bush Discusses Budget
President Bush addressed Congress and the nation on Thursday night, discussing in detail for the first time his administration's spending priorities. Bush renewed his pledge of not raising taxes, and spoke of "goodness," mercy, and helping those who have been left behind. The 1990 budget totals $1.6 trillion, includes a one-year freeze in the military budget at the level of inflation and allows for some moderate increases in domestic spending. The projected federal revenue for the 1990 fiscal year was $80 billion more than this year.

Kitty Dukakis enters clinic for alcohol problems
Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis said last Monday that his wife Kitty is presently being treated for alcohol dependency. Mrs. Dukakis entered the Edgemoor Hospital facility in Rhode Island and will stay there for about thirty days. The governor said that his wife's problems grew out of his unsuccessful presidential race. During the campaign, Mrs. Dukakis disclosed that she had been dependent on amphetamines and diet pills for years.

Jet crash in Azores kills 144
A U.S., Caribbean-bound charter jet, carrying 144 Italian passengers, crashed into a mountain in the Azores in Portugal last Wednesday. All 144 people on board are thought to be dead. The jet crashed while trying to land in foggy conditions. The 20-year-old Boeing 707 hit Pico Alto mountain and burst into flames. "Nobody could have possible survived," Valtos Figueredo, mayor of a nearby town, said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press.

Cold wave grips nation
A huge field of frigid air from the North Pole hit North America last week, sending temperatures below zero in many parts of the United States. In Alaska, whose citizens pride themselves on their hardiness, the thermometers reached 76 below zero, four degrees short of the state's all-time low. Exposed skin freezes in 30 seconds at 75 below zero. Much of Montana spent the week below zero degrees, and even Los Angeles saw snow. The Berkshires were spared, however, as the predicted record low temperatures never materialized. The lowest temperature ever recorded is 96 below zero, in Siberia in 1964.

Compiled by Sara Dubow from The Berkshire Eagle

Buckle Up For Spring Break '89

First Service seeks federal aid

by news staff

First Service Bank is in trouble. The Leonister-based bank, which has offices on Spring and Main Streets, may soon ask the federal government to help it cover loans and accounts, according to recent stories in the Wall Street Journal and the Berkshire Eagle.

The Journal reported that First Service forced two senior executives to resign because they apparently approved loans to friends in the construction business. Little or none of that money was paid back, and the Advocate reported last fall that the bank was tens of millions of dollars in the red.

Some Williams students received letters from First Service over the summer thanking them for staying with the bank during its loan crisis. Generally, however, few students who bank there know of the loan problems.

First Service president David Lakes was quoted in the Journal as saying that the bank would ask the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for assistance in bolstering its accounts or finding a buyer. Lakes would not comment on the extent of help needed by First Service.

The Journal also reported that while an increasing number of New England banks are having problems with real estate loans, First Service is the largest regional lender to ask for federal help in recent years.

SOS to FDIC

First Service Bank has asked the federal government to help the bank cover bad loans, according to the Wall Street Journal.

CROSSWORD PUZZLE SOLUTION

ACROSS
1. GOOD
2. BAD
3. GOOD
4. BAD
5. GOOD
6. BAD
7. GOOD
8. BAD
9. GOOD
10. BAD
11. GOOD
12. BAD
13. GOOD
14. BAD
15. GOOD
16. BAD
17. GOOD
18. BAD
19. GOOD
20. BAD
21. GOOD
22. BAD
23. GOOD
24. BAD
25. GOOD
26. BAD
27. GOOD
28. BAD
29. GOOD
30. BAD
31. GOOD
32. BAD
33. GOOD
34. BAD
35. GOOD
36. BAD
37. GOOD
38. BAD
39. GOOD
40. BAD
41. GOOD
42. BAD
43. GOOD
44. BAD
45. GOOD
46. BAD
47. GOOD
48. BAD
49. GOOD
50. BAD
51. GOOD
52. BAD
53. GOOD
54. BAD
55. GOOD
56. BAD
57. GOOD
58. BAD
59. GOOD
60. BAD
61. GOOD
62. BAD
63. GOOD
64. BAD
65. GOOD
66. BAD
67. GOOD
68. BAD
69. GOOD
70. BAD
71. GOOD
72. BAD
73. GOOD
74. BAD
75. GOOD
76. BAD
77. GOOD
78. BAD
79. GOOD
80. BAD
81. GOOD
82. BAD
83. GOOD
84. BAD
85. GOOD
86. BAD
87. GOOD
88. BAD
89. GOOD
90. BAD
91. GOOD
92. BAD
93. GOOD
94. BAD
95. GOOD
96. BAD
97. GOOD
98. BAD
99. GOOD
100. BAD
101. GOOD
102. BAD
103. GOOD
104. BAD
105. GOOD
106. BAD
107. GOOD
108. BAD
109. GOOD
110. BAD
111. GOOD
112. BAD
113. GOOD
114. BAD
115. GOOD
116. BAD
117. GOOD
118. BAD
119. GOOD
120. BAD
121. GOOD
122. BAD
123. GOOD
124. BAD
125. GOOD
126. BAD
127. GOOD
128. BAD
129. GOOD
130. BAD
131. GOOD
132. BAD
133. GOOD
134. BAD
135. GOOD
136. BAD
137. GOOD
138. BAD
139. GOOD
140. BAD
141. GOOD
142. BAD
143. GOOD
144. BAD
145. GOOD
146. BAD
147. GOOD
148. BAD
149. GOOD
150. BAD
151. GOOD
152. BAD
153. GOOD
154. BAD
155. GOOD
156. BAD
157. GOOD
158. BAD
159. GOOD
160. BAD
161. GOOD
162. BAD
163. GOOD
164. BAD
165. GOOD
166. BAD
167. GOOD
168. BAD
169. GOOD
170. BAD
171. GOOD
172. BAD
173. GOOD
174. BAD
175. GOOD
176. BAD
177. GOOD
178. BAD
179. GOOD
180. BAD
181. GOOD
182. BAD
183. GOOD
184. BAD
185. GOOD
186. BAD
187. GOOD
188. BAD
189. GOOD
190. BAD
191. GOOD
192. BAD
193. GOOD
194. BAD
195. GOOD
196. BAD
197. GOOD
198. BAD
199. GOOD
200. BAD
201. GOOD
202. BAD
203. GOOD
204. BAD
205. GOOD
206. BAD
207. GOOD
208. BAD
209. GOOD
210. BAD
211. GOOD
212. BAD
213. GOOD
214. BAD
215. GOOD
216. BAD
217. GOOD
218. BAD
219. GOOD
220. BAD
221. GOOD
222. BAD
223. GOOD
224. BAD
225. GOOD
226. BAD
227. GOOD
228. BAD
229. GOOD
230. BAD
231. GOOD
232. BAD
233. GOOD
234. BAD
235. GOOD
236. BAD
237. GOOD
238. BAD
239. GOOD
240. BAD
241. GOOD
242. BAD
243. GOOD
244. BAD
245. GOOD
246. BAD
247. GOOD
248. BAD
249. GOOD
250. BAD
251. GOOD
252. BAD
253. GOOD
254. BAD
255. GOOD
256. BAD
257. GOOD
258. BAD
259. GOOD
260. BAD
261. GOOD
262. BAD
263. GOOD
264. BAD
265. GOOD
266. BAD
267. GOOD
268. BAD
269. GOOD
270. BAD
271. GOOD
272. BAD
273. GOOD
274. BAD
275. GOOD
276. BAD
277. GOOD
278. BAD
279. GOOD
280. BAD
281. GOOD
282. BAD
283. GOOD
284. BAD
285. GOOD
286. BAD
287. GOOD
288. BAD
289. GOOD
290. BAD
291. GOOD
292. BAD
293. GOOD
294. BAD
295. GOOD
296. BAD
297. GOOD
298. BAD
299. GOOD
300. BAD
301. GOOD
302. BAD
303. GOOD
304. BAD
305. GOOD
306. BAD
307. GOOD
308. BAD
309. GOOD
310. BAD
311. GOOD
312. BAD
313. GOOD
314. BAD
315. GOOD
316. BAD
317. GOOD
318. BAD
319. GOOD
320. BAD
321. GOOD
322. BAD
323. GOOD
324. BAD
325. GOOD
326. BAD
327. GOOD
328. BAD
329. GOOD
330. BAD
331. GOOD
332. BAD
333. GOOD
334. BAD
335. GOOD
336. BAD
337. GOOD
338. BAD
339. GOOD
340. BAD
341. GOOD
342. BAD
343. GOOD
344. BAD
345. GOOD
346. BAD
347. GOOD
348. BAD
349. GOOD
350. BAD
351. GOOD
352. BAD
353. GOOD
354. BAD
355. GOOD
356. BAD
357. GOOD
358. BAD
359. GOOD
360. BAD
361. GOOD
362. BAD
363. GOOD
364. BAD
365. GOOD
366. BAD
367. GOOD
368. BAD
369. GOOD
370. BAD
371. GOOD
372. BAD
373. GOOD
374. BAD
375. GOOD
376. BAD
377. GOOD
378. BAD
379. GOOD
380. BAD
381. GOOD
382. BAD
383. GOOD
384. BAD
385. GOOD
386. BAD
387. GOOD
388. BAD
389. GOOD
390. BAD
391. GOOD
392. BAD
393. GOOD
394. BAD
395. GOOD
396. BAD
397. GOOD
398. BAD
399. GOOD
400. BAD
401. GOOD
402. BAD
403. GOOD
404. BAD
405. GOOD
406. BAD
407. GOOD
408. BAD
409. GOOD
410. BAD
411. GOOD
412. BAD
413. GOOD
414. BAD
415. GOOD
416. BAD
417. GOOD
418. BAD
419. GOOD
420. BAD
421. GOOD
422. BAD
423. GOOD
424. BAD
425. GOOD
426. BAD
427. GOOD
428. BAD
429. GOOD
430. BAD
431. GOOD
432. BAD
433. GOOD
434. BAD
435. GOOD
436. BAD
437. GOOD
438. BAD
439. GOOD
440. BAD
441. GOOD
442. BAD
443. GOOD
444. BAD
445. GOOD
446. BAD
447. GOOD
448. BAD
449. GOOD
450. BAD
451. GOOD
452. BAD
453. GOOD
454. BAD
455. GOOD
456. BAD
457. GOOD
458. BAD
459. GOOD
460. BAD
461. GOOD
462. BAD
463. GOOD
464. BAD
465. GOOD
466. BAD
467. GOOD
468. BAD
469. GOOD
470. BAD
471. GOOD
472. BAD
473. GOOD
474. BAD
475. GOOD
476. BAD
477. GOOD
478. BAD
479. GOOD
480. BAD
481. GOOD
482. BAD
483. GOOD
484. BAD
485. GOOD
486. BAD
487. GOOD
488. BAD
489. GOOD
490. BAD
491. GOOD
492. BAD
493. GOOD
494. BAD
495. GOOD
496. BAD
497. GOOD
498. BAD
499. GOOD
500. BAD
501. GOOD
502. BAD
503. GOOD
504. BAD
505. GOOD
506. BAD
507. GOOD
508. BAD
509. GOOD
510. BAD
511. GOOD
512. BAD
513. GOOD
514. BAD
515. GOOD
516. BAD
517. GOOD
518. BAD
519. GOOD
520. BAD
521. GOOD
522. BAD
523. GOOD
524. BAD
525. GOOD
526. BAD
527. GOOD
528. BAD
529. GOOD
530. BAD
531. GOOD
532. BAD
533. GOOD
534. BAD
535. GOOD
536. BAD
537. GOOD
538. BAD
539. GOOD
540. BAD
541. GOOD
542. BAD
543. GOOD
544. BAD
545. GOOD
546. BAD
547. GOOD
548. BAD
549. GOOD

The Real Inspector Hound blurs theatre, reality

by Elizabeth Greenman

This past Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Cap and Belis, the student theatre organization, presented Tom Stoppard's The Real Inspector Hound. What was hounded, in this case, was the box office.

Inspector Hound, directed by Wayne R. Fritzsche '89, was a popular success, and rightfully so. Fritzsche's directing complemented Stoppard's writing, always itself witty and amusing, playing upon both subtle and obvious points of humor within the script. A good deal of the play's elan (or shall I say eclat) came from movement and style, as opposed to mere dialogue. The over stylized way with which the "actors" of the play within the play moved never lost its appeal, especially during the third and fourth "acts," as it played off the critics bumbling presence on stage.

What was hounded, in this case, was the box office.

Here too the actual actors need to be complemented on their portrayal of such false characters, which most of them maintained consistently throughout the show. Birgit Huppach '91 did a particularly fine job as Miss Felicity Cunningham (or the actress Vivien Desmond, take your pick). Even when just standing or sitting still, she remained perfectly stylized, and her delivery made her lines some of the best in the show.

Unfortunately, the performance of Baird Jarman '92 as the first Inspector Hound, while good, did not fit in with the particularly stylized portrayals of the rest of the "actors." Jarman, however, is not entirely to blame, as he makes his on stage appearance during Act II, the weakest segment of the show. As the concluding act of the supposedly two act play-within-a-play, this scene purposely begins slowly, but throughout the act the play cannot quite recover the momentum which drives the rest of the show. The break between Acts II and III is the dividing point of the script, where Stoppard further dissolves the gap between "theatre" and "life." Previously, the traditional barrier between stage and "reality" had been broken by the seating of the two critics (Steve Scoville two acts they themselves take to the stage, to be replaced by two of the "actors."

A corpse is a corpse, of course

Geoff Gibson '92 and Mary Kipp '89 act oblivious to corpse Tom Dupree '92 in the play within a play, The Real Inspector Hound.

Thus, Inspector Hound presents an ontological dilemma amidst its devastating humor. Fritzsche, whether by choosing to ignore the metaphysics or purposely leaving them for the audience to discover, did well in not emphasizing these problems. The result was an incredibly funny show, with depth for those who chose to pick up on it.

Fritzsche's decision depended, of course, upon the performance of the cast — with the critics, or links to reality, playing a pivotal role. Here "it has been said, and I think it must be said" that Scoville did an amazing job. Both in the house and on stage he was always believable as Moon, the critic, while at the same time fitting smoothly into the on-stage thriller.

The body was played by Tom Dupree, who, after this feat, should consider becoming a yogi.

The set and lighting design also worked well together and with the play to incorporate the diverse elements of the show, including the two critics seated in the house. The one problem was that these seats were not visible to all parts of the house. However, this was compensated for by continuous, if incidental, action on the stage.

What was visible, throughout the entire show no less, was a critic's corpse, which remained on stage all evening. The body was not a dummy, but was played by Tom Dupree '92, who, after this amazing feat, should consider becoming a yogi.

Bad Movies for Bad People

by Bill Savadove

The Record is boring. The Record is reactionary. The Record is conservative. I heard you. And, frankly, I'm sick and tired of listening to you mewl and puke every Tuesday night. The Record is the Tuesday night alternative. The alternative to shoveling chicken thighs. The alternative to conversational gridlock. What else are you going to do on a Tuesday night?

But in an effort to offer art for the masses, hi-fi for the lowbrow, blues for Allah — The Record brings you what you've been asking for, Steeze. Here is a list of the ten worst HBO/Showtime movies of the first semester and winter study:

Movie	Plot Summary
1. The Wrath	Indescribable
2. Heavenly Bodies	Flashdance wanna-be
3. Nuclear High	Sawed-off nipples
4. Honey Tonk Freeway	A madcap comedy
5. The Glitter Dome	James Garner eats quiche
6. It's Alive III
7. Island of the Alive	Aliens meet anti-abortionists
8. Volcanic sex
9. Melody in Love	Daddy dearest dies darling
10. The Steppfather	Michael J. Fox stars as a dog
11. Teen Wolf	Same movie, different dog
12. Teen Wolf Too	Post Nuclear Adventure Syndrome (PNAS)
13. Steel Dawn

Thanks to an unnamed row house.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinema 1, II, III
Rite 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
Rain Man	7:00 & 9:20	Sat & Sun 2:05
Beaches	7:00 & 9:00	Sat & Sun 2:05
Twins	7:00 & 9:15	Sat & Sun 2:05
Oliver and Company

Images
Crossing Delancey	Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612	February 14 7:00 & 9:00
The Unbearable
Lightness of Being	February 15-16	7:30 only
Women on the Verge	February 17-21	7:00 and 9:00

North Adams Cinema
Rite 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Who's Harry Crumb?	7:10
Mississippi Burning	9:30
Her Alibi	7:00 & 9:20	Sat & Sun 2:00
Rain Man	7:00 & 9:30	Sat & Sun 2:00
The Fly II	7:10 & 9:20	Sat & Sun 2:00

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rite 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
Working Girl, The Accidental Tourist, Beaches, Mississippi Burning	Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30
Rain Man	6:45 & 9:15
The Naked Gun, Who's Harry Crumb?, Her Alibi, Twins, Three Fugitives, The Fly II	7:15 & 9:30

Berkshire Mall Cinema
Rite 8, Lenoxborough, 499-2558
Rain Man	12:30 3:10 6:45 9:20
Who's Harry Crumb?	1:20 4:00 7:35 9:45
Oliver and Company	12:40 3:20
Mississippi Burning	1:25 4:10 7:40 9:50
Her Alibi	12:35 3:15 6:50 9:15
Beaches	1:30 4:15 7:45 9:50
The Naked Gun	12:50 3:30 7:00 9:25
Twins	1:15 3:55 7:25 9:55
Three Fugitives	1:10 3:50 7:20 9:40

Bronfman Auditorium
The Seventh Seal	February 19	3:00 & 7:30

Poet sings songs of politics, awareness

by Mark Knell

"We as a people, we're lost," said poet Mwatibu Okantah at a reading of his work last Friday, January 10. The reading was one in a series of events in celebration of Black History Month.

Okantah mixed politics and poetry in the reading sponsored by the Black Student Union and the college. Okantah directs Cleveland State University's Afro-American Cultural Center and teaches African-American literature there.

Okantah began by speaking urgently of the need for blacks to be more fully aware of their African ancestry. Declaring to the 40 person audience, "You, as young people, need to develop a new consciousness," he called for an increase in interracial awareness, particularly the role of African Americans in American history. "It is time to wake up. We have been asleep too long." Throughout the evening, Okantah's poetry and statements returned to this theme.

In the comments he interspersed between poems, Okantah displayed a playful sense of humor while emphasizing his firm belief in the importance of learning history, past and present, on both personal and racial levels. He urged the audience to travel and explore, to find strength in the history of Africa and its fundamental place in the history of civilization. He also insisted upon positive attitudes, saying, "As we learn more about ourselves — and awake — we do not have time to hate." His speech was as persuasive as it was insightful.

In his reading, Okantah's message of awakening surfaced in the first poem, a work-in-progress. Invoking the names of Frederick Douglass and Langston Hughes, Okantah read: "I too dare to sing black poems in this time when the black people have forgotten how to listen." The poem went on to emphasize the confusion that a transition of consciousness brings, building around the repetition of the phrase "What happens?" From images of his childhood — playing baseball, watching television — he recalled the wrenching effect that the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr. had upon his community. The poem concluded with a resolute awakening into an eerie "sameness... the same strangeness still a menace in our lives" and an implication that more awakening is necessary.

"What happens?"

Mwatibu Okantah mixed politics and poetry at a reading of his work in celebration of Black History Month.

The second poem of the reading, "Legacy," was not as strong. Okantah's performance was spellbinding, however, as the work included occasional snatches of song, mostly spirituals, presented in a controlled and very capable voice. But the poem, structured around fragmentary sentences and the repeated word "amnesia," suffered from a dearth of imagery and too heavy a leaning toward aphoristic phrases, ending with the words "We are to be a people who live victory."

After the strong promise of the first piece and the powerful presentation of the second, the final three, short poems were, for published works, disappointing. The awakening, the consciousness, the pride which he urged us to pursue, were not as vigorously pursued in these poems.

The first, "market day," combined short lines, ellipses and an absence of capitalization to paint a scene that almost evaporates before it exists. Unfortunately, the lack of any really electrifying image left the listener wondering just how intentional this evaporation is.

The remaining two pieces, "city sounds" and "poem for Africa," fell into similar difficulties. The former started intriguingly, set in Benin City, Nigeria, at dawn. But it contained a jarring reference ("Whitney Houston songs startle on the radio") which withered the poem with its foreign associations, distracting the listener immediately before its sluggish finish, "city sounds begin." "Africa" was also erratic as a result of lines like "not even our own demon ignorance can deny you in the center of our days." It too avoided an inspiring finish and ended on a dissipating ellipsis.

This tendency toward placidity seemed pervasive in Okantah's work. His tone never assumed the blunt, urban style of some of Gwendolyn Brooks' poems about black consciousness, nor did it emulate the vividly pictorial, intensely political style of poets such as Carolyn Forché. Okantah's poetry was instead consistent with his own declared ideals of peace and self-affirmation. Viewed as such, it made for a pleasurable reading.

But there was something disturbingly paradoxical about Okantah's emphasis upon the need for a new consciousness: his works failed to set forth an innovative picture of what insights that new vision should bring. Okantah's poetry never convincingly shook that "sameness," that lack of newness or originality, which haunted the speaker in the first poem. Perhaps there are reasons for this; one could even argue that this was his intent. But without this interpretation, his poetry was bland; even with it, his constant, deliberate understatement did little justice to the rich history with which he aligned himself. This was not the case in his extemporaneous remarks; why it should be so, on the page, seems a mystery.

February marks celebration of Bergman films

by Leslie Jeffs

The two screenings of "Winter Light" this past Sunday marked the beginning of Reel Vintage's three part festival celebrating the life and work of Ingmar Bergman. Bergman, perhaps best known for his film "Persona," is a haunting tale of fractured identities, is one of the premier directors in the annals of cinematic history. His films continually probe the torments and desires of men and women, and his eerie insight into the hidden side of human nature makes his work unrivaled in artistic genius and intellectual prowess.

"Winter Light" is a trilogy concerned with faith. It concerns the plight of a pastor beginning to question his own faith in a world devoid of God's manifestations. He must come to terms with the suicide of one of his parishioners, a man who has abandoned his belief in God in the face of the potential for nuclear holocaust. The film is also stylistically innovative, containing many intriguing experiments with film form and sound track.

In addition to "Winter Light," the other two Bergman films to be shown are "The Seventh Seal" and "Smiles of a Summer Night." All three are among Bergman's most celebrated films. "The Seventh Seal" is also religious in tone, although this time in the style of an allegory. Bergman uses the opposing forces of life and death, faith and atheism, hope and despair, and sadness and suffering to investigate the tolls of Everyman as he searches for meaning in his life.

Bergman's penchant for period pieces emerges in "Smiles of a Summer Night," a romantic comedy which provides an uplifting and refreshing coda to the series.

This festival provides serious Bergman connoisseurs with the chance to re-examine some of the best films made by this fascinating director. These three films also provide an excellent introduction in the difficult but magnificent work of a great genius for those who are unfamiliar with Bergman's oeuvre.

"The Seventh Seal" will be shown on Sunday, February 19, and "Smiles of a Summer Night" on Sunday, February 26. Showtimes for both movies are 3:00 and 7:30 p.m. in Bronfman Auditorium.

Ron Hudson explores capacities of the guitar

by Randy Hesse

Guitarist Ron Hudson's entrance into Lawrence 231 last Tuesday night was somewhat less than auspicious. Wandering into the nearly full lecture hall ten minutes after the program was scheduled to begin, he strode sheepishly to the microphone and explained that he had been unaware of the time and location of the performance.

As Hudson surveyed and quickly modified the sound system that had been provided for him, however, he began to radiate confidence and competence.

This jaunty tune was played on a small guitar made from the shell of an armadillo.

When he finally sat behind his custom-built classical guitar, any sign of awkwardness was completely dispelled. The balance of the 90-minute performance, sponsored by VISTA, was a mix of skillful guitar playing and witty, fluid banter from the native Guatemalan.

Hudson's set was rooted deeply in South and Central American folk tradition as well as in the tradition of Spanish classical guitar. His first selection, a Venezuelan folk melody entitled "Molendino Cafe," melded the simple chord progressions and complex, irregular meters common in traditional Latin American music with the sophisticated technique of modern classical guitar. While his left hand fingered chord shapes familiar to the many guitarists in the audience, his right hand described a mesmerizing dance of syncopated basslines played with the thumb and blinding flurries of arpeggios and strumming upstrokes with the fingers.

The highlights of the first half of the program were "El Condor Pasa," an Incan melody adopted and popularized

Itsy-bitsy spider

Guatemalan guitarist Ron Hudson combines with his hairy friend for "The Tarantula Song." Hudson, who was sponsored by VISTA, played both classical Spanish guitar and Latin American folk music. Hudson mixed skillful guitar playing and witty banter in a performance last Tuesday.

by Simon and Garfunkel, and a Spanish selection called "Romance," during which Hudson revealed an unusual and quite dazzling tremolo technique in which the rapidly moving fingers of his right hand alternately plucked and damped the treble strings to create a warbling tone akin to bird song.

An original composition by Hudson completed the first segment of the program. Entitled "The Armadillo Rag," this jaunty tune was played not on guitar, but on an instrument called a charango, a small six-stringed guitar made from the shell of an armadillo. During the interval after the first half of the performance, Hudson entertained questions from the audience, ranging from general inquiries on his background to detailed examinations of his technique. The second half of the program ranged over a broad slice of musical tradition, featuring much original composition and transcription by

Hudson. He opened with one of his own works, a brief piece in the flamenco style entitled "String Fever." There followed an unconventional rendition of the Bach cantata "Jesu Joy." Hudson animated the fugue, generally played in a tempo of clockwork regularity, with the sudden acelerandos characteristic of Latin folk music.

Another composition of Hudson's, "The Tarantula Song," saw the guitarist sharing the spotlight with an immense spider mounted in a glass case. The composition itself was an experimental piece intended to represent the invasion of a village by tarantulas through the intersection of recurring leitmotifs. Technically, Hudson employed methods not normally applied to classical guitar, including the practice of plucking strings simultaneously with the right hand and the left hand on the fingerboard.

This piece was followed by Hudson's pioneering transcription of a Ravel orchestral work, "Bolero." His success in reproducing the richness and variety of tone possible with a symphony orchestra, from the buzzing of the bass viols to the soulful lilt of the oboe, was a tribute to his mastery of the guitar.

The guitarist shared the spotlight with an immense spider mounted in a glass case.

Concluding the regular program was a brilliantly conceived and performed composition by Hudson, "Among the Ruins of Guatemala." Dedicated to friends of his who perished in a Guatemalan earthquake, the piece was centered around a haunting melodic passage 36 seconds long, exactly matching the duration of a haunting melodic passage to its feet, prompting a much deserved but coldly conventional encore in the flamenco style: an anticlimactic finish to an otherwise exciting exploration of the capacities of the guitar and of Latin American musical tradition.

Musician Lou Reed spits out bite of Big Apple in New York

by Stan Shields

In New York, Lou Reed's twentieth studio LP, he returns to the stripped-down two guitars, bass, and drum format that served him so well with the Velvet Underground. His band (Mike Ratkin, second guitar; Rob Wasserman, upright six-string bass, and co-producer Fred Maier on the drums) give the album a raw-boned, steel-tough sound that properly frames his tales of the city.

Reed also draws upon his past by reuniting with Moe Tucker, the drummer from the Velvet Underground, who does some percussion work on "Dime Store Mystery" and "Last Great American Whale," drawing on some of the best parts of his twenty-three year career.

The album opens with "Romeo and Juliet" and the lines "Caught between the twisted stars, the plotted lines the faulty map / that brought Columbus to New York." Reed's New York is a microcosm of a country that was arrived at by mistake and which has been run since then in a style befitting its origin. The most potent parts of the album are Reed's cafe vignettes about the people trying to survive within the self-perpetuating mistake of New York: "Romeo and Juliet," "Xmas in February," "Last Great American Whale," and most impressively, the first single, "Dirty Blvd," the story of Pedro, a poor Hispanic boy, and his day-to-day trials in the city. Reed's detached deadpan style is compimented by an incredible emotionally-charged guest vocal by Dion.

Reed scrapes away at the veneer of everyone from Morton Downey to Bono.

Some times however, Reed seems to drift off down an alleyway, wandering the city with no particular destination. "Bus load of Faith," "Strawman," and "Endless Cycle" suffer from this problem. But in these lyrically self-absorbed moments his fervor and the band's fresh-from-the-garage style keep roaring on with a pulsing energy all their own. Perhaps the most dynamic moments of the album are when Reed pulls himself out of his street-side cogitations and tears into the hypocritical figures of the media. He scrapes away at the veneer of everyone from Morton Downey to Bono (Does anybody need another self-righteous rock and roll singer / whose nose he says has led him straight to God). And most virulently at the Pope and Jesse Jackson in "Good Evening Mr. Waldheim."

Reed chides Jackson for his racist comments asking "If I ran for president and was once a member of the Klan / wouldn't you call me on it / the way I call you on Farrakhan?" In the end it appears that Reed has given up on the whole system as he asks Jackson rhetorically "Oh is it true / there's no Ground Common enough for me and you?" But if Reed has lost faith in the rest of the world, in "Beginning of a Great Adventure" he shows that he has found hope in himself as he dreams of the prospect of having "a little me or he or she to fill up with my dreams." In the final analysis Lou Reed is a man whose search for faith and love in the world has been unsuccessful but he still continues the quest on a smaller scale.

Holiday Beach Scene

This panel, by Charles Prendergast, is one of many of his works focused on in the current exhibition of his carved, gessoed panels as well as related sketches and the tools he used to create them. The exhibition began January 21 and will be at the Williams College Museum of Art until June 11. At the same time, "Maurice Prendergast's Women: Real and Ideal," which showcases Prendergast's changing views of women will also be at WCMA.

IT'S VALENTINE'S DAY!
Tuesday, February 14.

WHERE'S MY CARD, SWEETIE?

McLelland's

© 1989 Hallmark Cards, Inc.

BERKSHIRE STATIONERY

Factory Outlet Store

40% off

- Thesis Paper
- Stationery
- Notes
- Typing Paper
- Letter Paper

Buy your sweetheart a special Valentine's Day card.

Windsor Mill
121 Union St., North Adams, Mass.

Open Mon.-Sat 10 - 5

Eaton FINE LETTER PAPERS

STUDY FOR ONE YEAR OR FOR ONE OR TWO TERMS IN

OXFORD

Several colleges of Oxford University have invited The Washington International Studies Center to recommend qualified students to study for one year or for one or two terms. Lower Junior status is required, and graduation is available. Students who are directly involved in their colleges and receive it on campus. For a full list of colleges, this is NOT a program available to a U.S. College in Oxford. A up to 1000 session a directed by WISC.

INTERN IN WASHINGTON, LONDON

WISC offers summer internships with Congress with the White House, with the media and with think tanks. Government and Journalism courses are taught by senior level government officials, who are also scholars, and by experienced journalists. Similar opportunities in public policy internships are offered (with academic credit) in London (Fall, Spring and Summer).

WISC The Washington International Studies Center
214 Massachusetts Ave., N.E. Suite 200
Washington, D.C. 20002 (202) 547-3375

EO/AA

Divertimento Chamber Ensemble familiar and pleasing

by Beth Neely

The Divertimento Chamber Ensemble, a local group conducted by Professor of Music Douglas Moore, presented a concert at the Clark Art Museum auditorium last Saturday afternoon. This marked the first performance of the ensemble that I had heard, and the word "divertimento" in the group's title triggered a memory of its meaning: a short, light composition written in a familiar and pleasing style.

On the whole, Saturday's performance matched the name of the ensemble. Most compositions were familiar and in a light vein, and the ensemble's performance became more pleasing as its program unfolded. The concert included works by Henry Purcell, Wolfgang Mozart, Peter Warlock, and Antonin Dvorak.

The program opened with Purcell's Suite from Incidental Music from "The support in the cello and bass, and desire less volume in the overbearing first violins. This was particularly true in the overture.

"Slow Air," which followed, set a lyrical mood, marred only by occasionally missed accidentals. The ensemble also translated the jubilant energy of the "Horpipe" to the audience well. "Minuet I and II" were compact and neatly packaged. Although the beginning of the final allegro seemed to take all the players by surprise, its full-bodied sonorities and pulsing rhythms took over and ended before the listener was quite ready to let go of the movement.

In the next piece, "Chacony in G Minor," the violas, cellos, and bass finally came into their own to create a more rounded and complete texture. However, the ensemble did not highlight the precisely dotted rhythms as much as they could have and an expanded dynamic range might have been more satisfying.

Moore pointed out that Mozart's "Divertimento in B-Flat Major, K. 137" is unusual. Instead of the sonata-form movement-minuet form found in Mozart's other Divertimentos, this one starts with an andante, puts the sonata form in the middle, and ends with the minuet. Mozart wrote this engaging piece at age 16. The purity and exposure with which Mozart endows his musical lines makes it very tough to perform well.

In the opening andante, the violin parts are indeed exposed. Unfortunately, a lack of ensemble within the violin sections, as well as a lack of good intonation, marred the movement and undermined the sensitive accompaniment by the

Looking sharp!

The Divertimento Chamber Ensemble, an 18-member group composed mainly of Williams students and conducted by Professor of Music Douglas Moore, performed last Saturday. Stelman lower strings.

The following "Allegro di molto" is one of Mozart's great ear-catching movements, and the ensemble played with a clear, bright tone. Moore made good use of the dynamic contrasts throughout the movement.

The final "Allegro Assai" seemed to anticipate the Dvorak on the second half of the program in terms of texture, for it was much too heavy for the "breath of fresh air" effect the movement should create. Too much was made of individual notes, taking away from the effortlessness inherent in Mozart's work.

Warlock's "Capriccio: Suite for String Orchestra" proved to be the gem of the afternoon and a wonderful work for the listener to discover. Moore noted that its themes, old dances, were written four hundred years ago. Warlock has become immensely popular in England. The composition is in six short movements, and the ensemble did a first rate job of engaging the audience in the humor and rhetorical remarks which are part of the work's style.

The two movements which were particularly well played were the "Pavane," which tugged at the listener, and the

"Tordion," which was played with a lightness and breathiness that would have suited the earlier Mozart quite well. The work is definitely a "feel good" piece—a feeling that the ensemble conveyed successfully.

After intermission the remaining work was Dvorak's "Serenade in E Major, Opus 22," which Moore referred to as the ensemble's "nod to Valentine's Day." This label is fitting, for the work has a romantically retrospective quality with a wealth of memorable and open-hearted melodies. Moore chose a flowing tempo for the first movement, "Moderato." The cello solos were compelling with the harmonies and tone pulling the listener along.

The "Tempo di Valse" movement was not quite as successful, since intonation problems in the higher strings interfered with hearing each section as one voice. The finality of the movement was undermined by the indecisive chords at its close.

Surprisingly, the following movement, "Scherzo: Vivace," included some of the best lyrical playing of the afternoon. The ensemble produced a smooth, liquid sound in the "Larghetto," but again the fullness of the upper strings was marred by intonation problems, which, of course, vary within the section. The finale had an appealing guinness without being overly aggressive. The middle and end of the movement might have been as solid as the beginning, if the players had focused more on its technical problems.

Overall, despite the problems mentioned, the program had some lovely movements, particularly in the Warlock and the Dvorak.

The ensemble's performance became more pleasing as the program unfolded.

Virtuous Wife," composed in 1694 to accompany a play of the same name by Thomas D'Urfey. Purcell's "Chacony in G Minor" followed. The Purcell was not a particularly solid opening, for the poor balance between the upper and lower strings made the ear search for more

Gospel concert has people dancing in the aisles

by Nancy Titus

Last Saturday evening, the Williams Gospel Choir joined with a children's choir and gospel choirs from Princeton and Mt. Holyoke to present a concert in honor of the Black Centennial and Black History Month. The program, both entertaining and a forum for worship, combined the ideal elements of gospel music.

The concert drew a very large and enthusiastic crowd to Chapel II. By the end of the concert, the entire audience had become involved in the music. Everyone was clapping and moving to the music and some were even dancing in the aisles.

The children's choir, the Angels without Wings, from the Second Congregational Church in Pittsfield, sang first. Although fewer than a dozen children were in the choir, they projected a full and genuine sound to every corner of Chapel II. Initially, they had problems with the choreography, as the children had trouble keeping in step with each other, but they had no trouble singing together on key.

The children clearly enjoyed the singing, and their voices blended well. Their second piece was well choreographed, but the soloist projected poorly and could not be heard. The soloist in the third number, however, sang beautifully. The audience responded very favorably to the young singers.

Following the Angels without Wings, the three college choirs emerged from the rear of Chapel in a processional, singing "Magnify." This was truly inspirational. The choirs had a rich, full sound that carried throughout the hall as the 40 singers created at least as much sound than the much larger Choral Society. The concert opened with a word of prayer to create a religious atmosphere and dedicate the concert to God.

Lift Every Voice and Sing

The Williams Gospel Choir performed with choirs from Princeton and Mt. Holyoke for an evening of celebration.

The combined choirs then sang eight selections. Michelle Thomas '89 and Wendy Sue Walker of Mt. Holyoke took turns directing. Walker's direction was characterized by strong emphatic gestures that skillfully co-ordinated the various parts. The first song, "We Give You the Praise," was very well performed; the soloist had a rich tone and good style.

The fullness and rich blending with which the choirs sang carried every song and the audience responded with enthusiasm.

Typing Service by published writer. Limited editing available. Typed or handwritten MS. Word processing disk storage. From $1.50/page. Tel. 458-2614

Easy Work! Excellent Pay! Assemble products at home. Call for information.

504-649-0670 Ext. 1868

London School of Economics and Political Science

A chance to study and live in London

Junior-year programs, Postgraduate Diplomas, One-Year Master's Degrees and Research Opportunities in the Social Sciences.

The wide range of subjects includes:

- Accounting and Finance
- Actuarial Science
- Business Studies
- Economics
- European Studies
- Geography
- Government
- Health Planning
- Housing
- Industrial Relations
- International History
- International Law
- Management Sciences
- Operational Research
- Philosophy
- Logic & Scientific Method
- Population Studies
- Politics
- Regional and Urban Planning
- Sea-Use Policy
- Social Administration
- Social Anthropology
- Social Planning in Developing Countries
- Social Work
- Sociology
- Social Psychology
- Statistical and Mathematical Sciences
- Syllabus Analysis

Application forms from: Admissions Registrar, Room 10, L.S.E., Houghton Street, London WC2A 2AE, England, stating whether undergraduate or postgraduate.

LSE

Come Daily in the Alley at the Elysian Fields Gallery

(formerly The Studio)

Featuring handknit woolen and mohair sweaters, unique crafted jewelry, oversized paisley scarves and shawls, silk pajamas and kimonos, and museum prints for your dorm or favorite Valentine.

Hours: Mon-Sat 10:5:30 and Sun 12:5:00

Elysian Fields Gallery

Eph's Alley, off Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-4707
Elyse and Jonathan Meer '83, Proprietors

Can you write like this?

"Yet the most valuable aspect of their performance for the audience was the display of erotic power that can overcome both performers and listeners."

"You can ski, only to be chain whipped by a body nazi trying to get ahead of you in the lift line."

The Arts section of the Williams Record is looking for reviewers and contributors to write on a free lance basis. Call Bill Savadove at x2869 or The Record at x2595.

SPIRIT SHOP

280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704

"Free Delivery"

Valentine's Day & Winter Carnival Specials

February 14 through February 18

Bartlett and James Wins Coolers 3.49/4 pack

Miller Cans 12.99/case plus deposit

Coors Light (Gold can) 12.99/case plus deposit

Rolling Rock Bottles 11.99/case plus deposit

Molson Beer Bottles 15.99/case plus deposit

Dos Equis 15.99/case plus deposit

Champagne 32.00/case

Polar Mixers 8.49/case plus deposit

Monday - Saturday 9am to 11 pm

SPRING BREAK

NASSAU/PARADISE ISLAND FROM $299.00

PACKAGE INCLUDES:

ROUNDTrip AIR, TRANSFERS, 7 NIGHTS HOTEL, BEACH PARTIES, FREE LUNCH, CRUISE, FREE ADMISSION TO NIGHTCLUBS, TAXES AND MORE!!!

CANCUN PACKAGES ALSO AVAILABLE!!

ORGANIZE SMALL GROUP, EARN FREE TRIP!
1-800-231-0113 OR (203) 967-3330

West

Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-0881

Exclusive distributor of Purple Cow Vodka and Gin

12 oz. Molson Golden case $15.99 plus deposit

12 oz. Beck's case $17.99 plus deposit

12 oz. Rolling Rock Export case $11.99 plus deposit

12 oz. Hopfinger Swiss Beer $13.99 plus deposit

Cash and Carry: 1/2 keg Meisterbrau - $25 plus deposit

For quality over quantity check out our variety of unique beers and ales

Sophomores bolster women's hoops team

continued from page 14

"When she goes out there, the defense steps up another notch," said Coach Roberts.

Borden explained her defensive intensity by saying, "I don't like seeing someone else with the ball."

Another defensive spark has been provided by Meg Brown. Brown played under an intense coach at Minnetonka High School in Excelsior, Minnesota, and did not enjoy basketball her senior year. Not even sure that she was inter-as the most popular player on the squad, Brown keeps her teammates relaxed and entertained with her singing.

Continuing the defensive onslaught is Martha Lucy. Lucy played at a strong defensive program at Lenox High School in Lenox, Massachusetts, where she was a Southern Berkshire All-Star her junior and senior year. Lucy's primary role on the team is as a defensive stopper. She is frequently assigned to the opposing team's best offensive player.

"It's so awesome shutting down their good player. The opposing team gets frustrated and doesn't know who to look for."

'Brown keeps her teammates relaxed and entertained with her singing.'

Lucy is one of the hardest workers on the team and also plays with great intensity on the court, prompting Borden to comment, "[Lucy] is the best scrap player I've ever seen."

Kathy Judge completes the sophomore class. She has been familiar with the Williams team for a long time. Judge grew up in Williamstown, where she attended Mount Greylock High School. Judge and Lucy were good friends before coming to Williams. They met at a summer program at Milton Academy. Although she doesn't see much game action, Judge sets a great example for the team with her attitude.

"Kathy Judge is on the team because of desire," explained Coach Roberts. Judge is not concerned about playing time because she enjoys being a part of the team.

Although Williams will be hurt by the graduations of Crouchley and Hede- man, the program is gaining momentum. The team will continue to be strong because of the leadership and play of the sophomore five.

Perry bleeds to victory in Vampire contest

The top ten finishers in the recent Vampire Sweepstakes, held last week during the Red Cross blood drive:

Perry-Bascom	21.13 percent of residents giving blood
Williams	21.02
Armstrong	20.78
Paperweather	17.14
Tyler	16.90
A-Gar-Wood	16.67
Flich-Currier	16.67
Lehman	16.28
Pratt	16.22
Carter	16.18

Perry-Bascom won a batch of homemade cookies baked by Beverly Scher of South Street. All told, 304 students gave blood during the two-day drive.

Congratulations, Perry. This blood's for you!

Teach in an independent school.

Dare to be good. Join a tradition of excellence and independence at the elementary or secondary level in a private school. A Carney Sandoe representative will be on campus this winter. Contact the Career Development office for date and time. Call now toll free to discuss job openings nationwide: (In Mass.) 617-562-0250 or 800-225-7985.

Carney, Sandoe & Associates

136 Boylston St., Boston, MA 02116, Teacher/Administrator Placement

This is all you need to apply for the Card.

With Automatic Approval, it's easier to qualify while you're still in school.

Now getting the Card is easier than ever. For the very first time, students can apply for the American Express® Card over the phone.

Simply call 1-800-942-AMEX. We'll take your application by phone and begin to process it right away. It couldn't be easier.

What's more, because you attend this school full time, you can also take advantage of the Automatic Approval Offer for students. With this offer, you can get the American Express Card right now—without a full-time job or a credit history. But if you have a credit history, it must be unblemished.

It's actually easier for you to qualify for the Card now while you're still a student, than it ever will be again.

Become a Cardmember. Fly Northwest® $99 roundtrip.

As a student Cardmember you will be able to enjoy an extraordinary travel privilege. Fly twice for only $99 roundtrip to any of the more than 180 Northwest Airlines cities in the 48 contiguous United States (only one ticket may be used per six-month period)*.

And, of course, you'll also enjoy all the other exceptional benefits and personal service you would expect from American Express.

Apply now by calling 1-800-942-AMEX. And then you can really go places—for less.

Apply Now: 1-800-942-AMEX

*Some restrictions may apply. For complete offer details, call 1-800-942-AMEX. Current student Cardmembers automatically receive two $99 travel vouchers in the mail. © 1989 American Express Travel Related Services Company, Inc.

$60.00 PER HUNDRED remailing letters from home! Details, send self-addressed, stamped envelope:

Associates
Box 309-T
Colonia, NJ 07067

BECAUSE GIRAFFES DON'T BROWSE IN A TEST TUBE...

Join us in the best of all laboratories to study real-world environmental issues including:

- Wildlife Management in Kenya
- Marine Biology in the Virgin Islands
- Tropical Rainforests in Australia
- Marine Mammal Behavior in Mexico
- Resource Management in the Circumpolar North
- and 14 other critical environmental issues worldwide...

Financial Aid and College Credit available for all programs
THE SCHOOL FOR FIELD STUDIES
Box V, 16 Broadway, Beverly, MA 01915

For more information on Semester, Summer and January programs, please join us:
Thursday, February 16, 4:00 p.m.
Office of Career Counseling
OR CALL (508) 927-7777
The World is Your Classroom

Movies

page 6 The Williams Record

PARSONS SCHOOL OF DESIGN

Special Summer Programs

Persons in Paris June 30-August 14
Part on the Left Bank and visit the caves in the Dordogne, visit the masterpieces of renaissance art in Italy. Courses include painting, drawing, art history and the liberal arts. Students may choose to spend the last two weeks of the program in the Dordogne or Florence, Italy.

Photography in Paris June 30-July 31
Part on the Left Bank and visit the caves in the Dordogne, visit the masterpieces of renaissance art in Italy. Courses include painting, drawing, art history and the liberal arts. Students may choose to spend the last two weeks of the program in the Dordogne or Florence, Italy.

Fashion in Paris June 30-July 31
Study the history and contemporary trends of French fashion design through visits to Parisian museums and costume collections. Guest lecturers and visits to design studios and retail outlets are part of the program, as are daily classes in fashion illustration.

History of Architecture and Decorative Arts in Paris June 30-July 31
Offered in collaboration with the renowned Musée des Arts Décoratifs, this program focuses on the history of French architecture and European decorative arts. Excursions to Paris and visits to the Louvre, Versailles, and Fontainebleau.

Modern Paris June 30-July 31
Combining architectural history with drawing, this program focuses on the development of Paris in the modern period (1830 to the present).

Prehistoric Art and Archaeology of the Dordogne July 30-August 13
Daily class sessions near the town of Les Eyzies de Tayac, in southwestern France, are devoted to lectures and guided visits to the caves and less well known prehistoric caves, living sites, and archaeological excavations.

History of Architecture in Italy June 29-July 28
The architectural heritage of Italy is studied in Rome, Florence and Venice, where on-site presentations are made by Parsons faculty.

History of Architecture and Decorative Arts in Great Britain July 8-August 7
This four-week curriculum, covering the years 1600-1900, is offered in London, with several excursions to nearby towns and country houses.

Graphic Design in Japan July 10-August 10
Design students and professionals will discover the excitement of Japanese advertising and graphic design through workshops, seminars and presentations by internationally known designers. Studio, museum and gallery visits supplement the curriculum, which emphasizes the sources in the traditional arts of much contemporary Japanese design.

Persons in Israel July 22-August 18
Offered in collaboration with Jerusalem Bezalel Academy of Arts and Design, the program provides an in-depth introduction to major sites of historical importance to the rudiments of archaeological practice and to techniques of artistic representation.

Persons in West Africa July 8-August 2 and August 5-28
Workshops in ceramics and fibers will introduce students to artists and artisans in several Ivory Coast villages, where these crafts can be studied in their original context. A photography curriculum examines techniques of documentation and reportage in regions of great natural beauty and cultural diversity. The history of African art and architecture also is offered. Additional study in Mali may be taken as a separate option, or as a continuation of the Ivory Coast program.

All programs include round trip airfare, accommodations and land transfers. Academic credit is available to qualified students. For more information, please return the coupon or call

(212) 741-8975

Parsons School of Design
Office of Special Programs
65 Fifth Avenue, N.Y., N.Y. 10011

Please send information about:

- ☐ Parsons in Paris
- ☐ Photography in Paris
- ☐ Fashion in Paris
- ☐ Architecture & Decorative Arts in Paris
- ☐ Modern Paris
- ☐ Prehistoric Art
- ☐ Architecture in Italy
- ☐ Architecture in Great Britain
- ☐ Graphic Design in Japan
- ☐ Persons in Israel
- ☐ Parsons in West Africa

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

CP

33

Information Services Management Training Program at MORGAN STANLEY

One of Wall Street's leading international securities firms invites Bachelor's and Master's candidates of all majors with superior academic records to apply to our Information Services Management Training Program.

WE SEEK

- SPRING GRADUATES and RECENT ALUMNI of all majors for Summer and Fall start dates

WE OFFER

- A fast-paced leading-edge environment with high intellectual standards
- A structured training program teaching the use of Information Systems technology to solve business-related problems
- A series of challenging assignments with significant responsibility leading to rapid career progression
- An outstanding compensation program

For more information visit The Office of Career Counseling

For consideration, forward your resume and a cover letter describing your interest in the program to:

MORGAN STANLEY & CO.
Incorporated

IS College Recruiting
1633 Broadway, New York, NY 10019

Morgan Stanley is an Equal Opportunity Employer

Athlete of the Week

This week's recipient is freshman wrestler Ivan Fermon. On February 4th, Fermon placed third in his weight class (118-lbs.) at the Northern New England tournament at Plymouth State, beating out several Division I and II wrestlers in the process. Fermon also placed fourth overall in the New England Classic Tournament on January 28th; he won both his matches last week against Northeastern and Bowdoin, and currently leads the team with a 7-1 record. Congrats, Ivan!

Ephwomen struggle as record falls to 11-5

by Asif Jalli

The Ephwomen journeyed to Clinton, NY, on Saturday but came up empty, losing to Hamilton 91-77. It was the third loss in five games for the Ephs, who have played five consecutive contests away from Chandler gym. Earlier in the Melissa Hart led Hamilton with 39 points, followed by Gina Gillan with 20. Co-captain Nancy Hedeman '89 topped the Ephs with 25 points and 11 rebounds. Chrissy Cadigan '91 scored 16 points and senior co-captain Julia Beasley contributed 11 assists.

Williams got off to a slow start against North Adams State but shook off the Cadigan and Crouchley got on track to allow Williams to pull away.

week, Williams defeated North Adams State, 76-41.

On Saturday, the Ephs stayed with the stronger Continentals for about 35 minutes. They trailed by two at the half, 42-40. Hamilton had too much firepower, however. The Continentals shot 55 percent from the field in the second half.

The drought is finally over. After a humiliating 0-41 defeat at the hands of powerhouse SUNY Oneonta on January 25, the wrestlers scored three home triumphs in a row over Trinity, Bowdoin and Northeastern in the past two weeks. The season record now stands at 5-6.

As Bowdoin showed up with only three wrestlers and Northeastern with six on Saturday, the Ephs completely dominated both and won 57-0 and 46-6.

"We were just physically superior to these teams...When a freshman wrestler recruit and his father who were at the meet came up to me afterwards and said that they just didn't physically match up to us, I felt somewhat strange...It is us who usually don't match up to our opponents," said Coach Roger Caron.

The highlight of the three matches with Bowdoin was the 167 pounds weight class. Sean Glynn '91 pinned a 8-5 decision win on a Polar Bear to whom he previously lost 12-9 in a tournament.

Registering the one-point riding time dominance, Glynn showed signs of full recovery from the knee injury that has hampered his performance so far this season.

"Sean is getting back to his original style of last year as a freshman. He definitely is improving to be a good wrestler," Caron commented.

In the other two weight classes, Ephmen made plus with lightning speed. Chris Gernigian '92, in 150, finished his match in 90 seconds as his counterpart made himself vulnerable to a pin after missing a throw. In 190, Dan Brynion '92 cut his match even shorter, dealing a take-down half-nelson finish in 30 seconds.

Northeastern similarly subdued the grapplers forced Northeastern into a similar fate, yielding only one out of the six classes that were contested. Ivan Fermon '92, wrestling in 118, virtually practiced on his counterpart, pulling

Sports

Wrestlers take down opponents

Crushed!

Senior captain John Dillon works to pin his Northeastern opponent during the Ephs 46-6 rout on Saturday.

a technical fall of 19-4 early in the second period. With the victory, Fermon's season record now stands at an impressive 7-1. With complete control of the match, Dylan Bloy '92 followed Fermon's example in easily notching a major decision win of 11-0 in 126.

The only loss occurred in 134. Peter Herbsman '92, wrestling up from 126, dropped a winning match in the second period when he slipped off his counterpart's arm and fell on his back after trying to secure a pinning hold. Next, however, filling in for injured Eddie Anderson '90 in 142, captain John Dillon '89 wasted no energy in a second period pin. "It [the Dillon match] was a complete physical mismatch," Caron said.

The physical mismatch continued into the remaining two classes as both matches ended in 60 seconds with Eph victories. Gernigian in 150 and Doug Dreffeier '92 in 190 practiced a front-headlock throw, a single leg take-down and a half-nelson freely on their counterparts.

Trinity and Northern New England On January 28, the Ephs ten netted a convincing 30-15 win over Trinity. "Considering that we barely managed to beat them 27-24 last year, with them forfeiting three matches...our team this year is definitely stronger than last year," Caron said.

The strongest asset among the lower weight wrestlers so far seems to be Ivan Fermon. Fermon proved to be the high-light of the Northern New England tournament held at Plymouth State last Saturday, as he placed third among challengers from Division I, II, and III schools. The rest of the Eph squad, however, were not as successful as Fermon; no one else got past the semi-finals over competition from such powerhouses as Division I University of New Hampshire and Division II University of Lowell.

The Ephmen travel to Amherst this Saturday for the Little Three championship. "I feel good about Amherst; we have more depth. Westleyan is going to be tough; they have won the Little Three for ten years in a row now...We need to beat both of them in order to have our first winning season since 1973," Caron said.

Men's squash kills Amherst 14-0

continued from page 14
squash standouts, the Ephmen took the match with gutsy displays from players like Khoshroozshah, and seniors Rob Hallagan, and Seth Packard. Hallagan, who had to be carried off the court, won his match in five games despite playing with Scarlet Fever while Seth Packard badly injured his knee in the third game. While it was clear that Packard could hardly move, he held on to win the last game 18-17 and guaranteed victory for his elated teammates. "We kept our composure in tight situations and that was the difference between the two teams," said Assaiante. Other victorious Ephs included seniors Lou Fisher and Chris Klipstein and Sophomore Chris Pentz. For the Junior Varsity the week was similar with an 8-0 drubbing of Williston North Hampton and a 5-2 victory over Trinity Pawling, coached by Wendell Christner '88.

M. hockey—

continued from page 14

9-11-1 mark, were also in the hunt for a postseason bid.

Rob Abel '91 was credited with the first goal, which came on a Rick Laferriere '91 blast that rang off Abel's skate and found its way past a bewildered Mike Paale at 8:54 of the opening act. Just over a minute later, senior Chris Conway stretched the lead to 2-0 when he poked in classmate Tim Frechette's rebound.

Conway notched his second goal of the evening at 11:55 of the first when his shot from the left point eluded Paale's glove. The lead continued to grow during the second stanza when Abel fired a pass from freshman Andy Zinman into the Mohawk net.

North Adams regrouped and staged a mild rally in the third period, scoring twice. But Zinman ended the comeback with a short-handed breakaway goal with 53 seconds left in the contest.

Ephs capture Little 3
The Ephmen rounded out their week on Saturday, when they traveled to Middletown, Connecticut to face the Wesleyan Cardinals. As the Williams stickhandlers had already posted a pair of victories over rival Amherst, a victory on Saturday would mean a second consecutive Little Three title for the men of Lansing-Chapman.

Mike Swenson '89 kicked off the evening's action at 2:30 of the opening frame on an assist from Conway, but the Cardinals soon erased the margin when Kevin McGonigle beat Ford, who was starting his third game of the week. The teams continued to trade goals, with Conway notching an unassisted tally and Will Putnam '89 and Swenson contributing power play scores for the Ephs, until the 12:35 mark of the final chapter, when Abel scored a shorthanded goal during a crucial five-minute major penalty to put Williams ahead 5-4.

The one-goal margin held up the rest of the way, as Ford (30 saves) held tight between the pipes and his Cardinal counterpart Steve Butler (41 saves) also refused to allow any further scoring. Coach Bill McCormick and his squad revel across the western border tonight to face a traditionally strong Hamilton squad, and then return home to participate in the festivities of Winter Carnival on a Friday evening date with the Eddie Panthers.

W. hockey—

continued from page 12

record. Williams outshot Wesleyan 14-5, as Heidi Sandreuter '92, assisted by Davis, scored the first goal five minutes into the game. Jill Magnuson '90 scored the second unassisted in the third period.

"If it hadn't been for two fluke goals, we would have won the game," Briggs said.

The flukes came in the first two minutes of the second period. "One time the puck bounced off a Williams defenseman and went in, and the other time it rpled up her sleeve," said Briggs.

He also cited the most recent match against Hamilton as the best game the Williams team has played this season.

"It was a tremendous game against an even match. The keys to the win were a tenacious forecheck and junior Sue Pitcher's goaltending, particularly in the third period. She stopped two complete break-aways," said Briggs.

Magnuson, with an assist from Lapey, scored the first goal in the first period.

THE SWEATER VENTURE
Imports from the Andes

THE SWEATER MAN introduces a limited supply of the new WILLIAMS COLLEGE SWEATER 100% wool handknit. Baxter Hall February 22nd & 23rd

La Cocina
MEXICAN RESTAURANTS

With coupon receive $2.00 off our FANTASTIC FAJITA. Tender chunks of marinated beef, chicken, or both. Sautéed with veggies and served piping hot with rice, beans, lettuce, tomatoes and hot tortillas & sour cream.

not valid on Saturdays

850 State Rd. • North Adams, MA • 413-664-4757
540 Worcester St • Pittsfield, MA • 413-496-4027

Winter Carnival
From Hell

PRESENTED BY WILLIAMS COLLEGE DINING SERVICES

ALL DINING HALLS
NO CHITS VALID 1-P.
OR CASH ONLY • $5.50

BUFFET FEB 18, 1989

Women's hockey improves to 4-7

by Soojin Kim
With two games left in the season, the Williams women's hockey team has developed a scoring punch. The Eph skaters downed Hamilton 4-2 on Saturday, after winning 4-3 against visiting RPI on Wednesday and narrowly missing a road win against Wesleyan 3-2 the previous Saturday.

The Ephwomen took the initiative early in Wednesday's home game. Kristin Moomaw '90, assisted by Amy Merritt '89, notched a goal at 6:16 of the first period. Williams kept the heat on RPI with senior co-captain Elana Wishnie's goal at 7:52, assisted by Merritt. Tracy Davis '91 rounded out the first period with a tally at 16:15, handing the Ephwomen a 3-0 lead.

The second period was a succession of shots on RPI's goal, as Williams capitalized on every opportunity. Junior Kathleen Lapey's goal at 14:00 ended a flurry of four charges in the space of 15 seconds. RPI rallied in the third period, however, scoring three goals to end the game at 4-3.

According to Coach James Briggs, "RPI had one very good line that scored all three goals. We played well the second period and not so well the third." The coach also cited Wishnie for playing her best game and scoring her first goal of the season.

Good Times, Bad Times... Briggs said the squad had actually played a better game in the loss to Wesleyan, a team which sports a 9-3

Shot . . . save

Susan Pitcher '90 slips away an RPI shot during a 4-3 Williams victory at Lansing Chapman Rink on Wednesday.

Marcus

Alpiners take third at Dartmouth Carnival

by Jeff Hiersach

Both the men's and women's alpine teams had a successful weekend at the Dartmouth Carnival held at the Dartmouth Skiway, as each squad enjoyed a strong third place finish in slalom and giant slalom. The men's results were disputed and may have concealed an actual second-place Eph finish. The success at Dartmouth indicates that the alpine team is sking well and is ready for next weekend's Williams Carnival at Brodie Mountain.

Sophomore Jason Priest turned in one of the best Williams showings of the year. Priest finished third in Saturday's slalom behind UVM winner Einar Bohmer, the former Norwegian National G.S. Champion. Priest's laid-back and reckless Colorado racing style allowed him to master Dartmouth's flat and fast slalom course. Priest has been sking well this year, in the process becoming one of the team's top scorers, and he has recently been posting some of the best results in team time trials. He said of his third place Dartmouth finish that "I'm starting to ski a lot more like I'd like to be."

Priest was backed in the slalom by an 11th-place result from J.P. Parisien '90 and a 12th-place finish by Bill Crowley '91.

The men's team almost scored a first-place finish in the slalom. Freshman David Brule wound up with the top time for the race, but he was disqualified for striding the 18th gate.

The women were led in the slalom by sophomore Amy Sullivan in 12th place. She was closely followed by captain Mari Omland '89 in 13th place and sophomore Amy Beliveau in 16th place. UVM won the women's slalom, thanks to a first place finish from skier Gabriela Hamburg of Sweden.

Giant Slalom

Friday's long and flat giant slalom seemed more like a downhill. The open and rolling course required almost constant tucking, which was well-suited to the powerful G.S. style of Parisien, who led the men's team with a fifth place finish. Sixth-place sophomore Lindon Seed trailed Parisien by only one one-hundredth of a second. Brule finished eighth, followed by 10th-place Eric Grosje '91 and 12th-place Priest. Crowley finished 16th, allowing the entire Williams team to finish in the top 20 of an intensely competitive field of 66.

For the women, consistent-sking Sullivan and Omland again posted strong G.S. results. Sullivan, who prefers steeper G.S. courses, finished 13th in Friday's G.S. She was closely followed by Mari Omland in 14th place.

Ephs down two

Men's hoops get ready for post-season tourney action

by Alexander Rachmiel

As they entered the final weeks of the season attempting to secure a berth in the ECAC post-season tournament, the men's basketball team their record to 13-4 with two convincing home wins. Last Saturday night, the Ephmen welcomed the Connecticut College Camels to Chandler Athletic Center and outscored them by 50 points, 91-41. Wednesday, they played host to W.P.I. and prevailed 102-90.

In Saturday night's game, the Camels came out with a twin towers look. Their leading scorer, 6'9" senior center David Blair, was supported by their leading rebounder, 6'7" senior forward Eddie Hoffman, in a formidable frontcourt. In the first five minutes of the game, Blair made his presence felt by mercilessly rejecting two consecutive shots by Eph power forward Bill Melchioni '89. The Camel center would block a total of five shots in the game.

The Ephmen soon adjusted their attack, however, to rely on the precision shooting of guards Garcia Major '90 and John Conte '92, and the speed of senior swingman Mike Masters. Conte and captain Masters pushed the pace of the game, repeatedly running the ball up the court for two-on-one layups before the Camels' lumbering big men could catch up. With sophomore center Than Healy holding Blair in check, the Ephs kept the Camels from scoring for five minutes and built a 26-8 lead midway through the first half.

After Connecticut's Dan Hartick and Melchioni traded three-pointers in the waning seconds of the first period to make the halftime score 47-21, the Ephmen came out of the locker room on fire. A run of 14 unanswered points made the score 63-25 and prompted Williams coach Harry Sheehy to begin the ceremonial one-by-one removal of the starters earlier than ever. The Eph reserves, led by sophomore center Jeff Miller's 11 points, all saw plenty of court

Up in the air...

Jeff Miller '91 lays the ball up as Rich Williams '90 waits for a possible rebound during the Ephs 91-41 rout of Connecticut College on Saturday night.

make the halftime score 47-21, the Ephmen came out of the locker room on fire. A run of 14 unanswered points made the score 63-25 and prompted Williams coach Harry Sheehy to begin the ceremonial one-by-one removal of the starters earlier than ever. The Eph reserves, led by sophomore center Jeff Miller's 11 points, all saw plenty of court

Swimmers splash to victory over Colgate

by Anne Joseph

In their last away meet before New England's, the Eph swimmers showed that they are coming together as a powerful team. The men defeated Division I Colgate 164.5-117.5, and the women dominated their Red Raider counterparts, 203-125.

For the Eph seniors, the meet made their four yearly battles against Colgate symmetrical, according to co-captain Mike O'Malley '89. Williams had lost to the Raiders for the past two years after a win three years ago.

"It was a great meet. It was a good last meet on the road for the seniors," said O'Malley. The competition brought the number of Ephmen who have qualified for Nationals to three. Junior Dan

Snyder finished the 1650 free in 16:34.90 and joined previously qualified diver Scott Schwager '91 and swimmer Rob Benson '90, who qualified again on Saturday in the 400 individual medley in 4:15.94.

Williams had the top three finishes in the 200 free, with Greg Jordan '92 taking the event in 1:47.14, followed by O'Malley and Jim Curry '91 respectively, and in the 400 individual medley with Benson, Paul Dehmel '91, and co-captain Chris Giglio '89 taking first, second and third respectively.

Eph David Brown '89 captured the 500 free in 22:20 and the 100 free in 48:54. "He's swimming very well. We're looking for him to make Nationals at New England's," stated O'Malley. Jordan was also a double winner when he won the 200 fly, edging out Benson.

Colgate did prove strong in the 500 free in which they took the top two places. The Raiders' swimmer Torrell also won the 200 breast, less than three seconds ahead of Ephman Evan Davis '89.

Williams ended the meet with an astounding finish in the 800 free relay. The relay of Pancho Maxwell '92, Jordan, Brown and Curry won by a wide margin of over a lap and a half of the pool, finishing in 7:22.04.

Colgate was predicted to be a tough meet for the Ephs. "We see this as averaging our loss to University of Massachusetts," said O'Malley. Coach Carl Samuelson added, "It was supposed to be a tough meet but we blew them out."

The Ephmen have their final meet before New England's today at home against R.P.I. at 7 p.m. in the Chandler pool.

Women's action

The Williams women also added to their list of people qualified for Nationals. Co-captain Michelle Freemer '89 made the NCAA cut in the 1650 free in 18:52. Freemer also won the 500 free in 5:23.62.

The Eph women had several multiple individual winners. Sophomore Lee Schroeder captured the 200 free, 50 free and 100 free. She also swam on the winning 800 free relay with Elizabeth Elbert '92, co-captain Connie Davis '90, continued on page 12

Women raquetteers dominate Cup play

by Ann Marie Marvin

The Howe Cup Tournament at Yale University ended on Sunday, February 13 with the Williams women's squash team capturing the Division II title. The tournament, involving 24 teams from four Northeastern divisions, began on Friday. Coming out of a successful Can Am tournament in January, the Williams team continued its winning streak by defeating Cornell, Tufts, Amherst 8-0, Middlebury 7-1, and downing U. Penn 6-2.

The hard work of both first-year coach Gail Ramsay and players has led to rapid improvement. Assistant Coach Lisa Melendy commented, "After watching the team for four years, it's the best I've seen them play." Coach Ramsay cited Allison Buckner '89 for her excellent performance and the team as a whole for committing fewer errors. Buckner, meanwhile, attributed the winning team record to the Ephs playing patiently and concentrating on one match at a time.

After posting several more clean victories this past weekend, the team hopes to improve their ranking. Expressing the team's general sentiment, junior Timmie Friend said, "While we all feel unjustly placed in Division II, we've definitely shown that we have Division I capabilities by our overwhelming success." With the Howe Cup championship title and two previous wins over Division I Dartmouth, the team looks forward to the upcoming challenge of Trinity and Franklin & Marshall, both tough Division I teams.

Sports Quiz

Win a $15 gift certificate from Goff's -- enter the quiz

Sports quiz goes to Houston for the NBA All-Star weekend festivities:

- 1) Which team won the NBA All-Star game this past weekend?
- 2) Who was selected as the game's MVP?
- 3) Which player won Saturday's slam dunk contest in the absence of Michael Jordan?
- 4) Who captured Saturday's other individual competition, the three-point shooting contest?

Send your answers to Mariam Naficy at SU 1871 by Saturday. In case of a tie, the winner will be chosen in a random drawing. Last week's winner was Peter Freether '92. Way to go, Peter!

Last week's answers: 1) Bill White is the new president of the National League; 2) A. Bartlett Giamatti replaced Peter Ueberroth as major league baseball commissioner; 3) Tamara McKinney won the World Alpine Ski Championships at Vail; 4) an injury to Kendall Gill has hurt Illinois' NCAA basketball success.

GOFF'S SKI SALE

SAVE 30%

On all alpine & cross country ski equipment skis, boots, bindings, poles, parkas, pants, hats, gloves

sweaters save 50%

Goff's Sports, Inc. 15 Spring Street 458-3605

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

NEW YORK

WHERE LIBERAL ARTS GRADUATES CAN BECOME PRICE WATERHOUSE PROFESSIONALS

NEW YORK

AND EARN AN ADVANCED DEGREE IN BUSINESS AT NEW YORK UNIVERSITY

There are many reasons why the Big Apple is considered to be the best place to launch a business career. Take, for example, the Price Waterhouse/New York University business program for liberal arts graduates.

It is a challenging and competitive 15 months to be sure. But it is time well spent.

You'll spend your days working on the professional staff of the New York office of Price Waterhouse. And some nights and two summers attending the New York University Graduate School of Business Administration, where you can obtain an MS in accounting. Then, if you like, you can continue on for your MBA.

Even while attending NYU full-time, you will remain on full salary at PW. When you complete the program, you will have earned an advanced degree from one of the country's top business schools. You will also have gained invaluable practical experience working for one of the leading business advisory firms in the world. Experience which includes consulting with client executives on important business problems.

If you think you might be interested in the upcoming program, you should plan on taking your GMATs no later than March of 1989.

And to learn more about this truly unique career and educational opportunity, be sure and sign up for the Price Waterhouse interviews:

Monday, February 27, 1989
Please follow OCC interview guidelines
Placement Office: Stetson Hall

Price Waterhouse
EXPECT MORE FROM US

An equal opportunity employer, M/F

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Interlopers

BY VIRGINIA L. YATES/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

- ACROSS
- 1 Prepares one's wild oats
 - 5 Wood sorrels
 - 6 Master beginner
 - 13 Coincides
 - 18 Nerd
 - 19 — anuff (C.K.)
 - 24 — Vista, city
 - 26 Sof San Diego
 - 27 Hewrote
 - 31 "Advise and Consent", 1959
 - 32 "Want for Christmas"
 - 33 One of a nautical trio
 - 34 Cauda
 - 35 "The Hajj"
 - 36 "Hasta luego"
 - 37 Sugar daddy?
 - 38 Tusked
 - 39 Summarians along the Seine
 - 40 Donatello specialty
 - 41 British noble family
 - 42 Credit union's offer
 - 43 — partridge in a
 - 44 She wrote "My Life": 1975
 - 45 Forest denizen's sweet?
 - 46 Puerish
 - 47 "Hasta luego"
 - 48 "Hasta luego"
 - 49 "Hasta luego"
 - 50 "Hasta luego"
 - 51 "Hasta luego"
 - 52 "Hasta luego"
 - 53 "Hasta luego"
 - 54 "Hasta luego"
 - 55 "Hasta luego"
 - 56 "Hasta luego"
 - 57 "Hasta luego"
 - 58 "Hasta luego"
 - 59 "Hasta luego"
 - 60 "Hasta luego"
 - 61 Kind of tube or circle
 - 62 Pelvic bones
 - 63 Caper
 - 64 Place to get pestas
 - 65 Necessitate
 - 66 Hillside
 - 67 "Hasta luego"
 - 68 "Hasta luego"
 - 69 "Hasta luego"
 - 70 "Hasta luego"
 - 71 "Hasta luego"
 - 72 "Hasta luego"
 - 73 "Hasta luego"
 - 74 "Hasta luego"
 - 75 "Hasta luego"
 - 76 "Hasta luego"
 - 77 "Hasta luego"
 - 78 "Hasta luego"
 - 79 "Hasta luego"
 - 80 "Hasta luego"
 - 81 "Hasta luego"
 - 82 — 500 (event for Al Unser)
 - 83 Depending on luck
 - 84 Kennel sound
 - 85 "Hasta luego"
 - 86 "Hasta luego"
 - 87 "Hasta luego"
 - 88 "Hasta luego"
 - 89 "Hasta luego"
 - 90 "Hasta luego"
 - 91 "Hasta luego"
 - 92 "Hasta luego"
 - 93 "Hasta luego"
 - 94 "Hasta luego"
 - 95 "Hasta luego"
 - 96 "Hasta luego"
 - 97 Pl. of Newfoundland
 - 98 Saturn's spouse
 - 99 Refluxes
 - 100 "Lizard of the Nile" for short
 - 101 "Hasta luego"
 - 102 "Hasta luego"
 - 103 "Hasta luego"
 - 104 "Hasta luego"
 - 105 "Hasta luego"
 - 106 "Hasta luego"
 - 107 "Hasta luego"
 - 108 "Hasta luego"
 - 109 "Hasta luego"
 - 110 "Hasta luego"
 - 111 "Hasta luego"
 - 112 "Hasta luego"
 - 113 "Hasta luego"
 - 114 "Hasta luego"
 - 115 "Hasta luego"
 - 116 "Hasta luego"
 - 117 "Hasta luego"
 - 118 "Hasta luego"
 - 119 "Hasta luego"
 - 120 "Hasta luego"
 - 121 "Hasta luego"
 - 122 "Hasta luego"
 - 123 "Hasta luego"
 - 124 "Hasta luego"
 - 125 "Hasta luego"
 - 126 "Hasta luego"
 - 127 "Hasta luego"
 - 128 "Hasta luego"
 - 129 "Hasta luego"
 - 130 "Hasta luego"
 - 131 "Hasta luego"
 - 132 "Hasta luego"
 - 133 "Hasta luego"
 - 134 "Hasta luego"
 - 135 "Hasta luego"
 - 136 "Hasta luego"
 - 137 "Hasta luego"
 - 138 "Hasta luego"
 - 139 "Hasta luego"
 - 140 "Hasta luego"
 - 141 "Hasta luego"
 - 142 "Hasta luego"
 - 143 "Hasta luego"
 - 144 "Hasta luego"
 - 145 "Hasta luego"
 - 146 "Hasta luego"
 - 147 "Hasta luego"
 - 148 "Hasta luego"
 - 149 "Hasta luego"
 - 150 "Hasta luego"
 - 151 "Hasta luego"
 - 152 "Hasta luego"
 - 153 "Hasta luego"
 - 154 "Hasta luego"
 - 155 "Hasta luego"
 - 156 "Hasta luego"
 - 157 "Hasta luego"
 - 158 "Hasta luego"
 - 159 "Hasta luego"
 - 160 "Hasta luego"
 - 161 "Hasta luego"
 - 162 "Hasta luego"
 - 163 "Hasta luego"
 - 164 "Hasta luego"
 - 165 "Hasta luego"
 - 166 "Hasta luego"
 - 167 "Hasta luego"
 - 168 "Hasta luego"
 - 169 "Hasta luego"
 - 170 "Hasta luego"
 - 171 "Hasta luego"
 - 172 "Hasta luego"
 - 173 "Hasta luego"
 - 174 "Hasta luego"
 - 175 "Hasta luego"
 - 176 "Hasta luego"
 - 177 "Hasta luego"
 - 178 "Hasta luego"
 - 179 "Hasta luego"
 - 180 "Hasta luego"
 - 181 "Hasta luego"
 - 182 "Hasta luego"
 - 183 "Hasta luego"
 - 184 "Hasta luego"
 - 185 "Hasta luego"
 - 186 "Hasta luego"
 - 187 "Hasta luego"
 - 188 "Hasta luego"
 - 189 "Hasta luego"
 - 190 "Hasta luego"
 - 191 "Hasta luego"
 - 192 "Hasta luego"
 - 193 "Hasta luego"
 - 194 "Hasta luego"
 - 195 "Hasta luego"
 - 196 "Hasta luego"
 - 197 "Hasta luego"
 - 198 "Hasta luego"
 - 199 "Hasta luego"
 - 200 "Hasta luego"

SOLUTION ON PAGE 5

Track team runs away with Little Three in rout

by Steve Brody

Going into Saturday's Williams Invitational indoor track meet and Little Three Championship, the Eph squad had cause for optimism but were prepared for tough battles. Unexpected, however, was the immense talent gap between them and the schools they faced. In a display of sheer dominance, both the men's and women's squads came away with an invitational win and a Little Three Championship. The women's score of 91 points was higher than the combined score of their Amherst (32), Wesleyan (19), and Trinity (19) competition. The men ran up a total of 105 points to Amherst's 55 and Wesleyan's 41. Trinity had 31 and Norwich 28.

The Eph performances backed up Nadelman's assertion that Williams was number one.

McGinn starts rout

The men's team led from the start, as Joe McGinn '89 won the 35-lb. weight throw with a monstrous toss of 52'5". The throw is the best ever for McGinn, and establishes him as a serious challenger to MIT's Scott Deering at next week's New England Championships.

Dave Nadelman '89 set the tone for the meet in the 1500 meters. Nadelman let Wesleyan's Peter Knight take the race lead, sitting contentedly in second place. With 150 meters to go, Nadelman moved to the second lane and blew by the slower Knight, cruising to the finish in 4:11.46. Nadelman raised his arm as he crossed the finish line, pointing skyward with his index finger raised. Fortunately for Nadelman, the Eph performances during the rest of the day backed up his assertion that Williams was number one.

In winning the 1000 meters, Nadelman joined Larry Smith '92 and Geoff Igharo '90 as a two-event winner. In the 400 meters, Smith, who ran the 55 meters for most of the indoor season, demonstrated his Aoulia-like range with a win in 51.75 seconds. Teammate Carey Simon '90 was second. Smith also captured the 200 meters, holding off stiff challenges from Trinity and Amherst competition. Igharo excelled in the field house sand pit, winning the long jump and triple jump, and placed third in the 55 meters.

Other Ephs who posted victories were Brad Behr '92, with a high jump of 5' 10", and Brian Coan '92, who led Williams to four of the top five places in the 3000 meters. Gil McCabe '89 was second.

Women dominate again

For the Eph women's team, which has been beaten only by Tufts this season, the competition was less than challenging. That fact did not keep the Williams athletes from some impressive individual performances. In field event competition, Shelley Torgerson '92 scored in three events. After winning the 20-lb. weight throw ahead of second place Lella Jere '91, Torgerson took second in the shot put and placed second to Dawn Macauley '89 in the high jump.

Perhaps the biggest surprise of the day came in the 55-meter hurdles. Sophomore Kira Shields emerged from Macauley's shadow as a lean at the finish gave her a win against her three time All-American teammate. Shields time was 9.19 seconds to Macauley's 9.21. Shields also ran the 55-meter dash where she placed third. Shortly after the hurdles, Macauley returned to the track for a win in the 400 meters, complementing her high jump win.

Marcus

Neck and neck

Kira Shields '91 (left) and Dawn Macauley '89 go down to the wire in the 55-meter hurdles at the Williams Track Invitational on Saturday. Shields edged Macauley by 2/100th of a second for the victory.

Christie Dempsey '89 continued to run well, capturing the 600 meters ahead of her teammate Katie Queeney '92. The other event winner for the Ephs was Anne Platt '91, who easily outran opponents in the 800 and 3000 meters. Williams also looked strong in the 1500 meters, as three freshmen, Susan Donna, Gwen Nagy, and Cindy Mundy, took places two through four.

Big meets in near future
The men's team now gears up for the Division III New England Championships at Coast Guard on Saturday. Several Ephs will be contending for victories at the meet, which is expected to be dominated by MIT. The women's team is running this evening at Union, and will be at Smith on Saturday.

Isackson

No tin on this shot

Williams squash player Bruce Hopper '92 returns a shot during the Ephs 6-3 win over Trinity.

Men's squash team looks toward NCAA's after four victory week

by Lewis Fisher

Down 14-8 in the fifth and final game against the Trinity Bantams last Wednesday in Lasell, things looked bleak for Kaveh Khooshroahahi and his squash teammates.

"I saw that no fans left my match at 14-8 and since no one quit on me, I wouldn't quit on them," he said. With renewed determination, Khooshroahahi threw himself all over the court, diving three times in one point at 14-13, to win the match and orchestrate a comeback.

Khooshroahahi's determination exemplified the match and the week for the Eph squash men as they Trinity 6-3, humiliated Amherst 14-0 and rolled past Army and Stonybrook both 9-0 to improve their record to 13-6. The racketeers are now poised to take their 15th straight Little Three title this weekend against Wesleyan and enter the intercollegiate tournament at Yale ranked seventh or eighth nationally.

Even Sunday was no day of rest for the Ephs, as they faced SUNY/Stonybrook and the United States Army of West Point in Lasell. While neither team proved to be a match for the Purple Crew, who didn't lose a match, it was an interesting day for Coach Assalante, who had coached Army for eleven years before joining Williams.

"It's great being around such solid kids, and although it's sad to see the program

Assalante reminded Hopper about the global ramifications of losing to Amherst.

Isn't what it once was, they'll be back," he said of Army.

Williams Crushes Amherst...Again
Taking the first step toward its record 15th straight Little Three title, the racketeers proved their total superiority over Amherst by smashing the traitors

14-0. Only one player, Bruce Hopper, was even pushed to five games. Hopper, who is still a freshman and therefore may not have realized the significance of the Williams-Amherst rivalry, fell down 2-0 before coach Assalante reminded him about the global ramifications of losing to Amherst. Hopper understood the message and decisively took the next three games.

In another display of courage and spirit Don Mackinnon '90 was controlling his match at the twelve slot when his opponent broke his racket on Don's chin with a big follow through. Rather than stop the match and give Amherst the forfeit, however, Mackinnon played on, wiping the blood off his chin as he went. Mackinnon won the match 15-0, 15-3, 15-5 and then proceeded to get his chin stitched up. "It's a good thing he won in three -- he would have bled to death if it went longer," said Assalante.

Ephs upset Trinity
Although the squad from Trinity was extremely talented, with many junior continued on page 11

5-4 Victory over Wesleyan

Hockey captures Little 3

by Kerr Houston

After taking a shot to the nose on Monday night, the men's hockey team hardly flinched. Rather, they rebounded from their 3-1 defeat at the hands of a talented Babson squad to down North Adams State College 5-2, and followed that with a solid 5-4 victory at Wesleyan, in the process capturing their second consecutive Little Three title and raising their season mark to 9-11.

The week began with few surprises, as Babson skated onto the ice at Lansing-Chapman rink sporting a 16-5 record and a reputation as one of the premier small college units in the Northeast. Williams, however, refused to concede the contest without a struggle, as the Ephs overcame a Sean Finnegan goal 1:15 into the game to forge a tie on senior Chris Donato's rising blast from the blue line at 9:58 of the opening stanza.

Babson snapped the deadlock at 6:57 of the second frame, when Mark Allen scored a power play goal, ending an impressive advantage in which the Babson players sent sharp passes around the perimeter and through the Eph zone, rocketing several slapshots on a stalwart Eph netminder Sean Ford '90.

The Beavers added an ugly insurance goal at 5:54, when Todd Johnson, skating away from the Williams net, picked up a loose biscuit, and spun completely around, firing the puck off the right post past Ford to provide the final 3-1 margin.

Route 2 Rivalry

With their record having thus sagged to 7-11 and any chances of a playoff spot rapidly growing dimmer, the Ephs had several reasons to hang their heads as they climbed into the bus for the short trip to North Adams on Thursday evening. However, the team responded with an important 5-2 victory. The Ephs jumped out to a 3-0 first-period lead over the Mohawks, who, with a modest continued on page 11

When the Dust Settles

Super sophomores bolster team

by Asif Jilil

"Ball! Ball!"
Anyone who has been to a women's basketball game has heard these words resonate through Chandler gym -- they're the sounds of the Williams College Ephwomen playing defense. This is but one example of how the players from the class of 1991 have transformed the basketball program.

Just three years ago, the Ephs suffered through a terrible season. They have improved steadily since then, earning an invitation to the NIACs last year. This year, Williams is poised to win a post-season tournament.

In the past, Williams was carried by star captains Missey Crouchley '89 and Nancy Hedeman '89. However, the depth provided by the class of '91 has brought the Ephs closer to being a complete team.

The sophomores boast two starters and two substitutes among their five players.

The sophomores are led by Christy Cadigan, who is responsible for getting the Ephs to communicate while playing defense. Although she is possibly the best defensive player on the squad, Cadigan is better known for her offensive skills. She is the second-leading scorer on the team, sporting an 18.1 points per game average, and leads the team in shooting percentage and steals. Cadigan is also second in assists. Using her incredible quickness, Cadigan routinely gets transition baskets off long rebounds and turnovers.

Success is nothing new for the 5' 9" guard from Milton, Massachusetts. Cadigan became the first player to score 1,000 career points at Noble and Greenough School, beating fellow Eph Garcia Major, also of Noble and Greenough, to that milestone. She was selected to the Boston Globe All-Scholastic Team in her sophomore and junior years and was named the Independent School League's Most Valuable Player in her junior year. An ankle injury in her senior year prevented her from garnering further honors, though she was still able to lead Noble and Greenough to the New England Championship, pacing the team with a 25 ppg average.

Her play caught the eyes of recruiters early in her career. Cadigan was contacted by Coach Nancy Roberts in her junior year and was also recruited by several Division I schools. She chose Williams because of its academic reputation as well as its small size.

Cadigan has been an immediate star here. Last year's highlights include a 27-point performance at Amherst and a last-second basket to force overtime in a

I want to win for the seniors who've been here when the team wasn't as good."

Joining Cadigan in the starting lineup is Becca Borden. Before coming to Williams, Borden and Cadigan were rivals, playing on different teams at a women's basketball camp at Harvard for three summers. In addition, Borden played at rival Buckingham Browne & Nichols School in Cambridge. The two teams always competed for the ISL championship. Unfortunately for Borden, Nobles won the league each year. She did beat out Cadigan for the league Most Valuable Player award her senior year. Borden was also selected to the Boston Globe All-Scholastic Team in her junior year.

These honors are a tribute to Borden's outstanding defensive skills and attitude. Not a gifted scorer, Borden averaged only 14 ppg in her MVP season. She was an incredible all-around athlete, playing on championship lacrosse and soccer teams as well as on the crew team. For her efforts, Borden was named the best female athlete at her high school.

The 5' 10" forward considered some Division II offers before deciding to attend Williams. Her primary interest was in the strength of the art department here; she knew nothing about the basketball program.

At Williams, Borden has rowed crew and was the starting goalie on the soccer team this season. However, her main focus is basketball.

Borden was a top reserve last year and was looking forward to making a significant contribution this year as a starter. She got off to a good start, leading the team with 16 points in the opening game of the season. Even though a series of injuries has slowed her progress, Borden has been a defensive leader.

continued on page 9

"I don't like seeing someone else with the ball," says defense player Becca Borden '91.

victory over Wesleyan. Although she never started, she scored 14 ppg. This year, Cadigan carried the Ephs over the Jeffs with 25 points.

"I don't want us to miss this opportunity. We have the talent to win this year.

THE RECORD

INSIDER

VOL. 1, NO. 3

February 14, 1989

ATHLETICS: PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE

THE RECORD INSIDER

Volume 1, Number 3

CONTENTS ARTICLES

Section 1: National Issues at Williams

- 4/ A 4.0 or a perfect ten? The relationship of academics and athletics
- 6/ Athletes and coaches speak out on women's athletics, the progress made and the ground left to cover
- 7/ How the recruitment and admissions processes work at a Division III school
- 7/ The financing of athletics at Williams

Section 2: History of Eph athletics

- 10/ Friendly rivals? Amherst and Williams sweat it out on the athletic field and on the sidelines.
- 11/ Medals, the Hall of Fame, and bowl bids -- those were the days.

Section 3: Life as a Williams athlete

- 12/ Athletes and non-athletes discuss stereotypes on campus and whether or not they are valid.
- 12/ Looking for answers: organizations examine the world of the athlete
- 13/ Is an emphasis on being physically active always healthy?
- 14/ The integration of athletes into the Williams community
- 14/ Days in the life of a varsity swimmer

CENTERFOLD

8-9/ Ephs lead students at other liberal arts colleges in athletic participation, yet still blame sports teams for fostering campus stereotypes about athletes. A majority believe that women's athletics are not treated equally by the Department of Athletics.

OPINION

- 5/ The world beyond textbooks: a defense of athletics
- 5/ How women's athletics still aren't treated equally at Williams

INTERVIEWS

- 3/ Director of Athletics Robert Peck discusses the place of athletics at Williams and the treatment of women's sports by his department.
- 15/ Renzie Lamb shares a coach's perspective on his athletes

Copyright Insider, The Williams Record. No part may be reproduced in whole or in part without the express consent of the editors. All rights reserved. The Insider is published by The Williams Record, Baxter Hall, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267, the second issue of each month.
Editorial: (413) 597-2400
Business: (413) 597-2289

Wrestling with the issues

The February issue of the Insider examines athletics at Williams. This topic has been at the forefront of campus discussion of late, having received attention from the College Council, the Committee on Undergraduate Life, and the Board of Trustees.

The place of athletics at a liberal arts institution like Williams has generated controversy among professors, students and administrators. The Insider's first section, "National Issues at Williams," looks at the issues of recruiting, financing and the time commitment required of the scholar athletes abounding at Williams.

The subtopic which has attracted the most attention is the treatment of women's athletics. Director of Athletics Robert Peck defends his department's policies towards the women's program in an Insider interview. Coaches and athletes speak out on the uneven treatment they feel different teams receive.

The second section, "History of Eph athletics," takes a look back to the days of the first intercollegiate baseball game and the beginnings of the Williams-Amherst rivalry.

The final section, "Life as a Williams athlete," examines the situation of the athlete in the Williams community. The section leads off with student opinions on campus stereotypes about athletes and how well athletes are integrated into the social community. Williams' description as a school where "sports are more a religion than an extracurricular activity" is not without some justification, judging from the Insider student poll in the centerfold.

The Insider welcomes reactions and comments. Letters will be published in the regular edition of the Record, according to the stated Op-Ed letters policy.

If you are interested in writing, photography, graphics or layout for the Insider, contact Ann Mantil, S.U. Box 1824, x2967.

Cover photos: top, file photo; bottom, Tague.

ANN MANTIL, Editor
LISA KAESTNER, Productions
BILL SAVADOVE, Insider Assistant

ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW, DAN SKWIRE,
ROBERT WEISBERG, Assistant Editors
BRIENNE COLBY, STEVEN SCOVILLE, Graphics
BRIENNE COLBY, KAREN DUGGAN, JENNIFER
MARIGLIANO, Productions Assistants

Executive consulting by THE EDITOR EMERITUS

Director of Athletics

Peck defends treatment of women's athletics

Record interview by Todd Owens

RECORD: How do you perceive the relationship between athletics and academics at Williams? Have there been any conflicts? If so, how have you dealt with them?

PECK: Basically, I think there are very good relations between the academic departments and the department that deals with sports teams. There obviously are competing time interests, and you can call them conflicts, that are resolved in a number of ways. Most, I think, are resolved between students and professors -- the coaches and certainly I would know nothing about it unless it's a more critical issue. A very common way we deal with actual conflicts, and most of these have to do with missing classes for contests, is that I would get a call directly from the professor, and this happens mostly with people who I have an ongoing relationship with and who feel comfortable calling me. If a professor doesn't feel comfortable and wants to do it more in an official line, they would call the deans' office and one of the deans would call me and then we would work out the problem. Obviously the academic demands take first place, and we can resolve most of this.

RECORD: But you do nevertheless think that there is an important place for athletics at Williams.

PECK: Obviously, a very important place. I think that students give a great deal of their time and they want to excel. I think we have a student body of high achievers and sometimes overachievers, and I think our students in sports are exactly the same way; they work very hard at their sports. I think they get back quite a good reward, not in terms of material club team, has to practice from 6:00 to 9:00 PM. Because of the practice schedule, they don't get to eat dinner in the dining hall -- could you address this problem specifically?

PECK: We have a hierarchy of facility times. Varsity teams get the first priority, JV teams get next slot and club teams get last facility times. Practicing at night, especially before Chandler Gymnasium was built, was a very common practice. For 16 years I coached the

there is a serious resistance when we have a soccer game and I have to make sure that people don't stand in front of the stands. So it remains to be seen. But I think that buying some portable stands which we can move from field to field is a good idea. We will get some stands, whether from this request or in the future, but we will get some eventually.

RECORD: Do you feel, as director of athletics, that you have an obligation to address differences between men's and women's athletics -- whether those differences are real or perceived?

PECK: Absolutely. It shocked me a couple of years ago that there was a perception that there is a difference [between the way men's and women's sports are treated by the athletic department]. I was the person who started and administered the women's programs. I think we've got a very strong women's program as well as a strong men's program. And I think if you talk to other people at other schools that play against us, they will tell you that Williams has a very strong organization

JV men's basketball team. We practiced at night. That meant our kids ate at 4:00 -- we could give them a [dining hall] meal at 4:00. Nobody missed the meal.

When we have only one facility that can be used, we do have priority about who is going to get what times. I think that principle is well established.

RECORD: The women's field hockey team feels that their field should have bleachers for spectators. How do you feel about this?

PECK: This is an issue that has just come up in the last year. It is on an equipment list that has already been submitted. I'm not saying that we're going to get it, but I'm saying that it is on the list of capital equipment and has been submitted to the provost.

RECORD: Do you think the bleachers are necessary for the field hockey team?

PECK: Well, if the women's field hockey people think so, then we're going to take it seriously. I will be interested to see how many people really sit in a bleacher area. I know that just in the gym but in the fitness center -- for the general student body.

The team, through the coach, was told that if they have drills that they want to do at the beginning of practice or at some time during practice, use both courts. But when they are through using both courts, they need to pull the curtain and let the rest of [the gym space] go to recreation. That is a clearly articulated policy, though I expect that some people would prefer to have the whole area privately to themselves. When we coach with one basketball team in Chandler, almost always the other side is open for recreation. Both the men's and the women's [basketball] coaches have used one side and the other side is used for recreational purposes. When men's and women's basketball practice together, they disrupt each other. There are whistles blowing, people yelling and calling -- on on both sides of the curtain.

RECORD: The women's basketball team wanted to play Amherst at 6:00 PM Saturday night, immediately before the varsity men. However, they were forced to play at 2:00 Saturday afternoon, when they felt that there would be fewer fans. Why?

PECK: When we set up schedules originally, we were going to have one of the [men's or women's] varsity basketball teams away and one at home. Williams broke that schedule because of Winter Carnival.

On the issue of playing the women's varsity basketball team before the men's game. I have talked with my feminist friends; my own gut reaction says that women are not going to play the warm-up game to the men. Some women on the team have said they would not mind doing that. But I think that it is bad symbolism. I do not think that women should be playing the warm-up game for the men. Obviously, the men do not want to play the warm-up game for the women. That is the place of the JV team.

RECORD: Do you think that their will ever be a time when the men's and women's basketball teams will in fact change time slots?

PECK: Yes. There could be. But they may wind up trading between Friday and Saturday nights.

RECORD: A lot of women feel that you are out of touch with the individuals on women's varsity teams. How do you perceive your relationship with individuals on different teams?

'I do not think that women should be playing the warm-up game to men.'

in terms of schedules, facilities and coaching.

RECORD: Why was the women's varsity volleyball team forced to share space with open gym basketball players?

PECK: It may very well be an inconvenience for them. There are two main courts there. I am the advocate of the student who is not an athlete. We have plenty of advocates within our department -- twenty of them. But I want to provide some space in lots of areas -- not PECK: Well, I am administering 49 different teams, a physical education program, an intramural program and a recreation program. I see more games than anyone at Williams College. My close contact with students is somewhat limited. But I know members of all teams and in a few instances I know people quite well. I am not out of touch. I talk to my coaches virtually every day. But, there is an awfully large program here. I know a lot of students and spend a lot of time watching them compete.

National issues at Williams

All work and no play... Where is the balance?

by Helen Matthews

The scholar athlete. This hackneyed phrase describes the student who nimbly waltzes the balance beam between academics and athletics. But does a 10.0 performance on the playing field allow time for a 4.0 in the classroom?

The coaches don't understand the educational damage that can result from telling players they're here to play football.'

Some professors, citing the large number of students who participate in athletics, have expressed concern over the nature of students' athletic involvement and its relationship to their commitment to academics.

"The coaches don't understand the potential long-term educational damage that can result from telling players they're here to play football," Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright said. "The coaches keep articulating that idea. They believe that."

Professor of Political Science Kurt Tauber said that he believes athletics are an essential and necessary part of a young person's life, but he added that he does not think competitive sports are appropriate in the college environment.

Tauber's primary objection to competitive sports is that they are too time-consuming for athletes. "When I look at what overloads them the most, it's competitive sports," Tauber added that sports at Williams were "unhealthily competitive."

Athletics often infringe upon the portion of the day set aside for academics by the administration. When this occurs, it distresses professors as well as the students who are torn by the conflicting schedules of classes and sports, according to Tauber.

"Professors sometimes don't allow their student athletes to miss class," Mark Duff '89, a member of the football team, said. "In ordinary cases like practice, that is perfectly understandable, but in unusual cases where the student has a rare opportunity, I feel that the student should be allowed to pursue his or her athletic interests."

Even more seriously, some people have suggested that athletics not only conflict with class schedules but take away an excessive amount of study time, placing an unfair academic burden on student athletes. Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards said that individual athletes must find the best way to budget their time.

'You're forced to study in a briefer period of time, concentrating more intensively...'

"I think you have to strike a balance. It depends very much on the individual student. I think students have to realize and be clear that academics must receive top priority."

Caron Whitaker '91, a former swimmer, said that athletics had helped her learn to organize her time better. "When I don't have something like swimming or when I'm not exercising everyday, I'm constantly procrastinating because I think I have a lot of time and I'm too restless to sit down and study for any length of time."

Rich Williams '90, a varsity football player, checks out Steven Ambrose's contribution to political science in Sawyer Library. (Isackson)

Duff expressed a similar view. "You're forced to study in a briefer period of time concentrating more intensively than if you had excessive amounts of time."

Professor of Political Science George Marcus said that he did not agree with those faculty members who thought academics conflicted with athletics. He said their views on the matter may result from their individual backgrounds.

"The tendency among the faculty to see [academics and athletics] as oppositional is a gross simplification and in my experience largely wrong. I see that as a kind of prejudice -- an unexamined presumption not based on fact."

The Committee on Undergraduate Life formed a subcommittee on athletics in response to faculty members who had concerns similar to Tauber's. The committee interviewed a group composed of 24 student athletes, last year's Junior Advisers and 20 students selected at random as part of its investigation of the nature of students' commitment to athletics and their reasons for dedicating a substantial part of their lives to competitive sports.

Wright, the committee co-chair, said the committee found students overwhelmingly felt that participation in competitive athletics complements and furthers their pursuit of an intensive intellectual life.

She said that athletes surveyed by the committee cited numerous benefits of rigorous athletic training, like the promotion of cross-class bonding, mental discipline and a means of release from everyday stress.

"In the best of all possible worlds there is a cooperation between coaches, the athletic department and faculty and administration," Edwards said.

Wright said that the Athletics Subcommittee is seeking to help the college work towards that goal by recommending measures to educate the faculty and the students about the nature of athletes' dedication to their sport and academics.

OPINION

Athletics are perfect complement to academics

by Todd Owens '90

Williams prides itself on providing students with a well-rounded liberal arts education. It encourages, even requires, students to take classes in a variety of different fields. It makes it very easy to study abroad. All in the name of liberal arts.

At the same time, Williams recognizes that students can learn outside the classroom. President of the College Francis Oakley said "that education is not a process that can wholly be confined to classroom, laboratory, studio or library." Yet, despite this commitment to extracurricular experience, many professors, students and administrators believe that competitive athletics has no place at Williams.

They are wrong.

It is true that an athlete spends a lot of time in the gym or on the field which could, perhaps, have been spent with the books. But that time is not misspent. On the contrary, athletics is the natural and logical complement to academics. Rather than hindering the pursuit of the liberal arts ideal, athletic competition is an intrinsic element of that educational goal.

Many people have supported competitive athletics on the grounds that it forces people to carefully schedule their time for studying. An athlete is less likely to postpone study forever because he knows his time is limited.

Another argument is that training and competition relieve the stress of academics, leaving a "refreshed" student more capable of studying.

These points are well taken. However, the benefit derived from athletics goes much deeper than that.

Athletic endeavor can fill that gap. On a daily basis it is the lot of the athlete to confront -- and to deal with -- the real world. The athlete is a goal-setter, a worker, a realist. He struggles constantly to improve himself, spends hours in the gym in pursuit of more skill, speed or strength. Every practice he confronts the limits of his own ability and books and lectures -- more, because he is learning about himself. He is exploring and experiencing life, the antithesis and the complement of studying it. It is in the heat of competition and the introspection of training that the true student develops -- learns -- those values and beliefs which will do much more to shape his life than any textbook.

A true liberal arts education cannot be confined to a list of facts, a way of thinking or a technique for solving problems. On the contrary, a liberal arts education is no less than the sum of our experience. It is personal development, discovery. Philosophy does no one any good unless it is firmly rooted in one's own experience.

Athletics offers the opportunities to expand and balance knowledge of the classroom with knowledge of the self and the world around us. It is a perfect compliment to books and professors.

Theodore Roosevelt said, "Far better is it to dare mighty things, to win glorious triumphs, even though checked by failure, than to take rank with those poor spirits who neither enjoy much nor suffer much because they live in the grey twilight that knows neither victory nor defeat." He had it right. Only by confronting and struggling in the real world can an individual truly learn. Such learning cannot be gleaned from classrooms, textbooks and professors. Not alone, anyway.

It is in the heat of competition and the introspection of training that the true student learns those values and beliefs which will shape his life more than any textbook.

Too often, in the narrow corridors of academia, professors and students lose track of the real world. By intensive study, we run the risk of becoming too theoretical, too philosophical. Ironically, intense study of the world serves to distance us from it. Academia can become mired in impractical idealism, distanced from the real world -- and what it takes to truly make an impact in that world.

seeks to push that limit a little farther.

And he learns. In the daily grind of training no less than in the heat of competition, he learns what it means to struggle, to confront adversity, to persevere. He learns what it takes to succeed and what it means to fail.

On some very basic level, the athlete gains more than can ever be gleaned from text-

Women's athletics

by Mariam Naficy

Since its introduction to the Williams campus 18 years ago, the women's athletics program has greatly expanded and improved. Last fall, every women's sport went to the finals of their post-season tournament. Director of Athletics Robert Peck praised the integration of women's sports into the Williams community: "I think we have addressed all of the problems [dealing with women's sports]." The fact is, unfortunately, that problems with Williams women's athletics remain.

The biggest problem that athletes point to is the Williams community's attitude toward women's sports. Women's games at Williams are often much less attended than men's, a difference that can't easily be explained away by the excuse that people find men's games more fun to watch. Many fans who attend the annual men's basketball game against Amherst and don't attend the women's game have never seen the Ephratt women play before -- their choice is based on a general perception that the men's team is more fun to watch, not their own first-hand observation.

The community, then, views men's and women's sports differently; this perception is linked to the way men's and women's sports are viewed by the Williams athletics department. Over 60 percent of the students polled by the Record last week felt that men's and women's athletics receive unequal treatment by the department of athletics. The Williams community is indeed aware of a difference in the way women's and men's athletics are viewed by the department and, like it or not, is influenced by this difference.

This does not mean that the department has the responsibility to make people respect women's sports and attend their games. It does mean, however, that the department is responsible for a clear position of its own on women's athletics and that it should be aware of the effects of that position on community attitudes. For example, it has the responsibility to make women's games as accessible to fans as men's games.

This season, the women's basketball team asked Peck if its Amherst game could be scheduled at 6:00 p.m. (when the men's junior varsity team usually plays) instead of its regular 2:00 p.m. slot. In giving the 6:00 p.m. slot to the J.V. men's team and keeping the women at 2:00 p.m., the department made the women's game less accessible than the men's game to fans. People on the whole find afternoon games less convenient to attend. The department, probably unwittingly, sent a message that fewer fans are (or should be) interested in attending a women's varsity game than a J.V. men's game.

Peck's reason for scheduling the women at this time is that he didn't want the women to

continued on page 6

Equality must extend to attitudes

Students say women's teams are treated unevenly

by Mary Moulé

Ever since Williams admitted women to its freshman class for the first time in 1971, women's athletics have had a lot of catching up to do. The crowds at women's events tend to be small, and many women have complained that they meet with discrimination in the scheduling of practices and games.

Senior athletes point out, however, that the athletics program has become more equitable since their freshman year.

"I'm impressed with the way the women's sports program has improved -- there used to be a big difference [between men's and women's sports]," said Allison Buckner '89, captain of the squash team.

Nancy Hedeman '89, co-captain of the basketball and volleyball teams, said, "Things have changed since my freshman year. To see that has changed my outlook on the problem."

The lack of interest in women's athletics may be a result of differences in physical abilities between men and women, according to Hedeman.

"Women's athletics aren't as much fun to watch. We aren't as capable of performing up to that level because of the physical differences. The men can jump higher, run faster, and their reactions are faster."

"I think that the skill level [of women's teams] is good, but it isn't on the same level as men's. It's a national problem," basketball co-captain Melissa Crouchley '89 said.

Some athletes attribute this attitude to a deeper problem with the way women athletes are viewed by society. "The women respect men and women equally, but as a group, [women athletes] aren't as respected as much," said Laura Woods, '89, captain of the crew team. "There's an attitude that the men have that 'I just can't take women athletes seriously.'"

She added that the outstanding athletes get respect for their achievements, but those who are average don't get any recognition for their efforts. "It seems like you have to be really accomplishing something to be really respected as an athlete."

"Competition is acceptable among men, while for women there's a general feeling that aggression and competition aren't feminine. And our team does have trouble with competition. It's a really tense time when we compete against each other for spots in a boat."

Although budgets are similar for similar men's and women's sports, some women's teams feel that they are discriminated against

file photo

in other ways.

The most common complaints about inequality of treatment involve problems with time schedules and practice areas. For example, the women's varsity basketball team was upset over Winter Study about the time slot they were given for the game against Amherst.

According to Crouchley, the team wanted to

Some players feel that Peck may be unaware of the community interest that would warrant giving the women a better time slot. "The Hoop Group," a community organization that supports athletics at the college, asked us why we got the bad slot," Crouchley said.

"One of the reasons it's such an issue is that the women's program has turned around so much," Hedeman said. "We only won four games my freshman year, and we only lost five last year."

Many women's teams said they feel that they are given equality in the use of equipment and playing areas. Crouchley said that the division of the gym for basketball practice is fair, and Gail Ramsay, coach of the women's squash and tennis teams, said that courts are distributed evenly between the men's and women's teams.

Many women's teams both practice and travel to competitions with the men. Athletes involved in track, swim team and ski team share coaches with men's teams and say that they feel they are treated the same.

Not all women feel there is an equitable division of practice space, however. The varsity volleyball team has complained that they do not receive adequate space in the Chandler Athletic Center.

"We were told that we only needed half of the floor and had to leave one side free for recreational use," Hedeman said. "Before this year, we used Lasell and there was no recreational basketball from 4:00 to 6:00." She maintained that the old gym should be enough for recreational use.

Ramsay said that she was upset that the tennis team lost the use of the indoor courts in the hockey rink at the end of their season when the ice was put down. She said that Peck was understanding when she talked to him about it, and that a better solution than paying for the use of the courts at Brodie might be found in the future.

Despite these complaints, participants from many other women's teams say that they have few problems getting the equipment and space that they need. "I think that they really try to be pretty fair," Ramsay said. "You have to understand [Peck's] position. He gets pulled by all of the coaches and the administration."

Overall, many female athletes believe that athletics are a positive part of life at Williams. "The people are supportive, and teams involved in different sports support each other," Crouchley said.

Department should consider messages it sends

continued from page 5

be a "warm-up" team for the men. According to co-captain Nancy Hedeman '89, however, the women's basketball team made it clear to Peck that it preferred the 6:00 p.m. slot to the 2:00 p.m. slot; they obviously didn't feel, then, that they would be a "warm-up" team if they played at 6:00.

This suggests something disturbing: either Peck is out of touch with how the Williams community feels about afternoon slots (most consider an afternoon basketball slot inferior to an evening basketball slot), or he doesn't believe the athletes want what they say they want.

The women's basketball incident is not the only example of discrepancies between what 6/The Insider February 14, 1989 the department of athletics wants to do in terms of women's sports and what it actually does. Many athletes interviewed for this editorial complained that the athletic department is out of touch with women athletes; they specifically mentioned Peck because he is the representative of the department.

Peck claims that he is truly in touch with all Williams athletes and their problems: "I see more games than anybody at Williams College. I match my game-viewing schedule up against anybody....I know students on virtually all teams."

But women's ice hockey co-captain Kerstin Neuse '89 counters that Peck has yet to be sighted at a hockey practice or game and has not spoken to the team's players outside coach evaluation meetings this season.

Granted, women's hockey is a club sport and may not be Peck's personal favorite sport to watch; but it is also a club sport that strongly wants to become a varsity sport, according to Coach James Briggs, and thus needs the athletic department's legitimizing support and attention. Peck, as director of the department of athletics, must realize that his presence at games communicates a message of departmental support.

The point is that if the Williams department of athletics truly wants to put men's and women's sports on an equal footing, it must do so in spirit as well as in policy. The department spends equitable amounts of money and the like on women's and men's sports, but it should carefully consider how its less bureaucratic decisions influence the Williams community's attitudes toward women's athletics. Why not schedule women's basketball games on Friday nights, for example, making the team a major attraction in its own right?

The athletic department has the responsibility, as the representative of the College's athletic policies, to send a clear message to the Williams community of where it stands on the issue of women's sports. If it doesn't, it could only be encouraging the persistence of negative attitudes. Women's sports are only superficially equal if they aren't perceived equally by the Williams community.

Coaches have little weight in admissions process

by Ellen Drought

The Big Collegiate Sports Scandal, which is what happens when colleges and universities admit unqualified athletes (and get caught), makes national news all the time. One has to wonder just how far coaches will go to get a future Heisman trophy winner on their team, and how far admissions offices will let them go.

And what about a Division III, liberal arts, our-first-commitment-is-education school like Williams? Do athletes have an edge in the admissions process?

Not here, say admissions officers and coaches, who cite Williams' high admissions standards and claim that athletic ability is considered in the same category as any other special talent.

Coach Richard Farley of the football department, for example, denied any real influence in the admissions process: "We wouldn't be as bad as we've been over the years if coaches dictated anything in terms of admissions."

Nancy Roberts, coach of the women's basketball and volleyball teams, agreed. "It's definitely not 'if the kid's an athlete, the kid's in.'"

According to several coaches, the extent of their role in the admissions process is primarily to provide the admissions office with a list of names of athletes they're interested in. This works in the other direction as well; the coaches all have liaisons in the admissions office who put them in contact with students who have expressed an interest in a certain sport.

"Very often the names come from admissions," Harry Sheehy, men's varsity basketball coach, said. "It's reactive recruiting."

Director of Admissions Philip Smith said that the admissions office meets with the coaches every September to go over their standards. "We go over the ground rules with them. I don't want anybody [in the extracurricular areas] to encourage students who are inappropriate."

Assistant Director of Admissions Frances Lapidus emphasized, "To bring someone here who's not going to make it academically would be a tremendous disservice."

"If you have two, three or four youngsters who academically look very similar, we can help pick out one who can offer some talents athletically," Farley said. "They do the same thing in the art and music departments; it's not strictly an athletic situation."

"We would like the coaches to give us a sense of who the exceptional athletes are," Smith said. "We consider a number of areas

'It's as difficult a recruiting situation as you will find in the country.'

for exceptional talent -- athletics is one area; music is another."

Decisions on students whose names coaches have submitted to admission rarely go the coaches' way, according to Roberts. "Ninety-nine percent of the names you submit never get in."

She also said, however, that admissions standards haven't caused a real problem for the women's teams. "Women's sports have been very successful without a lot of favoritism by the admissions office. We have so many good female athletes applying anyway."

"To a large degree Williams sells itself. Because Williams is Williams, we're going to be competitive," Sheehy said. "Good people want to come here. If it wasn't such a good school we'd have some problems."

"I think what you get normally when you get very bright people are people who are vehement to achieve, who like to participate," Smith said. He pointed to the growth of non-coached sports, such as ultimate frisbee, keg soccer and broomball.

In addition to low admissions pull, the level of recruitment at Williams is much smaller than at public or Ivy League schools. "Recruitment here is not with a capital R; it's with a small r and I prefer it that way," Sheehy said.

Williams belongs to both the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) and to the New England Small College Athletic Conference (NESCAC). The latter, according to the coaches, greatly limits the coaches' ability to recruit.

"NESCAC makes the NCAA look like a joke in terms of restrictions," Sheehy said.

NESCAC coaches are not allowed to make home visits to athletes or offer paid visits to students considering the school.

"All of our recruiting is by letter and then phone call and encouragement to visit the campus," Director of Athletics Robert Peck said. "It's a very wholesome kind of recruiting, and it's done all from the campus."

"It puts us at a disadvantage," Farley said. "We're going for the Ivy League student athlete and the advantage is all to them....There are few kids, at least in football, who make a choice here over the Ivies or Stanford. We play second fiddle. It's as difficult a recruiting situation as you'll find in the country."

Williams competes on the Division I level in men's and women's skiing, but must still conform to the same recruiting restrictions, according to Peck. "The ski program doesn't recruit any differently from Division III. When we go to the national level, we meet the western schools. They're all scholarship schools and a lot of them have foreign schools represented. That's why we don't win any national championships. But we do very well."

Despite the difficulties, most coaches and admissions personnel agreed that the recruiting and admissions situations were the best possible for a school like Williams.

"I have confidence in the wisdom of the admissions office," Farley said. "They don't tell me how to run the football team on Saturdays and I don't tell them how to run this office during the week. I've been here for 17 years...if I didn't think I was doing a successful job I would've moved on."

Despite what the coaches and admissions people have to say, many students are still under the impression that athletes have a major edge in getting in to Williams.

One senior athlete said he believes he was definitely given an edge in the admissions process. "My being an athlete is a major reason I'm here."

"I was told by my interviewer that people are put in three categories: alumni, athletes, and a general group. You have a definite advantage if you're not in the general group," Megan King '90 said. "A really good athlete has a better chance because coaches have pull to get them in -- they work with the admissions office."

"I think from running a school's point of view you have to give the coaches a little more leeway," Chris Perry '91 said. "[There is] a lot of the alumni that look for the football players. The music department gets its fill and the art department gets its fill, it's just a little more visible with the athletes. A little more attention is drawn to it."

Peck says team budgets are relatively equal

by Bill Savadove

Williams alumni gave over $4 million to the annual fund this year, but was this figure influenced by the fact that all varsity teams won Little Three crowns this past autumn? Do winning teams make gracious alums?

"One would suppose that alumni feel better about the college after a sensational fall, but we have also had very good alumni giving after a dismal fall," Director of Alumni Relations Robert Behr said.

For fiscal year 1987, the athletic budget was $1.6 million, which represents 4.1 percent of the total expenses of the college. For 1988, athletics comprised four percent of the budget, or $1.7 million dollars. According to Vice President of the College William Reed, the athletic budget has remained fairly constant over the years.

"There are differences in all of our budgets, but there are no differences in the principles upon which budgets are founded," Director of Athletics Robert Peck said. All teams have the same meal allowance, the same uniform allowance, and the same access to transportation.

"If there are differences in the numbers, there are differences because one team has more members or has a different kind of equipment from another team," Peck said. He refused to release a team-by-team breakdown of budget allocations.

The Athletics Committee, in response to complaints from some women's and club teams concerning allocations, is investigating the issue of athletic budgets. "We were wondering whether or not it would be helpful to have those numbers," Coordinator Karllyn McNall '90 said. So far, the committee has been unable to obtain budget figures, according to McNall. The committee also plans to look into how the budget is drawn up, and the extent to which coaches are involved.

Budget statistics from Treasurer's Office.

Have you participated in intercollegiate athletics?

If yes, how many sports?

Have you participated in intramurals on a regular basis?

How much emphasis do you think the Williams community places on athletics?

Do sports here require too much time spent away from academics?

Is the social isolation created by athletic teams greater than that between members of other extracurricular activities and the rest of campus?

How much time do you spend on physical exercise per week?

Do athletes set up social barriers between themselves and the rest of campus?

Do athletic teams foster campus stereotypes about athletes, or are such stereotypes unfounded?

Based on your experience, do you think that men's and women's athletics receive equal treatment by the department of athletics?

About this poll

The Insider randomly selected 100 students to contact by telephone for this survey. Seventy-seven were reached between February 7 and 11.

The survey confirms the athleticism of Williams students, with 56% reporting that they have participated in intercollegiate athletics for the Ephs.

For more on the issues covered by poll questions, see related articles in this Insider.

History of Eph athletics

The Amherst-Williams rivalry

"We are your worst nightmare"

by Justin Smith

The atmosphere in Williamstown after any Eph defeat by the Amherst Lord Jeffs parallels that described by Williams President Edward Dorr Griffin after the Massachusetts State Legislature granted a charter to Amherst College in 1824, "The heavens were covered with blackness, and during the awful syncope...we often looked up and inquired, 'Is this death?'"

The rivalry between Williams and Amherst, which is one of the oldest school rivalries in the country, dates from the day Williams President Zephaniah Moore left Williamstown on horseback in the summer of 1821 to accept the Presidency of the newly-formed Amherst Collegiate Institute. Today, that rivalry is the focus of athletic competition between the two colleges.

In recent times, the series of Eph/Lord Jeffs competitions has been characterized by frenzied crowds at sporting events, especially at football and basketball games. However, the intensity of the rivalry, the pre-game rituals and the traditions vary greatly from sport to sport.

The rugby team, for example, takes the rivalry very seriously. At "beer practice" the day before their duel with the defectors, rugby players sing traditional songs deriding the Amherst teams. According to rugby player Jeff Steele '89, "We do our regular singing songs and by the end we whip ourselves into a frenzy and start chanting, 'Amherst sucks!'"

The women's team shares the fervor. "The girls' team usually puts on the paint," Steele said. "The A and B teams bet jerseys, but after Amherst gets shellacked in the A and B games, their C team is too timid to bet jerseys."

Lord Jeffrey's hat was stolen by this Williams student during Homecoming Weekend, 1980. (Kraus)

10/The Insider February 14, 1989

"It's good to have intensity," he continued. "It's all part of the college experience to have a foe you hate more than anything else in the world."

Squash captain Lewis Fisher '89 said that preparations for a match against Amherst often include a special pep talk. "Our old coach was very reserved, but the only time he gave us a pep talk was before a squash match with Amherst. He'd take us down to look at all the Little Three plaques -- we won 13 or 14 years in a row -- and he'd threaten to cut the testicles off of anyone who lost as much as one game."

On one occasion, during a pre-match introduction ceremony, the Williams squash players wore headbands, each of which spelled out a word, and stood in a row facing their Amherst opponents.

"They'd look down the line and read, 'We are your worst nightmare,'" Fisher said. "It was great watching their expressions as they read down the line and figured out what the message said."

He explained that the rivalry on the Amherst side is not quite as intense. "I think that's because if you've lost 14 years in a row, it's hard to get psyched for the game."

According to Head Football Coach Richard Farley, who has been at Williams for 17 years, a victory over Amherst always provides a satisfying conclusion to the year, particularly for seniors.

"I think we're so competitive that when we beat [Amherst], we consider it a successful year. I think it's more meaningful for the seniors. It's a game that you remember because it's the last one."

Farley added that the rivalry in football was one of mutual respect. "It's the best against the best. In a sense, it's like playing against your brother or sister."

Professor of Art, Emeritus, Whitney Stoddard, who has been at Williams since 1938, recalled instances when an unexpected Eph football victory against the Lord Jeffs would result in the total destruction of the Amherst goal posts.

"That was standard procedure, until it was banned because of a death at another school. It didn't always happen. It was a case of more the upset. There would be some fighting and the usual bloody noses. They broke the goal post up and everyone got a piece of it, sort of like the true cross."

Williams Baseball Coach James Briggs, a former Eph quarterback and infielder, indicated that the rivalry in baseball is somewhat more subdued. "It's a funny kind of rivalry in baseball. We like to win it, but it's not quite as intensive."

He did, however, describe one particularly memorable 1976 game against Amherst. A Williams player made an amazing catch, and the cheering, according to Briggs, went on for several minutes. "People must have heard it all over campus, and about 2000 people showed up [after hearing the cheers]. Not only was it a great game, the crowd we had was unbelievable, and it was brought out by this one catch."

Many athletes say that the home field advantage is particularly important during games against Amherst. "The home court advantage is always tremendous, and it's magnified when we're playing against Amherst," Fisher said.

"We generally talk up the home games more than the away games to attract more fans," field hockey player Maureen Flaherty '90 said. "I like the rivalry. It adds to the game. Because you have the Little Three at stake, it means more."

Matt Fair '91, a varsity football player, said that the rivalry is a positive influence. "I think it's a healthy rivalry. It draws on the school spirit and makes more people get involved in every sport."

However, Professor of Political Science MacAlister Brown, who has taught at Williams since 1956, said that the rivalry has changed from earlier days. "I think the standards of humor have degenerated, and I think the rivalry has decreased a bit. When the schools were all male, with 700 to 900 people, it was totally different."

Briggs felt the rivalry was for the most part a friendly one. "It was an intense rivalry in the 50's just like it is now. Even though it's intense, there's a lot of good-natured kidding. It's a good-natured rivalry generally."

Rise Up

from Songs of Williams, second edition, copyright 1904.
words by C.F. Hepburn '00

Many times that we should hate to
Be in Amherst's shoes;
One is when she plays in Billsville,
For she's bound to lose.
First game always went to Amherst
Till one lucky day
Williams broke the old-time hoodoo,
Now it's gone to stay.

(Chorus)

Rise up, ye upperclassmen
Rise up, ye underclassmen Rise up, ye Williams men
For we will never weaken,
Cheer on until we beat them
Rise up, ye men and cheer.

Eph athletes and coaches shone over long history

by Dan Skwire

When the NCAA basketball tournament rolls around in March, students here cannot go home for spring break and watch Dick Vitale broadcast the Ephs-Tarheels matchup in the Final Four. The choice to attend a small college such as Williams means resigning oneself to the absence of nationally-renowned sports teams.

Williams, however, has a glorious history of athletics that is often forgotten in modern times. There have been national championship teams, All-Americans, venerable old coaches and Olympic heroes. Our football team was once ranked in the AP top twenty, and they still hold the series lead over Syracuse, 4-3. Those were the days...

On July 1, 1859, Williams College first made collegiate athletic history. On that day, responding to a challenge from their rivals at Amherst, the Ephs met the Jeffs in the first intercollegiate baseball game ever played. After three and a half hours and 26 innings of baseball, Amherst squeaked out a 73-32 victory.

After three-and-a-half hours and twenty-six innings of baseball, Amherst squeaked out a 73 - 32 victory.

"In size and muscular development, we thought Amherst on the whole superior; while in agility, running and leaping, the Williams boys excelled," read an article in the Amherst Express the next day. Thus was born the sometimes nasty, sometimes bitter athletic rivalry between the two schools.

The baseball game played that day used the "Massachusetts rules." There were 13 players on a side, the bases were laid out in a square, there was only one out per inning and the game did not end until one team scored 65 tallies. This version of the game was discarded shortly thereafter in favor of the New York rules, which more closely resemble the modern game. Die-hard Williams fans will be happy to learn that the Ephs fared much better under the new rules, winning four consecutive national championships from 1865-68.

Ben Boynton '21 quarterbacked the Ephs and went on to be elected to the National Football Hall of Fame in 1962. (File photo)

On November 19, 1881, Williams played its first intercollegiate football game, falling to a tough Wesleyan squad by a score of 10-0. Football gained popularity quickly, and soon transcended baseball as the primary competition with Amherst. The rivalry turned ugly in the 1890's when Williams had a string of poor teams and took out their frustrations in the form of sour grapes.

"Williams is brought face to face with the fact that the standard of scholarship is higher at Williams than at Amherst or Union," editorialized the Williams Weekly, a campus newspaper, in 1893. "While for some reasons the loss of athletes is always to be regretted, we cannot help feeling glad that Williams holds rigidly to a high standard with which athletics seems of trifling importance."

In the 1920's, Williams had several strong football teams, led by quarterback Ben Boynton '21, who scored 141 of the team's 310 points in 1920 and was chosen as an All-American. In 1962, Boynton was elected to the National Football Hall of Fame.

Another strong Williams team came in 1942. Their 7-1 record was highlighted by a 19-7 upset of powerful Princeton on November 10. After this victory, the Ephs were ranked twentieth in the AP College Football Poll, perhaps the last time Williams will be in contention for a bowl bid.

In more recent times, the Williams football team has graduated two players to the NFL. Jack Maitland '70 was a star running back who went on to win a Super Bowl with the Baltimore Colts, and Scott Perry '76 was a defensive back who later played for the Cincinnati Bengals, the San Francisco 49ers and the Oakland Raiders. After struggling in the early 1980s, the Ephs have come back to win two consecutive Little Three titles, finishing up last season with four straight shutouts.

The game of basketball was invented by James Naismith in 1891, five years after Lasell gymnasium was built at Williams. In 1900, Williams first exploited its home-field advantage by crushing Drury on the miniature Lasell court by a score of 48-2.

Basketball teams at Williams have been generally successful, perhaps due to the restricted playing area and strategically placed pillars of Lasell. Director of Athletics Robert Peck lamented the fact that Williams may have lost a chance to become a truly powerful team when the college was unable to sign John Wooden to the head coaching job after World War II. Wooden opted for a career at UCLA where he led the Bruins to the top of the NCAA ranks. Even without his coaching expertise, however, the Ephs were able to win their first ECAC championship in 1987.

The 1934 ice hockey team poses for their yearbook picture. Whitney Stoddard, now Professor of Art, Emeritus, is the goalie seated at the far left. (1934 Gul photo)

The Wind Tunnel

1903 marked the beginning of hockey at Williams. The sport was first played on a frozen pond beneath Cole Field House. In 1953, the present artificial rink was built, but without a roof. According to Peck, the rink was then known as the "Wind Tunnel." In 1969, the finishing touches were finally put on Lansing-Chapman rink, which is still in use today.

Professor of Art History, Emeritus, Whitney Stoddard '35 played goalie on the 1934 Williams hockey team, when the frozen pond still served as the rink. Stoddard said the game was different in those days, because the puck could not be passed forward, only laterally. In addition, defensemen had to remain on their half of the ice.

"It was basically terrible hockey," he said. "It was colder than hell down there. There wasn't any zamboni. The clearing was done by the players themselves or by the 16 people trying out to be manager."

Tennis was begun here in 1891, soccer in 1922, and skiing and squash in the late 1930s. Williams first participated in crew in 1869, but the oarsmen did not win their first race for over 100 years. Crew became a varsity sport in 1988.

When Williams admitted the first women to its freshman class in 1971, the college soon developed women's athletic programs. The first women's sport here was basketball, but by 1974, women's teams were available in swimming, squash, cross-country, tennis, field hockey, skiing and lacrosse. The college currently has 16 men's varsity teams and 14 women's varsity teams.

The fearless leaders

Much of what athletes accomplish is due to their coaches, and there have been some truly great coaches in Williams history. Peck referred to the middle of this century as the Golden Era of Williams coaches. One of the standouts he mentioned was Charlie Caldwell, who coached football here from 1928-1945, winning seven Little Three crowns. He also coached baseball and basketball before he left to coach at Princeton.

Robert Muir was the legendary swim coach who came here in 1937, and coached in the Olympics three times, including the job as head coach in 1956. He will be inducted into the National Hall of Fame on May 12. Tony Plansky was the Williams cross-country and track coach from 1931-1978, during which time he won 25 Little Three titles, including nine straight from 1970-1978. Our most successful basketball coach was Al Shaw who compiled a record of 300-169 between 1950 and 1973.

The game was different in those days because the puck could not be passed forward, only laterally.

Going for the gold To say that Williams College is not generally thought of as an Olympic training ground would be a truly drastic understatement, but curiously enough, a number of Williams graduates have gone on to Olympic glory. The first to do so was John Bray, class of 1900, who won a bronze medal in the 1500 meter run in 1900. Other track stars were Robert Leavitt '07 who won a gold in the 110 hurdles in 1906, and H. Hallock Brown '19 who won team and individual golds in the 3000 meter run in 1920.

Brown was the last Williams Olympian to win a medal, but there have been several others who competed on U.S. teams. In 1976, Nancy Storrs '73 was a member of the first women's Olympic crew, and in 1980 she was on the team again along with Sue Tuttle '78. Also in 1980, Leslie Milne '79 and Christine Larson-Mason, now the Williams field hockey coach, were on the field hockey team. The 1980 athletes were not able to compete because the U.S. boycotted the Olympics continued on page 15

Life as a Williams Athlete

Athletes feel stereotypes have questionable basis

by Sara Dubow

As popular as athletics are at Williams, there are a number of stereotypes about sports teams that many athletes feel are unfair. Words such as hammerhead and cement, they feel, do little to enhance the image of student athletes.

"Everyone thinks we're dumb, but we are here at Williams and probably doing as well as anyone else," said Chris Parisi '90, a football player and the president of Dennett House. "When you say hammerhead, you're saying that a whole group of people you might not even know are something that other people see as bad. You can open fire on athletes here, but not on any other groups on campus."

'Professors have said, why do you play rugby? That's not for girls.'

Sherwood Smith '89 said there definitely is a generalization made about rugby players. "Like all stereotypes, it is partly based on fact. We do do a lot of drinking. I think that it goes too far though when people start making assumptions about someone they don't know, based on the fact that that person plays a particular sport."

A survey conducted by the Record Insider found that 54 percent of those surveyed felt that teams were responsible for fostering the campus stereotypes about athletes, whereas 46 percent felt such stereotypes were unfounded.

"One of the funny things I've found is that despite the stereotype, the rugby team has an incredible diversity," Jack Gillis '89 said. "I think people make assumptions about rugby players, and people who know me away from Williams are always surprised that I play. I play because I enjoy it, and if people misinterpret it, that's not my problem."

Cathy Paper '89, member of the Committee on Undergraduate Life subcommittee on athletics and a women's rugby player, said, "People do associate rugby as an aggressive and rough sport. Professors have said 'why do you play rugby? That's not for girls.' I think women ruggers are aware that a lot of people perceive them in a specific way, and we laugh together at some of the stereotypes."

Dave Nadeau '91 suggested that stereotyping can cause unfair treatment for athletes. "If something bad happens at a party, we all get in trouble as a group instead of as individuals. At any other school, [being a football player] wouldn't be looked down on."

"I don't mind taking the rap for my friends, but I think it's wrong that the assumption is made that we are all involved if something happens," Mike Abbruzzese '91 agreed.

Parisi said he feels that his house's "Delta Dennett" reputation is exaggerated. "In the past we've had high damage bills, but this year we have the least damage of any house in Mission. It's the individuals in the house that make the difference."

Abbruzzese said that he likes the fact that more women live in the house this year, because it goes against the Dennett image. "We don't want to perpetuate the Dennett myth. Sometimes we do things that do, but everyone does the same things we do. Only we get singled out."

"As a person, [being stereotyped] discourages you," Parisi said, "but we can deal with it when it's students. It's harder when the administration and faculty become involved in perpetuating the stereotype. It doesn't really bother us until it comes into conflict with the school."

"It stinks if you have to find out if a teacher hates athletes before you take a course," Nadeau agreed.

Not all athletes, however, said they feel that stereotypes exist. "I don't feel that there is an image of a dumb jock here. I think maybe there is a stereotype against Club Bacchus, but other than that I don't think there's a problem," Mike Masters '89, a soccer and basketball player, said.

"Even though I am an athlete and take lacrosse very seriously, I definitely don't fit into any stereotype of the Williams athlete," Bevin Cooper '91 said. "In general, I think that there are more stereotypes for male athletes here than for females, but maybe that's because they are the more obvious ones."

Some students spoke out against the campus use of stereotypes. "The jock stereotype is way overused by people here at Williams," Bill Hoch '89 said. "Everyone is here because

continued on page 15

What's being done: committees examine athletic issues

by Bill Savadove

Integration of athletics, the balance between sport and study, and hammerhead stereotypes are the problems. Here are the committees that are looking for the solutions:

Athletics Committee

The Athletics Committee was formed last April under the guidance of former College Council President Carter Zinn '88. The council decided to establish a permanent group to handle athletic issues after discussion with Director of Athletics Robert Peck last January.

As a result of discussions between the College Council and the athletic department, Peck also issued a memo outlining a new policy concerning rotation of playing field use by men's and women's sports teams. According to the memo, men's and women's teams will alternate between morning and afternoon use of fields. This year, the student committee looked into publicity for games and matches, intramurals, and funding for club sports. They also attempted to look into 12/The Insider February 14, 1989 questions concerning athletic team budgets, but were denied access to the figures by the athletic department, according to committee member Rob Blanck '89.

Members of the Athletics Committee are: Karlyn McNeil '90, Rob Blanck '89, Dave Cantor '89, Nancy Hedeman '89, and John Kelsh '89 (ex-officio).

Committee on Undergraduate Life Athletics Subcommittee

The CUL Athletics Subcommittee was formed this fall in order to study athletes' commitment of time and energy to their chosen sport. "We are attempting to discover whether the dedication of athletes to their sport helps to integrate our community and to advance the wider purposes of a liberal education, or tends to disintegrate that community and to interfere with those wider educational purposes," Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright, the committee's co-chair, said.

Wright's interest in the issue grew out of a personal experience. Returning home one night at 9:30, Wright encountered a football "hell practice" behind Cole Field House. "What I was upset about was when do these guys get to their friends, their showers, their studies?" Wright said.

The subcommittee held a series of meetings with athletes, former athletes, junior advisors, and randomly selected students. Issues discussed included integration of athletes, stereotypes, and academics.

A report to the CUL is expected by the end of February. No proposals have been formulated yet, but Wright said the subcommittee wants to pursue the idea of a forum concerning athletic issues. The student members of the committee would like to look into integration of freshman athletes and admissions practices.

Wright said her understanding of the problems athletes face and the nature of the time commitment has increased since the hell practice encounter. "We (professors and coaches) ought to figure out together what is best for the student." The report will focus on ways to raise the consciousness of the Williams community regarding athletics.

Members are: Professor Lisa Wright (co-chair), Brad Gendell '90 (co-chair), Coach Renzi Lamb, and Cathy Paper '89.

Committee on Campus Life, Trustee Subcommittee

In January, the Board of Trustees devoted part of their agenda to athletic issues. The Committee on Campus Life met with Director of Athletics Robert Peck to discuss whether men's and women's teams receive equal treatment in terms of facilities, equipment, and scheduling.

"[The trustees] came up reasonably satisfied that they were [treated equally]," College Treasurer and Trustee Secretary William Reed said.

Ten to 12 team captains also met with the trustees to discuss athletic issues. Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards said that the meeting allowed team representatives to voice individual concerns. "It gave the trustees a window on what's happening with athletics at Williams."

Pressure to be physically fit is both good and bad

by Lynn M. Huddon

"Sports are more like a religion than an extracurricular activity. Everyone seems to play on some team...."

The Fiske Guide to Colleges

"A very athletic student body. 'At 4:00 everybody's weight-lifting, jogging, or playing squash.'"

Lisa Birnbach's College Book

Williams has somehow come to be billed as a "jock school" by people who claim to be in the know about the nation's colleges. However, a look at statistics from a Record Insider survey seems to prove that college catalogues may be justified in statements like the above.

According to the survey of 77 students, 56 percent of the student body participates in intercollegiate athletics on the varsity, junior varsity, or club team level. 43 percent participate in intramurals on a regular basis.

Nor is athletic activity limited to an organized sport. Only 11 percent of those surveyed said they spend less than two hours per week on physical exercise, while 36 percent spend between five and ten hours and 28 percent over ten hours.

"It's true that everyone does sweat at four o'clock and does something athletic, and I definitely feel like I'm in the small minority," said Glenn Northern '90, who does not exercise regularly.

"The people who are athletic do all the athletics; the people who do sports do three sports," Martha Mabie '91 said. She herself is active in aerobics and dance. "Many students did sports in high school, but they come to college and find it's more competitive and get burned out. But these people want to stay physically fit, so they do aerobics or swimming on their own."

Aside from the competitive, fun aspect of athletics and the way that physical exercise provides a release from academic pressure, many students feel compelled to keep themselves in good physical condition.

"People here are so driven to have control over their bodies," Leslie Pelch '89 said. "They're highly self-motivated and have a high sensitivity to what others think of them." Pelch co-founded the group responsible for the feminist protests last semester, "Figures of Speech" and "Blueprints for Women." The first attacked the ideal feminine image portrayed in magazine advertisements, while "Blueprints" proposed that women could create their own standards, instead of adhering to those of society.

These protests were followed by a display at the end of Winter Study about the male body image. Jennifer Blacka '89, the organizer, said, "I wanted to prove it isn't just a woman's problem, but rather an all-encompassing social problem."

Many students said that they felt the emphasis on being physically fit and athletic is not specific to Williams, but is rather an extension of societal standards. The perceived ideal body image seemed to be thin and toned for women and muscular and physically fit for men.

"This image is not that different from what goes on on other campuses or among other people our age. It's a phenomenon of American culture," Mabie said. "However, Williams is beautiful in that the people here are physically beautiful -- but this isn't reality."

Northern, however, suggested that the competitive atmosphere at Williams may be partially responsible for the emphasis on athletics. "There's so much pressure here to be the best at something that people can go to extreme measures, even as far as athletics go."

Some students, particularly those involved in intercollegiate athletics, remarked that they feel no external pressure to participate in sports, saying that their motivation is much more internal. Others have experienced a subtle peer pressure, not so much by direct comment, but by the constant example of people doing physical activity around them.

"There's no way you can tell the students 'don't lift.' It's peer pressure. It's beyond coaching," said Coach Renzie Lamb.

Northern said that such pressure can be good because it encourages people to take action about their health, but it can also be bad if it perpetuates an idealized body which cannot be attained.

"No one would ever pressure me to be athletic, although there is an emphasis on staying fit that is greater for men than for women here," Nancy Hedeman '89, who plays three varsity sports, said.

"It's not really by force; people want to be in shape," said Gilbert McCabe '89, who runs in men's indoor and outdoor track. "Look at the small percentage of people who smoke here - students are conscious of health."

The Insider survey indicated that most people are comfortable with the emphasis on athletics at Williams; 76 percent felt that this emphasis was "the right amount."

"If people are playing an organized sport, then they're doing it because they enjoy the sport. People who do athletics on their own are probably more concerned with keeping trim," said Kaveh Khosrowshahi '89, who plays varsity lacrosse and squash and participates in intramurals. "However, I've never heard anyone criticize someone because they don't do sports either."

Jennifer Lisle '89, Marcia Toll '89 and Dave Brown '89 discover what the Village Beautiful looks like at 7 a.m. (Isackson)

Williams student works out in the weight room of Chandler Athletic Center. Many students find time for independent physical exercise outside of organized sports. (Thomas)

Athletics at other schools

College	Men's Varsity	Women's Varsity	% participation
Williams	16	14	56%
Amherst	16	14	47%
Wesleyan	15	14	25-30%
Swarthmore	11	12	30-35%
Reed	4	2	N/A
Oberlin	10	10	10%
Carleton	12	10	N/A
Pomona	12	12	19%

Statistics obtained from the athletic departments at the respective schools. Statistics from Williams were confirmed by the Insider poll.

"Jock cliques"

Athletics may be a factor in freshman integration

by Rajesh Swaminathan

Most Williams students are familiar with instances of athletes hanging out together socially. There are the Friday night snacks for members of various teams, parties thrown by team captains, and the beer practices which the rugby teams have made so legendary.

The question is, where does team camaraderie end and social segregation begin? Students and faculty have raised concerns as to whether athletes, and particularly freshmen, sufficiently integrate themselves in the college social scene. Athletic teams are blamed for the existence of "jock cliques" that serve as the primary means of social interaction for their members.

Director of Admissions Philip Smith, who is responsible for freshman housing arrangements, said that college policy is designed to integrate the freshmen as completely as possible into the Williams social milieu. He pointed to the entry system as a major factor in this integration.

"If there is any policy, it is to have every entry reflect the range and quality of the class. It doesn't make any sense to put all the members of the glee club in one entry. If there are a lot of football players in one dorm, it is because we try to accommodate rooming requests, [i.e.] whether you apply for a single, a double or a triple." He attributed the preponderance of athletes in a few freshman dorms to coincidence.

The Committee on Undergraduate Life's Subcommittee on Athletics has been looking into the apparent grouping of athletes in some freshman entries. Fayerweather 3, for example, has eight varsity athletes, including three football players, according to a rough estimate by JA David Oucalt '89. "We will have to ask someone to explain to us why the third floor of Fayerweather is all athletes," said Professor Lisa Wright, co-chair of the committee.

'If there were a murder in Williamstown, they'd blame it on Bacchus.'

"For a number of years [in the mid-1970s], I coached freshman soccer," Smith added. "I found freshmen athletes to be completely integrated, and from the limited experience that I have now as a faculty advisor, I would generally say it is true now."

"I don't think it is in the freshman year that there are any cliques. It is in the junior and senior years that you hear of such groupings. But I'm not aware of anything this year."

Oucalt said he felt there are indeed "jock cliques" in the freshman class. "If it's a fall sport, they tend to stick together. That's who they hang out with. It's easy to explain. They have a common interest, they practice together. But it happens more at the beginning of the year, when they rely more on it. They do integrate with the rest of the class as the year goes by."

Michael Barsanti '90, a JA in East College, agreed that the formation of athletic cliques within the freshman class may be merely temporary. He also offered an explanation for why so many freshman football players tend to apply in large groups for sophomore housing.

something to talk about," John Conte '92, who plays varsity basketball, said. "When they meet someone else, it's not so easy."

Barsanti also stressed that there are cliques in activities other than athletics. "Extracurricular activities are an important place for social interaction, especially among upperclassmen. For example, those people who are involved with theater do hang out together."

"From what I have seen, jocks do tend to apply to live together," said Jim Adams '90, a Lehman JA. "But I don't think it's unique to sports. I think it's more of an organizational thing, though athletics stand out."

However, Matt Moynihan '92, a varsity football player, suggested that campus attitudes about athletes may be a reason why at least football players stick together. "They hang around in groups, and it's true -- they've got that Bacchus thing. The student body stereotypes them anyway. If there were a murder in Williamstown, they'd blame it on Bacchus."

Jeff Farmer '90, a JA in Fayerweather, offered some cautions against taking the cliques too seriously. "After a time, [athletes] do mix with other freshmen, they do break out of their cliques. Furthermore, you always get the exceptions to the rule, the jocks who make an effort to know their peers. I guess this is what's ultimately of greater importance -- that many of the athletes do try to widen their circle of friends."

"When athletes meet each other, they have

Coach Renzie Lamb

From the sidelines

Renzie Lamb coaches football and lacrosse; he is coordinator of intramurals and a member of the Committee on Undergraduate Life athletics subcommittee. He was interviewed for the Insider by Bill Savadove.

RECORD: How is Williams different from the big universities in terms of athletics?

LAMB: There are two main differences as far as I'm concerned. The people that come to Williams College are student athletes. The people that go to the bigger schools are athletic students. The second difference is if I am an athletic student at a Division I school, my whole life is run by the coach. When you are a student athlete at Williams College or schools of this type -- I like to use the analogy of the Marine Corps -- they're volunteers.

You have to make the athletic program at a Williams type of school challenging and interesting to keep the student there because the student has no reason to be there. If he or she is not pleased with what's going on, they have the right to walk. Now if they have a scholarship, they don't walk. The whole reason for being at college is dependent on participating in athletics.

RECORD: How do you tell your athletes to respond when they come up against a stereotype?

LAMB: That's what we've been talking about this year in CUL. I've learned a lot in that committee about how to handle this. The stereotype develops in two ways. It comes to Williams College with students. It's a national stereotype. The media has a tremendous amount of maintaining it. They like that. Take hockey, for instance. Society wants the rowdy image of a hockey player. Society needs the politeness of a golfer. Society is outraged when those stereotypes are broken.

Once the students are here, they act out the stereotype. Football players are big and dumb. Do you want a big dumb football player? I can be a small dumb football player. It doesn't matter if I have a 680 verbal. I can act that way because that's what's expected of me, and the people that are my friends on the team, don't want me going around and breaking the stereotype.

RECORD: How are athletic stereotypes at Williams different from those at other schools?

LAMB: If we transported our football players to the athletic dorm at Oklahoma, it would be a quantum jump in stereotypes. There they would really be with the typical stereotypes. They would be geeks in the Oklahoma athletic dorm. They'd swagger around, and they'd be smaller. They would be like clowns. Here, they're threatening. If you bring the Oklahoma dorm here, you might as well lock everyone in their rooms. That would be the worst possible scenario. If you took our kids to a place that has the real stereotype, it would shatter. If you took one of our hockey players out to Minnesota and they had a fight, the Minnesota people would laugh at them.

They'd think it was like two peewees fighting. Here, it's a fight. It's all relative.

RECORD: Why does society need stereotypes about athletes?

LAMB: There's a great sociological study with Vince Lombardi, because Vince Lombardi used all warfare terms. This is before Vietnam. People begin to look at violent sports as a substitute for warfare. No one got killed and you had your violence -- bread and circuses. The Vietnam War came along and we saw it for real. This was not an exercise. And during that period of time athletics were really very tentative. It was not a popular time to go around and publicize your violence because people got turned off by that.

In simplistic terms, [sports] are a substitute for war. In a violent world, people need the catharsis of seeing the acting out of violence, as in professional wrestling. That's the stupidest, and yet very popular. People are afraid to go into a bar and have a real fight. But they can go watch Bronco McGoon throw Harry Longhair out of the ring and hit him with a two-by-four, everyone screaming. No one gets hurt. It gets it out of their system.

RECORD: You've been here since 1967. Have the stereotypes, or how athletes are perceived, changed over the years?

LAMB: I've seen 20 classes come through. Yes, the stereotypes change. Again, do men dictate the times, or do times dictate the men? In the late 60's when I got here, I had a lacrosse team. Everyone on the team had beards. I was embarrassed to take them on the field. They had hair literally exploding out of their face masks. But you couldn't tell them to shave it off; this was their means of expression.

We got back from the spring trip in mid-April. All of the seniors were clean shaven, looking like Brooks Brothers. Why? They were going to interview for jobs; they were going to join society. The juniors looked scruffy. The sophomores looked scruffy. The freshmen didn't have enough hair yet to look scruffy, but they were developing into the scruffiness.

They questioned everything. It wasn't Williams, it was the time. A time to question values. My coaches were veterans of World War II. It was discipline, hard work. If you did all of those things, you won. But now we were living in a period of history when those values weren't working. The harder you worked in Vietnam, it didn't work.

Seven years later, ultra-conservative. That group is gone. And now, this period we're in now -- it's less exciting. I love to rib and to be sarcastic and make jokes. These kids, they're too serious. They're too focused. There's a lot of confidence, a lot of security, but I don't

Students discuss stereotypes

continued from page 12
they are smart, and it doesn't give credit to the athletes who are here to rely on the stereotype. Sometimes I think stereotypes are used by people who are insecure, and need to feel that they are superior in some way."

"As far as stereotypes go for athletes, there are many more for men than for women, and I think that many times that stereotype is substantiated by someone's actions or behavior," another student said. "As for the heavy-drinking, violent, football player stereotype -- well, I've never seen a woman put her fist through a wall or harass a male at a party."

"Certain sports seem to lead to aggressive behavior," another student added. "Some guys will be Joe Blow and I be really nice, but then when they're Joe Blow hockey player, it promotes a kind of 'I'm a bad-ass' attitude. I'm only using hockey as an example, but I think it happens in other sports too."

see a lot of joy in what they do. They take things too seriously. It's just a game.

RECORD: So, you don't need to encourage your athletes to study, because that incentive is already there?

LAMB: We don't have study halls. We don't set up certain areas where we supervise the Williams student coming to study. We can't control them staying up all night. We have to pick up the ashes the next morning.

One hundred percent of the time the Williams athlete will make the academic choice. They will always make the mature academic choice. There's a GRE next Saturday. "I've got to take the GRE. The team's got to play without me." No question.

I don't think the people on this campus appreciate that. Even though they have the dumb jock stereotype, they always take the academic choice.

RECORD: What has the committee discovered about integration of athletes? Is a group of athletes any different than say, for instance, a group of theater people?

LAMB: Yes and no. No, it's no different than any other group on campus. Yes, it's a more visual group, a more physically active group. We're not very excited in the athletic department about "ghettoizing" the athletes. Dennett House is a pain in the ass. I don't know how they all get in there. It used to be Spencer. Before that it was Carter. I would much rather see all the athletes all over the campus, and many of them are. Coaches would like to see them more spread out. On the other side of the coin, you can't legislate choice.

Days in the life of a swimmer

Text by Dori Lebeau

FRIDAY APPOINTMENTS		SATURDAY APPOINTMENTS
8A. get up	4P. Swim practice	8A. breakfast w. team at Baxter	4P. men vs. Colgate
9A. ECON	5P. ↓	9A. attempt to read on the bus	5P. ↓
10A. Art History	6P. dinner w. team	10A. ↓	6P. dinner
11A. Work-Fin Aid	7P. call home	11A. ↓	7P. drive back
12A. Lunch w. Jen	8P. ↓	12A. lunch at Colgate	8P. ↓
1P. Chem Lab	9P. Armstrong Snax with sw. th. team	1P. women vs. Colgate	9P. ↓
2P. ↓	10P. ↓	2P. ↓	10P. get back
3P. ↓	11P. to bed early!!!	3P. ↓	11P. Swim team PARTY!!!

Eph sports had their glory days

continued from page 11
held in Moscow that year.

Jeff Hastings '81 went to the 1984 Winter Olympics in Sarajevo as a ski jumper. Hastings finished fourth in the 90 meter jump and ninth in the 70 meter jump.

Our most recent Olympian, Lindsey Brown '86, was an alternate oarsman for the mens eight in Seoul, Korea.

The history of athletics at Williams is a living one, and it gets more exciting year by year. Last year, the college gave evidence of its sincere support of athletics by opening the $10.5 million Chandler Athletic Center. Hockey coach Bill McCormick, who will be retiring after this season, has won over 300 games in his time here. This fall, Williams athletes won Little Three crowns in every varsity sport, men's and women's. In remembering the glories of years past, one can only wonder what triumphs lie ahead.

Acknowledgments

I would like to thank several people for their help in researching this article. Professor of History, Emeritus, Fred Rudolph pointed me in the right direction on day one. Sylvia Kennick in the Williamsiana room assisted me in finding old yearbooks, papers and photographs. Athletic Director Robert Peek was a fine source of statistics, names and anecdotes. Dave Paulsen in the Sports Information Office provided me with a list of Williams Olympians.

Scala

Oldham

Healy

LeBauer

Thomas

Goodell

LeBauer

Lockwood

Teaching load reduction OK'd

by Joel McElvain
All that stands between a proposal to reduce Williams faculty teaching loads nearly ten percent by 1990 and its implementation is trustee approval, which is expected to be forthcoming. Dean of the Faculty John Reichert said that the trustees are virtually certain to approve the proposal, which would cut the faculty teaching requirement to nine classes every two years from the present ten. Reichert and President of the College Francis Oakley are currently preparing a report to be presented to the trustees next fall which will detail the possible effects of the proposal. While the plan is a necessary step to remain competitive with other colleges, Reichert said, a close examination of its consequences is necessary. "Although there's been a lot of work on plans for individual departments, I think we need to step back and take an over-

'There was a worrisome trend last year; we lost something like 15 or 16 people overall.'

view," Reichert said. He plans to study the impact of the proposal on the freshman year and interdepartmental programs.

Shortchange possible
He said that it is possible that programs such as Women's Studies, which depend on course offerings in other departments, would be shortchanged. However, he does not foresee a significant impact on courses included in the minority and third world studies requirement, since the college intends to hire new faculty members in those fields.

The counseled reduction proposal originated from a concern over the loss of qualified candidates to competing colleges, according to Professor of Psychology George Goethals, chairman of continued on page 3

Professor of Economics Henry Bruen raises oew issues at the February 15 faculty meeting, where the plan to reduce professors' courseloads was approved.

Williams closes book on Dewey's contract

by Mary Moule
The days of student aggravation at the Williams Bookstore have come to an end. Less than a month after the college reached a compromise with Joseph Dewey, owner of the bookstore, the college has given its exclusive textbook contract to Albion Bookstore.

According to Vice President and Treasurer of the College William Reed, Albion will be moving into the former Grundy's Garage on Water Street. Students should be able to buy their books there next fall, he said.

Reed chaired a committee set up by President of the College Francis Oakley to review student and faculty complaints about the service at Dewey's. The committee submitted a recommendation at the beginning of February, and after approval by the president, the decision to take the contract away from Joseph Dewey of the Williams Bookstore and give it to Albion was announced to the faculty on February 15.

Albion, which has four stores in Massachusetts, is owned by James Murphy. He hopes to open the store on July 1, according to Reed. Besides carrying textbooks, he plans to carry a large supply of trade books, but no other items.

"There was a high level of disappointment with the current system," Reed said. Faculty members were concerned with the supply of textbooks and open shelving, and students complained of long lines and problems with getting textbooks on time, he announced at the faculty meeting.

The committee, consisting of Reed, Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards, Provost Gordon Winston, Assistant Professor of English James Shepard, and College Council President Trace Blankenship, has worked since October reviewing different businesses and options for location.

"We explored possibilities on Spring Street and decided that the best place was Grundy's Garage," Reed said. "It's not too far for students, there's good parking and, most importantly, the layout would allow three to five times the space of the current situation."

Among the businesses considered were the Williams Bookstore, the College Bookstore, Albion Books and Brennan Books. Reed told the faculty. According to Edwards, Albion was chosen because of their extensive experience with textbooks. "They strike us as very good booksellers," Reed said.

Dewey 'extremely disappointed'
Dewey has sold textbooks exclusively for seven years under a ten-year contract with the college. "He's extremely disappointed [to lose the textbook business]," Reed said. "He worked very hard and thought he was doing a fine job."

The college will have to compensate Dewey in some way, according to Reed. Edwards said, "I think that what we were getting from Mr. Dewey was good, but the faculty wanted open shelving and more trade books."

'We explored possibilities on Spring Street and decided that the best place was Grundy's Garage.'

The committee met personally with Dewey, according to Edwards. "Everybody was given an opportunity to present their best possible case."

However, Dewey said that he may not have been able to contribute as much as he would have liked. "I have personal disappointment that I didn't get to have any input," he said. "But maybe that may never have been intended by the committee."

The committee worked with Dewey to improve the situation for the spring semester, and several changes were instituted. "I think it was an excellent continued on page 4

College pulls out of minority consortium

by Rajesh Swaminathan
Williams College, along with Wesleyan University, Amherst College and Carleton College, recently dropped out of a consortium of national liberal arts colleges that hopes to increase minority student recruitment, according to Director of Public Information James Kolesar.

The consortium was organized to increase minority faculty recruitment and communicate to minority junior high and high school students the advantages of a college education and the availability of financial aid.

'We are already doing much of what the consortium wants to accomplish.'

Roy Gresson, President of Bowdoin College and former chairman of the group, was quoted in the January 29 Boston Globe as saying, "We felt if we could get a sizeable number of good liberal arts colleges to say they are concerned about minorities and have wonderful opportunities available, that would be much louder than our individual voices."

The Globe article also said that the Little Three and Carleton were all firmly committed to the goals of the consortium.

Kolesar, however, said the Globe article was incorrect. "I do not know where the correspondent got her information. Williams was in the discussions for the consortium only up to the preliminary stages. As far as I know, our people were just communicating with people on other campuses. We were not and are not part of the consortium."

'Long-standing policy'

He said that several key goals of the consortium conflicted with long-standing college policy. "For us, it would have represented a step backwards," he said. "For example, the final word from the group [concerning aid packages] espoused non-need-based and even merit-based financial aid. Williams is need-blind with regard to admissions, and this is something we have felt strongly about for a long time."

Kolesar also said that many other colleges had found sticking points in the consortium agreement.

Nancy McIntire, Assistant to President Oakley for Affirmative Action, said that the college's participation in the consortium was unnecessary. "We are already doing much of what the consortium intends to accomplish. For instance, they want to bring in minority faculty fellows but we already have the Bolin graduate fellowship."

"Furthermore, the consortium's policy seemed to favor certain ethnic minorities over others. Specifically, the financial aid policies were aimed at blacks and Hispanics. Asian students were not really included."

McIntire also said she was not pleased with the fact that the consortium concentrated primarily on faculty recruitment rather than retention, stressing that Williams already has a very active recruitment program.

Crashing the gates

Williams skier David Brule '92 crashes through a gate on the slalom course during the Williams Ski Carnival at Brodie Mountain on Saturday. Brule won the slalom and led the Ephraim's alpine team to a victory in the Carnival (see story, page 10).

Balco

MassPIRG registers complaint against Town Clerk Betty Kovacs.

PAGE 4

The Record reviews Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown.

PAGE 5

Women's squash defeats Amherst and Wesleyan to win third award of season.

PAGE 8

The Williams Record

Teaching reduction must not raise class size

While it seems certain that the trustees will approve a plan to lessen the faculty's workload from 10 to 9 classes every two years, there are many reasons that students should find it repugnant. To students bogged down in four courses a semester, extra-curricular activities, and sports, it may be difficult to feel sorry for someone teaching ten classes every two years. However, the real problem with the plan, from the students' perspective, is that it portends larger classes and less accessible professors.

Those who choose to spend four of the most formative years of their lives in Williamstown come here for a number of reasons. One of them is because of the excellence of the faculty. The proposal certainly insures that it will continue to be first-rate.

However, another reason students come here is because of the relatively small class sizes. Everyone knows that Williams has an average class size of 9.7 is a joke. This number includes cross-registered classes and tutorials. The decrease in the number of classes professors are required to teach will raise class size still further and make it even harder for students to get into the classes they want.

There must be guarantees accompanying the new plan that the school will make a commitment to hire more professors to make up for the gap the new rule will create. It seems that with each semester, ever increasing numbers of Ephs get shut out of classes they would like to take. The new requirement will only exacerbate the situation.

Because reducing faculty teaching requirements will undoubtedly increase the average class size and make it even more difficult for students to get into popular classes, the trustees should only accept it with the promise that the school will also take steps to counter its harmful consequences.

College mishandled bookstore switch

Many students will no doubt breathe a sigh of relief with the news that the Williams Bookstore is no longer the place where they will get their textbooks. The complaints about the store and its owner, Joseph Dewey, are numerous: slow service, many books unavailable, tardy reordering and high prices. Many, perhaps most, of the students at Williams will be glad to see the college's relationship with Dewey end.

So what can be said in his defense? After what seems like many years of complaints about the bookstore, Dewey has started to make an effort to improve service -- and has been noticeably successful. It is indeed ironic that just as Williams decided to work out its problems with the Williams Bookstore, it suddenly changed its mind and ended Dewey's contract altogether.

Of course, Dewey will be reimbursed for the remainder of his contract with the school, but he will almost certainly cease to be in business in Williamstown. Perhaps the new arrangement will greatly benefit the Williams community: it certainly pleases many students. But the manner in which the college brought about this change is a case of terrible timing, if not downright malice, on the part of the administration.

On the Record...

"It will be a cold day in hell if they don't start selling stationery."

--James Drummond, owner of Drummond Cleaners, expressing the Spring Street merchants' fear that the new bookstore to be located in Grundy's Garage on Water Street will take away from their business.

"We were trying to win one for coach Mac."

--Ron Abel '91 on the hockey team's 2-1 victory over Middlebury, which occurred in Coach Bill McCormick's last home game after 35 years at Williams. McCormick was the longest-tenured hockey coach in the country.

"I have always trusted my students' judgement, and it follows from what I have tried to teach them. If you have a mind, I want you to use it. If you have a voice, I want you to speak out."

--Professor Lisa Wright, saying that she respects and appreciates the work of the students who organized to protest her tenure decision, although she said she believes the protest may have a negative effect on her appeal.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible and not more than 500 words. They must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. They must be typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-2289.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor
TRAVIS PIERSON, Managing Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor BILL SAVADOVE, Arts Editor
MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors
BILL PHILPOTT, Productions Editor

Assistant News Editors
DAN SKWIRE, ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW
GREG HART & JUSTIN SMITH
Assistant Sports Editors
STEVE BRODY, KERR HOUSTON, ANNE JOSEPH
Assistant Layout Editors
ASHESH SHAH, ELISA DUGUNDJI, SARAH OUCHI

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Letters

Wright's statement was unfair to coaches

To the Editor:

I should like to comment on Heien Matthews' article in the latest Insider where she quotes Professor Lisa Wright as stating: "The coaches don't understand the potential long-term educational damage that can result from telling players they are here to play football. The coaches keep articulating that idea. They believe that."

In 18 years as Athletics Director at Williams I can categorically state that I have never heard, nor has it ever been repeated to me, that statements like those Professor Wright attributes to our football coaches have been made by any coaches at Williams. Conversely, in department meetings and coaching evaluations with students as well as with hundreds of conversations with students and faculty the exact opposite position has emerged. Coaches clearly understand the priorities of students at Williams and have articulated these time and again.

This kind of statement, attributed to Professor Wright, is grossly inaccurate, unfair and does a disservice to her faculty colleagues who coach football.

Robert R. Peck

New shuttle needed, not demanding

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to Leslie Jeff's letter in the February 14 Record which maintained that the Freshman Council proposal of a shuttle to grocery stores is insensitive and demanding. I fail to see how such a service could be either of these things.

The shuttle service implemented by the Freshman Council would be essentially an organized carpool. It would be no different in principle, for example, than a group of upperclassmen using their friend's car to drive to Price Chopper. As we are freshmen and therefore have no cars, we would be using college vans. At present, freshmen may have the most difficulty finding transportation because our classmates are prohibited from having cars on campus. It is possible that in the future, due to the parking problem, sophomores may be denied car privileges as well. An organized system of transportation could possibly be of use to a large number of students, not only freshmen. I cannot understand how this type of carpool could be construed as being insensitive to the rest of the community.

Secondly, the shuttle would not be at all "demanding." Drivers would be members of the Freshman Council and others from our class, volunteering to serve their classmates and perhaps members of other classes as well. The request for the use of college vans is certainly not an unusual or particularly demanding one. The vans are available for the use of college organizations, which is exactly what we are. The expenses for gas would be negligible and easily handled by our budget.

Finally I would like to mention that we do realize that there is bus service to North Adams. As we stated on our survey, we are only looking into the possibility of a shuttle. The first step we plan to take, in fact, is to provide greater publicity of the bus schedule. However, if the purpose in leaving campus is to escape the high prices on Spring Street, paying money for a bus does not seem logical.

I am sorry that Leslie Jeff considers us to be "spoiled, demanding kids." We are simply concerned with better serving the needs of our class and the school as a whole.

Molly O'Meara '92,
Freshman Council President
Abel Henry '92, Vice President
Jody Weisberg '92, Secretary/Treasurer
Eric Kaye '92, College Council Rep.

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the letter in last week's Record referring to the shuttle to Price Chopper. The letter, written by a senior, addressed a matter that is mainly a problem of freshmen from her own narrow point of view.

I do not know if Ms. Jeff's car in Williamstown, but I do know that she has permission to do so. The people of the community also may own cars. However, I, a freshman, cannot. Coincidentally, this discussion takes place concurrently with a proposal to ban sophomore parking next year.

Also, the people of the Williamstown community do not pay upwards of $17,000 annually to be put in a redutive, nearly monopolized area. The shops on Spring Street, realistically the only ones to which we have free access, offer an outrageously small selection of goods for outrageously large prices.

I do not feel the shuttle would be effectively separating the college from the community. It is not as if we are arriving at Bloomingdale's in limousines. It is only a few students in a van at Price Chopper. Ms. Jeff's "exaggeration" as she most accurately put it, is indeed inappropriate hyperbole.

Until a better solution can be reached, such as an on-campus, non-profit Co-op run by students (yes, an ambitious but attainable goal), the shuttle is the best idea yet. Praise to the Freshman Council for successfully instituting the proposal. Meanwhile, I think Ms. Jeff, who condescendingly referred to herpeers (if a few years younger) as "a bunch of spoiled, demanding kids" should think again about who's being insensitive.

Thomas H. Warren '92

To the Editor:

I would like to commend the Freshman Council for their proposal to start a van service between Williams and Price

Chopper. Although I am an avid 'B' bus rider (an average of once per week), I am also the first one in the car when the question, "Does anyone want to go to Price Chopper?" is heard. Why this paradox when the 'B' goes right past Price Chopper about 45-50 minutes after the hour, and returns around 25-35 minutes later? After sitting time for crossing route two and the parking lot, plus waiting outside a few extra minutes before the bus should show, the shopper has about 15 minutes in the store. Of course, if one needs more time, the bus is hourly, so the rider can take on an extra hour to the Price Chopper excursion. Added incentives for riding the bus to Price Chopper are waiting out on route two in the cold with your groceries and paying a $1.40 fare for $5 worth of soda. Notably, citizens of the Berkshires rarely use the 'B' for their grocery shopping, although Williams students without cars are being asked to do so now. Being one of these students, I would like to thank the Freshman Council for their proposal, and urge that it be enacted, so a shuttle service between Williams and Price Chopper will make grocery shopping accessible for everyone.

Tambyn Babcock '90

Trainer's accessibility wins Williams praise

To the Editor:

I am a student in my fourth year at Colgate University, and this past December I had the pleasure of taking part with my team in Williams' squash tournament for the second time. I arrived at Williams with lower back problems, which our Colgate sports trainer would not attend to, because squash at Colgate is a club sport, not a varsity one. At Colgate, the athletic trainer is available only to members of varsity sports teams or special referrals from the Health Center.

I am writing you to publicly thank and congratulate Williams for offering open access to the important sports medicine service, and to thank in particular Don Del Negro, the athletic trainer who took the time to attend to me -- teaching me important exercises which I am still using today. Mr. Del Negro also took the time to offer service to at least two other injured members of our team.

I understand the staffing and financial limitations under which sports medicine works -- offering services to such a large part of the Williams community, and I would encourage the college to continue offering open service with a needed increase in staffing and/or financial backing to the benefit of athletes and staff alike.

Thomas Nevin

Students should help their Armenian peers

To the Editor:

I am an American-Armenian student currently attending Rutgers University in New Jersey. As I begin the new semester, I can't help but wonder how the students in Armenia feel. Most, if not all, of the students have lost loved ones and friends and many have been injured, some permanently. In addition, most of the universities in the area have been completely destroyed. It is estimated that 88 schools were leveled within 3 minutes on the day the earthquake hit.

None of us could have predicted or prevented the earthquake. However, we can help to rebuild shattered lives. In particular, I am appealing to the students of American universities to help ease the pain of the students in Armenia. I am asking that we as students organize fundraising events for the specific purpose of rebuilding the schools and universities.

Funds can be raised in many different ways. Booths can be set up in the student center and dances, concerts, and other student activities can be held for the special purpose of aiding the victims of the earthquake. Students can even organize a neighborhood campaign to raise money.

Since the earthquake, I have been actively involved in relief efforts, organized by the Armenian General Benevolent Union. The AGBU, established in 1906, is the largest Armenian philanthropic organization in the world. The AGBU created the Armenia Aid program. The AGBU Board of Directors has pledged to spend 100 percent of all monies raised to aid the victims in Armenia. Donations earmarked for specific purposes will be used only for that purpose. Therefore, all monies raised by students in American universities, which are earmarked for the purpose of rebuilding the schools and universities, will be used only for that purpose.

The AGBU will attempt to provide speakers to you and your student groups if requested. In addition, the AGBU would be happy to discuss ways in which your student groups can help and provide you with information about the fundraising activities of other schools in your area. Posters advertising the plight of the Armenians have been printed and are available upon request. Please feel free to call Alex Markarian, Chairman of the AGBU Armenia Aid Fundraising Committee at his office at (212) 221-5730, for further information about the organization or any other questions you may have about the Armenia Aid program.

The cost to rebuild the shattered region in Armenia and the lives of those affected is too large for any one nation or people to bear alone. The Armenians need our assistance. As the new semester begins with all the hope surrounding it, let us think about our fellow students in Armenia who now have no schools to attend and who have questions rather than hope surrounding their future. Please help. Thank you.

Donations should be sent to AGBU Armenia Aid, 585 Saddle River Road, Saddle Brook New Jersey 07662, (201) 797-7600 or 1-800-282-9877.

David Kevorkian

Both parties should help less fortunate

by Ken Levy '91

This past week, I had the opportunity to sit in on and take part in one of the first and only spontaneous debates to arise between members of the Garfield Republican Club. While the merits of the debate may not be altogether irrelevant, I do not want to get into details for fear of losing the very readers I hope to keep. For this article is intended not only for the Williams community at large but also for members of the Republican Club itself.

The essence of the debate entailed a decision about whether or not the Republican Club should sponsor a proposal by a certain organization on campus, the main goals of which consist in improving the environment and helping the less fortunate. Certainly, what one organization deems will improve the environment, another organization may just as easily demonstrate will not improve the environment.

Nevertheless, what bothers me about the club is not the issues to which it is dedicated but rather the issues to which it is not dedicated. I refer specifically to the three issues of hunger, homelessness, and the environment -- problems that some of the members see more as "liberal" concerns than human concerns. I agree with them that Lyndon Johnson's "War on Poverty," the idea that greater monetary expenditures can solve all such social and economic misfortunes, is not the answer. But what, my fellow Republicans, is the answer? Are we so concerned with demonstrating the fallacies of liberal policies that we fail to come up with our own solutions?

If we are to be consistent, if we are to avoid hypocrisy, if we are to take ourselves seriously as Republicans and therefore seriously as politically involved members of our society (which is more than I can say for the vast majority of our detractors who find the commitment to apathy far more appealing than the commitment to political affairs and social issues), I think we must act upon rather than just applaud George Bush's "thousand points of light."

When Bush spoke these words, he was trying to inspire volunteerism from those people who have in order to help those people who do not have.

But just as John F. Kennedy's "Ask not what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country," was not just a call to Democrats, so too George Bush's "thousand points of light" is not just a call to Republicans. It is a call to all Americans, a call to greater compassion, a call to a "kinder, gentler nation." We must recognize that politics cannot solve everything, that government cannot be the answer to all of our problems, that only through the active and personal involvement of people who do care about the less fortunate can any true long-term improvements come about. Ultimately, the responsibility (such as in the formation of

continued on page 7

At their February 16 meeting, College Council members intently discuss Williams' new bookstore contract and the proposal calling for the revision of Division III course offerings.

Council considers Division III proposal

by Justin Smith

After discussing at length the details of Williams' new bookstore contract with Albion Books, the College Council focused its attention last week on a proposal which calls for the revision of Division III course offerings.

The proposal, which was formulated by the College Council's Division III Committee, is a three-fold plan for increasing the academic rigor of Division III non-major courses.

The plan, which was presented by Division III committee chairman Mitchell Wong '89, calls for the creation of low-level courses, numbered 100 in each section, for non-majors. If implemented, the new courses would include a 100-level course in each upper-level course which is more suitable to their preparation for the subject," he said. In addition, "The course would allow the students to pursue an interest in the major without having to feel the great time commitment or academic competition of the 101 courses."

'One problem is that students are taking classes that are too easy for them.'

Wong said, "The main point of creating a 100-level course is of greater depth." Although the new courses could not be problems that students cited in a survey distributed by the committee.

"Requiring a lab commitment only in the 100 course would encourage many students to avoid this class and take an upper-level class which is more suitable to their preparation for the subject," he said. In addition, "The course would allow the students to pursue an interest in the major without having to feel the great time commitment or academic competition of the 101 courses."

In the report submitted to the Council, Wong explained, "This proposal is supported by and only by our committee so far. We are in the process of receiving students' reactions."

Opinions

Fear and loathing at Williams

The following is a transcript of a tape found in mangled condition in a student-rented apartment in Williamstown after a bloody massacre last Wednesday (responsibility as yet undetermined). The cassette was brought to the attention of the Record and transcribed by Sally Ball '90 and David Reiss '89.

Testing, testing, 1, 2, 3 -- is this thing on, Art? Yeah, Anne, go ahead. This is a recording of a document for the Williams College Office of Public Information to be typed and submitted by March 15 in conjunction with the alumni fund drive. Ready, Art?

Many of you may have begun to worry about a series of problems that might plague the Williams community next year and in the years to come. Talk of a serious dearth of deans, growing class sizes, and large open spaces on campus has disrupted the peaceful purple valley -- not to worry! Soon our little college will be worthy of a new name, the University of Williams, and will also be able to support a more comprehensive bookstore.

Now are these three issues being dealt with? The English department, unlike the ass which endures the load but not the overload, recently stepped into the thick of things and has devised a means to fix the deans' office: they administered a polygraph test to all deans asking them to respond to the question, "Do you believe without reservation that the English department always does the Right Thing?"

All deans except the two who are reputedly the most powerful will, according to our source, be leaving within the next two years. "Who needs 'em'?" said one bystander.

As for the mounting fear regarding increased average class size, a spokesperson for the English department said, "All classes should be modeled after our flagship course, 'Introduction to the Novel,' which integrates thought, writing, and classroom discussion."

The department also realizes that there are trade-offs between doubling the number of buildings on campus and disrupting local ecosystems; specifically, the removal of Pine Cobble may interfere with the growth of official hairy wood-suckle, however with all the new buildings and the people that fill them, the college should be able to support a bookstore -- perhaps even a Walden-books.

The only impediment with which the English department must still reckon is what is called, for lack of a better name, the "secret" department. "A seedy, low-down, underhanded, no good excuse for a department," said our source on the inside. The secret department is rumored to approach the ideal of "Mark Hopkins on one end of the log..." (hence lowering the otherwise admirably large class size averages in other departments). "Fawn," a most close assistant to the alleged ringleader of the secret department (let's call her Ollie) told us that the secret department prides itself on the fact that its professors not only meet with students outside of class, but actually like doing it. Fawn also reported that the secret department allows all students who wish to write theses to write them.

"If this is allowed to continue, not only will everyone be writing theses and demanding individual attention, but it will also throw into question the age-old English department practice of granting the privilege of thesis-writing to merely (and I mean merely) a select few," said our source, who knows.

Contrary to what is commonly believed, the Secret Reconciliation Report for 1988-1989 revealed that, in fact, one of the masterstrokes of the English department coup (a tenured English professor who also happens to be a dean) is not on sabbatical. Instead, he can be seen on campus heading up the counter-secret task force which is seeking the names and whereabouts of members of the secret department.

Currently, he is presumed to be "looking into" Fawn who allegedly shredded the tape.

1) Unannounced rotation of professor's offices, in Stetson, Bronfman, Weston, etc. etc. -- effective in reducing wasted time spent getting to know students who drop by uninvited.

2) The sealing and fumigation of the underdog tunnels -- reputedly the site of secret department "class" meetings.

ing (students are welcome to continue using the tunnels but should be aware that toxic substances may remain in the air for an indefinite period).

3) The conversion of Jenness into the office of the chairman of the English department, where his primary concern will be to continue in the arduous task of forming the English department student "liaison" committee. The department chairman said, "The committee is still in formation," unlike those of other departments, because the kind of student that may be "right" for other departments are not "right" for ours."

At this point in the tape there are some garbled words, and it seems that the cassette has suffered from its unravelling -- we could just make out the sound of someone knocking at the door, and then the sound of a bell ringing, three times, and then, muffled, if through a door, a third voice, Charon-like, interrupts Art and Anne: You never understood, did you? Well you'll have plenty of time to think about it on your trip across."

In light of the bloody massacre, the import of this threat now sticks out. There is a long silence on the tape. Anne says: "Are you trying to rob us?"

The muffled voice responds: "The situation is graver -- we're going to fix you."

Art says: "That's a graver all right..." Here, the sounds on the tape resemble those of a recalcitrant locksmith, working to open a door, the door being thrust open, and a bunsen burner being lit. This is followed by what sounds like about fourteen soldiers rushing to attention in a barracks. In any case, there is a scramble. Art says: "It's the whole Sokolaky! Why are they here? They are our shepherds. We do not want. And why are they heating that torture device?"

Anne responds: "Don't you see? We've been duped. They aren't doing it for our good, but for the good of their own reich, Art!"

Wright files appeal of negative tenure verdict

by Mary Moule

Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright submitted a formal appeal to the Committee on Appointments and Promotions, asking the committee to reconsider its decision to deny her tenure.

Wright said she entered her appeal on February 2, two months after receiving the original decision. "I wanted the maximum time to think about how I would appeal," she said.

According to the Faculty Handbook, the CAP has six weeks to decide whether or not to reconsider Wright's decision. If they do reconsider, they must announce a final decision within three months of the initial appeal date.

The only possible bases for an appeal of a tenure decision are improper consideration -- when factors unrelated to the candidate's academic record come into play -- and failure to accord adequate consideration. The appeal must be on procedural rather than substantive grounds.

Wright confirmed that her appeal was procedural in nature, but refused to comment on the specific issues she had addressed.

Protest not connected Upon learning of the original decision, a student group had organized to protest Wright's tenure denial. According to Cassandra Taliaferro '90, a leader of the group, the filing of a formal appeal will not change their plans. "We're still not officially connected with her appeal in any way," she said.

In January, the group solicited student signatures for a petition urging the CAP to reconsider their decision. Taliaferro said that on February 10, the full list of over 800 signatures was presented to the President of the College Francis Oakley.

She added that although they are not actively working on anything right now, the group is still encouraging students to write letters to Dean of the Faculty John Reichert. "We're also considering contacting alumni, although we haven't made any specific plans to that effect," she said.

Wright said that while she appreciated the efforts of the group, it is possible that the petition could have a negative effect on her appeal. "I'm not capable of pre-play -- and failure to accord adequate consideration. The appeal must be on procedural rather than substantive grounds."

"I'd like [the committee] to be able to sit down and consider this calmly and carefully," Wright said. "It may be politically unwise [for students to create a disturbance], but they're behaving honestly and persistently. They're speaking up because they think it is the right thing to do, and I respect that."

Faculty approves plan to reduce teaching load

continued from page 1

the ad hoc committee which formulated the proposal. "There was a worrisome trend last year; we lost something like 15 or 16 people overall," Goethals said, adding that workload was the main issue for a number of them.

According to Professor of Philosophy Daniel O'Connor, chairman of the department, the philosophy department recently lost one candidate who preferred Williams in virtually every relevant category but chose another college solely because of its smaller workload. Goethals said that there were some faculty members who expressed concern over the potential effect on the quality of classes. As a result, efforts are being made to ensure that the proposal will increase class sizes and decrease the number of available courses as minimally as possible. Reichert added that while the proposal cuts the teaching requirement by nine percent, the actual decrease in courses will be significantly smaller since many faculty do not currently teach the full ten courses. Reichert added that while there are no plans to ask for student opinions on the proposal, he expects the recommendations in his report to prove satisfactory to student concerns.

What did you think of the Winter Carnival from Hell?

I was manhandled by a Perry House officer and I fully intend to press charges. I have a 91. —Timmie Friend '90

We laughed. We cried. We ran the whole gamut of emotions. —Rebekah Timlin '90 and Gina Coleman '89

It was satanic. It was wild. It was from hell. —Dave Oman '90

I loved the day off — it gave me time to cut my toenails. —Seth Rabinowitz '89

Events Calendar

Tonight
7 p.m. The Gaudino Committee is sponsoring a discussion and presentation on the WSP Sociology 029, Life on the Streets: Experimental Seminar on Homelessness in New York City. Weston Hall.

Thursday
7 p.m. The video "Meriton," about the life of an anti-war Trappist monk, will be presented by the Chaplain's Office in Stetson Media Classroom.

Wednesday
6 p.m. The Gaudino Committee will be holding a roundtable discussion, led by Professor of Political Science Raymond Baker, on "Explaining Arab Politics." Reservations available by calling Sara Bott, 8-3252 or Dawn Powers x2849, Wilson Room, Greylock.

7:30 p.m. Sister Barbara DiTommaso of the Diocese of Albany's Commission on Peace and Justice will speak on "Economic Justice for All." Sponsored by the Newman Association, in Room 3, Greylock.

Thursday
8 p.m. "Whatever Happened to the Miracle?" —The German Economy from 1945-1988" will be discussed by Christine Sauer, department of economics at the University of New Mexico. Sponsored by the German Department, in conjunction with the German exhibition at the Williams College Museum of Art, Weston Lounge.

8 p.m. Students who spent Winter Study in Nicaragua will present a slide show and discuss their experiences during January. Brooks-Rogers.

Clerk fights MassPIRG petition

by Lynn Iudono

The controversy over last fall's voter registration drive at Williams is approaching the legal stage. MassPIRG has registered an official complaint against Williamstown Town Clerk Betty Kovacs for harassing some students who attempted to register in Williamstown, according to MassPIRG and Massachusetts state officials.

Many students have said they were told to register in their hometowns rather than Williamstown and were also asked to provide information they felt was unnecessary. The students said that most of Kovacs' requests were directed at foreign and minority students.

In response to MassPIRG's complaint, the Secretary of State's Office in Boston sent Kovacs an affidavit of compliance. By signing the affidavit, she would admit knowledge of the law and agree to comply with it. According to Robin Hall, assistant legal council for the elections division of the secretary's office, however, Kovacs has refused to sign. "She doesn't believe there's anything wrong with informing students about the consequences of registering in Williamstown and her views about these consequences," Hall said.

'She can't let her feelings interfere. That's not her job. She has to trust us to act as responsible citizens.'

Joel McElwain '91, co-coordinator of MassPIRG's Voter Registration Drive, said, "She's admitted to giving the speech only to students, and saying that local politics are none of their business." Hall contacted McElwain a few weeks ago, explaining Kovacs' position and asking him to gather a list of students who were convinced not to register by the Town Clerk.

"It looks like there will be a hearing, where the Secretary of State's Office, at a special hearing board for such problems, will bring suit against Kovacs, unless she backs down," McElwain said. He was convinced not to register by the Town Clerk.

"We advised her that she can request identification, but if the student doesn't have the identification, she still has to register them—that's the law," Hall said.

"I can see where she'd worry about students having an undue influence in town politics, but she can't let her feelings interfere. That's not her job. She has to trust us to act as responsible citizens," Josh Becker '91, the MassPIRG chapter president, said. Becker said that he personally was harassed by Kovacs, who told him that there were no important local issues on the November ballot.

"The net result [of Kovacs' actions] was that fewer students registered to vote here," Derek Creamer '90, chair of the board of directors of MassPIRG, said. "The absentee vote effect is a dispersed one. As a social group, the only way students can have power is if they vote as a bloc."

"The net result [of Kovacs' actions] was that fewer students registered to vote here," Derek Creamer '90, chair of the board of directors of MassPIRG, said. "The absentee vote effect is a dispersed one. As a social group, the only way students can have power is if they vote as a bloc."

Kovacs admits violations

Hall said that when Kovacs was originally contacted by the state office, she denied any charges of discrimination, but did admit to requesting identification and denying the students registra-

Albion gets book rights for college

continued from page 1

opening," Dewey said. "People got through faster and we had a good set-up. Ninety-eight percent of the books were in before Winter Break."

The future of the Williams Bookstore is uncertain. "It will depend on what our final arrangement with the college will be," Dewey said. "I had planned on working for three more years before retiring." He has sold books for the college since 1957.

The administration does not anticipate any problems with the switch, according to Edwards. A student-faculty committee will be formed to make things as smooth as possible. "Basically, they will work with the manager and as a liaison to the community," she said.

No Spring Street drought
Many Spring Street merchants are concerned that the bookstore on Water Street will change student shopping patterns, according to James Drummond, owner of Drummond Cleaners. He organized merchants to send a letter to President Oakley informing him of their concerns.

The letter, which was signed by people from nine businesses expressed concern that the new bookstore would cause decentralization and change traffic patterns, adversely affecting business on Spring Street, Drummond said.

Drummond said that he had hoped that the letter would reach Oakley in time to affect the final decision. Accord-

The former Grundy's Garage on Water Street will, by September, be the Albion Bookstore. The college recently granted Albion the exclusive rights to sell textbooks to Williams students.

ing to Edwards, the petition was considered, but the administration did not feel that it would be a problem. "It was our feeling that students would go to Spring Street for other needs."

Another concern of local merchants was that the bookstore might start selling other items besides books. Merchants fear that they might start selling Williams paraphernalia and even drugstore items, according to Drummond.

"It will be a cold day in hell if they don't start selling stationery,"

Edwards said. "They are an academic bookstore. They don't sell other items."

Albion does not currently sell non-book items, and Murphy has assured the college that he will not do so. Blankenship announced at the College Council meeting on February 16.

This issue may have been a deciding factor in choosing Albion. "Brennan's has an impressive operation, but they tend to sell sundry items as much as books," Reed said at the faculty meeting.

"They offered to pay a large sum for the contract, but they would sell items that might compete with Spring Street merchants."

"There was some financial loss in not taking [Brennan's], but we felt very strongly that we did not want to bring in competition," Edwards added.

In Other Ivory Towers

University of Michigan
In the wake of a report blasting the state of Michigan for its toxic waste cleanup efforts, the university's Department of Natural Resources revealed that two sites on school grounds may pose a threat to the university community. A local county health department identified the sites in 1985 as needing attention, but the university has yet to fully investigate the locations to determine the extent of the problem. A week earlier, the Public Interest Research Group in Michigan gave the state an "F" for its laws and efforts to clean up waste sites. In 1988, the optional 75-cent fee that was attached to students' term bills for PIRGIM funding was discontinued, but the group is campaigning to have a two dollar fee added back to student bills. PIRGIM officials attributed the loss of funding to students who actively campaigned against the group.

Hamilton College
Hamilton may be denied federal aid grants if it cannot find a way to increase the amount of class hours taught at the school. In a study by the New York State Education Department Regulations Board, Hamilton came up about 20,000 minutes short of the required 90,000 minutes of classroom instruction. The school has attempted to waive the requirement, but board officials have not yet commented on whether the school's petition will be accepted. Hamilton eliminated its January term in 1988, which college officials say is the cause of the shortfall.

More Hamilton College
A man alleged to have trespassed at several colleges in the Northeast was arrested February 4 in the women's shower of a dorm at Hamilton. James Seaver Ross was found naked in the shower, and he was charged with second degree burglary by New York State Police. Security officials from schools as far apart as Buffalo and Amherst said that Ross has appeared on their campuses in the past.

Trinity College
Trinity's version of Winter Carnival was less than a success, because of a strict new alcohol policy that allowed alcoholic beverages to be served to people with a valid I.D. only between 8 and 10 p.m. More events were planned to provide students with alternative forms of entertainment, but turnout was not as heavy as in past years.

University of Pennsylvania
Fraternity leaders recently gave their general support to a new alcohol policy at Penn. The university has said that student groups must file party plans before having parties with alcohol. The original ruling, however, banned kegs from Penn, causing a campus uproar with fraternities leading the protests. Student planning parties must also check for I.D. and designate one person of legal age who is to be ultimately responsible for the party. The Greek council at Penn is creating a committee to work out the details of the new policy with university leaders.

Compiled by news staff from college newspapers.

Exhibit rethinks the medium of paint on canvas

by Stephen Best
February 11 marked the opening of the exhibition entitled "Refigured Paintings: The German Image, 1960-1988" at the Williams College Museum of Art. Opening concurrently with the Guggenheim Museum show of the same name, the WCMA show gathers the work of 24 German artists in its 1935, 1954, and Kroh-McClelland galleries.

Unlike the last major exhibition put together by WCMA ("Postmodernism...in 1987") "Refigured Paintings..."

The new German painting addresses the questions which rise from a country severed.

does not represent a comprehensive gathering of the works of contemporary German artists -- by "comprehensive" I refer both to our understanding of what it means to be a part of contemporary movements in German painting, and who is taking part in these movements.

Overall, the new German painting addresses the questions which rise from the fragments of a country severed -- by the rise of Hitler and Nazism -- from those aspects of its artistic, intellectual, and social history it feels compelled to affirm. The major painters of contemporary Germany take as their project the development of aesthetic and pictorial ways of countering (or better yet,

The exhibit, "Refigured Paintings: The German Image 1960-1988" will be paintings by German artists. Pictured is New York-Natural History, 1982, by Peter Bommels.

"surviving") the debilitating effects of this act of severance on the German state of being. Towards this end, contemporary German painters address everything from their country's heroes (Markus Lüpertz) and symbols (A.R.

Penck) to the effects of the East/West division on the country itself (M. Lüpertz/G. Baselitz). All of these artists, I might add, are represented in the exhibition.

A.R. Penck's Verteidigung (Defense) of 1982 is a perfect example of a present-day attempt by a German artist to go beyond the mere suggestion of a disorder or imbalance (which comes, in this case, through the establishment of a single German ideology) and actually expose Germany's spiritual/cultural/national symbols of power to be nothing more than empty signifiers and abstractions. Penck reveals these symbols to be signs that were, having lost their original context, they have also lost their power but, have not turned into its opposite -- weakness.

On another level, Marcus Lüpertz, whose work Denkmal der Helden (Monument of Heroes) of 1982 is in the show, offers us a mass of weightless images aimed at directing us to an understanding of our heroes as images that displace neither time nor space in the contemporary German context. They are heroes without meaning, lost heroes, mad heroes. It is only through acknowledging their madness that Germans can live in their own mad world -- a world which is divided against itself.

It is only through acknowledging their madness that Germans can live in their own mad world.

These and a few other works in the show emphatically communicate the widespread fixation of contemporary German artists with their nation's history. The remaining works in the show make rather ineffective attempts to express these same concepts.

The paintings that do manage to establish some form of concrete expression, or stimulate some type of engagement on the part of the viewer, are sustained by the potency of other, more compelling works.

Movie review

'Women on the Verge' achieves hilarity

by Robert Weisberg

Have you ever had one of those days where your lover leaves you, your best friend becomes the love slave of a group of Shiite terrorists, your lover's son and this fiancée try to buy your apartment (until the fiancée drinks gaspacho spiked with barbiturates) and the police come to arrest your friend but instead drink the spiked gaspacho?

In "Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown," playing at Images until Thursday, everyone has that kind of day. Every day.

That should tell you something about this movie, which has a plot that was seemingly picked at random. It's not particularly hard to follow, since the entire movie covers a eight-hour period, but haphazardness is the order of the day.

Still, it works. Director Pedro Almodóvar has paced the film in such a way that every crazy event that occurs (there are an extraordinary number of bizarre things happening) doesn't seem that important. Thus, when the best friend of Pepa, the film's protagonist, recounts her tale of Shiite terrorists crashing at her apartment, you don't feel sorry for her. You laugh.

That happens often. "Women on the Verge" is very funny, which is all the more impressive since one of the lines

In the movie are particularly comic. The characters in this movie are, as the title would indicate, falling completely apart, and they deal with their respective crises the best way they know how. And in Spanish, to boot.

And the movie is a riot. As Pepa, contrast between her composed manner (she is an actress of sorts; she lip-synchs for English-language movies) and her deteriorating life is what really makes this movie great.

The acting throughout the movie is strong. Pepa's friend, the terrorist groupie, is also terrific. So are the son (a kissing maniac) and his bitchy fiancée, who becomes more likable after coming out of an erotic-dream-filled coma induced by a batch of spiked gaspacho.

Hell, everyone's great, down to the weird cable who drives more of a Seven-Eleven on wheels than a taxi. He almost steals the show.

But he can't. "Women on the Verge" belongs to the normal people. The fact that there are almost no exceptional people in this movie is what makes it so good.

Going baroque

Harpichordist Mark Kroll and Violinist Carol Lieberman take a bow after an evening of baroque music at the Clark Art Institute last Wednesday. Calling themselves the Pernucio Ensemble, the duo performed music by Pierre Gavines, Francois Couperin, Simon Leduc, H.I.F. Von Biber, and C.P.E. Bach.

Arts In View

February 22 At 8:00 p.m., Dorothea Dietrich, professor of art history at Princeton University, will lecture on developments in German painting after World War II in Lawrence Hall, room 231.

February 23 At 4:30 p.m., Victor Hill, department of mathematics, will lecture on "Mathematical Aspects of the Music of Bach" in Brooks-Rogers.

February 24 At 4:00 p.m., Director of the Guggenheim Foundation Thomas Krens will lecture on "Refigured Paintings: The German Image 1960-1988" at WCMA.

At 8:00 p.m., the Northern Berkshire Council of the Arts will present the McCoy Tyner Trio at the Clark Art Institute. The concert is part of the Cabin Fever Jazz series.

February 25 From 8:00 to 9:00 p.m., the Williams Jazz Ensemble will present "Winter Wipe-Out," an evening of traditional and contemporary jazz in Chapin Hall. This concert marks the world premier of "A Pretty Lot," a laid-back bluesy chart by freshman trumpeter Mark Sutton.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinemas I, II, III Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
Twins	7:05 & 9:15
The Burbs	7:05 & 9:15
Rain Man	7:00 & 9:20
Images Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown	February 17-21	7:00 & 9:00
Torch Song Trilogy	February 24-28	7:00 & 9:00
North Adams Cinema Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure	7:10 & 9:20
The Burbs	7:00 & 9:30
Rain Man	7:00 & 9:30
The Fly II	7:10 & 9:20
Pittsfield Cinema Center Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
Mississippi Burning, True Believers, Working Girl, Beaches, Gleaning the Cube, Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30
Rain Man 6:45 & 9:15
Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure, Three Fugitives, The Burbs, The Fly II, Twins: Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:15 & 9:30
Berkshire Mall Cinema Rte 8, Lanesborough, 499-2558
The Fly II	1:10 3:50 7:20 9:40
Three Fugitives	12:40 3:20 6:50 9:25
Oliver and Company	12:30 2:00
The Accused	4:00
Her Alibi	7:10 & 9:20
Beaches	12:35 3:15 6:50 9:15
Working Girl	1:10 3:50 7:20 9:40
Rain Man	12:30 3:10 6:45 9:20
Gleaning the Cube	1:30 4:15 7:45 9:50
Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure	12:40 3:20 6:50 9:25
Twins	1:15 7:25
The Naked Gun	3:55 9:55
The Burbs	12:50 3:30 7:00 9:25

Not so pretty in pink

On Thursday, John "Spud" Freedman '91 stapled about 900 pieces of pink paper to the walls of Baxter Hall in protest against the college's use of non-recyclable paper for a two-line announcement. "Colored paper makes me angry," Freedman said. "There is no reason to put anything on colored paper, especially for a short message from the switchboard." He added that he believes he brought more attention to the substance of the message, security's change of phone numbers, than the announcement itself. "Except for the staples comment, the response to the display was positive -- everyone agrees it was a waste," he said. One student wrote on the paper that Freedman had wasted staples gratuitously. Freedman said, "I responded that this person missed the point -- I was making a statement concerning waste of all kinds." The papers were taken down Sunday.

Steinman

Winter carnival jamboree from Hell is heavenly

by Nicole Peret
Last Friday evening, the Mount Holyoke V-8's joined six Williams College cappella singing groups for the Winter Carnival from Hell Singing Jamboree. The Gospel Choir, the Octet, the Accidentals, the Ephias, the Springstreeters, and Ephoria all took part.

The rich, full voice of the Gospel Choir carried, and they were well received by the audience each subsequent act as it came on. Ephoria repeated the theme of "Carnival from Hell" in all of their introductions.

The next group to perform was the Octet, which, as member Chip Becker '92 pointed out, numbered only six. Despite the reduction in size, the group sang well. Ronald Etianon '92 did an outstanding job as the soloist in "Up on the Roof." The group also performed "Stardust" with Becker as soloist, and concluded with "Painted Love" sung by Marc Belier '91. Belier's performance was enjoyable, though at one point he forgot the words to the song and had some trouble staying in key.

The Gospel Choir, led by Michelle

Jennifer Payne '89 leads the Accidentals in "You Don't Own Me." The Accidentals were one of several groups that participated in the "Winter Carnival from Hell" Singing Jamboree.

Thomas '89, gave an exceptional performance. Thomas soloed in the opening number, "No Greater Love." She also did an outstanding job directing the group. The rich, full voice of the group carried, and they were well received by the audience. The Gospel Choir concluded with "He is Wonderful."

The Accidentals began with "Sweet

Judy Blue Eyes." Their performance was slightly marred because the members of the group were singing singing in two different keys. Jen Payne '89 sang the solo for "You Don't Own Me." Payne was fun to watch as she directed the song to a member of the audience. The group concluded with an exuberant performance of "Rawhide" sung by Cait Osbourne '91.

The Ephias followed, opening with "Happy Together." The addition of a final verse written by the Ephias was a wonderful surprise. Ellen Hightstone '91 sang beautifully in "Heart's Desire." The group introduced a debut song, "My Girl," with Tim Shaw '89 as soloist.

The Mount Holyoke V-8's sang a longer program than the Williams group. The group sang well, although the choice of songs was limited. The high point in their performance was "Is that the Way You Look?" The group brought Adam Weiner '92 on stage, and the soloist sang directly to him. Overall, the group sang nicely, even though the songs all sounded somewhat the same.

The Springstreeters were next. They began by stumbling onto the stage in their nightclothes. When they "noticed" the audience, they ran off the stage, leaving senior Dave Allen onstage with his teddy bear and toothbrush. Their first song was "Secret Agent Man" with John Nelson '89 as the soloist. Undoubtedly, the best part of their performance was a selection from "Walt Disney's 'The Jungle Book,'" performed by sophomore Kory Ireland. The group was comical as they moved about the stage like apes.

Performing a selection from the Jungle Book, the Springstreeters were comical as they moved about the stage like apes.

Ephoria, the organizers of the concert, performed last. Their first song, "Tuxedo Junction," went very well, with a solid performance by Liz Rogers '91. The next song, "Please," featured soloist Amy Whitenour '90. Whitenour sang well, though she was much too quiet to be heard clearly. Tacy Byham put in an exciting performance as the soloist in "Too Much Time," the group's final song.

Overall, the concert was a success. Ephoria's efforts to keep with the Carnival from Hell theme were fun to watch, and they should be commended for their effort in organizing the jamboree.

Track

continued from page 8
finish second and qualify for the final. The effort may have tired him, but when he returned to the track in the afternoon he managed a fifth place finish. Another freshman, Larry Smith, took sixth in the 200 meters with a time of 23.65 seconds. Brad Behr '92 jumped a personal record 6'2" in the high jump but did not score against the team field.

On the road to Bowdoin... The high point of the women's meet was Platt's 1500-meter race. With the splits she needed to qualify engraved in her mind, Platt set out to break 4:42 and earn herself a trip to Bowdoin. She had help, as a Smith opponent took the race out hard. Platt held on, coming through each quarter below the time needed. Though she finished second, her time of 4:38 will send her to nationals and give her a spot in the Williams women's indoor track record book.

Platt was understandably elated. "I'm so happy to finally get below the standard," she said, after the race. "I'm going to have to think about going after the outdoor record this spring," she said.

Wrestling

continued from page 9
might have scored. A gritty struggle in which neither side proved able to gain the riding time, the match ended with the disoriented Mawn on the short end of a 1-3 decision.

In 167 and 177, both Sean Glynn '91 and Doug Dreffer '92 had to suffer the agony of a turnover after leading in the first period. Stacked up against Cardinal Captain Ed Brown '89, a top competitor in his class, Glynn's lead of 3-2 crumbled when Brown rebounded with his arsenal of takedowns to settle the dust with a 10-4 victory. Dreffer allowed his inexperience to seal his defeat as Jeff Hurd '89 ended the match to his liking after a tie of 2-2 at the end of second period.

The highlight against Wesleyan occurred in 142 where Eddie Anderson '90 cruised to his finest match of the year against a tough Cardinal. Becoming a little bit conservative in the third period and thereby relaxing his 8-2 grip on his opponent, Anderson nevertheless retained control of the match till the end and came on top with a 11-7 victory.

Williams now heads into the Division I

New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

Senior distance runner Christie Dempsey placed third in the 1000-yard run, while teammate Susan Donna '92 was fourth. Mika Brzezinski '89 ran the 5000 meters in 19:17. In other events, Helde Beebe '91 placed fourth in the 300 meters, Jen Morris '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:25.5, and Alison Smith placed sixth in the 200 meters. The Eph mile relay team of Smith, Shields, Macauley, and Kim Bannardall '91, ran 4:15.5, their best time of the season.

Williams now heads into the Division I New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

Senior distance runner Christie Dempsey placed third in the 1000-yard run, while teammate Susan Donna '92 was fourth. Mika Brzezinski '89 ran the 5000 meters in 19:17. In other events, Helde Beebe '91 placed fourth in the 300 meters, Jen Morris '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:25.5, and Alison Smith placed sixth in the 200 meters. The Eph mile relay team of Smith, Shields, Macauley, and Kim Bannardall '91, ran 4:15.5, their best time of the season.

Williams now heads into the Division I New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national

added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

Senior distance runner Christie Dempsey placed third in the 1000-yard run, while teammate Susan Donna '92 was fourth. Mika Brzezinski '89 ran the 5000 meters in 19:17. In other events, Helde Beebe '91 placed fourth in the 300 meters, Jen Morris '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:25.5, and Alison Smith placed sixth in the 200 meters. The Eph mile relay team of Smith, Shields, Macauley, and Kim Bannardall '91, ran 4:15.5, their best time of the season.

Williams now heads into the Division I New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national

added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

Senior distance runner Christie Dempsey placed third in the 1000-yard run, while teammate Susan Donna '92 was fourth. Mika Brzezinski '89 ran the 5000 meters in 19:17. In other events, Helde Beebe '91 placed fourth in the 300 meters, Jen Morris '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:25.5, and Alison Smith placed sixth in the 200 meters. The Eph mile relay team of Smith, Shields, Macauley, and Kim Bannardall '91, ran 4:15.5, their best time of the season.

Williams now heads into the Division I New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national

added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

Senior distance runner Christie Dempsey placed third in the 1000-yard run, while teammate Susan Donna '92 was fourth. Mika Brzezinski '89 ran the 5000 meters in 19:17. In other events, Helde Beebe '91 placed fourth in the 300 meters, Jen Morris '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:25.5, and Alison Smith placed sixth in the 200 meters. The Eph mile relay team of Smith, Shields, Macauley, and Kim Bannardall '91, ran 4:15.5, their best time of the season.

Williams now heads into the Division I New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national

added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

Senior distance runner Christie Dempsey placed third in the 1000-yard run, while teammate Susan Donna '92 was fourth. Mika Brzezinski '89 ran the 5000 meters in 19:17. In other events, Helde Beebe '91 placed fourth in the 300 meters, Jen Morris '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:25.5, and Alison Smith placed sixth in the 200 meters. The Eph mile relay team of Smith, Shields, Macauley, and Kim Bannardall '91, ran 4:15.5, their best time of the season.

Williams now heads into the Division I New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national

added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

Senior distance runner Christie Dempsey placed third in the 1000-yard run, while teammate Susan Donna '92 was fourth. Mika Brzezinski '89 ran the 5000 meters in 19:17. In other events, Helde Beebe '91 placed fourth in the 300 meters, Jen Morris '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:25.5, and Alison Smith placed sixth in the 200 meters. The Eph mile relay team of Smith, Shields, Macauley, and Kim Bannardall '91, ran 4:15.5, their best time of the season.

Williams now heads into the Division I New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national

added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

Senior distance runner Christie Dempsey placed third in the 1000-yard run, while teammate Susan Donna '92 was fourth. Mika Brzezinski '89 ran the 5000 meters in 19:17. In other events, Helde Beebe '91 placed fourth in the 300 meters, Jen Morris '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:25.5, and Alison Smith placed sixth in the 200 meters. The Eph mile relay team of Smith, Shields, Macauley, and Kim Bannardall '91, ran 4:15.5, their best time of the season.

Williams now heads into the Division I New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national

added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

Senior distance runner Christie Dempsey placed third in the 1000-yard run, while teammate Susan Donna '92 was fourth. Mika Brzezinski '89 ran the 5000 meters in 19:17. In other events, Helde Beebe '91 placed fourth in the 300 meters, Jen Morris '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:25.5, and Alison Smith placed sixth in the 200 meters. The Eph mile relay team of Smith, Shields, Macauley, and Kim Bannardall '91, ran 4:15.5, their best time of the season.

Williams now heads into the Division I New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national

added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

Senior distance runner Christie Dempsey placed third in the 1000-yard run, while teammate Susan Donna '92 was fourth. Mika Brzezinski '89 ran the 5000 meters in 19:17. In other events, Helde Beebe '91 placed fourth in the 300 meters, Jen Morris '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:25.5, and Alison Smith placed sixth in the 200 meters. The Eph mile relay team of Smith, Shields, Macauley, and Kim Bannardall '91, ran 4:15.5, their best time of the season.

Williams now heads into the Division I New England's this week before running the ECAC Championships on March 4. These meets offer two more chances for Williams athletes to qualify for national added, referring to the 4:28 time run by Ann Dannhauser '90 last year.

College Students!
Summer in Colorado

REWARDING SUMMER experience in the COLORADO mountains. For students who are interested in a camp setting, backpacking, horseback riding, wildlife ecology, many outdoor programs. WRITE FOR: Inland Empire Wilderness

SANBORN WESTERN CAMPS, FLORENCE, CO. 80516

Camera Ready
Resumes
$17.70

Offset Printed in just a few hours!
We do all types of printing
53 Main St.
North Adams, MA
983-3414

$60.00 PER HUNDRED remaining letters from home!
Details, send self-addressed, stamped envelope:
Associates
Box 309-T
Colonia, NJ 07067

The best in Mountain Bikes

KLEIN
FAT
SPECIALIZED CITY CYCLES
DIAMOND BACK

Assembled with care by professional bicycle mechanics

the Mountain Goat
"The Complete Outdoor Shop"
130 Water St., Williamstown, Mass. 458-8445

THE SWEATER VENTURE
Imports from the Andes

THE SWEATER MAN
Introduces a limited supply of the new WILLIAMS COLLEGE SWEATER 100% wool handknit
Baxter Hall February 22nd & 23rd

CLARKSBURG BREAD CO.
PRODUCTS BAKED FRESH FROM SCRATCH DAILY
Coffee • Tea • Juice • Soft Drinks
OPEN EVERY DAY (413) 458-2251

INDIAN BLANKET
Blanket made from pure wool and cotton. It is a beautiful blanket that is perfect for the winter months. It is made in the USA and is a great gift for the holidays.

Men's squash shuts down Cardinals, 9-0

by Lewis Fisher

While the weather may have disappointed many Ephwrest sports fans last week, Williams college athletes, including the squash team, did not. By beating the Wesleyan Cardinals 9-0 last Saturday, the Eph racketmen kept the Little Three crown at Williams for a record 15th consecutive year and ended their regular season with eight straight wins. Standing at 15-6, the team looks forward to Nationals at Yale next weekend where they hope to win their division. Saturday's match against the Cardinals began with a sentimental tribute to the many seniors on the team; the dual match against Wesleyan was their last. The seniors' performances on the court were unaffected by this knowledge, however, as they all came away with victories. The Ephs were clearly more experienced than their rivals from Connecticut, who were able to garner just three games in 11 matches.

The domination of Little Three competition by the Ephmen, who also crushed Amherst 9-0, is a result of a tradition of excellent coaching at Williams that has been passed from Clarence Chaffee to Sean Sloane and now to Paul Assalante. Coach Assalante is currently preparing his men for Nationals: "It's a new season [now]," he said. Ranked seventh or eighth in the country, the Ephs will probably be the first seed in the second bracket of the tournament.

"We're going to have to prove we're better than schools like Navy, Trinity and Tufts again because they'll be gunning for us," said Assalante of teams the Ephs have already beaten and that they may face again.

The junior varsity team, led by sophomore Henry Woo, also played on Saturday but with less success. The young squad traveled to Hotchkiss where they met an extremely deep team coached by Williams Alumnae Rick Hedeman '87. While Henry Woo pulled out a victory at the number one slot, the five other Ephs fell to the unflinching but consistent tails and cross courts of the Hotchkissers.

W hoops

continued from page 10

to victory. Although co-captain Nancy Hedeman '89 was her dominant self (20 points, 14 rebounds), Crouchley and sophomore Chrisy Caglan had poor shooting days. Crouchley (14 points, mostly late in the game) converted only six of 20 shots on the day but led the team with seven assists. Cadigan, too, compensated by adding six rebounds and six assists to her 11 points.

"The key to the game was teamwork. I told the team that we needed scoring from everyone on the court, even if it was just a couple of points," explained Coach Nancy Roberts.

Freshman Kris Broadhurst played an excellent game off the bench. She appeared very comfortable directing the offense and was aggressive on defense. Broadhurst, playing point guard, scored 15 points and surprised her Cardinal opponents by ripping down 8 rebounds. "Kris played like she is capable of playing the rest of her time at Williams," commented Coach Roberts.

Megan King '90 was another effective reserve, putting in eight points on four-of-five shooting. Broadhurst saw limited action because of foul trouble but netted seven points and played a strong defensive game. Juli Walsh '90 and Meg Brown '91 helped out underneath. Williams is 7-1 at home and 12-6 overall, and are currently ranked 10th in New England.

Bantams came from behind Last Tuesday, the Ephs dropped another tough game on the road, this time falling to a talented Trinity squad. Williams was up by nine in the first half when the Bantams went into a full-court zone press. The Ephs reacted poorly but maintained the lead at the half, 33-30.

The second half was close throughout. With a couple of minutes left in the game and Trinity holding a five point advantage, Williams was forced to foul. Trinity converted its free throw opportunities to keep Williams at bay. Both teams shot well, but Williams' turnovers were decisive. Hedeman scored 26 points and cleared 14 rebounds. Borden added 14 points. Amy Chiodo led the Bantams with 18 and 10 rebounds.

Williams hosts Smith tonight at 7:30 to close its home schedule.

I.M. Report

Sunday Night Hockey League
Standings as of Sunday, February 19

Town and Gown	4-1
New Jersey Psychotics	4-1
Smokin' Hole	3-2
Flying Vegetables	3-2
Spinal Tap	1-4
Panda	0-5

Playoffs kicked off with a bang on Sunday night after press time.

Intramural Basketball
Standings as of Saturday, February 18

The Big East Division	The ACC
Cotton Poles	7-0
The Disease	7-0
The Faculty	6-1
The Blue Team	5-2
Snow White and 7 Dwarves	3-4
Robin Lloyd	3-4
The Dean's List	2-5
Buildings and Grounds	1-6
The Seamen	1-6
Team Evis	0-7
The Soccer Team	7-0
Lars Item	6-1
The Gladden Garys	6-1
Black Magic	5-2
Asil Jali	4-3
Ted Moore	3-4
Julius Yang	2-5
The Squash Team	1-6
The Port Boys	1-6
The Gray Team	0-7

Remaining regular season contests to be played on Sunday, February 26.

Republicans should act on their concern

continued from page 3

sponsibility for helping our less fortunate fellow Americans devolves upon us all — conservatives and liberals alike. Recently, a city in Arizona effectively "outlawed" the homeless. The community, tired of seeing and having to deal with humps and tramps in its streets, had the police force them out — out of sight, out of mind. I just wonder if the effort the city took to get rid of the homeless might not have been better spent in providing a little more care for the homeless. If members of the community had possibly imagined themselves in the place of the homeless, maybe they would have felt a little more compassion and would therefore have acted a little less callously. Indeed, the insensitivity of the many is often much more pernicious than the active evil of a few.

And so, my fellow Republicans (and all others who feel some sense of political and social involvement), I ask you, in all seriousness, are you concerned? If not, so be it; concern cannot be forced. But as acknowledged Republicans on what we all recognize to be, whether for good or for bad, an overwhelmingly liberal campus, I cannot believe that you would subject yourselves to the criticism you receive if you were not truly concerned. I therefore ask you, indeed I challenge you, to show that concern wherever concern is needed — in North Adams or Pittsfield or possibly your own hometowns. It is true that Williams needs a stronger Republican voice on campus. But it is also true that actions speak louder than words.

Levy is the treasurer of the Garfield Republican Club.

Council Travel

London 358
Paris 458
Guatemala City 340
Caracas 320
Hong Kong 739
Tokyo 679
Sydney 1128

Restrictions apply, taxes not included.

Check our low teacher fares.
EUROPEAN PASSE
ISSUED ON THE SPOT!
Call for
FREE Student Travel Catalog!
413-256-1261
AMHERST
79 So. Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS
We stock the best in jazz and blues

131 Water St. 458-5229

laCocina
MEXICAN DINING.
ENTERTAINMENT.

With coupon receive
$2.00 off our FANTASTIC FAJITA
Pender chunks of marinated beef, chicken, or both.
Sautéed with veggies and served piping hot with rice, beans, lettuce, tomatoes and hot tortillas & sour cream

not valid on Saturdays

500 State St. • North Adams, MA • 413-684-4757
140 Worcester St. • Pittsfield, MA • 413-499-4029

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
250 Main St. • Williamstown, MA 01267
Tel: 458-8445

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond"
Williams '88

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, by proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best. We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and SHOE and BOOT REPAIR.

(413) 458-4321
66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
01267

Sanitone
Original Machine Dryers

Women's squash takes Little 3

by Laurie Burnett

The women's squash team won their third and much-coveted award of the season this Saturday as they defeated both Wesleyan and Amherst for the Little Three Title. The Eph women defeated Wesleyan 10-0 and Amherst 7-3.

Coach Gail Ramsey was thrilled with her team and their dynamic play. Although the Wesleyan match was not too challenging, the squash women maintained their level of play, winning all their matches 3-0.

Missing their number two player Lisa Bryson '91, everyone moved up a step on the ladder and found their Amherst match slightly more difficult than when they last played Amherst in 11 November competition. However, the squashes, especially Sue Piper '90, rose to the occasion. Ramsey said that Piper had played the best squash that she has seen her play, as Piper won her sensational match in the fifth game with her control.

Judy Kellogg '89 once again showed her skill and defeated her opponent 3-0 at the number two position. Lori Schaefer '89, Laurie Burnett '91 and Miriam Marcus '91 also defeated their Amherst opponents 3-0.

Trinity match
Earlier in the week, Williams played the Trinity squad and lost 0-7. Despite their defeat, the Ephs said they enjoyed playing such challenging opponents. Trinity was the best team Williams has played since the middle of January, and it took the Eph women too long to adapt their play accordingly to sway the match in their direction.

The match could have been much closer, but the Eph women had substantial trouble with tie breakers. Nine games were tie breakers, but Williams only managed to win three of those nine.

JV team ends their season
J.V. women's squash defeated Mt. Holyoke 9-3, an impressive win especially since most of the Williams players have only played squash for one or two years. Holyoke was their last match of the season.

The varsity team, on the other hand, must face four more matches. On Tuesday, the Eph women play Connecticut College and Smith College at home and then round up their season in Boston playing Tufts University and Franklin and Marshall on Saturday.

At least the top four of the squad will continue playing after the regular season ends by competing in the national tournament.

Male swimmers crush outmanned RPI team

by Anne Joseph

After presenting the nine seniors on the men's team with T-shirts to commemorate the last meet of the season prior to New England, the Eph men swam to victory by crushing a sparse squad from R.P.I., 218-62. In a final effort to qualify more swimmers for the New England competition at Bowdoin March 3-5, meet organizers scheduled multiple heats and several exhibitions. The women's swim team, meanwhile, did not have a meet this week, and face New England competition at home next weekend.

From the start, the Engineers entertained no hopes of seriously challenging the Ephs. The opposing team brought a dozen swimmers to race a far more numerous Williams group. The R.P.I. men captured only one first-place victory, as Engineer Robert Yeng took the 100 fly segment of the 400 medley, which was broken into four individual events in order to attain more times, in 54.86.

Williams swept virtually every event. In the 100 breast, Eph senior Evan Davis finished first in 1:01.05, followed by teammates Alec Webster '92 and Dave Caplan '92. In the second, non-scoring heat of the event, Tim Shaw '89 took first in 1:03.73. In the 200 free, Dan Snyder '90 chalked up another Eph win in 1:47.50 while Ivan Sigel '91 and Brad Balter '92 captured the second and third spots for Williams.

The momentum continued in the following event of the 50 free. Chris Cleary '90 hit the wall at 23.41, and was followed promptly by Shaw, John Staudenmayer '92, and Eric Swanson '92 respectively.

In the one-meter event, Williams' Scott Schwager '91 won with 254.40. Teammate Drew Adams '92 took second while Engineer Roberts placed third.

Later in the three-meter event, Schwager again captured top honors by posting 255.90 points, with Roberts and Adams following in second and third place respectively.

Diving bonanza

In the one-meter event, Williams' Scott Schwager '91 won with 254.40. Teammate Drew Adams '92 took second while Engineer Roberts placed third.

Later in the three-meter event, Schwager again captured top honors by posting 255.90 points, with Roberts and Adams following in second and third place respectively.

Ades taking second and third respectively.

However, the divers did not contain themselves to the boards. With a score of 203-60 before the last event, Ades swam the anchor leg of the 400 free relay squad rounded out by Dehmel, Jim Curry '91 and Cleary. The team was trailing a friendly Eph unit composed of Staudenmayer, Webster, Rhode, and freshman Greg Jordan prior to the last leg, but Ades led his lap over the other two teams and ended in fourth place.

Diving coach Glenner muttered to the crowd on the pool deck, "They [the other swimmers] were doing quick."

Schwager swam the 50 free and made the time cut for New England, finishing in 23.69.

Trying to qualify

The meet did prove a challenge to individuals who were attempting to make time cuts for New England or NCAA Nationals. Both Ephmen Paul Dehmel '91 and Jordan kept swimming after the

'We are looking forward to New England. I think we have a good shot at winning.'

1000 free event to try to make a 16:37 cut in the 1650 free. Although Jordan won the 1000 free in 16:16.50 and Dehmel took second, neither made the cut for national competition in the 1650.

Doug Northrop '89, however, swam a 2:15.56 in the 200 fly, and Matthew Eposito turned in a 53.79 in the 100 free; both qualified for New England. Although J.J. Cohen '92 had missed qualifying earlier in the meet, he made the necessary time in the 100 fly in an exhibition following the competition and will be swimming at Bowdoin.

"This year, everyone can go who makes the times. There is no limit on swimmers [we can bring to New England, as opposed to last year]. Seeing these people drop time today after racing gives us confidence that we'll swim fast in New England," commented Gligio.

"We should have by far the largest contingency there. We are looking forward to New England. I think we have a good shot at winning," he continued.

M. hockey

continued from page 10

After Van Belle drove past a border of Continental defenders to even the score, Hamilton once more struck quickly, as Charlie Gilbert hit up the red light at 12:46 of the second stanza, and Plumb followed at the 13:00 mark, leaving the score at 4-2.

Plumb struck gold again at 13:52 of the first period to complete his hat trick, and Kyle Kotary completed the scoring with a tally at 14:56.

The Ephmen will climb in the bus this afternoon for one final contest, when they travel to Salem State in an attempt to end the 1988-89 season on a positive note.

Skiing

continued from page 10

Cross country competition
In Nordic competition, races were held in the mass start format. In the men's 20-kilometer race, the only notable performance for Williams was that of senior Mac Nash. Nash, who qualified for nationals at the Dartmouth Carnival on February 10, finished in 14th place this week with a time of 52:45.4. The men's team finished with 47 points behind first place UVM's 92. The women's race saw better Eph results. Williams' 69 points tied them for third with the University of New Hampshire. UVM was first (96 points) and Dartmouth second (85). The women were led by the tenth-place finish of Kris Hansen '91. Her time for the 15-kilometer course was 47:34.9. Kristin Seemann '89 was 14th and Kim Bowes '92 16th.

The Williams ski teams will be at Middlebury this weekend for a race that serves as the Eastern Championships. The following week, several Ephs will find themselves in Jackson Hole, Wyoming for the NCAA's.

Grapplers return with victory's Purple Pail

by James Lee

The purple pail is back in Williamstown. Fueled by strong freshman talent and a determination to avenge its close loss to Wesleyan on Saturday, the Eph wrestlers placed Amherst to the mat, 36-10. The win capped their season at 6-7 and brought back home the purple pail that had been lost to the Defectors last year.

The Ephs grappled competitively against Wesleyan in a match-up which both sides were a pin and the rest were up for the grab. Ivan Fermon '92, as usual, started the day's rounds on a cheerful note in 118 where he dispensed with his contender in a one-minute half-nelson pin.

"Last year, we weren't even able to come close to winning any match against Wesleyan. I am pleased with the improvements made this year," said Coach Roger Caron.

The team score of 9-34 is not indicative of the actual Eph performance as several classes were lightly contested. James Mawn '92 lost a controversial match in 150 where he was denied a couple of takedowns by the referee that continued on page 6 ian Smith '91 waits for the puck to come out of a face-off during the Ephs' 2-1 victory over the Middlebury Panthers at Lansing Chapman Rink. Coach Bill McCormick's last at the helm, on Friday evening.

Thomas

Men's hockey skates by Panthers

by Kerr Houston

"Coach Mac," the banner screamed happily, "thirty-five years and still a stud." Taking those words as their cue, the Williams men's hockey team leapt-frogged past a determined Middlebury squad 2-1, in the process handing coach Bill McCormick a victory in his last home test as Eph mentor.

Since the Ephmen had been knocked out of playoff contention earlier in the week with a 6-2 drubbing at the hands of Hamilton, Friday evening's contest became an effort not to prolong the season, but rather to give the coach a cheerful send-off. Sophomore forward Rob Abel observed the team's mission when he noted that "we were trying to win one for coach Mac; we had to win against Middlebury."

The narrow deficit, however, did not put a damper on the between-period ceremony honoring McCormick and his record as the longest tenured hockey coach in the nation. As a boisterous crowd of nearly 800 looked on, Williams President Francis Oakley shuffled onto the ice and, after about eight ex-players followed his suggestion to climb down from the stands and join the team at mid-ice, made a short speech.

"In 35 years as hockey coach," Oakley stated, "Bill McCormick has exemplified that splendid teaching tradition [characteristic of Williams College], serving generation after generation of Williams hockey players with the patience and the experience and the skill that we've long been tempted to take for granted." Later, Oakley added that "we should wish him well as he embarks upon the next phase of what has been a wonderfully busy and productive life."

'Coach Mac,' the banner screamed, 'thirty-five years and still a stud.'

And that the team did. After several power plays fizzled miserably, senior Will Putnam picked up a loose puck about 15 feet from the Panther net and wristed a screamer into the lower right corner to even the contest at one apiece.

The game remained a tie until the 17:15 point in the second stanza, when Eph scoring leader Ron Van Belle '90 notched his 12th goal and 22nd point of the campaign on an assist from Putnam during a four-on-four situation.

From that point on, however, the game became an exhibition by the two goalies, Ford and Panther Brent Truchon, as the two played like rocks between the pipes, turning aside shot after shot. The game ended with no further scoring, leaving the Ephs with a 10-12 mark, and the fans on hand happily relieved.

No Eph Postseason
The fans, however, might have been even happier following Friday's victory had the men of Lansing-Chapman fared better against Hamilton on Tuesday night. The Ephmen had traveled to Clinton, N.Y. to face the 14-6 Continentals with the knowledge that victories in the final three games of the season might mean an invitation to a post-season tournament.

The Ephs actually drew first blood on Tuesday, when Van Belle assisted on Putnam's tenth goal of the year, at the 12:27 mark of the opening frame. Hamilton, however, soon erased the advantage, as Pat Murphy lit up the Continental side of the scoreboard on an assist from Harry McCabe. Only fifteen seconds later, Bill Plumb put the Ephs in a hole, as he beat Ford, who was starting his seventh consecutive game in the nets.

continued on page 8

Athlete of the Week

A freshman and a senior share this week's honors. David Brule '92 posted two first-place runs to capture the men's slalom competition, thus kicking off his Williams Winter Carnival career with a bang, and propelling the men's alpine squad to victory in the two-day festival. Women's captain Mari Omland '89 also enjoyed her time on the slopes, as she blazed to a second-place finish in the slalom, and added a fifteenth-place finish in the giant slalom. The women downhillers took fifth in the carnival. Way to go, Dave and Mari!

Trackmen 8th at N.E.; Platt qualifies in 1500

by Steve Brody

Yet another Winter Carnival weekend passed with the Williams College track teams on the road. The men's team was forced to forego festival in favor of the Division III New England Championships at Coast Guard in New London, Connecticut, while the women's team traveled to Smith for a last chance to qualify for the championship meets of the next few weeks. The men's squad finished in eighth place with 28 points behind meet winner MIT, while the women's non-scoring meet was highlighted by sophomore Anne Platt's performance in the 1500 meters, which qualified her for Nationals.

The best performance of the men's meet was turned in by junior Geoff Igharo. Igharo's second-place time jump of 46" 4" is close to the national standard which he will try to reach during the next two weeks. Igharo also ran the 53-meter dash, placing fourth with a time of 6.76 seconds.

The Ephs had two third-place finishes, both contributed by seniors. Joe McGinnis threw the 35-lb. weight 51 feet. The effort was sub-par for McGinnis, who will represent Williams at Nationals, to be held at Bowdoin, on March 10. Dave Nadelman ran the 800 meters for the Ephs. His trial time of 1:57.7 was his best-ever indoors, while his final time of 1:58.4 was good enough to place third.

Freshman Brendan Kearse was forced to go into high gear during the final lap of trials in the 1000 meters. Kearse found himself in third with a lap to go, but moved to the second lane and put in his typically furious race-ending kick to

continued on page 6

Browne-Ladd & Swiss Challenge is looking for knowledgeable, experienced, energetic, responsible and sports-oriented leaders for its 1989 summer programs, minimum age 21.

* European Coordinators with excellent knowledge of either England, France, Switzerland/Munich area or Italy. Must be fluent in either French, German or Italian.

* Bike leaders, male, fluent French.
* Australia, New Zealand, Tahiti - male leader must be native or have extensive knowledge of area.
For application call (802) 253-9714

SUMMER JOBS TO SAVE ENVIRONMENT

EARN $2500-$3500. National campaign positions to pass clean air act, stop toxic pollution, tighten pesticide controls & promote comprehensive recycling. Available in 18 states & D.C. Interviews on campus 3/7,8,9. Call Joe at 617-292-4810

RICHARD D. SIMPSON

G. VINCENT COUGBOULE

7% SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 468-4000

West Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081

Exclusive distributor of Purple Cow Vodka and Gin

12 oz. Molson Golden case $15.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Beck's case $17.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Rolling Rock Export case $11.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Hofmeister Swiss Beer $13.99 plus deposit
Cash and Carry: 1/2 keg Hofmeister - $28 plus deposit
Positive I.D. Required
For quality over quantity check out our variety of unique beers and ales

GO TO MEDICAL SCHOOL

TUITION PAID

Find out how you can have your medical school tuition, required books and fees paid in full—plus earn more than $600 a month while you attend school. Clip and mail the coupon below, and we'll send you full details on the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program.

We'll tell you how you could qualify for a Physician's Scholarship from the Army, Navy or Air Force.

If selected, you'll not only beat the high cost of medical school, you'll also gain valuable medical experience serving on active duty 45 days each school year as a commissioned officer in the Reserves.

After graduation, you'll serve three years or more—depending on the Service you select and the level of scholarship assistance you receive—as a respected Armed Forces physician. You'll also get good pay, regular hours, great benefits and the chance to work with a variety of patients and the latest medical technology.

If you meet the requirements noted below for the Service of your choice—and want to cut the expense of medical school—send for more information today.

YES! Send me full details on how the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program can help cut my medical school expenses. I meet the requirements noted below. I understand I am under no obligation.

Mail this coupon to: Armed Forces Scholarships, P.O. Box 2865, Huntington Station, NY 11746-2862

Check up to three: ☐ Army ☐ Navy ☐ Air Force

Please print all information clearly and completely

Name Title Address

City State Zip

Phone Fax

Field of Study

The information you voluntarily provide will be used for recruiting purposes only. The more complete it is, the better we can respond to your request. (Privacy: 10 USC 552)

Answer on page 7

Men's alpine skiers take top spot in home carnival

by Jeff Biersach

The men's alpine ski team proved its strength this weekend at the Williams Carnival held at Brodie Mountain. Thanks to a first-place finish in the slalom, the men's alpine squad beat out the University of Vermont and Dartmouth for first place. The women's alpine team did not fare as well against the powerful UVM team, finishing fifth behind first-place UVM and second-place Dartmouth. The Nordic team skied at Stowe, Vermont, due to the lack of snow in the Berkshires, and no relay was held. The Eph men's team finished a disappointing fifth, while the women tied for third.

Freshman David Brule put two first-place runs together to lead the men's team to victory in Saturday's slalom.

The resounding Eph slalom victory propelled them to the top of the standings.

With an amazing second run, Brule shut the door on second place Middlebury skier Rob McCleod. Sophomore Lindon Seed skied the slalom in top form, backing Brule with a third place finish. Eric Grosse '91, who has proven himself to be a top-ten contender and potential NCAA qualifier, mastered the tough afternoon course conditions and came through with a sixth-place finish. The men's slalom team crushed the top competition, finishing with 91.5 points to Middlebury's 85 and Dartmouth's 62.5.

Impressive women's finish
Women's captain Mari Omland skied her last Williams Carnival in perfect form. Energetic skiing and an incredibly tight line brought Omland a second-place finish in the slalom behind UVM's Gella Hamberg. Fourteenth-place sophomore Amy Sullivan was the second Eph finisher on Saturday.

Friday's giant slalom was dominated by UVM's Einar Bohner. He was followed closely by teammate Nils Albert in second place. Lindon Seed led the Ephs to their third-place G.S. finish; with a fast second run, Seed placed ninth when times were combined. He was supported by strong performances from twelfth-place junior J.P. Parisien and thirteenth-place Grosse. Williams' third-place G.S. finish left them behind UVM and Dartmouth after the Carnival's first day, but the resounding Eph slalom victory propelled them to the top of the final standings.

Dartmouth's Anouk Patty won the women's Giant Slalom. The first Williams finisher was sophomore Amy Sullivan, as her strong second run allowed her to move to ninth in the standings. She was followed by Omland in fifteenth and Amy Beliveau '91 in nineteenth for the fifth-place women's G.S. team.

continued on page 8

Mari Omland shoves aside a slalom gate at Brodie Mountain on Saturday. The senior captain took second place to lead the women's alpine team to a fifth place finish.

Thomas

Freshman John Conte flies through the lane as he prepares to lay the ball up one-handed during the Ephs 79-73 upset of Wesleyan at home on Saturday. Williams avenged an earlier loss to the Cardinals with the victory.

Major breaks scoring record

Male cagers beat Cardinals, 79-73

by Alexander Rachmiel

Beating Wesleyan 79-73, the Williams men's basketball team showed their resilience Saturday night at Chandler. In holding off the Cardinals, the Ephs avenged a previous loss at Middletown and bounced back from a heart-breaking triple overtime loss at Trinity last Wednesday. Junior guard Garcia Major scored a school record of 48 points during one game. The Ephs' record now stands at 14-5 on the season.

Throughout most of the first half of Saturday's game, the lead see-sawed back and forth between Williams and Wesleyan. Neither team led by more than three until, with 35 seconds left in the period and Williams up 37-36, the Ephmen set up for what they thought would be the last shot.

The crowd went silent and the activity on the court slowed to a standstill as Major, Mike Masters '89, and John Conte '92 passed the ball back and forth in the Williams backcourt. Then with 15 seconds on the clock, Conte suddenly drove toward the basket and set the play into motion. The freshman guard found power forward Bill Melchionni '89 under the basket for a three-point play, which made the score 40-36.

With nine seconds remaining, the Cardinals tried to rush the ball up court for one more shot. But defensive pressure by Rich Williams '90 forced Wesleyan point guard Ed Googe to travel, and the Ephs had the ball again with four ticks left.

Conte's prayer answered
The inbound pass went to Conte at halfcourt, and the freshman threw up a forty-foot shot as the buzzer sounded. In spite of the distance involved, Conte's form was perfect and the shot went right in. Conte's prayer was answered.

credit shot put the halftime score at 43-36, and brought the crowd into the game to stay.

The Ephs maintained a safe lead for the first ten minutes of the second half. Then their shooting went cold, and Wesleyan's Chris Alexander and Leroy Darby began to clean up on rebounds and score at will from the paint. At this point, co-captain Melchionni kept the Ephs in the game single-handedly, scoring eight straight Williams points. The senior would finish with 30 points and eight rebounds that night. But when Wesleyan's Nelson Williams hit an 18-foot jump shot with five minutes left to play, the Cardinals were within two at 66-64.

Junior guard Garcia Major scored a school record 48 points in the Trinity game.

Four quick points from Masters held off the Cardinals' surge momentarily, but a basket and a three point play by Alexander made it a three point game at 72-69 with two minutes on the clock.

Three puts Cardinals away
The Cardinals pressed for a turnover as Conte and Major brought the ball up, but Conte broke free for a three pointer that put the Ephs up by six and effectively ended the game. A series of meaningless last-minute foul shots put the final score at 79-73, and Williams had won its first Little Three contest of the season.

Melchionni and Alexander led all scorers with 30 each, while Conte scored 21 (including five three-pointers) and Major added 18 and snagged 9 rebounds. Defensively, Rich Williams came up with five steals for the Ephs. For the Cardinals, Googe netted 20 points and Darby pulled down 11 rebounds.

Major's 48 not enough
In the Trinity game, the Ephs got off to a fast start, leading 42-33 at the half. But in the second half, 6'9" Bantam center John Moorhouse, who had 37 points in the game, made his presence felt inside and brought the Bantams back into the game.

With nine seconds left in regulation and Williams clinging to an 82-80 lead, Conte committed an offensive foul to turn the ball over. The Ephs then lost a loose ball, and Trinity inbounded the ball with three seconds left. Ted Lyon missed his shot, but Moorhouse was there to put the rebound in and send the contest into overtime.

The first two overtimes saw the two teams trade baskets, as Moorhouse led the Bantams and Major carried the Ephs. The first overtime period ended in a 102-102 tie. But in the third, Moorhouse and the Bantams were able to pull away and outscore the Ephmen 19-12.

In addition to Major's record 48 points, which came on 20-34 shooting from the field, Melchionni scored 25 for the visiting Ephs. For Trinity, Michael Stubbs and Joe Reilly supported Moorhouse with 21 and 20 respectively.

The Ephmen play their final home game of the season on Wednesday night against Middlebury. The game will be the last in Chandler for senior co-captains Masters and Melchionni.

Women hoopsters too much for Wesleyan but fall to Trinity, 87-79

by Asif Jallil

Playing at home for the first time in just under a month, the Williams College Cardinals on Saturday afternoon, 85-59. The win assured the Ephs of at least a tie for the Little Three crown. Williams lost to Trinity earlier in the week, 87-79.

Saturday's contest was expected to be close, as Williams had nipped Wesleyan 80-76 in the teams' first meeting. However, an incredible defensive effort by the Ephs put the game away early as Wesleyan could generate nothing on offense.

Williams played an aggressive 2-3 zone defense which completely shut down Wesleyan's inside game. The Ephs also did a good job of closing off the passing lanes, and the Cardinals did not have an outside game to compensate. Wesleyan's only basket in the first five minutes came off a steal under Williams' basket. The Ephwomen received offense from unlikely sources in the early going. Co-captain Julia Beasley '89 drove into the lane several times, drawing fouls on the Wesleyan forwards. Williams took advantage of the foul difficulty to push the ball inside. Sophomore Becca Borden came out attacking the basket, quickly scoring six points.

Ephs pull away
With about 12 minutes left in the first half, the Cardinals got as close as they would all day, cutting Williams' lead to three, 13-10. It took the Ephs only three minutes, however, to turn the game into a slaughter. Williams outscored Wesleyan 14-1 during the stretch, capped off by a steal and layup by senior co-captain Missy Crouchley.

The Ephs appeared to lose some intensity after pulling away, and the teams played evenly the rest of the half. Williams went into the locker room leading comfortably, 44-27.

Neither team shot particularly well on the half, but Wesleyan was especially horrid, connecting on only 26 percent of its shots from the field.

The Cardinals did not stage much of a comeback in the second half. They did adjust to the zone a little better, as Tracy Fitzpatrick was able to hit some jump shots, but never really threatened the Ephs. After allowing the Cardinals to draw within 13, Williams dominated the rest of the way. With strong bench play, the Ephs led by as much as 32 late in the game.

Team effort keys victory
It was a unique game for the Ephwomen because they did not have to rely on their normal stars to carry them continued on page 7

When the Dust Settles

Two top divers with different personalities

by Anne Joseph

Like many other Williams athletes, the women divers have found that their best competition this season comes from within the Eph team itself. Two divers in particular provide visible competition for each other, consistently trading the top two places on the team: Paul Althoff '92 and Kathia Vandevenne '91. Both have now qualified for NCAA Nationals, which will be held at Notre Dame the second week of March, and have a chance to place in the top six there.

The two divers may turn out similar diving performances, but are very different individuals.

Vandevenne, of Weston, Massachusetts views diving as a form of performance. "Diving is exhibition. People are staring at your body. I feel like a fish in an aquarium tank [in the Chandler pool]. People hover over you through the big windows," she said. "Diving is sort of a country-club sport because it's so fun, but at the same time, being in shape is crucial to performance... You want to be as thin and strong as you can be."

Performing, however, comes naturally to Vandevenne, who started performing in piano competitions at the age of six and is currently a member of the Ephs.

Prior to Williams, Vandevenne had no experience at all in 3-meter competition. Although she started diving one-meter her freshman year in high school, she only dove for about two-and-a-half seasons. "Mandy [Glenner, the Williams diving coach] whipped me into shape. Freshman year I was really lucky. I only had tendinitis which didn't keep me out of any meets," said Vandevenne.

"She had hardly any diving before she came here. She's an extremely gifted athlete," said Glenner. Vandevenne admitted that her goal for her freshman

Thomas

Williams divers Paul Althoff '92 and Kathia Vandevenne '91.

year at Williams was just to qualify for national competition. "Mandy was so convinced I could get All-American [top eight in any NCAA division at Nationals]. If she told me I'd finish fifth in the 3-meter in the beginning of the season, I would have laughed," stated Vandevenne. She ended up taking fifth in the 3-meter event and seventh in the 1-meter diving at Nationals after placing second in prelims in the 1-meter event.

'Diving is exhibition...I feel like a fish in an aquarium...'

Vandevenne also took second in the 3-meter event at the 1988 New England. "I was still really scared of the 3-meter until halfway through this season. It takes time to learn dives and come up with a list for meets. You smack a lot," she confessed.

Vandevenne is no shy athlete; she has broken her nose and a knuckle and pulled her back in her athletic endeavors. "In New England last year, my last dive on the 1-meter was the reverse one-and-a-half which is how I broke my knuckle. Coming close to the board is still very scary," stated Vandevenne.

Vandevenne says she sees diving as a sport of consistency. She has been consistent this season, usually winning or taking second in the 1-meter and 3-meter events. This year, Vandevenne hopes to place in the top three for both boards at NCAA Nationals. "She's directed. She's also my best competitor on the team," stated Glenner.

Vandevenne describes her preparation for dives at meets: "I don't know if I'm superstitious, but I have a lucky pair of socks and socks...I don't watch the diver right before me. I make sure I'm dried off. I run the dive through my head and tell myself that I'm going to get a 7 [a strong score for a Division III diver]," she stated.

Vandevenne said she believes that there is a healthy attitude toward athletics at Williams and does better academically during a season when she has to organize her time.

Though she suffered a bout of mononucleosis first semester, Vandevenne couldn't wait for the season to start. "When I had mono this fall, I saw several doctors -- one who said I could go back continued on page 6

Spirit Shop price controversy ends

by Mary Moulé

Rumors that the Spirit Shop on Cole Avenue is charging higher prices to Williams students than to students from North Adams State College have been verified, but the difference in price is only a special discount for North Adams students and will be discontinued shortly, according to owner Ron Gagnon.

The differences are considerable, ranging from $5.50 to $9.50 per half-keg, depending on the type of beer. For example, a North Adams student could order a keg of Old Milwaukee for $27, while the same beer would cost $33 for a Williams student. The more expensive beers showed an even larger mark-up.

Gagnon claimed that the difference was due to a discount that he gave to North Adams students. "The reason I did this was that I was trying to get North Adams students to travel over this way," he said.

"It was not meant to be a permanent thing. It has just been going on for about three to four weeks, and I plan to discontinue it soon. I had no idea that it would cause this much trouble."

Gagnon said that he offered the discount because he had lost some business from North Adams students and wanted to give them an extra incentive to buy from him. He blamed the loss partly on the lesser number of students around in January.

"I was also having trouble with North Adams delivery," he said. "Apparently, [North Adams] police were following my van trying to crack down on parties." Gagnon said that part of his loss in business may have been due to student concern about this problem. "That's how the special originally started. Now we still deliver to those who are having legitimate parties."

Gagnon said that the discount to North Adams students was on a "cash and carry" basis. "We would not accept checks from them, not even for deposits," he said. "If we're going over that way, we'll still deliver if they want us to."

"[The difference in prices] wasn't meant to hurt Williams students in any way, and it will end soon," Gagnon said. "Williams students have been good to me, and I'm not trying to slight them. If I had to make a choice I'd rather have their business," he added. "Everything has been pretty good, and I want it to stay that way."

Pooh perplexed by new bookstore

by Justin Smith

James Murphy, owner of Albion Books, which recently was granted the college's exclusive textbook contract, has made preliminary arrangements with the college administration and students for the dissolution of the Pooh Perplex.

He told students at last Thursday's College Council meeting that Albion will sell used books, thus superseding the need for the 20-year-old, student-run used-book service.

"This is a very complex merger, as it were, between Albion and the Pooh Perplex," Murphy said. According to Murphy, preliminary arrangements call for Albion to purchase some fraction of the 25,000 book inventory of the Pooh after a 90-day period, during which students could reclaim their loaned books. Unclaimed books would become the property of the Pooh and then be liquidated. However, Murphy announced that Albion would pay for the cataloging of the books to make it easier for students to reclaim them.

"We are going to ask the students to somehow disencumber the inventory that is held by the Pooh Perplex, and that's going to be difficult," Murphy said. He added that the inventory must be eliminated since legal and economic considerations prevent Albion from simply taking over for the Pooh and holding students' books in storage until they are sold.

James Murphy, owner of Albion Books, which recently was granted the exclusive rights to sell textbooks to Williams students, addresses the College Council last Thursday. Murphy told the students that Albion would sell used books, taking over the function and much of the inventory of the Pooh Perplex.

John Whalen '91, Mark Hall '91 and Mark Elefante '91, the student owners of the Pooh, were present at the meeting. "We undertook this financial endeavor just to keep it going in the spring, and we've only been here for not even two months and we were totally ignorant of this stuff," Whalen said. The three students bought the Pooh last year.

Student input important
"I'd like to come in with a book store as best I can that resembles what you want," Murphy said. He noted that the success of the new book store will depend on student input. "We're going to ask students to help us design our bookstore, inasmuch as we're not familiar particularly with what the curriculum here is...Do you want magazines? Do you want a travel section? Do you want maps? Do you want tradebooks? These things will give shape to the actual furniture and fixtures and the make-up of the store, so any suggestions will help." Murphy said that Albion would work to eliminate the problems of the old book store but asked for student patience. "We will be able to fix the lines. We will be able to make it quicker and more enjoyable."

But Murphy injected a note of caution. "On the way over here we found a puddle and walked over it, we found that we did not walk on it. At this point, I would try to lower expectations. We are asking you for your input and your patience for next semester."

Six tons of snow from Mt. Brodie arrived at Williams last Monday to create a winter wonderland for the reshooting of the prospectus. Students were also asked to rearrange furniture to create the perfect environment for the project. The prospectus is mailed to approximately 27,000 high school students.

'Smile, you're in the new Williams prospectus!'

by Sara Dubow

The Big Snow Williams students have been waiting for all winter came last week in the form of two truckloads of Mt. Brodie fake flakes. The college brought them in as part of the reshooting of its prospectus, the information guide sent each year 27,000 Williams hopefuls.

The great outdoors was not the only artificial environment created by the college for the shooting. Perry living room was the stage for some of the photographing, and Amy Whitenour '90 was there. "The ironic thing is that it was right after Winter Carnival. There was no furniture in the room, and it smelled very strongly of stale beer," she said.

Hugh Patterson '91 said, "They [the photographers] asked my roommate to change his shirt to a different color, so he just sent someone else down to be in it instead. It was really staged, but it will probably end up looking very real."

"I came home and looked into the living room. It was really strange because there was a small rug, a blazing fire, and five students all close together. The rest of the room was empty, except for this huge camera," Whitenour said.

"The photographer asked me if I wanted to be in the picture, and he asked grabber. "I was called to be in the picture, I gave them a list of professors who I was close to, and they chose the best looking one. They completely posed us, borrowed [Professor of History] Peter Frost's briefcase and put a bust of Tyler Dennett behind us," Pascucci said.

'The picture showed this cozy scene, but the rest of the room was a pit.'

me to unzip my coat," she added. "Mmm, she's wearing green," they said, and then asked me if I had anything red, so I changed into a red blouse. The whole thing was kind of strange, but also sort of fun. The picture showed this cozy scene, but the rest of the room was a pit."

Ernest Pascucci '90 starred in a Stetson tutorial shot with Assistant Professor of Romance Languages Paul Holden-

"They kept changing the setting for about an hour to create the most authentic collegiate setting," Pascucci said. Pictures were also taken in the Williams College Museum of Art, and Bethany Spaulding '89 tells another story of student accommodation. "A girl accidentally leaned backward, and the photographers thought that pose looked really natural. She had to stand with her foot in the air like that for a long time, until they got the picture they wanted."

All the fuss

The Admissions Office said they hoped to make this book the best ever. To that end, they have done extensive research with focus groups of students who were likely candidates for Williams but didn't apply, and also with Williams students themselves. The office is also using the questionnaire for accepted students, and has employed the North Charles Street Organizers consulting firm.

"Our literature is the only way to reach certain students," Associate Director of Admissions Karen Fisher said.

"It's advertising," agreed Tom Parker, associate director of admissions. "With the changing demographics, our traditionally strong markets are declining, and so to maintain the applicant pool you have to move out of New England."

The cost of the new prospectus will be under five dollars per book, which is considered average compared to other

continued on page 3

Once an Eph...

Ex-Eph students return to join Williams faculty

by Soojin Kim

To students at Williams, the sealed-off trap door in the floor of the Perry House television room is a curiosity. But to Williams professors who were students here when the door led to the sacred initiation room of the Alpha Delta fraternity, it is just one more reminder of the changes they have seen at the college in their days here.

When the "Goat Room" was in business, students were required to take five year-long courses six days a week. Williams men, a thousand strong, regularly took road trips to such women's colleges as Smith, Skidmore and Bennington. The classes were highly structured and daily chapel attendance was required. Professor of History Peter Frost, who has taught at Williams since 1964, entered the college in 1954 as a member of the class of 1958 but transferred to Harvard University after his freshman year. "I hated Williams," Frost said.

Exclusivity

He added that the exclusivity of the fraternities, whose members ate in one of the sixteen separate dining rooms of their respective houses, was a dominant feature of school life. The fraternity houses were owned by the Williams alumni corporation and retained their own cooks.

As a matter of course, "Geeks," the socially awkward, were not given bids to enter fraternities during rush week.

'I knew within a week of being on campus that I had to get into the Alpha Deltas.'

Prior to the completion of Baxter Hall in 1954, rush week was the first week of freshman year and freshmen had to eat on Spring Street during that week.

When Baxter Hall was completed in 1954, freshmen were relegated to dining in the North Side while the five percent of the student body who were blackballed by fraternities ate in the South Side.

Professor of Art History, Emeritus, Whitney Stoddard '35 said those who didn't belong to a fraternity dined in the Commons' Club in Currier House. It wasn't until 1961, when the trustees of the college accepted the Angevine Report's recommendation to abolish fraternities, that the college offered meals and housing to all students.

Frost said, "Each frat had its own character and its members were stereotyped. I knew within a week of being on campus that I had to get into the Alpha Deltas:

'In a small town with no social alternatives, you dated or kept pretty damn quiet about the fact you weren't.'

straight arrows who liked the college, joined teams, and got involved in campus activities. Other frats had party reputations. Still others were second choice frats that didn't have good morale."

'Date and score'

Frost indicated that, whatever the character of a given fraternity, the objectification of women constituted a common bond between fraternity members. "There was tremendous pressure to have a date and to score on Saturday nights. In a small town with no social alternatives, you dated or kept pretty damn quiet about the fact you weren't. Social life was too public and too competitive. Guys would boast on Sunday about what happened Saturday night," he said.

"A lot of the Smith dorms had these big porches where you wrestled a girl before she had to go in at 1 a.m.; the porch lights would flick on and off to give couples warning. I was shy and found it painful and embarrassing."

Frost also recalled Baxter mixers which were attended by busloads of women from neighboring colleges, assorted drinking songs about women, and "Pig Night." That event, said Frost, involved

continued on page 3

Ifill receives position at the Mellon Foundation.

PAGE 4

McCoy Tyner plays at the Clark.

PAGE 6

The Record interviews Thomas Krens.

PAGE 7

The Williams Record

Abolish Division III "guts"

The College Council has been struggling with the problem of "gut" courses for non-majors in Division III for over a year. Williams students are required to take three courses in the sciences or mathematics, but the offerings generally fall into two categories: the unchallenging guts or the introductory-level courses for majors.

The key question has been, how do Division III departments design guts that aren't guts? However, there is a fundamental problem with the form of that question. It presumes that Division III is somehow special and more challenging than other fields.

Why, for example, isn't anyone worried about what science majors face when confronted with a three-course requirement in Divisions I and II?

Granted, introductory Division III courses do take up more class time because of labs. However, the college has no qualms about demanding lab time out of majors—two to four hours a week for at least seven out of nine courses required to fulfill the major. And this is assuming that these students are only taking one lab course a semester, which is often not the case.

Using "gut" logic, why aren't there history courses without research papers for non-majors? Why aren't there English courses with descriptions beginning "Designed for the non-major" the way the description for Human Biology and Social Issues begins "Designed for the non-scientist"? Why is Economics 101 the only option available for freshmen looking at the department's offerings?

No one seems to have a problem with requiring chemists and physicists to sweat their way through term papers, being graded on the same standards as die-hard Division I and II majors. Yet for Division III, everything is different.

The philosophy behind requiring students to take Division III courses is "to provide some of the factual and methodological knowledge needed to be an informed citizen in a world deeply influenced by scientific thought and technological development, and to cultivate skill in exact and quantitative reasoning." (1988-89 Course Catalog)

"Methodological knowledge" and "quantitative reasoning" cannot possibly be gained from a science course without a lab. Labs are essential in gaining the hands-on knowledge that the goal stated above is talking about. The few hours per week a student puts in are vital to the educational value of a course and to the whole concept of study in Division III.

Cutting the lab component out of science courses would indeed be like waiving a research paper requirement in history courses. In the latter case, the student is learning how to be a historian, how to do the research that makes him capable of analyzing and interpreting history on his own. In Division III, the student is learning how to be a scientist by performing labs that enable him to demonstrate course concepts and extend his investigative abilities.

The policy of offering Division III guts can also have serious effects on students' academic interests. We are encouraged to come to Williams with open minds, ready and eager to try new things. There are dozens of stories about people who come here as chemistry majors or as pre-medical students, and then took this awesome philosophy or English course and...well, you know the rest.

Strange, isn't it, that you never hear of that happening the other way around? The reason is that students coming from weak high school science programs and those convinced that English is the major for them never enroll in an awesome biology course. Instead they go for the guts, and cut themselves off from ever giving math or science another shot. And the college encourages this by offering guts in the first place.

The one thing guts do require is someone to teach them, thereby siphoning off Division III professors from teaching courses that count for the major. With the new course load reduction proposal practically approved, faculty will be teaching fewer courses anyway. It is not only ludicrous, but patently unfair to Division III majors for these departments to continue wasting professors' time by offering guts.

The solution to the Division III dilemma is not to modify guts and somehow make them tougher, but to get rid of them altogether. There is no reason why students cannot take introductory level Division III offerings, just as they do in Divisions I and II. The college has to recognize that it defeats the purpose of its distribution requirement by letting students snooze through relatively easy courses instead of enrolling in "major" courses and really getting their feet wet.

Treatment of Divisions I-III should be equalized out of fairness to everyone involved: the physics major who has to take history and political science courses with those majors, the Division III professors who have to waste time teaching guts, and the Division I and II lovers who never give science and math a fair chance.

Letters

Wright says she was misquoted in Insider

To the Editor:

I very much regret the misunderstanding that led to my having been quoted in the last Insider as having said that "the coaches at Williams don't understand the potential long-term educational damage that can result from telling the players that they are here to play football. The coaches keep articulating that idea. They believe that."

I am very sure that I did not say that. It is utterly at odds both with my understanding and with my intention as co-chair of the Committee on Undergraduate Life's Subcommittee on Athletics. This committee is working to improve understanding and collaboration between the teaching faculty and the coaching faculty, as well as among the athletes and non-athletes in our student body. Because the remark attributed to me runs contrary to that purpose, I wish to clarify my meaning.

During my interview with the Record reporter, I alluded to the frequency with which such remarks as "you are here to play..." are attributed to coaches by students. I have no way of knowing whether any coach has actually ever said such a thing. I know only that students articulate the idea and attribute it to coaches.

I believe that I must have said something like, "Maybe the coaches at Williams don't understand the potential long-term educational damage that can result from telling the players that they are here to play football. They keep articulating that idea. They believe that."

The crucial difference here is that what I meant by "they" was the student athletes, not the coaches, and that I did not mean to assert that the coaches actually intended their athletes to subordinate academic performance to athletic performance. Rather, I was trying to imagine a context in which a coach might have casually or quickly said something that might have been construed as a serious statement of priorities.

Coch Peck assures us in last week's Record that Williams' coaches "clearly understand the priorities of students at Williams and have articulated these time and time again." I am glad to hear that. But I remain puzzled by the fact that in "coaching evaluations with students and faculty," Coch Peck has heard nothing to suggest that students have not always clearly understood their coaches' message.

Quite possibly, the idea that "I am here in play..." arises more from expectations that pre-dnte n athlete's Williams experience than from anything that a coach has actually said. But the idea does arise, and I have heard it articulated. Believing it to be both false and damaging, I am moved to attempt to correct it -- whatever its source. Coch Peck's letter, together with Coach Lamb's assistance in the CUL subcommittee's investigation, gives me every reason to believe that the coaching faculty and the teaching faculty can and ought work together in this effort.

Lisa Haines Wright
Assistant Professor of English

Editor's reply: The Record stands by the accuracy of its reporting

Anti-abortion group has another member

To the Editor:

Leafing through the pages of the February 7 Williams Record, I was pleased to read about the formation of a right-life student group, Williams Against Abortion On Demand. I wholeheartedly support and salute the courageous efforts of all its members in light of the liberal air that predominates on the Williams campus.

I was disturbed, but not surprised, to learn of the resistance and hostility towards the club surfacing as flagrant attempts at sabotage by the Daily Advisor's typist. It is deplorable that this student allowed his/her own personal views to interfere with his/her responsibilities. Obviously, such a person is not very firm in his/her beliefs, or else would not have been compelled to stoop so low to silence an opposing viewpoint.

The tragedy of the abortion issue is well exemplified by the facts put forth by Jeff Biersach and Marian Naficy in their opinion article. They stated that as many as 15 Williams students (about two percent of the female student body) become pregnant each year, and most of these young women choose to terminate their pregnancies.

I find it difficult to believe that any student having reached the educational sophistication of Williams College does not know about birth control (which can be as effective as 99.9 percent). It appears then that some students are using abortion as a form of birth control. The sanctity of human life is readily sacrificed for expedience. Perhaps such students, and others like them in our society at large, might be forced into available, safe, and convenient alternative.

It is without doubt that the pro-life stance is held by a very small minority of the Williams community, but at least it is no longer a silent one. In closing I would like to recount an old Russian proverb in support of the group's goal. Although it translates poorly, nevertheless it gets the point across: "God is not found in power, but in truth." Although you are few, you are right. You can now number amongst your ranks not one, but two female members.

Helen Tkaczewski Strapko '88

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible and not more than 500 words. They must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. They must be typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-6529.

On the Record...

"[Pig Night involved] getting drunk with the boys, then picking up the ugliest girl you could find and doing the worst thing you could do to her."

--Professor of History Peter Frost on one of the features of fraternity life during the 1950s, when he attended Williams.

"This is obviously a school in a fat city."

--College Provost Gordon Winston on Williams' ranking of 35th out of 315 in a Chronicle of Higher Education listing of colleges by size of endowment.

"The ironic thing is that it was right after Winter Carnival. There was no furniture in the room, and it smelled very strongly of stale beer."

--Amy Whittier '90 on the artificial atmosphere which surrounded the photography for the new prospectus in Perry living room.

"On the way over here we found a puddle and walked over it. We found that we did not walk on it."

--James Murphy, owner of Albion Books, warning students not to expect a miracle from the new bookstore.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor BILL SAVADOVE, Arts Editor
MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors
BILL PHILPOTT, Productions Editor

Assistant News Editors
DAN SKWIRE, ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW
GREG HART & JUSTIN SMITH
Assistant Sports Editors
STEVE BRODY, KERR HUSTON, ANNE JOSEPH
Assistant Layout Editors
ASHESH SHAH, ELISA DUGUNDJI, SARAH OUCHI

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and is authorized at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Letters

Class-load reduction will not harm students

To the Editor:

I would like to correct a few mistaken or misleading notions that crept into Joel McElvinn's front page story (February 21) on the proposed reduction in the classroom instructional load.

First, the trustees have in fact approved the recommendation that, beginning with the academic year 1990-91, all departments be permitted, over a two-year period, to make a nine percent reduction in their faculty's classroom instructional load if they can do so without harming the College's educational program. This step makes possible an extension of the reduction in effect since 1987 for faculty in their second year at the college.

Over the next several months President Oakley and I will be working with department chairs to assure ourselves and, next fall, the trustees, that the reduction can indeed be implemented without harming the college's educational program.

Second, the article suggests that interdepartmental programs such as Women's Studies may be "shortchanged." The purpose of the work that the President and I will be doing is to see to it that the interdepartmental programs, as well as other areas of the curriculum, will not be shortchanged. We will attempt, too, to make certain that the size of classes and the number of courses available to students will be affected as little as possible.

Even apart from the fact that the reduction went into effect for some faculty two years ago, the article correctly points out that a nine percent reduction in the teaching loads of full-time faculty simply does not translate into a nine percent reduction in the number of courses offered.

The number of courses offered is heavily influenced by the over-all size of the faculty, the number of part-time faculty teaching in a given year, and other factors that are independent of the reduction. Moreover, the number of course-choices open to individual students depends in practice on the way in which class hours are allocated. We believe that by improving the process of scheduling we can reduce conflicts and maintain the variety of course choices actually available to students.

Let me also point out that, though remaining competitive with other colleges in the job market is one goal of the reduction, an equally important goal is to give a measure of relief to a faculty that the Reconciliation Committee last year described as being "stretched especially thin." When the reduction takes effect, members of the faculty will have more time to devote to the preparation of their courses and to individual student projects. The quality of the education Williams students receive will, I am convinced, be enhanced.

John Reicherter
Dean of the Faculty

Williams all for goals of college consortium

To the Editor:

Let me clarify the facts surrounding the college's relationship with a newly-formed consortium of colleges concerned with recruiting minority students.

Williams has not "pulled out" of anything, as the February 21 Record article states. Williams was one of about 30 colleges which, beginning in 1986, shared information about the recruitment of minority students. Later an attempt was made to form a consortium among some or all of those colleges that would endorse specific policies and mount specific programs with the financial and staff support of member colleges.

Williams (along with a number of other colleges including Amherst, Wesleyan, and Carleton) elected not to join. Williams believed that its commitment to minority recruitment would be weakened rather than strengthened by endorsing the consortium's policies and by diverting money and staff time to supporting the consortium's programs.

The consortium's policy of most concern to Williams was that of shaping financial aid packages on the basis of race rather than need. Williams has a fundamental commitment to the principle of need-blind admissions and of meeting 100 percent of demonstrated need for all students. Our endorsement then of a policy of preferential packaging based on race other than need would have represented a significant step backward. Another concern was the consortium's omitting of Asians from its minority financial aid policies.

Most of the consortium's programs involve initiatives in which Williams has long been engaged. For instance, the consortium has inaugurated a graduate fellowship program patterned after our Bolin Fellowships.

Finally, the Record article may be read as implying (perhaps unintentionally) that Williams is not committed in the goal of the consortium which is to increase the number of minority students at liberal arts colleges.

It should be clear that Williams is deeply committed to the vigorous recruitment of minority students. The college, moreover, has been, and will continue to be, involved in cooperative efforts to recruit minority students such as those with the Little Three and with the New England Black Admissions Counselors. Williams elected not to join this particular consortium -- not because of its goals but because of its means.

James G. Kolesar
Director of Public Information

Average class size is much higher than 9.7

To the Editor:

One can well understand why the Record, in last week's editorial, would urge the college not to increase the average class size when the faculty teaching load is reduced. Nevertheless, less one wishes the editorial writers would be more careful about the numbers they use.

To my understanding, no one in recent history with the slightest understanding of class size at Williams has ever used the number 9.7, or any other number close to it. The writer was apparently thinking of the student/teacher ratio. But 9.7 is also incorrect for that ratio; depending on how faculty are counted, it is somewhere between 10.5 and 11.7/1.

Depending on how one counts laboratories and conferences, average class size at Williams is probably between 20 and 25. Clearly, an average class size of 9.7 is a "joke," but one invented by the Record.

Apart from the Record's mistake, students tend to misunderstand the relation between the accurate average class size and their actual experience in classes. Consider the following hypothetical example:

Class size	Number of classes	Total registration	% of classes	% of registrations
5	1	5	10%	2%
10	1	10	10%	4%
15	2	30	20%	12%
20	3	60	30%	24%
25	2	50	20%	20%
95	1	95	10%	38%
Totals	10	250	100%	100%
Mean Class Size = 25.0
Median Class Size = 20
Modal Class Size = 20

Thus, looking at classes, the typical registrant is in a class of 20 or 25 student, depending on which of the three averages one uses. However, as the students actually experience these same classes, the modal registrant is in a class of 95! The general problem of relating the average class size to the experience of students can be seen clearly by comparing the last two columns of the table. Forty percent of the classes are quite small, but those four classes serve only 18 percent of the registrants. By contrast only 10 percent of the classes are large, yet that one large class serves 38 percent of all registrants.

I do not claim that this hypothetical example represents accurately the full distribution of class sizes at Williams, but we do have a distribution of small and large classes that tends to produce the pattern exhibited in the example.

David Booth
Vice Provost

Editor's reply: The 9.7 average class size figure was neither an invention of the Record nor a mix-up with the student-teacher ratio. It was given to the College Council by the committee which recommended the faculty workload reduction. This figure was confirmed on two separate occasions by Professor George Goethals, chairman of the committee. According to Goethals it was calculated using the number of fulltime teaching equivalents - which explains why it is lower than the faculty-student ratio as well as why it is much lower than the true figure. The Vice Provost's calculations are much more accurate.

*THE CONCEPT OF STAPLE-GUN AS A DIRECTED ENERGY WEAPON IS TO BE CONSIDERED TOP-SECRET MATERIAL. DISCLOSURE OF THIS NEW DEVELOPMENT TO THE COMMIES IS PUNISHABLE BY MULTIPLE PAPER CUTS.

Unfeasible and expensive SDI: divesting America of her future

by Greg Rubinstein '92

I write in response to the Student Defense Alliance's all-campus mailing of February 20 on "S.D.I. and Nuclear Deterrence." Much has been made public on the feasibility of any type of anti-ballistic missile defense which the Strategic Defense Initiative research is aimed at developing. While no doubt most people who are familiar with SDI research are aware that an effective SDI defense has been overwhelmingly viewed as impossible to attain, I will enumerate some of the main statistics and viewpoints.

The main thrust of SDI research has been to investigate the potential of using land and space-based directed-energy weapons as enemy (Soviet) warhead destroyers. According to the American Physical Society's committee report: "...the Study Group finds significant gaps in the scientific and engineering understanding of many issues associated with the development of [directed-energy weapons]....Most crucial elements for a directed-energy weapons system need improvements of several orders of magnitude. (Scientific American, September 1987, pp. 39-40)" One member of the report committee was quoted as saying, "I am 99.9 percent sure it won't work. (The New York Times, April 12, 1987)" The report goes on to say that it would take more than a decade of research to even decide if there is any potential effectiveness in directed-energy weapons as missile destroyers at all.

Four types of lasers were considered for the report: chemical, excimer, free-electron, and X-ray. Each bears its own staggering problems of energy requirements and accuracy. Just as a small example, chemical lasers are the most advanced technology of the four and for the least strategic defense demands, their energy levels need to be increased by a factor of 20! For typical defense distance considerations, a power increase by another factor of four would be necessary. Unfortunately, higher powers for these lasers are beyond the scope of their potential. The massive power requirements for a single space-based platform of any laser weapons system could only be met by a nuclear reactor. There are a multitude of other problems exclusive and common to the four laser systems -- from vibrations and exhaust to beam focusing and atmospheric considerations.

The committee's report only considered directed-energy weapons to be used as kill weapons during the boost phase of incoming ballistic missiles, i.e. before reentry and the release of multiple independent reentry vehicles (MIRVs) and decoys (chaff). Thus, even if SDI were 80 percent effective, 100,000 warheads and chaff would enter the atmosphere and, whether or not the technology exists to distinguish between them, there is no contingency at this stage for destroying the warheads. (Scientific American, September 1987, pp. 39-45)

True, technology moves swiftly, but

If advances in 'defense' were truly a deterrent, mustard gas or Hiroshima would have been the last word on belligerent conflict.

not so swiftly that these formidable if not insurmountable hurdles should be considered worthy of further expenditure.

The development and deployment of any SDI system will take many years in which an offense could easily develop counter-measures. An SDI system designed to defend against today's threats could easily prove to be ineffectual against tomorrow's. Also, any land or space-based defense system would itself be vulnerable to attack; space platforms could be easily targeted by directed-energy weapons because of their tracked orbits and would be subject to such threats as sabotage and cruise missiles.

Next is the matter of cost. SDI has cost $32 billion for research in the last four years alone. Former Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger estimated that the funding for the program over the next 20 years will be $1 trillion. That's 2.7 stacks of $100 bills to the moon! All for a vulnerable and ineffective (if not completely unfeasible) system. Surely there are more worthy nation programs that could benefit from a reallocation of these funds. The National Academy of Science agreed by a margin of 20-to-1 that SDI could not be made survivable and cost-effective.

Any pretense that SDI could protect the U.S. arsenal from a Soviet first strike for a retaliation is delusory. I consider it paranoid to assume that the Soviet Union would realistically contemplate such an attack and demand that we should even plan with retaliation in mind. Even if SDI were unprecedentedly effective after years of development and monstrous expenditure, it could in no way eliminate all incoming missiles. And it may come as a surprise to some, but a single nuclear submarine is armed with enough warheads to effectively destroy the majority of the United States or the Soviet Union. It is obvious then that even if one percent of the warheads got through there would be a global catastrophe. Ninety-seven percent of the NAS agreed that SDI could not protect the U.S. population.

Why are there even some dissenters, then, when so many overwhelmingly condemn the program? The answer to that lies in the question of who stands to gain by increased SDI spending. Some are benefiting personally from research grants and continued employment in this futile endeavor. Naturally such individuals would advocate increased funding.

If technological advances in "defense" were truly a final deterrent to war than mustard gas or Hiroshima (the former a chemical weapon developed during World War I and the latter the result of nuclear weapon development in World War II) would have been the last word on belligerent conflict. But today chemical and nuclear weapons are a horrifying danger. There is only one answer to the threat of nuclear war: reduce the vast stockpiles of nuclear weapons. America must invest in its future through more disarmament efforts, not divert itself of a future by escalating international tensions with more wasted spending on SDI.

News

Former Williams students move to other end of log

continued from page 1
"getting drunk with the boys, then picking up the ugliest girl you could find and doing the worst thing you could do to her."

Prof's then and now
According to Assistant Professor of Physics Kevin Jones '77, the rapport between students and faculty members was a hallmark of education at Williams

'At Harvard, I was just one of 300 in a class. I had famous professors, but I never spoke to one of them.'

then, and it still is today. "At Williams, professors see their primary responsibility as teaching students, and the college has the resources to provide this contact. Having the educational opportunity to interact with professors is most important and I don't think that's going to change," Jones said. Frost said, "At Harvard, I was just one of 300 in a class. I had famous professors, but I never spoke to one of them. At Williams, professors had the same or greater commitment to teaching back then as now. Professors knew students by name...they had me over to dinner." He also said he met a greater variety of people at Williams than at Harvard. "At Harvard, I ended up hanging around the 90 students whom I knew from Exeter, my high school."

According to both Frost and Professor of History John Hyde, who entered Williams in 1948, the 1950's was a boom time.

Hyde indicated that most Williams students then, as now, came from upper-middle class backgrounds, but those who weren't blended in easily. "Williams had little socio-economic diversity. The whole point of a residential college is to blend everyone in so well that you don't know or care who is not in the majority," Frost said.

Living and eating arrangements in the dorms as well as the rule forbidding freshmen to have a car were ways in which the college has tried to minimize class distinctions.

Less diversity in '30's
According to Stoddard, there was far less socio-economic diversity and almost no racial or ethnic diversity in the 1920's and the 1930's, due in part to the requirement of having taken Latin. The language was usually offered only by prep schools.

In addition, according to Stoddard, course offerings were limited. Anthropology, sociology, and psychology were not offered, and the art department offered only eight courses.

Jones said his class, which had a male/female ratio of roughly 2:1, was the first class with a significant number of women. Despite the upheaval caused by changes in gender composition, the 70's was an era of political apathy on campus.

While athletics remained popular, education ended the en masse weekend defections to women's colleges. Despite this, Jones said that he didn't feel the impact of co-education's introduction the two to three black students in the 1950's, eventually sparked the current race relations controversy on campus.

"Williams was at first oblivious to the complexity of the problem. But we've come to discover that it's not simply a matter of removing the obvious bigots and changing a few laws. The college has made a positive change by addressing the issue of the integration of different ethnic groups into the Williams institution," Jones said.

New book

continued from page 1
colleges, Fisher said. "We do this every five years, and it is critical that we do it at this particular juncture," she said, because of the declining number of high school juniors and seniors.

"The prospectus will reflect the increasing diversity of the Williams' population," Fisher said. "We had to quite aggressively look at whether we were giving a fair representation of minorities here. The old prospectus reflects the 13 percent minority population, but now we have a higher percentage today and we want to reflect that change."

"The complexities involved with accurately representing Williams are astounding," Parker said.

Fisher said that the unnaturalness of the shooting could not be avoided. "Saying this should be totally candid and spontaneous is like saying all art should be realism."

A new way to live

Roger Markowitz of the Diocese of Albany's Commission on Peace and Justice discussed the 1984 Bishop's Pastoral Letter on Economics at Griffin Hall last Wednesday. "It was meant to integrate all sectors of life; in America worship and politics are totally divorced," Groups in the Albany area, he said, were attempting to act as community organizers, so that the people they were helping would learn to help themselves. "Helping somebody is the first step; it's more important to help communities," Markowitz said.

Ifill will leave Williams in fall to take job at Mellon Foundation

by Lynn Haddon

Dean of Freshmen Roberto Ifill has been granted a leave of absence effective July 1 to accept the position of Program Associate for Higher Education and Public Affairs at the Andrew Mellon Foundation in New York. Assistant Professor of Religion and History William R. Darrow has been chosen to replace him.

Ifill, who is also a lecturer in economics, was contacted last summer by the Foundation, which works with colleges and research institutions around the country.

"I wasn't really looking for another job, and it would take a really excellent job to take me away from Williams, especially after only one year in the Dean's Office," Ifill said. Unknown to Ifill, he had been recommended to Mellon by current and past colleagues to work on the economics of education and public policy issues.

"A lot of my job here has to do with educational policy -- this is similar, but on a much broader scale," Ifill said. He explained that he would be collaborating on such issues as enhancing minority presence in the academic sphere, reviving area studies and the possible effects of a future financial crunch on colleges.

As a dean this year, Ifill said he has enjoyed getting to know the students more as people, out of the classroom situation where little exchange of personality can occur. "However, I'm still supposedly in the Economics Department 40 percent of the time. I have to really remember and be cognizant of this link," he added. "I feel like I presently have two and a third jobs."

Last year Ifill was on leave at Brookings Institution in Washington, D.C., a think tank which does research in foreign policy, government studies, and economic studies. Two years prior to this he shared the office of Dean of Housing for a year with Darrow.

Darrow will assume the position of Dean of Freshmen and Assistant Dean of the College, and he said that he will not be continuing in his present capacity as Gaudino Scholar next year. As Gaudino Scholar this year, he has worked with faculty and students, focusing on the problem of sophomore slump, faculty advising for sophomores and the process of choosing a major.

Steinman

Dean of Freshmen Roberto Ifill

"A full-time job" "I'll be sad to be cutting down on my teaching. A dean's position is only supposed to be 'a tenth' of your responsibilities, but it's really a full-time job. Teaching has to fit in around your time as a dean," Darrow said.

In the past, Darrow said he has had the freedom to develop new courses and new methods of teaching them, but he knows from prior experience that he will not be able to do such experimenting in the classroom while he is in the Dean's Office. However, Darrow said that as part of the administration, one can generally solve problems and get results in ways not as accessible to professors.

"The most serious concern of mine is class size and the selection of courses for freshmen in the face of the faculty workload reduction," Darrow said. "My goal is to keep the complicated system with J.A.'s, faculty advisors, and other support systems which shape freshmen, functioning smoothly and thoughtfully. I also want the freshmen to develop their autonomy as individuals."

SAT can't determine scholarships

College Press Service

A federal judge ruled February 3 that New York state could not use Scholastic Aptitude Test scores as the sole criterion for awarding scholarships to students.

Some students had argued that using scores from the SAT -- which critics contend are biased in favor of white males -- to award scholarships effectively eliminated many women and minority men from getting grants.

"It's really a very important, precedent-setting case," Isabelle Katz Pinzler, director of the Women's Rights Project for the American Civil Liberties Union, said. She is lead attorney for the group of female students that brought the case to court.

"It's really not fair to anybody to give a scholarship based on a three-hour test given on a Saturday afternoon rather than [based on] on four years of high school," Pinzler said.

U.S. District Judge John Walker said it was apparently the first case in which female students sought to use federal civil rights statutes to challenge a state's reliance on standardized tests.

"The evidence is clear that females score significantly below males on the SAT while they perform equally or slightly better than males in high school," Walker wrote in his decision.

The judge said the state Education Department and its commissioner, Thomas Sobol, both named in the suit, rely solely upon the SAT in awarding Regents and Empire scholarships. This practice, he said, "deprives young women of the opportunity to compete equally for these prestigious scholarships."

Walker ordered the state to change its method of awarding the scholarships. State officials had no immediate comment on the ruling.

The suit was filed by the ACLU on behalf of the New York chapter of the National Organization for Women, the Girls Club of America and 10 female students.

Frugal spending keeps endowment high

by Helen Matthews

The October 19, 1987 stock market crash was not as damaging to Williams College as it might have been, according to Provost of the College Gordon Winston. "We lost modestly compared with most universities and colleges," Winston said.

Williams' endowment has increased from a value of $262,588,000 in June, 1987 to $279,703,000 in June, 1988, according to a survey of 315 colleges published in the Chronicle of Higher Education.

Williams' financial strength is a result of its safe monetary practices, Winston said. "We have chosen managers who are generally conservative. As a result, they moved out of the risky securities when they began to look nervous-looking in the summer of '87," Winston said.

"We have broad limits on the proportion that can be invested in common stock," Winston added. "Our philosophy has been to hire very competent managers and to trust them and to watch them. Thirty years ago, we managed our own endowment. It makes a great deal of sense to let professionals handle it."

The Chronicle ranked Williams 35th out of 315 colleges, in terms of the size of endowment. "This is obviously a school in a fat city," Winston said.

Still, Winston added that not all of the news was great. "Endowment per student is what really counts," he continued. "The schools we're in competition with, Swarthmore and Amherst, have a larger endowment per student."

Swarthmore has an endowment per student of $207,802, while Williams' is $143,806.

"We're trying to be very careful about how we manage ourselves so we don't squander resources."

managers and to trust them and to watch them. Thirty years ago, we managed our own endowment. It makes a great deal of sense to let professionals handle it."

The Chronicle ranked Williams 35th out of 315 colleges, in terms of the size of endowment. "This is obviously a school in a fat city," Winston said.

Still, Winston added that not all of the news was great. "Endowment per student is what really counts," he continued. "The schools we're in competition with, Swarthmore and Amherst, have a larger endowment per student."

Swarthmore has an endowment per student of $207,802, while Williams' is $143,806.

CUL targets freshman advising system for improvements

by Greg Hart

Last week, the Committee on Undergraduate Life released a set of recommendations designed to improve freshman advising, focusing on the roles of both the faculty advisors and the junior advisors.

The CUL Subcommittee on Freshman Advising, co-chaired by Assistant Professor of Philosophy Philip Clayton and John Keish '89, and made up of Tom Batters '89, James Lee '91 and Cathy Paper '89, drew up a document listing their specific recommendations. On February 13 the CUL as a whole agreed to sponsor the subcommittee's report.

The CUL, along with the Freshman Council, plans to send a survey to all freshmen during the second week of April. The survey will include a statement detailing changes in faculty advising which have been made in past years.

Freshmen will be asked to provide information on how many times and for how long they met with their faculty advisors, if their advisors initiated contact outside their offices and if their advisors had academic interests similar to theirs. The survey will ask the respondents to list five things they liked which their faculty advisors did and five things that they wish their faculty advisors had done.

Based on the results of this poll, the CUL will make recommendations regarding freshman advising.

"Although there are various things which could be changed to help the faculty advising system, it is something good to fall back on when you want to talk to a faculty member," Tom Evans '92 said.

Some changes in the system are already being considered. In connection with the survey, the CUL recommended that Dean of Freshmen Roberto Ifill write a short summary of the survey results to be included in next year's Handbook for Faculty Advisors.

"It is something good to fall back on when you want to talk to a faculty member."

The CUL is also considering sending an annual memo to all faculty advisors in early August. The note would be written each spring and would convey the importance of maintaining close contact with freshman advisors and stress the value of faculty advising.

To facilitate better relations between freshmen and their faculty advisors, the CUL is suggesting that administrative details and paperwork be kept to a minimum during the first meeting between freshmen and their faculty advisors.

The CUL also urges that fresh and their advisors have more contact, possibly at a pair of Advisor-Advisee Dinners similar to entry Special Dinners.

"Less formal relationship" "I think that [advisor-advisee dinners] would definitely be good. Faculty advising is supposed to be an opportunity for freshmen to get close contact and develop a less formal relationship with a member of the faculty and it is really intimidating for freshmen to take that initiative," JA Hillary Leonard '90 said. The advisor-advisee dinners would also provide an opportunity for contact between junior advisors and faculty advisors, which the CUL considers extremely important. In the committee's opinion, JAs should not hesitate to contact faculty advisors when a freshman is having academic problems.

Because junior advisors will be crucial in enacting any improvements in the freshman advising process, the CUL felt that JAs should realize the importance of the role they play in freshman advising and should give support to the faculty advising system.

The CUL recommended that this be achieved through emphasizing the role that JAs play as academic role models for their freshmen. JAs, according to the CUL, should not send the message that they are "effortless students who never need to study," and should be able to admit that they too have struggled academically.

The CUL suggested that the Dean's Office set up a faculty panel for JAs on the subject "The JA as Academic Advisor" during JA orientation. Junior advisors should also be informed during orientation about where to procure information on academic matters for their freshmen and should receive a copy of the handbook for faculty advisors. The CUL also recommended that a list of departmental majors, the faculty advisors for each major and any student majors who would like to advise freshmen or sophomores be made available.

"I think it would be a good idea to publish a list of all of the people in each major so freshmen as well as JAs will know who to go to for information," junior advisor '90 Phil Harris said.

Beyond the Bubble

Senate panel rejects Tower

The Senate Armed Services Committee voted 11-9 Thursday to recommend that the Senate reject the nomination of John Tower as Secretary of Defense. The committee's rejection of Tower dealt a serious blow to his nomination and stunned administration officials, who hold committee chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., responsible for pulling wavering Democrats toward the negative vote.

Nunn cited Tower's drinking habits, "indiscreet" relations with women and a public perception of conflict of interest in his recent work as a defense consultant as reasons for his decision to oppose the nomination. The last time a Senate committee rejected a president's choice for his Cabinet was in 1945 when the Commerce Committee turned down President Roosevelt's nomination of Henry A. Wallace to be Secretary of Commerce.

Nine killed as plane falls apart

A ten-by-twenty foot section of the fuselage of a United Airlines jumbo jet ripped off at 20,000 feet over the Pacific Ocean on Friday. Nine passengers were reported missing; people who survived the flight said that several whole rows of seats were sucked out of the plane. The Boeing 747 had just taken off from Los Angeles and was bound for Auckland, New Zealand. A preliminary investigation of the cause of the incident points to structural damage in the fuselage, and police are not ruling out foul play. The 19-year-old jet had a record of maintenance problems. Boeing has been unable to replace its older planes because of wiring problems in newer planes.

Hirohito buried in Japan

The burial of Emperor Hirohito was witnessed by the international community in Japan last week as kings, presidents and other representatives of 163 countries attended his elaborate state funeral. The state-sponsored funeral, which is estimated to have cost $80 million, took place amid much controversy. Critics say the ceremonies confused the distinction between Hirohito's role as symbolic head of state and his status as chief priest of the Shinto religion. All but three of the 166 nations invited to send representatives accepted, making it the largest state funeral ever, surpassing that of Yugoslav leader Marshal Josip Tito in 1980.

Fx-Klanman elected to Louisiana legislature

David Duke, a former imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, was elected representative to the Louisiana Legislature last week, causing acute embarrassment to the Republican Party. Duke changed his registration to Republican three days before he filed for office, but there is nothing the national party can do to make him stop calling himself a Republican and attracting support from the South's new Republican voters. During a news conference, Duke said, "I want to make it very clear that I am not anti-black." He said he wore a badge that said "Keep Forsythe White" during a march in Forsythe County, Georgia, three years ago because he agreed with the county's desire to keep the integrity of their community.

North Adams man found innocent of murder of son

A Pittsfield jury found Christopher Rahilly innocent on charges of second-degree murder following the death of his four-month-old son, ending a trial that had transfixed Berkshire County. Prosecutors had claimed that Rahilly's son died as a result of a "violent shaking" from his father. The defense, on the other hand, said that the baby died because the mother had accidentally dropped him on his head a week earlier (she testified that she was scared to tell anybody about the accident) and that rescue crews and doctors acted incompetently when the child collapsed August 12. The ambulance was late, and doctors incorrectly treated the child. The 30-year-old Rahilly and his wife intend to move to Florida, because the North Adams community has made them outcasts, they said.

Compiled by Ellen Drought from the Berkshire Eagle

1989 Campus elections

Monday, Feb. 27: Campaign Week Begins

Thursday, March 2: Election Information Packet in all S.U. boxes, with platforms/statements of candidates and instructions for computer voting.

Sunday, March 5: Speeches by Pres./V. Pres candidates, with questions and answers in Baxter Hall, 7:30. Reception following for the whole campus, in honor of nominees for all positions in the election.

Monday, Tuesday, March 6 & 7: General Elections held in Baxter mail room, 10 a.m. - 7 p.m.

Monday, Tuesday, March 13 & 14: Run-off Elections, held in Baxter Hall, 10 a.m. - 7 p.m.

Wednesday, March 15: Official announcement of all winners on the back of Daily Advisor. WCFM Williamstown, 8:00 p.m.

College Council Officers

President/Vice President

Craig Gangi '90 (President) & Carter Brothers '90 (VP)

Sanand Raghunandan '90 (President) & Carol Metcalfe '90 (VP)

Stacy Geant '90 (VP) & Liz Heshel '90 (President)

Secreta

George E. (Manny) Pelote '91

Josh Decker '91

Jongsoo (James) Lee '91

David Baxter '90

Jon Grey '90

Honor & Discipline Committee (2 seats per class)

Class of 1990:

David Bank

Frederick E. Bowers

Shelly Whelpton

Stephen Linn

Megan Ouchterloney

Silu Luig

Class of 1991:

Rebecca Borden

John Chan

Peter Kilvans

Anthony J. Fox

Rob Illig

James Speiss

Class of 1992:

Megan Farley

John Chan '91

Joel McElvain '91

Ben Johnson '91

Ed Wiggers '90

Helen Lee '90

College Council At-Large Seats

At-Large (4 seats):

Stephen Bailey '91

Rebecca Borden '91

Jimmy Higgins '91

Alex Moscovitz '91

Andy Komaroff '90

Allan Isaac '91

Bernard Ofori-Atta '92

Arun Pullani '92

Roberto Serrano '92

Phoenix Wang '92

Greylock Quad Representative:

John Chan '91

Joel McElvain '91

Mission Park Representative:

Ben Johnson '91

Nancy Metteman '91

Row Houses Representative:

John Freedman '91

Ed Wiggers '90

Berkshire Quad Representative:

Helen Lee '90

Dodd-Tyler Representative:

Ted Moore

Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (1 seat)

Peter E. Schneberger '92

Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (1 seat)

John (Spud) Freedman '91

ASHA

Paid advertisement of College Council

Ensemble's performance dynamic and well executed

by Alex Cohen
The job of expressing music through language requires the skills of a talented and experienced translator. Although I do not claim to be such a translator, I will try to transcribe the experience of the Williams Jazz Ensemble's performance, which occurred on February 25, at 8:00 p.m. in Chapin Hall.

The opening song was "Can't Stop My Leg," composed by Rob McConnell. The song was a leisurely stroll through Central Park, watching people watching each other. Philip Power '92 soloed on trumpet, a rather humorous anecdote about a group of young men and women playing frisbee. The band acted as a crowd, slowly gathering around the frisbee players, by increasing both in volume and density throughout the solo. The Ensemble dropped down while Paul Brainerd '89 took up the story on guitar, smoking a cigarette while observing the actions of a mime. Again, the crowd formed and was dissipated.

"Good News" was an eclectic number, which could have easily been the theme to a sitcom on NBC.

Next was a short lecture by Paul Passaro '89 and John Davenport '92 on a Latin tune called "Samba Da Hapa" by Mark Taylor (not the Mark Taylor we all know and love, as was pointed out by the Ensemble's Director David Kechley). Passaro, playing a flugelhorn, was a trifle verbose and somewhat stubborn. Davenport, on alto saxophone, however, kept an even pace, expressed his thoughts clearly and concluded with a flourish.

"First Child," by Robert Currow, followed — an overly melodramatic song about the sadness of a woman rejected by the man she loves. Then a Horace Silver tune titled "Esoch" which was fast, like pouring maple syrup. Dane Dudley '89 played a solo, a jaunty air about a sailor and a woman from Boston, on his brilliantly shining tenor sax. At this point, Brainerd's speaker fell over, and the reverb unit sounded itself in protest of this abuse. He appeared chagrined. "Scraple from the Apple," a Charlie Parker composition, described a rich scene from Tortilla Flat — Danny and Danny's friends in a healthy discussion about the love life of Cornelia Ruiz.

Alto Sax John Davenport '92 (left) and trumpeter Paul Passaro '89 (here playing the flugel horn) play featured parts of Mark Taylor's chart "samba de hapa" at last Saturday's Jazz Ensemble concert.

The next piece, my favorite, was dedicated to the Williams Record, and to the last person who reviewed a Jazz Ensemble performance. It was "Good News" by Bob Minner. It was an eclectic number, which could have easily been the theme to a sitcom on NBC. But a good sitcom, a funny one. There was a section that featured Sean Timmons '89 on bass trombone, which was obviously the background music to a concluding scene from Mission Impossible.

The soloists on "News" were superb. Calch Gordon '91 opened a debate cleverly spoken through his trombone. Adam Schlesinger '89 refused him effectively (delicately tickling the ivories, to use a cliché). Schlesinger ended with a short lick from the melody of a song, "Well, You Needn't," the author of which temporarily escapes my mind. Passaro, playing a trumpet now, stepped in and examined the argument, and decided to be relaxed about the whole thing, echoing the last theme played by Schlesinger not in notes, but in sentiment. Brainerd took over the conversation, with a buoyant, authoritative sound, and directed the ensemble to his cause, which he felt had not been properly addressed. Gene Lewin was on drums for the evening, and he agreed with Brainerd during an extensive and powerful drum break, arguing most persuasively. He knew how to tell of his plight precisely; he attracted the attention of the audience and the other musicians effectively. "Shiny Stockings," by Frank Foster, of Count Basic Orchestra repute, was yet another walking journey in New York City. It happened like this: It was midnight, and the stars were unseen. Paul Passaro proudly walked alone. Shiny stockings? Yes, shiny shoes, black tuxedo, newly-ironed white shirt and top hat too. It was Halloween and the demons and goblins and Andy Gibbs were out. On 14th Street, Sarah Lapey '92 sauntered over, touching the keys of the piano with purpose — subtly and irresistibly. She laughed. They walked south, holding hands, and sat in Washington Square Park. The mime from "Can't Stop My Leg" wandered over and winked. He sat down in the wind.

"Makin' Whoopee," written by Walter Donaldson, featured the intrepid traveler Sean Timmons. Timmons was not, I think, actually, making whoopee, but reminding, aloud and evocatively, about it.

"A Pretty Lot" was written and arranged by Williams' own Mark Sutton '92. I enjoyed it. I laughed. I cried. I ran the whole gamut of emotions. It featured a vocal solo by the trumpet section: "Tower of power don't need exorcism."

It was Halloween and the demons and goblins and Andy Gibbs were out.

We're just a pretty lot of gooses." Nothing more needs to be said.

Lapey and Schlesinger discussed the who and the why of "The Kid from Red Bank," by Neal Haffel. They expressed their opinions separately, and eventually, whilst trading fours (a musical expression) they reached a consensus. The Kid is short, thin and 34 years old. She lives in Brooklyn, NY, where she is an unemployed caddy.

The closing number was "Tangerine." It was a Jets (saxophones) vs. Sharks (trombones) affair. The result of the battle was, unfortunately, inconclusive. I was quite happy with the Ensemble's performance. It was well executed. Many of the musical groups on this campus have forgotten how to use dynamic and destiny variation, but the Williams Jazz Ensemble has not. My chief complaint is that they did not play any blues numbers.

Record Review

Dylan and The Dead

by Jamie Spiess

When Bob Dylan and the Grateful Dead took up their instruments in Foxboro, Massachusetts, in 1988, and turned the music into a swirling crowd, the internet level reached an unprecedented high for the afternoon. Yet as the swirling chords of "22 Times Ten" and "A-Change" were being played, the stadium, it seemed, became a sea of the rapturous, the ecstatic, the scared Dylan crowd, the Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd. The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd.

The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd. The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd. The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd. The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd.

The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd. The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd. The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd. The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd.

The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd. The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd. The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd. The Grateful Dead crowd, the back-to-back crowd, the back-to-back crowd.

Can you write like this?

"Yet the most valuable aspect of their performance for the audience was the display of erotic power that can overcome both performers and listeners."

"You can ski, only to be chain whipped by a body nazi trying to get ahead of you in the lift line."

The Arts section of the Williams Record is looking for reviewers and contributors to write on a free lance basis. Call Bill Savasone at x2869 or The Record at x2595.

Musician Tyner -- still the real McCoy

by Brad Gendell

Last Friday the Northern Berkshire Council of the Arts, as part of their "Cabin Fever Jazz" concert series, gave area residents a chance to hear one of the few living legends of jazz, McCoy Tyner. The concert was particularly exciting since Tyner's most recent album, "A Tribute to John Coltrane," had won the Grammy award for jazz album of the year just two days earlier.

Tyner strode onto the stage looking natty in a blue pinstripe suit and solid greyish-white shirt and tie. His slicked-back hair and trim build belied the fact that he turned fifty last December. But when he stepped up to the microphone, his raspy voice — which lies somewhere between George Raft and Louis Armstrong — left no doubt that he had been through it all.

Tyner's career began back in the late Fifties with the first big gig, a stint with the Benny Golson-Art Farmer Jazzet. Soon after, he was spotted by his fellow Philadelphia John Coltrane and became the pianist for the classic John Coltrane Quartet of Coltrane, Tyner, bassist Jimmy Garrison, and Elvin Jones on drums. The group played together from 1960 through the end of 1965 and established themselves as the premiere jazz group of their time.

Tyner's solo style demanded something more than the traditional Philadelphia hard bop or postbop could provide. This is when Tyner developed his unique sound. Tyner started using more modal forms without frenetic chord movement. This allowed Coltrane and the other members of the group more freedom to move into their own musical territory. Tyner's stable piano work was the fulcrum on which the quartet's sound seemed.

Tyner developed the use of a unique style of playing using left-hand fifths and right-hand fourths for chord formation. This style became widely used by pianists like Chick Corea and Bill Evans. He also developed the use of strong pedal points, a technique of playing a sustained or consistently repeated note or interval, usually on the left hand. This jibed well with Coltrane's desire to be supported with harmonic stability and provided Tyner with a perfect outlet for exercising his interest in expanding the rhythmic complexity of the piano. By repeating these pedal points in patterns reminiscent of African and Afro-Cuban rhythms, Tyner hit upon a style uniquely well-suited to both anchoring Coltrane's wildly moving melodic riffs and his own later solo work with its flashy runs.

Tyner's trio for the concert at the Clark

The McCoy Tyner Trio, featuring Pianist McCoy Tyner, Bassist Avery Sharpe, and Drummer Aaron Scott, jazzed up the Clark last Friday night.

Included well-known bassist Avery Sharpe and, a relative newcomer, drummer Aaron Scott.

The concert began with Tyner's beautiful, mellow cadenza introduction to the classic Irving Berlin tune "How Deep Is the Ocean? How High Is the Sky?" Unfortunately this introduction, beautiful as it was, brought into sharp focus a problem with the sound system in the auditorium. Sharpe showed his remarkable talents immediately with a hot solo in this tune that featured some fancy strumming, slapping and chord work.

The next song was a hot Latin tune called "Rio" that was strongly reminiscent of some of Tyner's other Latin work, such as "Latin Suite" off the recent "Double Trio" album. It featured a fancy ostinato bass line on the head, flashy piano runs, and the pulsing African piano rhythms that make "Tynerism" part of the jazz lexicon. This tune also had an electrifying drum solo in which Scott beat a walking rhythm on the high hat and became progressively quieter until, quite literally, one could hear a pin drop. The effect was of someone walking away into the distance all the way out of sight. Scott had a closed-eye look of meditative intensity and then awoke to play a ferocious second part of the solo that continued to use the high hat extensively with a constant, pulsing, arhythmic sound. Needless to say, it was a crowd-pleaser.

The third tune of the first set was the Gershwin classic "Summertime," which featured Sharpe on bass playing a fancy bowed melody and some extended solos with both bowed and plucked elements. Tyner's unique sound was perhaps most clear on this tune, as he played a solo with strong pedal points and arpeggiated runs. Scott supported the tune with nice brush work including a kind of "mixing bowl" rubbing on the snare that provided a background of intensity.

The final tune of the first set was "Frank's Back," which Tyner wrote for alto sax Frank Morgan when he was released after 25 years in jail for a drug-related offense. It featured a nice double-time feel on the bass and another drum solo.

The second set began with Sharpe picking up an electric bass to play "No Frowns Please," which he recorded with Tyner on the album "It's About Time." The electric bass gave the tune a funkier feel.

Tyner and Keith Jarrett have been vocal in opposition to the ubiquity of electronic instruments in jazz. Tyner certainly does not object to electronic music overall, as evidenced by the use of electric bass and auxiliary synthesizers on many of his albums, but he does object to their usurping the role of acoustic instruments in much jazz work done today.

For an encore, Tyner came onstage and delivered a gorgeous improvisation on his tune "You Taught My Heart to Sing." It was a beautiful and moving performance for which the chords really filled every nook and cranny of the auditorium.

Tyner, his playing, and his music are an organic whole. Another critic, Jon Dillbert, declared, "McCoy Tyner is more than just a pianist or composer. He is an entire concept of music." It's true. It is silly to try to dissect a Tyner solo from the rest of one of his tunes, or one of his tunes from his interpretation of other people's tunes. Other guys play the music; Tyner is the music.

Arts In View

February 28 At 8:00 p.m., the New Brass Ensemble will give a concert in Brooks Rogers. The concert, fifth in the Thompson Concert Series, will feature the works of Claude Lejeune, Giles Farnaby, J.S. Bach, Bela Bartok, Victor Ewald, William Schmidt, Scott Joplin, Fats Waller, and Duke Ellington.

March 2 At 8:00 p.m., Williams College Theatre will present two one act plays, "Krapp's Last Tape" and "Sacred Places," at the Adams Memorial Theatre, MainStage. The plays are part of a series, "For Michael: Contemporary Theatre III," dedicated to the memory of Assistant Professor of Theatre Michael C. Knight.

March 3 At 5:00 p.m., there will be a lecture and opening reception in conjunction with two exhibitions, "Blake to Beardsley: The Artist as Illustrator" and "New Acquisitions of Prints and Drawings," at the Clark Art Institute.

At 8:00 p.m., the series, "For Michael: Contemporary Theatre III," continues with three one act plays: "27 Wagons Full of Cotton," "Protest," and "Quartet." Adams Memorial Theatre, Down-Stage.

At 8:00 p.m., the Berkshire Symphony Orchestra will present a concert in Chapin Hall. The program will include works by Mozart, Stravinsky, and Beethoven as well as student compositions.

March 4 At 8:00 p.m., Williams College Theatre will repeat "Krapp's Last Tape" and "Sacred Places." Williams Memorial Theatre, MainStage.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinemas I, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
The Land Before Time 1:05 & 2:45
The Accidental Tourist 7:00 & 9:15
Twins 2:05 7:05 9:15
The Burbs 2:05 7:05 9:15

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
March 1-2 7:00 & 9:00
Talk Radio
Betty Blue and Bagdad Cafe
Another Woman
March 3-4 7:00 & 9:00
March 5-7 7:00 & 9:00

North Adams Cinema
Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Bill and Ted's Excellent
Adventure 7:10 & 9:20
The Burbs 7:10 & 9:20
Rain Man 7:00 & 9:30
The Burbs 7:00 & 9:30

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
Mississippi Burning, True Believers, Working Girl, Beaches, Gleaming the Cube: Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30
Rain Man 6:45 & 9:15
Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure, Three Fugitives, The Burbs, The Fly II, Twins: Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:15 & 9:30

Berkshire Mall Cinema
Rte 8, Lanesborough, 499-2558
Gleaming the Cube 1:00
Tap 3:30 7:00 9:30
Three Fugitives 1:25 3:55 7:25 9:55
Her Alibi 4:00 7:30 10:00
Beaches 12:45 3:15 6:45 9:15
Working Girl 12:50 3:20 6:50 9:20
Rain Man 12:40 3:10 6:40 9:10
The Fly II 12:35 3:25 6:55 9:25
Bill and Ted's
Excellent Adventure 1:20 3:50 7:20 9:50
Twins 12:50 3:20 6:50 9:20
The Burbs 1:10 3:40 7:10 9:40

Mass MoCA mogul Thomas Krens speaks on modern art and North Adams

Director of the Solomon R. Guggenheim Foundation Thomas Krens has been described as "the Clint Eastwood of the art museum director's world." The former WCA director was in Williamstown last Friday to lecture on "Refigured Painting: The German Image 1960-1988." Record contributor Dylan Tweney interviewed him on the exhibit, and his current involvement with Mass MoCA.

Record: Some of the artists in the exhibition don't seem to fit the classification, "Refigured Painting," particularly Naher and the textile work by Rosemarie Trockel.

Krens: Again, here's where the New York version of the exhibition would probably add a dimension to it. One thing you have to keep in mind, the Williamstown exhibition was not conceived as a smaller version of the exhibition in New York, or as a pendant of the exhibition in New York. The two parts of the exhibition make one. Since three quarters of it is in New York, and one quarter here, it has to see all of that. There's one Gerhard Richter painting here — a big abstracted Richter. One could say: What does abstraction have to do with refigured painting? The context in which it makes sense is to see the 13 paintings which are in the New York exhibition.

Richter clearly began working with a pop art style, taking photographs and pictures and using them as material, airbrushing a photograph, or repainting a photograph out. There's imagery here. That's important, because it's painting about imagery, it's painting about fiction. His exploration became more and more sophisticated. His top — that's an evil imagination. And the abstract painting is a commentary on the still life, because they speak to one another. So in that sense, it's figurative. Look at this exhibition with the catalog. Don't look at Rosemarie Trockel just on the basis of one work. What you'll see is that Rosemarie Trockel's woven words are essentially a counterpart to the still life and image painting that you'll see in the catalog. In other words, it's a critique of representation.

Record: Are you continuing to be actively involved with the Mass MoCA project?

Krens: I'm optimistic. I'm confident. It's clear the success of Mass MoCA will depend on whether or not we're able to present a credible plan. A credible plan has to be equally balanced between the cultural and the commercial side of it. It doesn't do us any good, for example, to design a building that costs $100 million if we only have $35 million. It doesn't make any sense for us to build a museum of 900,000 square feet if nobody is going to come. We have to be sure that

"The Border" by Dieter Hacker is one of the many paintings in the exhibit "Refigured Painting: The German Image 1960-1988" on view at WCA through March 26.

Refigured style is cathartic experience for artists

by Dylan Tweney

Thomas Krens, director of the Guggenheim Foundation in New York, gave a gallery talk last Friday on the current WCA exhibition "Refigured Painting: The German Image 1960-1988." Krens, who, with Michael Govan, assistant director at the Guggenheim, and Joseph Thompson, director of the Mass MoCA planning group, selected the art for this exhibition, spoke on the background of the works being shown and described the genesis of this show. The talk, attended by about 45 people, was an informative, if general, introduction to the art displayed.

Krens currently teaches one course, covering issues in contemporary art, at Williams. In 1984, according to Krens, one of his students expressed an interest in doing additional research into German art. The exhibition, "Refigured Painting," is the eventual result.

Krens sketched out the exhibition's context with an overview of postwar German art history. Immediately after the Second World War, there was virtually no cultural spirit in Germany. Out of this developed a "non-committal art" — generally abstract or minimalist art without painful historical references to subjects such as Nazism and the war.

However, beginning with artists such as Georg Baselitz and Horst Antes in the early Sixties there was a reurgent tendency to look at history, tradition, and context as well as a reinvention of the figure and form in representational painting, Krens said. Art became a cathartic experience for West and East German painters trying to deal with the implications of their recent history.

Most of the painters in "Refigured Painting" are the second generation of German representational art, according to Krens. However, he said, "We were able to build a coherent story" about the figurative tendency, from before 1960 to the present.

"As a movement, the wave was breaking in 1984," Krens said. Before "Refigured Painting," there had been only one museum show of contemporary German artists, although they were well represented in galleries in Europe and America. Therefore, the Guggenheim show (along with its satellite exhibition at WCA) is a virtual retrospective of the movement. In addition to the obviously figurative works, there are pieces

(such as the large, misty, landscape-like abstractions of Christa Naher, and the colorful paint splashes of Gerhard Richter) which seem more abstract, but Krens affirms the stylistic and thematic interrelatedness of all the artworks.

Krens mentioned some of the difficulties he and co-curators Govan and Thompson had in organizing the show. In selecting the approximately 200 paintings (28 of which are on view at WCA), he made over seventy trips to Germany and had to deal frequently with problems such as the unavailability of many works and the demands some artists made. "We became embroiled in controversy," he said, referring to the debate between those who see the figure as art as progressive and those who see it as reactionary. Furthermore, this art "has been so successful as a saleable art that many modernists accused it of being fundamentally bourgeois," Krens said.

The WCA show represents only a fraction of the whole exhibition. Krens affirmed that the works at the Guggenheim present a fuller picture of the modern German artists, but that the Williams installation captures the range of styles in the larger show.

One might wonder how an exhibition which originated in Williams College ended up all but bypassing WCA, except for a handful of works. It is unfortunate, although perhaps inevitable, given our museum's relatively small size. The fact that there is generally only one work per artist tends to accentuate the slightly disjointed appearance of the exhibition at the Guggenheim. For the most part, however, an underlying unity is discernible, linking the majority of works represented. Krens' gallery talk was useful in furthering that unity, and in situating the show within a historical context.

Refigured painting attempts to pierce German historical amnesia

by Alexander Goldman

Tabandoned last Wednesday's MassPIRG meeting early to go to the lecture given by Dorothea Dietrich, professor of art history at Princeton University, on developments in German painting after World War II. It started late. The lecture, that is.

Should you have gone to this lecture? If you were interested in hearing a talk about eight paintings in New York City, then, yes, you would have liked it. You would have been the only student in the audience, but if you were there for the lecture, that wouldn't have been a problem.

According to Dietrich, refigured painting is the only truly shocking style of painting that the West has produced since the war. It has been hidden for decades, rejected in part because it had real things in it, while everybody else was doing lines and squiggles.

Refigured painting has attempted to pierce a historical amnesia of the German people concerning the Third Reich. The paintings reminded people of the Nazi heritage through use of color (army ochre) and allegorical forms (spades were symbols of the forced labor camps). The works also seemed to say that the Nazis had left their mark on modern Germany despite concerted efforts to erase the past. These statements were not popular. Few critics bought such paintings, few galleries were willing to sell them, and few critics complemented them. The ambiguity of refigured painting also lowered their resale value.

No other modern art has been so completely rejected. All other modern art schools have wanted to be rebellious, and have rebelled on a metaphysical level. These paintings are the only modern paintings with true shock value. If you missed the lecture, you can always see the exhibit. You might even be offended by a painting (I almost was). I liked "Untitled," "Untitled," and "The Ricki-Paintings," a collaborative work by Walter Dahn and Jiri Georg Dokoupil.

Krens: My title there is chairman of the Mass MoCA Commission, which means that I, and the eight other commissioners, are responsible for producing the feasibility study. Producing the feasibility study, at this point, is an enormously complicated project.

All day today and all day tomorrow (February 24 and 25) there's a major design soiree that's taking place in New York City. All of the architects have come together with all of the consultants. They present their plans for critique, and the discussion lasts for two days. At this point, my engagement in Mass MoCA is fairly sustained, and fairly intense.

Record: What's the status of the plans for the museum at this point?

Krens: I'm optimistic. I'm confident. It's clear the success of Mass MoCA will depend on whether or not we're able to present a credible plan. A credible plan has to be equally balanced between the cultural and the commercial side of it. It doesn't do us any good, for example, to design a building that costs $100 million if we only have $35 million. It doesn't make any sense for us to build a museum of 900,000 square feet if nobody is going to come. We have to be sure that we can strike the proper balance between an important cultural center — I think an important international cultural center — and a regional economic entity.

Thomas Krens

continued on page 9

How to get through college with money to spare:

1. Buy a Macintosh.

2. Add a peripheral.

3. Get a nice, fat check.

Now through March 31, when you buy selected Macintosh® SE or Macintosh II computers, you'll get a rebate for up to half the suggested retail price of the Apple® peripherals you add on — so you'll save up to $800. Ask for details today where computers are sold on campus.

Apple Pays Half

Computer Center Sales Office
Room 110

© 1989 Apple Computer, Inc. Apple, the Apple logo, and Macintosh are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Certain restrictions apply. All rebates subject to strict compliance with the Terms and Conditions of the "Apple Pays Half" Program Guidelines, available from your authorized Apple reseller. Offer void where prohibited by law.

Athlete of the week

This week's recipient is freshman basketball star John Conte. Conte led all scorers with 22 points in Wednesday's overtime loss to Middlebury, and then exceeded this performance by scoring 32 in the Ephs victory over Tufts on Saturday. In his stellar first year, Conte is averaging 15.9 points per game, while shooting 47% from three-point range and 86% from the free throw line. Congratulations, John!

M. hoops

continued from page 12

and missing all eight of their shots from three-point territory. Middlebury chipped away at the Williams led throughout the second half, then finally caught up with 23 seconds left to play, when Panther captain Michael Gill hit both ends of a one-and-one to even the score at 72-72. The Ephs had an opportunity to take the last shot, but turned the ball over on the way downcourt. Conte fouled Middlebury's Patrick Torrey with seven seconds left, but the Panther guard missed the free throw, and the contest moved into overtime.

The Ephs led 76-75 with thirty seconds left in overtime, but surrendered a steal to the Panther's Jeff Smith, who hit a layup to put Middlebury on top by a 77-

76 margin. Williams came back for one more attempt at the basket, but Conte missed his shot, and when Gill came down with the rebound with two seconds left, it was all over. Gill hit a free throw to make the Panthers' final margin of victory 78-76.

Conte led all scorers with 22 points on the game, while Major had 18 and co-captains Mike Masters and Bill Melchioni, both playing in their final home game at Williams, tallied 14 each. Melchioni also pulled down 12 rebounds. Sophomore guard Jeffery Smith led the Panthers with 19 points.

The Ephs close out the regular season at Amherst on Thursday, when they'll be looking to avenge a loss to the Lord Jeffs at Chandler earlier this season.

Women's hoops posts two wins

continued from page 12

not pull away, and with 12:45 remaining, Smith trailed by just six, 50-44.

After that the nature of the game changed completely. What could have been a close ending turned into a blow-out as Williams held Smith scoreless for the next seven minutes. The Ephs netted 14 points over the span and suddenly found themselves on the fat end of a 64-44 margin. Williams was keyed by the surprising offensive play of Meg Brown '91, who put in eight points during the streak.

The Ephs were never in danger after that, allowing Smith some meaningless baskets at the end. The game closed on a great note for both the Williams fans and the already nostalgic Eph seniors, as Crouchley threw in a one-handed, falling out-of-bounds prayer at the buzzer. The seniors went out with a flourish. Hedeman led the team with 23 points and 17 rebounds (including 12 offensive). Crouchley added 21 points while Beasley pulled down eight rebounds and distributed nine assists. Brown was outstanding off the bench, pouring in 16 points and clearing 10 rebounds. Smith was led by Ann Gervasio who had 14.

Speaking on behalf of the seniors, Beasley commented, "I think Nancy, Missy, and I feel so proud of what Williams women's basketball has become. We came in as freshmen and started for a squad that finished something like 4-19. It is such an accomplishment to feel that the three of us have been behind a major transition to where we have become one of the most competitive and dedicated teams in New England."

Boston massacre

The Ephs backed up Beasley's claims when they traveled to Boston for an afternoon clash with the Tufts Jumbos on Saturday. Crouchley poured in 20 points and Brown chipped in 16 points and 9 rebounds to lead the squad to a 76-69 road victory.

Hedeman added 14 points and pulled down an impressive 16 rebounds, and freshman Kris Broadhurst continued her impressive first year in an Eph jersey as she burned the nets five times. Cadiogan completed the honor roll, overcoming a low scoring total to post seven assists.

The Ephs have one more game left on their regular season schedule. They will travel to Amherst on Saturday to meet the Defectors in a 2 p.m. battle. A victory would give Williams, now 14-6, a perfect record in Little Three play.

Krens interview

continued from page 7

make it all fit together. That means that we're very much involved with discussions about art, directly with artists, directors of museums and other cultural institutions. We're very much involved with developers and consultants who can show us the museum can be built for a certain amount of money and run for a certain amount of money.

Records: How will MassMoCA affect the economy of North Adams?

Krens: It will affect the economy of North Adams in two ways. First of all, it will have an immediate, tangible impact if MassMoCA brings people to North Adams. Essentially, it's establishing an institution in the city that is going to employ people. On the other hand, we also feel that it will link the destiny of North Adams to the cultural destiny of Williamstown, so it will also have a kind of secondary effect. We hope it will be a catalyst for attracting other economic activities. We hope it will make a contribution and complement the quality of the region.

Some people might be attracted to North Adams because its got a wonderful natural setting, but that might not be enough. With a wonderful natural setting and a wonderful cultural setting, the possibility of giving it an economic base increases. So, hopefully, we see MassMoCA having a direct, tangible impact by itself as well as a ripple effect.

Typing Service by published writer. Limited editing available. Typed or handwritten MS. Word processing disk storage. From $1.50/page. Tel. 458-2614

From	Round Trips starting at
New York
LONDON	358
PARIS	458
GUATEMALA City	340
CARACAS	320
HONGKONG	739
TOKYO	679
SYDNEY	1128

Restrictions apply. Taxes not included.

Check our low teacher fares. EURAIL PASSES ISSUED ON THE SPOT! Call for FREE Student Travel Catalog! 413-256-1261 AMHERST 79 So. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002

The best in Mountain Bikes

GT SPECIALIZED OKLEIN DIAMOND BACK

Assembled with care by professional bicycle mechanics

the Mountain Goat
"The Complete Outdoor Shop"

130 Water St., Williamstown, Mass. 458-8445

Sports

Women swimmers host N.E. meet

continued from page 12

Ephs finished with 726.5 points while Tufts had 829.5 points. Bowdoin was in third with 648.5 points.

The tenth event of the meet and first event of Saturday finals was the 200 free relay. Again, Williams took the first victory of the night with the team of Lebeau, Bueneventura, Davis and Schroeder posting a time of 1:41.11, barely edging out M.I.T. who touched at 1:41.40.

In the 400 individual medley, Colby strength Sally White captured first place, but barely missed breaking the New England record with a time of 4:40.14. Eph swimmer Freeman placed fifth in the top final heat in a time of 4:48.60 and Steinheimer placed eighth. The 50 yard fly which brought the Eph score so close to Tufts proved to be a fast-paced race. Eberhart took fifth in 27.81, trailing the M.I.T. winner Grieron by a little over a second. Webster and Davis both swam in the consolation final and racked up more points for the Ephs, taking ninth and 11th place respectively.

With the change to back and breast, power Tufts regained a clear edge due to their depth in those two categories. In the 100 back, Wesleyan Maria Floyd took first in 1:03.54 in the championship heat. Tufts' April Levine edged out Eph Lebeau for fifth place by about .3 seconds. Eph Bueneventura placed again at 19th.

Williams had no swimmers in the top final of the 100 breast, but Gibbons did take 16th place. No other Ephs were in the three final heats. In the 200 free, Schroeder took third in 1:57.22. Tufts'

Monahan, however, captured first and a New England record in the event in 1:54.47. Colby's White took second.

In the shorter race of the 50 back, Lebeau took top honors in 29.18, beating closest challenger by about half a second. Bueneventura captured sixth, scarcely missing fifth place which Tufts swimmer April Levine took. No Ephs swam the championship final of the 200 breast which was taken by Wellesley's strength Debbie Twiehell.

Eberhart once again gathered points for the Ephs in the fly. She followed Monahan in the 200 fly, finishing second in the final heat, in which she was the only freshman, with a time of 2:09.66, clearly ahead of third place Twiehell. The 100 individual medley continued no Williams swimmers in the top heat. Amherst's Heidi Wencel placed first in the medley with a time of 1:01.81. To end the long meet proceedings, Williams took the final victory of the competition in the 400 free relay in a time of 3:38.82, beating most-winner Tufts by over two seconds.

To continue the trend, the first victory of the night belonged to the Ephs. Schroeder placed first in the 100 free in 53.46, narrowly defeating Tufts swimmer Monahan. Following the sprint race, two Eph swimmers took on the endurance-testing 1650 free. Top-winner White captured this event as well with Freeman taking second 30 seconds later and Furniss placing fifth in the championship final.

In the shorter race of the 50 back, Lebeau took top honors in 29.18, beating closest challenger by about half a second. Bueneventura captured sixth, scarcely missing fifth place which Tufts swimmer April Levine took. No Ephs swam the championship final of the 200 breast which was taken by Wellesley's strength Debbie Twiehell.

Eberhart once again gathered points for the Ephs in the fly. She followed Monahan in the 200 fly, finishing second in the final heat, in which she was the only freshman, with a time of 2:09.66, clearly ahead of third place Twiehell. The 100 individual medley continued no Williams swimmers in the top heat. Amherst's Heidi Wencel placed first in the medley with a time of 1:01.81. To end the long meet proceedings, Williams took the final victory of the competition in the 400 free relay in a time of 3:38.82, beating most-winner Tufts by over two seconds.

The Eph divers added more than 150 points to the final Eph score, clearly playing a decisive factor in the meet's outcome. The first day, Williams trailed in third place behind Bowdoin until the last event of 3-meter diving which clearly put the Ephs in second at the end of the day with 400.5 points.

In the 3-meter competition, sophomore Eph Kathia Vandevenne took top honors with 433.50 points, narrowly defeating teammate Pauli Althoff '92 with 433.15 points. Both divers clearly separated themselves from third-place finisher Kelly Loeb from Amherst who had 409 points. Eph Ashley Clancy '91 hit the board during one dive in preliminaries, preventing her from making the final eight. Clancy still managed to take ninth, edging out fellow Eph Stephanie Lefko '91. Williams diver Janet Weiner '89 placed 13th.

Going into the 1-meter event, Althoff was leading Vandevenne 397.85 to 374.15; yet the top eight finalists started from zero Sunday night. Althoff took first with 425.40 points; Vandevenne finished next with 413.25 points.

"For the team, I think it's been an amazing year. Everyone swam her heart out... Our pool is the best facility by far in New England to accommodate warm-up, warm-down, races and diving. We were good hosts, I hope," said Clancy.

Wrestling

continued from page 11

had lost at a previous tournament. Western New England and Bridgewater State in a decision loss and a technical fall.

"I am pleased that the team this year gained a lot of respect from other teams in the league. Everybody worked hard, and our freshmen this year have great potential for the future," captain John Dillon '89 summed up his feelings for the season.

Gemignani's peak performances Yielding a first-period pin in his first match on Friday to Norwich, Gemignani scored the real surprise win of the day when he beat a tough contender from Wesleyan to whom he lost 1-10 in the Little Three meet last Saturday. Taking the first takedown in the first period, Gemignani gained confidence as he found himself leading 5-0 in the second period. Though the Cardinal caught up with him in the third period, Gemignani managed to come out on top with a 6-5 score in the end.

Inspired by his own performance, the Eph next vanquished a stalling UMass Boston grappler 15-10. The next day's fortunes, however, did not smile on Gemignani as he folded two matches to

SUMMER JOBS TO SAVE ENVIRONMENT
EARN $2500-$3500. National campaign positions to pass clean air act, stop toxic pollution, tighten pesticide controls & promote comprehensive recycling available in 18 states & D.C. Interviews on campus 3/7,8,9. Call Joe at 617-292-4810

Browne-Ladd & Swiss Challenge is looking for knowledgeable, experienced, energetic, responsible and sports-oriented leaders for its 1989 summer programs, minimum age 21.
• European Coordinators with excellent knowledge of either England, France, Switzerland/Munich area or Italy. Must be fluent in either French, German or Italian.
• Bike leaders, male, fluent French.
• Australia, New Zealand, Tahiti -- male leader must be native or have extensive knowledge of area.
For applications call (802) 253-9714

We have both 3 1/2" and 5 1/4" Maxell cassettes. Sold individually or in boxes of 10.

McClelland's
STATIONERY AND OFFICE PRODUCTS

458-4920 36 Spring Street Williamstown, Mass 01267

West Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081

We offer-

- 1) Area's largest fine beer & ale selection
- 2) Hundreds of quality wines
- 3) Unique videos as well as latest releases
- 4) Ambassador, Blue Mt. Arts, Far Side Greeting cards
- 5) Dozens of soft furry creatures from Dakin, Applause, and North American Bears
- 6) Soft drinks, munchies, party supplies
- 7) Great advice on matters large and small
- 8) Courteous, professional service

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond"
Williams '58

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, by proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best. We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and SHOE and BOOT REPAIR.

(413) 458-4321
66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
01267

McCormick reign comes to close Women's squash ends season with 15-6 mark

by Kerr Houston

Coach Bill McCormick saw his 35-year reign as Williams men's hockey tutor come to a rather uninspired end, as his troops dropped an 8-2 decision to Salem State on Tuesday evening and rounded out their 1988-89 campaign with a 10-13 record.

As the Ephs had seen their playoff hopes evaporate the previous week with a 6-2 setback at the hands of Hamilton, Tuesday's journey to Salem focused on giving Coach Mae a pleasant sendoff from the land of blues and Zambonis. But it was the Vikings who celebrated, as Dave McCauley opened the scoring at 1:28 of the second frame when he fired the puck past Matt Zella '91.

Just over three minutes later, John Sullivan, who wound up the night with two goals and a pair of assists, widened the gap to 2-0 when he poked a pass from Tom Egan into the Williams cage. The Ephs finally found gold at 5:59 of the same period, when Chris Donato '89 scored his second goal of the year on an assist from junior Bob Santry.

Salem State answered Donato's tally with a goal of its own, as Sullivan scored at 16:12 to grant the Vikings a 3-1 advantage. This margin was a short-lived

Any momentum that Swenson may have given his teammates, however, was soon lost when Viking John O'Neill took the air out of the Ephs with a short-handed goal with just one second four unanswered goals. Tallies by Steve McAdams, Steve McKinley, Dennis LeRoux, and McAdams left the final score at an embarrassing 8-2, and coach Mae could only search for positive signs in a season that had ended in a rather disappointing note.

Comments on Coach McCormick

"He's like a father to us all."

--Rob Abel '91

"He's a person who really puts the players in front of individual goals."

--Chris Donato '89

"Whatever he does, the guy has a heart of gold. He's one of the nicest guys I've met in hockey; he's just a damn nice guy."

--Ian Smith '91

one, however, as Mike Swenson gave the Ephs a boost before they headed to the locker room for the second intermission with a goal at 19:20 of the second period.

remaining in the period that put his squad up 4-2.

The situation only worsened in the third stanza, as Salem State reeled off

Coach Mae reflects

"I guess we ended our season at home against Middlebury," the coach said, referring to the squad's 2-1 Winter Carnival victory that had closed their home season. He proceeded to praise his troops, observing happily that "we just refused to quit. I think beating Amherst in the first leg of the Little 3 and then going down to Wesleyan and taking the Little 3 outright were the highlights of our season."

With a chuckle, the retired coach wondered about his future relationship with the team, as he noted that "I guess I'll set in come next hockey season that I'll have to adjust to breaking up my routine. I'll still be in the area, and I'll still be a big fan of Williams hockey."

Track results

Results reported by Steve Brody

In limited action this weekend at the Division I New England Championships, the men's and women's track teams posted the following results: Geoff Ighara '90 made the final and placed seventh in the triple jump with a leap of 46'8" that should allow him to compete at Nationals at Bowdoin in two weeks.

Dave Nadelman '89 ran a 1:57 in the trials of the 800 meters and did not advance to the final.

Joe McGinn '89 competed in the 35-lb. weight throw, but a poor performance did not get him into the event final. McGinn will compete at Nationals also.

The 4x800 meter relay team saw a strong lead-off leg of 1:58 run by Carey Simon '90, followed by a 2:00 from Brendan Kearse '92. Dave Tewksbury '89 and Ighara, filling in for Nadelman, who had strained his hamstring, completed the relay in 8:19.

Dawn Macauley '89 placed 6th in the 600-yard run with a time of 1:27.4. Christie Dempsey '89 made the final of the 1000 yards and ran 2:42.2 to place 8th.

Anne Platt, who will run the 1500 meters at Nationals, competed in the 800 meters this week. She ran 2:19.2 to place 7th in the final. The Ephs 4x800 meter relay team of Jen Morris '89 (2:25), Platt (2:18.1), Cherie Macauley '92 (2:22), and Dempsey (2:24), ran a school record 9:30.1.

In a ten-mile road race in Amherst, Massachusetts, on Sunday, senior Gil McCabe ran an impressive time of 55:07 to place fourth overall, and win himself some race hardware.

Members of the Eph squad will compete in the ECAC Championships at Bates this weekend before Nationals on March 10 and 11.

M. squash

continued from page 12
centrate enough and they played very well."

"A fitting finish"

Two victories were down and the main attraction of the weekend was left for Sunday morning at 10:00 a.m. Doug Gilbert began the match at the number two spot and fought a hard five games before taking the match and setting the tone for the rest of the day. Seth Packard '89 quickly came away with a 3-0 win at eight as did Pentz at the sixth spot.

Hallagan was next on the court. "I was a little nervous since they had beaten Trinity and it was the finals of the tournament, but when I saw Gumby (Gilbert) and Seth and Pentz win I felt confident," said Hallagan, "and it carried over into my play." While Hallagan rolled to a 3-1 win, senior Kaveh Khoshrowshahi was setting up another of his patented comebacks by falling down 2-0. "There was no way I was going to lose my last intercollegiate match," said Kaveh of his comeback 3-2 win, "and coach led to me and said we were behind and really needed my match."

"It was a fitting finish for us," said Kipstein of the match. "Navy is a great rival. They are probably more like us than most of the other teams, for while they play great squash, they also put the team before the individual and play with sportsmanship and fun, which we also try to do." The Ephs succeeded in doing this over the weekend, and the result was their season-ending win.

Skiing

continued from page 11

Peter Milliken '90 led the men's team in the 15 kilometer individual start skiing competition with a 16th place finish. Milliken also got good news concerning Nationals, as the withdrawal of a Dartmouth skier will allow him to take the final spot and join teammates Mac Nash '89 and John Cooey '92 in Jackson Hole this weekend. Nash was 20th in the individual race this weekend while Cooey completed the men's scoring with a 25th place result. The three skiers turned in the best relay result of the season for Williams, placing third in the 3x7.5 kilometer event.

The women's team was led in the ten kilometer race by the 11th place finish of Kim Bowes '92. She was followed closely by Kris Hansen '91 in 12th. The women's 3x5 kilometer relay of Kristin Semann '89, Bowes, and Hansen, finished second to complete a successful carnival heading into Nationals.

Strong Team for Nationals
According to Head Alpine Coach Ed Grees, this year's squad is "one of the strongest teams we've ever sent to the NCAA's." Nationals will be held next week at Jackson Hole, Wyoming. On the women's side, Williams will be represented by Omland, Sullivan, and Beiveau. Grosse, J.P. Parisien '90, Seed, Crowley, and Brule will challenge the best from skiing powerhouses like the University of Utah and the University of Wyoming.

Williams will also be represented at the international level. Freshman Brule will travel directly from Jackson Hole to Sofia, Bulgaria for the World University Games. Brule will join the U.S. college team in a competition against the best college skiers from around the world.

RICHARD D. SIMPSON

G. VINCENT COUSBOULE

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-4808

And this year I really mean it. So I'm buying myself an IBM® Personal System/2® computer to help me do everything from organizing notes and revising papers to creating high-quality graphics, and more.

Who knows, with this IBM PS/2, I may be so organized even my socks will match.

Stop by the IBM PC Fair on Monday, March 7th in Jesup Hall Lounge from 10 AM until 4 PM.

A special promotion with deals now for Students, Faculty and Staff.

Hoopsters split pair of games as tourney bids sent for ECAC

by Alexander Rachmiel

After suffering their second overtime loss in a week to Middlebury, the men's basketball team recovered to beat Tufts and salvage a berth in the ECAC post-season tournament. The eight team tournament has Trinity as its top seed. The seventh seeded Ephs will play in second seed Colby at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday evening. With only the Amherst rematch, to be played Thursday, remaining in the regular season, the Ephs' record now stands at 15-6.

In both of last week's games, the Ephs were led by their starting backcourt tandem of Garcia Major '90 and John Conte '92. In Saturday night's win at Tufts, Conte led all scorers with 32 points and Major added 28 to lead the Ephs to a 106-90 decision over the Jumbos. Each hit three three-pointers, and Major grabbed eight rebounds. Earlier in the week, Major had been named to the All-New England second team.

In Wednesday night's game against Middlebury at Chandler, the Ephs dropped their final home game of the season 78-76 in overtime. The setback was especially painful in that it came only a week after a heartbreaking overtime loss at Trinity.

In the first half, the Ephs jumped out to a 43-33 halftime advantage on the scoring of their guards. Major, who had eighteen points in the game, scored three acrobatic field goals in the game's first minutes to give the Ephs a 14-2 lead, and later in the half Conte hit three three-pointers in quick succession to help off a Panther comeback.

Ephs shoot poorly
The Ephs let Middlebury back into the game, however, with poor shooting in the second half. After hitting 52 percent of their field goal attempts and all four of their three-point shots in the first period, the Ephs went cold in the second, converting only 37 percent from the field continued on page 9

Co-captain Mike Masters '89 sends one up in last Wednesday's game against Middlebury. The Ephs lost in overtime, 78-76, in what was their last home game of the season.

Wrestlers 10th at New England tournament

by James Lee

The Eph grapplers returned home Saturday with several trophies from the New England tournament held at MIT, placing 10th ahead of Bridgewater State, Bowdoin, Trinity and Little Three Amherst. The team closed its season this winter with overall improvement since last year.

Captain John Dillon and Keith Ritzke are the sole graduating seniors on the squad. Due to an injury, Ritzke did not wrestle this weekend.

"We had a really young team with few upperclassmen. We have good recruits for next year. If they (Williams) keep this core, we will do really well next year. I wouldn't be surprised if Williams is in the top six," said Dillon. The senior captain won one of his three matches this weekend.

The majority of the nine-man line-up suffered early defeats at the hands of top-seated contenders. However, Ivan Fermon '92 in 118 carved out a fourth-place finish for himself and Chris Gemmignani '92, wrestling above his weight class in 158, registered a surprise sixth-place finish. Eph Sean Glynn '91 also performed well, defeating on points a rival Amherst wrestler to whom Glynn continued on page 9

Sports Quiz

Win a $15 gift certificate from Goff's -- enter the quiz

- 1) The Boston Celtics made the transactions column last week, as they sent a pair of players to Sacramento in exchange for two Kings. Name any three of the players involved.
- 2) The merry-go-round that is the top position in the nation's men's college basketball ranking continued to spin on Saturday. Whom did the Missouri Tigers send tumbling from the number one ranking?
- 3) L.A. King Wayne Gretzky speculated early last week that he thinks he can break the all-time NHL career scoring mark (regular season only) this year, in what his only his tenth season. Whose record is he poised to shatter?
- 4) Williams College is rather unique in that its nickname - the Ephs - begins with the letter E. Name any other college that shares this same claim to fame.

Send your answers to Mariam Nafley at SU 1871 by Saturday, or call the Record office (x2400) Sunday before 5 P.M. In case of a tie, the winner will be chosen in a random drawing. Last week's winner was Larry Smith '92. Larry won a drawing among eight correct entries. Congrats, Larry!

Last week's answers: 1) Orel Hershiser signed a contract worth $7.9 million over three years; 2) Roger Clemens was the richest player in baseball for two days before Hershiser signed; 3) The Detroit Pistons traded Adrian Danilic for Mark Aguirre; 4) Garcia Major '90 scored 48 points in the Ephs loss to Trinity.

SKI SALE

save 50% ON ALL - SKI PARKAS - SKI PANTS - SWEATERS

save 30% On all other ski equipment & ski wear in stock

GOFF'S SPORTS, INC.

15 Spring Street 458-3605

Wyoming, NCAA's skiers next stop

by Jeff Biersach

The Williams alpine ski team travelled to the Middlebury Snow Bowl for the NCAA Division I Eastern Championships. The team skied well overall at what was the last qualifying carnival before Nationals, to be held at Jackson Hole, Wyoming.

The men took fourth place in Friday's wide open and fast giant slalom. The G.S. squad was led by strong skiing from sophomore Lindon Seed in tenth place. Eric Grosse '91, who has been skiing very well in the second half of the season after a slow start early on, backed Seed's finish with a 14th-place finish. Sophomore Bill Crowley placed twenty-third for the team. The University of Vermont, one of the nation's top G.S. schools, won the day.

The alpine women did not fare as well on Friday. According to senior captain Mari Omland, the women have not been skiing strongly in G.S., and Middlebury's G.S. demanded smooth skiing to carry speed on the long flats. The women finished in sixth place, with a twentieth from Omland and a twenty-third from Amy Sullivan '91. Sophomore Amy Beliveau had the crash of the day at high speed she hooked a tip and, according to her teammates, "caught a lot of air" before she flew spinning into the woods. Luckily, Beliveau survived the fall unharmed.

Slalom

Saturday's slalom was held on Ross Trail, no lay, steep, and demanding run. The Williams men finished in third place. Skiing in front of a huge Middlebury crowd, Eph freshman David Brule took a fourth-place finish. Brule, who skied conservatively, was only one second behind first-place Gregg Brockway of Dartmouth. Crowley, whose hard-edging style was well suited to the icy conditions, scored a seventh for the Ephs. He was backed by solid skiing from Grosse, who came in with an eleven.

The women's slalom team also finished third. Omland had another strong race, finishing third behind first-place Gella Hamburg of UVM. Omland's finish on Saturday proved that she is one of the most consistent top-seed skiers in the NCAA. On a college circuit characterized by nearly constant slalom DNFs, Omland is the only skier to finish every race both this year and last year. Freshman Ariana Grosse posted her best finish of the season with an eighteenth. Senior Monika Kopp came in with a strong nineteenth-place result for her last college carnival.

Nordie highlighted by replays
The nordie teams had much better results than they did at the Williams Carnival, especially on the men's side. continued on page 10

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Ragtag Band

BY A. J. SANTORA/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

ACROSS
1 Next of kin?
5 Low life forms
12 Forgetful
19 Deed, in Dijon
20 Actors Ed and William
21 Make unfriendly
22 Colleen McCullough's music minkers?
24 Family of Gram's first
25 Fluffy fare
26 Shut up
29 Tinge
29 Fashion designer
31 Inza latina
32 Patrick hallucinogen

DOWN
1 Boater or bowler
2 Chamber sound
3 Liz Smith report
4 Practice
5 See eye to eye
6 One of the "M" boys of baseball
7 Plink, e.g.
8 Sponsorship
9 Crosby was one
10 First (above all else)
11 Krupp city
12 Onion ingredient

ACROSS
33 Purpose
37 Clergyman
38 Handled this well
40 What Carson and Leno did (dance for two)
44 Humbug
48 Beat it, Ringo!
48 Rock producer Brian
47 Soccer great
49 Candia
50 Abbot's right-hand man
52 Folded, filled tortilla
53 R.E.O. middle
54 This hunch
55 Synthetic fabric
56 Of 60 Across
57 Lifeboats
59 Sella
60 Back burner?
61 What this country singer needs?

DOWN
66 Purpose
67 Clergyman
68 Handled this well
70 What Carson and Leno did (dance for two)
72 Burglar, e.g.
73 Seasoning
74 Vandalize
78 Traci
77 Excitement
78 Poe's "— in Paradise"
79 Salsa
80 Recited "At the Movies"
81 Chesterton's "— survey"
82 Times vehicle
83 Horse or car
84 Kind of clause
87 Where Bush whacked
88 Wore
89 Singer Sam Cooke
91 At the tip of one's lungs?
93 A Jackson
94 Secretary of War
95 Walk like
96 Fetus
97 Mythical beasts
100 Quartet members
103 Rooter for hockey's Oilers
105 Barn dance
106 Proximity
107 End of the reign of rain
108 Be next door to
111 In my case
112 Noted, as a leaf
113 Harmonize, for short

DOWN
13 Clement
14 Seaman's clock
15 Makes into law
16 What Stan Getz has?
17 Suburban people?
18 "Magnifique," 1953 hit song
21 How to play polkas?
23 "I Love You Truly," for one
27 Darkness hrs.
30 Why the musical was R-rated?

DOWN
31 Inza latina
32 Patrick hallucinogen
33 Purpose
37 Clergyman
38 Handled this well
40 What Carson and Leno did (dance for two)
44 Humbug
48 Beat it, Ringo!
48 Rock producer Brian
47 Soccer great
49 Candia
50 Abbot's right-hand man
52 Folded, filled tortilla
53 R.E.O. middle
54 This hunch
55 Synthetic fabric
56 Of 60 Across
57 Lifeboats
59 Sella
60 Back burner?
61 What this country singer needs?

DOWN
66 Purpose
67 Clergyman
68 Handled this well
70 What Carson and Leno did (dance for two)
72 Burglar, e.g.
73 Seasoning
74 Vandalize
78 Traci
77 Excitement
78 Poe's "— in Paradise"
79 Salsa
80 Recited "At the Movies"
81 Chesterton's "— survey"
82 Times vehicle
83 Horse or car
84 Kind of clause
87 Where Bush whacked
88 Wore
89 Singer Sam Cooke
91 At the tip of one's lungs?
93 A Jackson
94 Secretary of War
95 Walk like
96 Fetus
97 Mythical beasts
100 Quartet members
103 Rooter for hockey's Oilers
105 Barn dance
106 Proximity
107 End of the reign of rain
108 Be next door to
111 In my case
112 Noted, as a leaf
113 Harmonize, for short

DOWN
13 Clement
14 Seaman's clock
15 Makes into law
16 What Stan Getz has?
17 Suburban people?
18 "Magnifique," 1953 hit song
21 How to play polkas?
23 "I Love You Truly," for one
27 Darkness hrs.
30 Why the musical was R-rated?

Solution on page 9

Women swimmers play host to New England meet

by Anne Joseph

Last weekend, fans, officials, coaches and swimmers from two dozen schools crowded Chandler's pool deck as Williams hosted the women's New England competition. The Ephs clearly boasted a strong squad of both swimmers and divers, but trailed behind predicted powerhouse Tufts all three days of the meet. Tufts ended New England's with 1188 points; Williams finished second with 1129.5 points, distinctly ahead of second, third and fourth finishers Bowdoin, Wellesley and Amherst respectively.

In overall individual competition, co-captain Michelle Freemer '89 placed sixth with 96 points for the entire meet. Top individual honors went to Colby swimmer Sally White with 117 points. The meet commenced Friday morning with preliminary trials for the first nine events with championship, consolation and bonus final heats running in the evening. In the 200 medley relay, Williams not only took first place in the championship final heat, but the team of Dori Lebeau '91, Elizabeth Gibbons '92, Elizabeth Eberhart '92 and Lee Schroeder '91 also broke the New England record in 1:52.51 and finished about two seconds ahead of second-place M.I.T.

Freemer '89 then swam in the championship final of the 500 free, coming in third behind Colby power Sally White and Tufts' Maureen Monahan. Sophomore Eph Alison Furniss won the consolation final in 5:23.61, doing better than three swimmers in the top heat. Kate Steinhilmer '92 took 24th.

Although missing Eberhart in the 100 fly, Williams captured several points in the consolation and bonus finals of the event. Co-captain Connie Davis '90 placed 10th; Kelly Webster '92 took 18th and Sara Kopp '92 captured 22nd place for the Ephs. M.I.T. strength Yvonne Grierson took the entire event in 58.35, with the next place nearly two seconds behind.

In the 50-yard breaststroke swimming, Williams managed to place respectably in the lower two final heats. Gibbons took 15th while Eph freshman Barbara Behling, Candace Kelly and SMU freshman Heather Derece battled it out in the bonus final. Behling edged out Kelly and Derece, 34.84 to 34.92.

Eph Lebeau also missed championship finals, seeded ninth after morning trials, yet Lebeau crushed in the consolation finals of the 200 back, winning the heat in 2:17.43, a time which would have placed her fourth in the top eight. Patricia Buenaventura '92 also took 21st in the event.

The sixth event of the 50 free is one of the most exciting races to watch because of the tremendous speed and short length of the race. Eph Schroeder hit the wall in victory over a second ahead of the rest of the heat, not only taking first in the championship final but also breaking the New England record in 24.11. Davis also took 14th.

In the 200 individual medley, Eph Steinhilmer took sixth in the championship race after Wellesley and Bowdoin. Tufts showed amazing depth in the 800 free relay finals. The Jumbos took the event in 8:04.08, beating second-place Wellesley and third-place Williams, represented by Eberhart, Davis, Furniss and Freemer.

Second day competition
The second night of finals had Eph fans excited about the possible close-in on first-place Tufts. After the 50 fly, Williams trailed Tufts by a mere half-point, 588 to 587.5. At the end of 16 events, however, the gap had widened. The continued on page 9

Sophomore Dori Lebeau (second from left) prepares to swim the anchor leg of the 200 free relay last Saturday night in the New England's tournament held in Chandler Gymnasium. Lebeau and teammates Patricia Buenaventura '92, co-captain Connie Davis '90, and Lee Schroeder '91 were victorious, taking the race in 1:41.11.

Men's squash captures division

by Lewis Fisher

The men's squash team completed its season this weekend at Yale by winning their division of the National Intercollegiate Squash Championships. In an appropriate finish, the racketeers defeated Navy, who they had opened the season with, to take home the hardware. The exciting final was made possible after Williams crushed Hobart 10-0 and handled Tufts 7-2, while Navy squeaked past Trinity 5-4 before falling 7-2 to the Ephs.

Williams was the first seed in the second bracket of the tournament. They would have played in the first bracket had Canadian representative Western Ontario not been present. The team was not disappointed with their placement, however, for, according to senior Rob Hallagan, "it gave meaning to our weekend." Hallagan referred to the chance to play for the division championship that the seeding gave the team. Doug Gilbert '89 reiterated, "We could have played in the first division and done all right against Dartmouth or Cornell but the future professionals from Canada and the Ivy would have crushed us." Eight teams competed in the top division.

"I'm not a morning person"
The weekend started early for the red-eyed Ephs, as they were forced to play Hobart College at eight on Saturday morning. Although a respectable team with an 8-2 record, Hobart posed no real challenge to the Ephs, and only one game was lost by the purple and gold. Chris Kipstein '89, the loser of the one match, explained the aberration by stating simply, "I am not a morning person." The only other source of concern was at the sixth spot where sophomore Chris Pentz was cracked in the elbow by his opponent's racket. Although the wound required bandaging and could have hindered Pentz in later matches, the sophomore, apparently unfazed by the blow, just tried "to save my energy for Tufts later that day, and get used to the courts."

The Tufts Jumbos were looking to avenge their regular season loss to the Ephs but were thoroughly denied by the racketeers, who squeaked any attempt they made with a 7-2 victory. Most of the Williams players won their matches in three games, playing with confidence and control. The two losses came at the three and four slots where seniors Adam Kimberly and Lewis Fisher had trouble handling the power game of Tufts on slick courts where the ball tended to skid away. As Kimberly put it for the two, "We just didn't con-

continued on page 10

Meg Brown '91 shoots for the Ephs, much to the dismay of an angry Smithie. Williams beat Smith 74-58 last Tuesday in what was the last home game of the season. Brown scored 16 points and pulled down 10 rebounds during the game.

Women cagers win tourney bid after wins over Smith and Tufts

by Asif Jallil

The Williams women's basketball team threw its name in the hat for a post-season bid last week with a pair of conference victories. They coasted past Smith 74-58 in the final home match of the 1988-89 campaign, and then closed the door on Tufts on Saturday as they posted an impressive 76-69 victory.

Against Smith, Williams got off to a tentative start but managed to pull itself together thanks to the play of its seniors, who were enjoying their last regular season date in Chandler Gymnasium. The Ephs, apparently tight due to the emotions surrounding the game, turned the ball over on their first three possessions. Smith, meanwhile, got off to a fast start, scoring off the opening tap, and was up 6-0 before Williams got on the board.

The Pioneer lead was short-lived, however, as Hedeman and Crouchley brought Williams back. The Ephwomen took the lead for good, 17-16, at the 11:40 mark when senior Nancy Hedeman scored inside off a great feed from classmate Julia Beasley. That kicked off a 13-0 run for the Ephs, during which Hedeman sandwiched seven points around three straight baskets by Missy Crouchley '89. Smith could not fit its thumb in the dike, only intensifying the Williams flood by committing five turnovers during the two-minute stretch.

Both teams had trouble scoring over the last couple of minutes of the opening act, and the score at the half was 38-30.

Williams' advantage was not the result of stellar shooting—the Ephs only made 17 of 52 shots. Instead, the Ephwomen made a living on the boards, as they soared to a 38-23 rebounding edge, including 23 offensive rebounds.

Sophomore Chrissy Cadigan, suffering through her worst day of the season, made only one of nine attempts from the field. Hedeman had 16 points and Crouchley followed with 14.

Ephs pull away
The Ephs opened the second half slowly as well, as the Pioneers again posted the first six points of the half to draw within two, 38-36. The Williams offense finally began to click but could continued on page 9

When the Dust Settles

WUFO future, past is story of fun and success

by James Lee

Have you ever experienced the charge of an energy circle? It's the spirit-raising exercise of the Williams Ultimate Frisbee Organizations (Wo.W.U.F.O. and W.U.F.O.), which have proved that purple cows, too, can catch frisbees. These frisbee enthusiasts, both men and women, can be found practicing together on afternoons in the Greylock Swamp.

Developed in the late 60's as a competitive sport, ultimate frisbee is now played worldwide. Having no coaches and referees, this friendly sport operates on what is known as the "spirit of the game," an unwritten rule requiring participants to exhibit sportsmanship by self-score-keeping and making self-calls when offenses occur. The rules are simple: there are seven players on each side and the game terminates when one side scores 15 points. To score, one must be in the end zone and catch a frisbee thrown there by a teammate. Games can last anywhere from 90 to 150 minutes.

"You need to be a fast runner and able to jump high and make quick cuts in order to be a good player. Ex-soccer players usually are good at making cuts," said W.U.F.O. President John Bellwar '89. Running the 70-yard field, ultimate players block, catch, stop and throw in order to reach the end zones.

WUFO's history
"Since 1986, a lot of changes [in W.U.F.O.] have taken place. We have a lot of real athletes playing now and the emphasis is definitely more on athletics than on the social, making the sport much more competitive," said Bellwar. Started in 1979 by Byrne Kelly '79, W.U.F.O. has developed into a powerful team. Last spring, the men's division finished fifth in the New England regional tournament and captured the prestigious SUNY Purchase Cup in an 18-team tournament. According to Bellwar, the team has a good shot at berths in both the New England regionals and the national championship this spring.

Members of WUFO and WoWUFO gather for a group photo in the snow last Sunday.

Wo.W.U.F.O., the women's team, became a separate entity from the men's team two years ago under the leadership of Ann Carson '89. Wo.W.U.F.O. has come a long way since its first season, when it did not score a single point. Last fall, the team placed third at the New England regional tournament and won the honorary "most spirited" team award there.

"The way we play is a little different from the way the men play. Whereas they utilize strength in making long throws, our strategy involves short passes and quick throws in a precision game," said Carson. According to Monica Brand '91, next year's co-captain, the women's squad, like the men's, looks forward to placing within the top three at Regionals this spring and going on to Nationals.

Team make-up
"It really is the best in club sport. You have great fun just playing together and never have to do drills, runs or jumping jacks," said Mike "Psyche" Morrel, a Williams resident who has been playing W.U.F.O. ever since 1980 when he was an Eph freshman. Two Eph faculty members, Dave Levine (Computer Science) and Colin Adams (Mathematics), also play full-time on W.U.F.O., practicing everyday and going to tournaments every weekend with the students.

"We have some great faculty-student interaction on the team," Bellwar said. From a core of about 35 players who show up regularly at practices, 15 travel to tournaments. "This is the first year that we were not able to take to the tournaments everybody who wanted to go," said Bellwar.

About 15 players usually show up at Wo.W.U.F.O. practices. The two teams practice together regularly and often travel to tournaments together.

Though ultimate frisbee has a fall season and winter indoor practices, the real season starts after Spring Break. "For new players, we offer a two-week crash course in the beginning of the fall season. Though basic skills are easy to master, the whole fall season is a learning process," Bellwar explained.

With only a few seniors graduating from the team this year, last fall's addition of talented freshmen makes W.U.F.O. and Wo.W.U.F.O.'s prospects for the future bright.

Steinman

The large size of the class of 1992 may mean closer quarters in upperclass housing next year. Director of Housing Tom McEvoy announced that many current singles, such as this one in Currier House, will be turned into doubles.

Freshman class creates housing crunch

by Peter Kilvane

The class of 1992 has approximately 40 extra students, and the Housing Office is planning ways to avoid a housing crunch next year. The extent of the problem will not be definite until it is clear how many students go abroad, withdraw or live off campus next year. The number of transfer and exchange students that come to Williams next year will also affect the situation.

"The problem is not real severe," Director of Housing Thomas McEvoy said. "We're not going to force anyone into a certain living situation." Thirty-five extra beds will be needed and no house will have to absorb more than four extra people, he said.

Assistant Dean of the College Andrew Hernandez and McEvoy have worked to find large singles that can be turned into doubles. "We asked the house presidents to identify the rooms in their houses that can best accommodate another body," McEvoy said. They have identified four rooms in Agard, Bascom, and Garfield, three rooms in Fitch and Currier, two rooms in Spencer, and one room in Woodbridge. Greylock and Mission Park will remain all singles, and Dodd-Tyler will most likely be unaffected. "We're trying to spread the inconvenience over the system," McEvoy said.

Off-campus housing According to Hernandez, another possible solution to the problem might be permitting more juniors to live off-campus next year. "If other juniors were to come to me in the next couple of weeks to live off-campus, I would be inclined [to let them]," McEvoy said.

"If other juniors were to come to me in the next couple of weeks to live off-campus, I would be inclined [to let them]"

McEvoy said. Hernandez and representatives from the College Council have been looking at ways to shorten the process and make it less confusing. "I've been on campuses where we've housed 15,000 students in two days. What Tom McEvoy and myself are doing is looking at the whole process," Hernandez said. "It's a 20-year-old system based on the needs of getting rid of fraternities and going coeducational." The whole system may have to be redone for the '90s, he added.

"We would like to see Stetson Apartments converted to co-op housing eventually," he said. The current administration houses, which will be vacated when Hopkins Hall is completed, will become faculty housing or office space.

The Class of 1993 will still be approximately 510 students but the number of transfer students will be sharply curtailed, Director of Admissions Phil Smith said.

"We've been taking 25 to 30 transfer students who need spaces in upperclass housing. This year we're anticipating about 10," Smith said. He added that the college would also be reducing the number of exchange students slightly in an effort to balance the increase in the number of freshmen.

Minority seat election marred by controversy

by Greg Hart

The College Council's decision to reopen the nominations for the two minority representative seats on the council was strongly influenced by senior Farhan Haq's misrepresentation of the facts, according to council members.

Several council members, including College Council President Trace Blankenship '89 and Vice-President John Kesh '89, said that Haq told the council that he had spoken to Allan Isaac '91 and Phoenix Wang '92, two of the original three nominees, when in fact he had not spoken to Wang. At the council meeting, Haq said that the two candidates had told him that they would withdraw from the race if the nominations were not reopened. Based on this misinformation, the College Council voted to extend the deadline for nominations.

Farhan had not spoken with Phoenix or Arun [Pullani] '92, the third original candidate. What he said at the College Council was not true," Kesh said.

Isaac, Pullani and Wang are Asian-American.

Reopening nominations

Haq brought up the idea of reopening the nominations for next year's minority representative seats at the College Council meeting Thursday, February 23. Haq was sitting in at the meeting for Monique Waddell '90, one of the current minority representatives, who had to leave shortly after the meeting began.

"I was there as a proxy for Monique Waddell. I was told by Monique to bring up the issue of reopening the nominations. The minority community apparently felt that there was a need for the nominations to be reopened," Haq said.

Before the meeting officially began, Haq and Waddell told Kesh and Blankenship that the nominations for the minority representative seats needed to be reopened. Black students, they said, had been deeply involved with internal affairs in the Black Student Union during the previous two weeks and because of extraordinary circumstances potential nominees were unaware of the deadline.

Haq said, "When I was told that there were no black or Hispanic nominees, I felt that that would cause a lot of contention. I felt that it was important that the nominations be reopened to prevent future problems."

During the meeting, Haq stated that he had spoken to Isaac and Wang, and they had told him that they would withdraw from the race if the nominations were not reopened.

"[Haq] did say that he'd spoken with both of them and they would think it was fine if the nominations were reopened. I don't think he said that they would withdraw. He said 'I get the feeling that they would withdraw,'" College Council member Amy Scott '90 said.

In a separate interview, Haq told the Record, "I never said that they had told me they would withdraw."

Allan agreed to help. He didn't say anything about withdrawing. I hadn't talked to Phoenix, but I planned on talking to her. If the vote hadn't reopened the nominations I would have talked to Phoenix and Allan and advised them to withdraw."

"I never said that they had told me they would withdraw. That is a different impression and a false one," Haq said.

Kesh, however, disagrees with Haq's version of the events.

"That's just not true"

"I really can't believe that he said that. That's just not true. Farhan definitely said that he had spoken to two of the three candidates and it was clear that they had agreed to withdraw if the College Council didn't reopen the nominations," Kesh said.

Blankenship said, "I'm really against this becoming a person-specific thing, but in terms of what happened...much of the rest of the College Council was under the impression that [Haq] had said he had talked to [Isaac and Wang] and that they would withdraw."

Freshman Council President Molly O'Meara '92 agreed. "From listening to Farhan, I understood that he'd spoken to two of the three nominees. He said that they would both drop out."

Under the impression that Isaac and Wang planned to withdraw if the nominations for minority representative were not reopened, the College Council voted 17-11-0 to extend the deadline for minority representative nominations until noon, Saturday, February 25. The original deadline was on Friday, February 17.

The persuasive element was Farhan saying that he had talked to Allan Isaac and Phoenix Wang, and that both Allan and Phoenix said they believed so completely that the nominations should be reopened that they would withdraw in

continued on page 5

Applications to Williams fall as teen pool shrinks in U.S.

by Dan Skwire

The number of applications for admission to Williams College has dropped significantly from last year, according to Director of Admissions Phil Smith. Williams has received 4325 completed applications to the class of 1993, down from 4962 to the class of 1992. The all-time high was 5099 applications to the class of 1991.

"Most of the decline is going to come from...our major states. Next year is going to be much worse."

Smith said the nearly 13 percent drop reflects changing demographic patterns more than anything else. He cited the number of 18-year-olds in the United States, which has decreased from about 2.9 million in 1978 to a projected 2.2 million in 1993.

"Most of the decline is going to come from Massachusetts and New York, our major states. Next year is going to be much worse," Smith said. The number of applicants from New York decreased by 119 this year, while the number from Massachusetts fell by 74. In contrast, eight more students than last year applied from California.

Smith said that the number of black applicants is the same this year as last, and that the number of Asian applicants has increased slightly. "All of the decline has come in non-minority applicants. That mirrors what's happening demographically around the country."

Williams is not the only college which has seen a decrease in applications this year. Amherst reported a drop of about 5 percent, Yale about 6 percent, Wesleyan 7 percent and Dartmouth nearly 18 percent.

Smith said there were a number of reasons why Williams' applications might have decreased more than those of comparable schools. He said that Williams was very "up-front" in telling prospective students about its rigorous admissions standards, a practice which may have discouraged some mediocre students from applying.

In addition, he said that the deadline for completed applications was moved up from January 15 to January 1, in order to give the admissions staff more time to read the applications. That may have caused the loss of some applicants who were unable to complete their forms on time.

continued on page 5

Steinman

Getting out the alums

Associate Chaplain Kathy McNulty talks to a Williams alumnus about social service projects being undertaken by the school. A group of students met many alumni at the City Mission Shelter in Schenectady, New York, last week, to get alumni support for such projects. The meeting included several speeches by students to the alums.

Williamstown may go into debt.

PAGE 5

Farley named New England Small College Coach of the Year.

PAGE 10

The Record makes predictions for the upcoming baseball season.

PAGE 11

The Williams Record

What price representation?

The recent controversy surrounding the nominations for the minority representative to the College Council raises two very important issues. Not only does it rightfully call into question the actions that resulted in the nominations being reopened after the deadline, but it also raises questions concerning the function and even the necessity of the minority representative position itself. The latter issue is far more important.

The minority representative office is a flawed concept for a variety of reasons. First, as the recent controversy shows, there is a real question of how well a single person (or even two people) can represent all the minorities at Williams. While no one is willing to come right out and say that they would not want someone of another minority to represent their group, recent actions demonstrate that certain minorities feel that their concerns can only be brought up effectively by one of their own.

But is the minority representative position crucial to this ability to be heard? Definitely not. Last year's takeover of the College Council is not the College Council is not the only, or even the best, avenue of action available to a group with a grievance. Even within the council, there is no evidence that a designated minority presence has improved race relations on this campus.

For instance, the minority representative is supposed to present a unified view of minority concerns, especially at times of racial animosity at Williams. But these are the times when the student body and groups representing certain viewpoints should make themselves heard. Last month, a huge crowd of students attended a College Council meeting to demonstrate outrage over the denial of Lisa Wright for tenure. Student action and participation, especially en masse, is a far more effective way to get an opinion noticed than having a spokesperson on the council itself.

In addition, every position on the council is open to minorities. If the minorities on this campus truly wanted to act in unison, they could, as they do in national politics, form an awesome voting bloc to elect their candidates. Having a minority as president of the council would insure a greater voice in campus affairs than having a designated minority representative position.

But is all this reason enough to abolish the position itself? Some may say that having two people on the council who must be minorities is better than having none at all. But those who take this position are missing the point of a democratically elected council: the voters (the students) decide the policy. Instead of campaigning for special treatment in the makeup of the council, minorities should go to the meetings and make their voices heard. That is what the College Council is, or should be, all about.

Letters

Abortion is not a 'convenient' alternative

Passing laws will not stop abortion

To the Editor:

After having read Helen Tkaczewski Strapko's letter to the editor on February 28, I feel compelled to explain to her why many people disagree with her position on abortion.

I agree that it is indeed reprehensible to use abortion as an alternative form of birth control, and those having reached the educational sophistication of Williams College should certainly be better informed about their options. Many Americans, however, are not. Many students, usually from those sectors of our society that cannot afford to support an unplanned child, receive no sex education whatsoever. More than one pregnant teenager has said, "I thought you could get pregnant the first time."

And an abortion is hardly a 'convenient' alternative. No one goes tripping lightly down to the abortion clinic. It is a hard choice to make, and a difficult decision to live with. Accusing a woman of murder for destroying a non-sentient conglomeration of cells does not help her psyche.

Besides, making abortion illegal will not force people into 'more responsible sexual behavior,' any more than the illegalization of drugs has completely eradicated them from this country. Those who can afford it will go to Europe for superior medical treatment in a country where abortion is legal. Those who cannot will be faced with the choice of having a child they cannot afford to raise, or submitting themselves to the dirty knife of a quack who performs illegal abortions. According to this month's Index in Harper's Magazine, 200,000 women die each year from illegal abortions worldwide. That's per year. Think again about 'the sanctity of human life.'

Katherine Boyle '91

of birth control. She used the Pill as birth control, and even though she is religious about taking her pill, she still became pregnant.

It is also completely ridiculous and insensitive to imply that choosing to have an abortion was 'convenient' for her or any other woman who decides to have an abortion. It is no doubt one of the most difficult decisions a woman may ever make. I am on the Pill, but last year I too thought I was pregnant. It was the most terrifying feeling I had ever experienced. As my friend who actually had an abortion said to me, "You don't have to have an abortion to go through the worst part -- making the decision to have one."

There was noway I could have a child at age 19. People may say that it was selfish of me to place my life before that of what could have been my baby, but I have never really thought about what it would be like to be born into a life of constant financial tension, resentment, and unhappiness? Probably not. I knew I was not prepared emotionally to raise a baby, and even if I was, I couldn't bear the thought of raising a child in that kind of environment. It is selfish to want to give your baby the best life you can? I also know that it would never be possible for me to survive giving my child up for adoption. And carrying it inside of me for nine months, I could never give my baby away. I agonized over this for two weeks and finally decided to have an abortion. It was the most difficult, terrible decision I have ever made.

Luckily for me, I learned that I was not pregnant, only late, but for those women who abort as lucky, it is cruel to belittle their decision to have an abortion as a 'convenient' alternative. Perhaps you should try and put yourself in the position of becoming pregnant despite birth control and not be so quick to judge those of us who have really been there.

Christine E. Womuth '91

Figure of 9.7 for class size was mistake

To the Editor:

I simply want to indicate my endorsement of the figures regarding class size contained in Vice Provost David Booth's letter in the February 28 issue of the Record. Mr. Booth was a key member of the committee on course load reduction, which I chaired, and he was the person the committee relied on when questions of class size, numbers of student registrations, numbers of faculty, etc. arose.

The 9.7 average class size figure attributed to me grew out of an informal discussion with a representative with the College Council, and questions about that discussion from a Record reporter. I did not intend to represent 9.7 as the average class size, but simply the ratio of the approximate number of student registrations per year to the average number of sections offered by the faculty per year.

A good friend in my home town has been on the Pill for two years, and yet she still became pregnant last February. How dare you assume that because she got pregnant and chose to have an abortion, she was using abortion as a method but, alas, it did not, as I mistakenly used semester registration figures rather than academic year figures. I regret the error in calculation and any resulting misperception about average class size.

Our committee rarely discussed average class size specifically, since, as Mr. Booth's letter makes clear, such a figure holds very little meaning. Rather, we took into account possible changes in section sizes in large and small departments, lab sizes in Division III, the availability of course offerings for programs, etc.

Thank you for the opportunity to clarify this issue.

George Goethals
Professor of Psychology

Students won experience by running Pooh

To the Editor:

I read with no small measure of disappointment of the recent developments on the bookshelves front in the February 21 Record.

As a Williams freshman in 1979, with little business experience, I withdrew $400 from my meager savings and purchased a one-third interest in the Pooh. At the time, the Pooh shared space in the basement of Jesus with the 1914 Library. Visually and financially, the Pooh was a mess. Decaying boxes and discarded obsolete textbooks littered our waiting area, giving the appearance of a lunar landscape. Bernice Shalman, the heart and soul of the 1914 Library, would have threatened to shut us down had the fire warden not beaten her to the punch.

Sacrificing all of Winter Study, spring break, and half of summer vacation that first year, my two best friends (whom I had come into buying the remaining two-thirds interest in the Pooh) and I cleaned up our act, and turned the Pooh into a business. We even turned a profit, albeit a small one, in our first year. The thrill of running a business was indescribably delicious. Knowing that we were providing a real service to the student community, along with contributing to the costs of our education, made a huge impression on us. My involvement with the Pooh was one of the most rewarding experiences of my four years at Williams.

As graduation grew near, my partners and I sold our shares of the business to three enterprising sophomores. Being able to insure the Pooh's survival even after our graduation gave the business (and us, too) a limited extent) a wonderful feeling of immortality.

I'm sure Alton will do an admirable job servicing the new and used textbook needs of the Williams community. It's just a shame that their arrival would seem to point to the end of one of the few continuing student-owned businesses Williams College has known over the years.

Jonathan D. Meer '83
Dylois Fields Gallery
Williamstown

Controversy over Division III 'guts' continues

Science 'guts' rob students, departments

by Kim Bruce, Chairman
Department of Computer Science

I would like to comment on the article about the proposal of the College Council Division III Committee and the editorial in last week's Record calling for the elimination of science 'guts.' As the editorial writer hints, the problem may lie as much in student fears (or perhaps antipathy) to learning how to think a different way as it is in Division III departments creating the appropriate 'non-major' courses.

Regarding the committee proposal to create 'special' early introductory courses for non-science majors, I would like to report our experience in Computer Science with a similar plan. About with the class that first had the choice of which introductory course to take, Students would take the 'non-major' intro, like it, and then find they had nowhere to go. We tried to provide mechanisms (e.g. during Winter Study) to enable students to catch up with those in the other course, but these all proved to be unsuccessful.

Students were not very good in selecting the most appropriate course to take. Many students who selected the 'non-major' course were bored and would have been more satisfied with the regular course, while others selecting the regular course found the material too hard. As a result we discontinued the course this year and are currently experimenting with other alternatives.

Based on our experience, the introduction of explicitly 'non-major' introductory courses would not provide an answer to student complaints, but instead cause more problems.

four years ago, we created a parallel 'non-majors' introductory computer science course for those students who didn't intend to take any further courses in the department. Material covered included roughly 75 percent of the material in the regular introductory course, plus practice on various software packages. The assignments and examinations in this course were also somewhat easier than the regular intro course. This course was reasonably successful for several years, but we grew more dissatisfied with it with time, and finally stopped offering it this year.

Why did we kill it? Like other similar 'non-major' computer science courses across the country, enrollments were declining. But we also found that we had more severe problems. That course was costing us majors. In years past we had been highly successful in attracting students away from other majors in the college into computer science. This stopped very suddenly. Our total number of majors dropped by 50 percent

Students often find it intimidating in introductory science courses to be competing with students who already seem to know much of the material in the course (for some reason this is the case for many people in Divisions I and II). This year we created a new course (the 'new' CSCI 135) one of whose purposes was to entice out of the regular introductory course, those students who already had substantial experience in computing, and who might seem to present 'unfair competition' to the other students. Incentives included presenting extra material on exciting new developments in computer science and using high powered graphics workstations not normally available to undergrads. At the same time, we were careful not to teach the material which would give them a substantial advantage in follow-up courses over those students who chose the regular introductory course.

In parallel we reduced the amount of material in the regular introductory course (renumbered as CSCI 134) and provided more direct hands-on help for students by establishing scheduled labs in which faculty and TAs were available to provide help to students in getting started and working through problems in programming. As a result, the amount of time that it took students (especially the weaker students) to complete assignments dropped significantly. Student-reported average workload in the course dropped from one of the highest on campus to about average.

Realizing that there is also student interest in learning more about the field of computer science without the necessity of working through several semesters of introductory material, we are also introducing a new course next year, CSCI 122: 'Contemporary Issues in Computer Science.' This course will introduce students to a broad variety of issues in computer science: How does a computer work? What is artificial intelligence? What can computers compute? Because we feel students should have hands-on experience with material covered in this course, there will be a scheduled laboratory which meets every other week. Since programming will not be taught or expected, students taking this course can move on to either of our more standard introductory courses.

We will do our best to ensure that this course does not become yet another science 'guts' course. Based on our experience in Computer Science, we believe that the introduction of explicitly 'non-major' introductory courses would not provide an answer to student complaints, but instead cause more problems. Good, challenging, and interesting courses do exist in Division III. Continued student movement toward science 'guts' results in dissatisfied students and faculty. These courses would disappear quickly if students did not enroll in them.

We in Computer Science are experimenting with new approaches to these problems, while a committee of faculty from all the Division III departments is examining ways in which all departments can raise the quality of their 'non-major' courses. Given the importance of the science to so many aspects of our life today, this problem deserves the immediate attention of everyone involved.

Non-major courses make science accessible

by Jefferson Stritt
Assistant Professor of Physics

I was discouraged to read the February 28 editorial titled, 'Abolish Division III 'Guts.' In that editorial the Record categorized science courses designed for non-majors as 'unhelpful, boring, and irrelevant' and urged that all students be required to take the regular introductory courses required of majors. While I believe that many non-science majors can and should take the introductory courses for science majors, I also believe that courses for non-majors are not necessarily 'guts' and that they serve a legitimate purpose in the Williams curriculum.

Your editorial asks why Division III offers courses for non-majors, while Divisions I and II do not. The answer lies in the structures of the various disciplines. The sciences tend to be vertical (each course builds upon the previous course), while the humanities and social sciences tend to be horizontal (each course has few, if any, prerequisites). One unfortunate consequence of the vertical structure is that most upper-level science courses are not easily accessible to the non-major. To take a course in quantum mechanics, for instance, one must first take four semesters of mathematics and three semesters of physics.

Division III offers special courses in order to make interesting scientific ideas more accessible to the non-major. In these courses we skip over much of the background that is necessary for a rigorous quantitative understanding of advanced topics. Instead we emphasize the concepts, both old and new, that intrigue us as scientists. These courses for non-science majors do compromise rigor in favor of accessibility, but they should stimulate the intellect. Without them, many students would learn nothing about the richness and excitement of contemporary science.

As an example of an important contemporary topic, consider semiconductor physics majors can learn about semiconductors in some detail in Physics 404, which has eight prerequisite courses. Most Williams students, however, do not get around to Physics 404, so in 1985 and 1986 when I taught Physics 100, I discussed semiconductors, among other things. Although my Physics 100 students did not learn as much about semiconductors as the students in Physics 404, at least they learned some of the fundamental ideas about these materials that have transformed communications, computing, entertainment, and many other human endeavors. I would rather have non-science majors learn about semiconductors from me than from what I take to satisfy a requirement.

Although Division III courses for non-science majors are not perfect, it would be a mistake to throw them out. Instead we should work to offer more and better non-major courses. The Physics Department is working in that direction. Professors of Physics Stuart Crampton and Bill Woollers are offering a new course on time in conjunction with the Philosophy Department. Thanks to a grant from the National Science Foundation, Professor Crampton is developing labs for that course using up-to-date equipment. Bryce Babcock, the staff physicist at the Bronfman Science Center and a lecturer from me than from what I have read in the popular press.

Non-major courses do compromise rigor in favor of accessibility, but without them, many students would learn nothing about the richness and excitement of contemporary science.

I do not believe that Physics 100 is a 'guts' course. My students completed nine problem sets, a five to ten page paper, two hour exams, and a final exam. While the assigned work did not involve lengthy calculations and was not at the same level as that in our courses for majors, many of my students struggled to grasp the concepts presented, judging from their exams. I feel satisfied that the course was sufficiently rigorous for its intended audience. There were a few, but not many, over-qualified students who may have found the course unchallenging. I have trouble sympathizing with them because I urged them to switch to one of the two more quantitative introductory physics courses. Overall, the response on the questionnaire at the end of my course was positive, which I consider a victory in a course that many students turer in physics, is developing a new course in robotics, to be offered next year, using real robots in the lab. Finally, I am exploring the feasibility of adding three or four optional labs to Physics 100 next year. These efforts, and others, confirm our commitment to teaching non-science majors interesting and challenging courses.

The main problem for science at Williams is one of attitude. The students here are among the brightest and best prepared in the country. Still it is fashionable to avoid science at Williams, despite Division III's efforts to offer a wide variety of introductory courses at all levels. I find this attitude perplexing, considering the massive impact of science and technology on modern life. It is an attitude we must work hard to change. My hope is that more and better courses for non-science majors will bring science into the mainstream at Williams.

Gun control -- politicians dodging the real issues

by John C. Berger '89

On January 17th, Patrick Purdy brought his new AKM-47 style assault rifle to a schoolground in Stockton, California and in a violent outburst killed five children. From the cover of Time magazine to the halls of our legislative bodies school children. The same people are pushing for legislation like the Berman bill which would ban hundreds of rifles and pistols owned by honest citizens for safety or hunting. This 'solution' is ludicrous and typical of the escapism in the modern day legislative process.

Our justice system could have easily committed by good citizens who happen to have a loaded gun available in a moment of anger." (Evidence for this apparently being that the victims are often the killer's relative or acquaintance. This is a nonsense statistic because most murders labeled "acquaintance homicides" by the FBI are along the lines of a drug addict killing his dealer or gang "families" killing each other.)

Criminologist Gary Kleck states the real issue clearly when he says, "People who are seriously violent in the present almost invariably have been seriously violent in the past." The causes of violence involve some of the most obscure and difficult social problems. These are problems which we will never be able to fully eliminate, but we should at least control those who have been shown through past offenses to have violent oneselves are the problem. Existence of guns in a society is clearly not the cause of violence. The country of Switzerland has an incredibly low violence rate, despite the fact that any law-abiding Swiss citizen may own almost any kind of gun. Furthermore, every male of military age must own and keep in his home an operating semi-automatic rifle which would make the one used by Purdy look like a toy. I am not arguing that the presence of these guns helps prevent crime, although there is a strong argument to that effect. What is important is that we realize that violence is not caused by guns, but by other factors in society of a more subtle, and unfortunately less glamorous nature.

The anti-gun groups are not interested in these factors or in protecting us from known criminals. They have consistently voted against mandatory sentencing and other programs that address real problems and instead only try and take the guns out of the hands of the hunters and the victims.

What can we do? There is at least one organization that is trying to address the real problems. They have sponsored supporting funds to build more prisons. They are targeting parole boards and pressuring them not to release felons who used a gun in the commission of a crime. They are trying to pressure the U.S. Justice department into finally enforcing the four year old McClure-Volkmer act which gives the federal government the power to incarcerate gun carrying drug traffickers with a mandatory five to twenty year sentence.

Essentially this organization is trying to address some of the real weaknesses of the criminal justice system that led to the Purdy massacre. Their efforts are highly significant, they have a membership of 3 million and a superb lobbying organization. Who are they, you ask? Well, believe it or not, they are the National Rifle Association.

The responsibility for the Purdy massacre lies on the shoulders of the judge who let him back on the streets and the legislators who have permitted our justice system to fall apart around us.

This incident has been highly publicized in a well-organized national media outcry.

Despite this vocal outrage, there has been very little discussion given to either the actual problems involved in the Purdy case or to the larger problem of national violence. Rather than addressing these issues, our lawmakers have been taking meaningless stances to promote their PR images and in the process have focused the press away from the real problems and onto solutions that will in no way help prevent similar massacres.

These people, our elected representatives, are saying that because of insufficient legislation on gun ownership the states have had no way to prevent maniacs like Purdy from gunning down

Passing laws that keep semi-automatic weapons out of the hands of innocent Americans does not address the problem. It only achieves the goals of a very small minority -- the anti-gun activists.

stoppers Purdy and prevented the massacre simply by enforcing laws already on the books. Purdy was not, as the press has put it, an innocent citizen who walked in off the street, bought a gun, went insane, and gunned down school children. Purdy had been arrested previously for soliciting sex, possession of narcotics, attempted robbery, receiving stolen property, and for dangerous weapons charges. What did our justice system do about his crimes? In each case our courts let him go, released with only the proverbial slap on the wrist.

The horror of the Purdy massacre is that a man with such a background, a man that a police psychologist had certified as a "danger to himself and to society," was allowed to walk through the revolving doors of justice. Worse, believe that "murder is a crime primarily

When our system fails to deal with these people, we cannot allow ourselves to be deceived by those who would have us believe that guns themendences. When our system fails to deal with these people, we cannot allow ourselves to be deceived by those who would have us believe that guns themendences. When our system fails to deal with these people, we cannot allow ourselves to be deceived by those who would have us believe that guns them-

On the Record...

"I never said that they told me they would withdraw. That is a different impression and a false one."

--Farhan Haq '89 on his alleged statement to College Council that two of the candidates for minority representative, Allan Isaac '91 and Phoenix Wang '92, would withdraw if the nominations for the position were not reopened so that representatives of other minorities could run.

"I really can't believe he said that. That's just not true. Farhan definitely said that he had spoken to two of the three candidates and it was clear that they had agreed to withdraw if the College Council didn't reopen the nominations."

--College Council Vice President John Kelsh '89 on Haq's denial of the statement.

"We were disappointed and somewhat taken aback by what happened. We just felt like there was this implication that somehow because all three of the nominees were Asian, they were less able to serve as minority representatives."

--ASIA President Helen Lee '90 on the reaction of ASIA's officers to the reopening of the nominations.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible and not more than 500 words. They must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. They must be typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-2289.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor BILL SAVADOVE, Arts Editor
MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors
BILL PHILPOT, Productions Editor

Assistant News Editors
DAN SKWIRE, ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW
GREG HART & JUSTIN SMITH

Assistant Sports Editors
STEVE BRODY, KERR HOUSTON, ANNE JOSEPH

Assistant Layout Editors
ASHESH SHAH, ELISA DUGUNDJI, SARAH OUCHI

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1975 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Stoddard receives art award

by Ellen Drought

Whitney Stoddard, Amos Lawrence Professor of Art, Emeritus, has been awarded a citation for the distinguished teaching of art from the College Art Association of America.

Stoddard accepted the award at the annual meeting of the association in San Francisco on February 17. He was cited for having "awakened students at all levels to the enticements of works of art, of teaching as a calling, of meticulous research and of archaeological excavation."

The award also commended Stoddard's interest in his students, which carried over into personal attention and assistance, and noted that he had taught a high proportion of directors and curators of major museums. "At 76 you continue for the sheer love of teaching," the citation read.

"There's a violin playing quietly through this," Stoddard said in reference to the citation. "It's a terribly exciting thing to get out of the blue. When I accepted it, I said a lot of it had to do with the program you're involved with, your colleagues and students. It's not just you, it's a lot of other things."

The CAA is the main association of art

Professor of Art, Emeritus, Whitney Stoddard

historians, artists and museum people at all levels, according to Stoddard. It puts out several publications and is the main placement bureau for the teaching profession. "It covers the whole country and has many foreign associates," he added.

Plans for Pooh Perplex described to students

by Justin Smith

Jim Murphy, owner of Albion Books and recent recipient of the college's exclusive textbook sales rights, continued negotiations this week with the College Council and the owners of the Pooh Perplex for the dissolution of the Pooh. Murphy and the council have agreed to conduct a public hearing on Wednesday, March 8 at 7:30 p.m. in Baxter Lounge, at which time students may address their concerns about the current plans to Murphy and council officers.

At last week's meeting, the council discussed the content of a letter from Murphy to William Reed, treasurer and vice president of the college, in which Murphy outlined his latest proposal for the dissolution of the Pooh. The letter contained a five part plan for the elimination of the 25,000 book inventory of the Pooh.

The first step will be to organize the Pooh's collection alphabetically by student name, using student labor at $5 an hour. According to Murphy, Albion will contribute $1,000 toward the labor costs, with any additional funding being provided by the Pooh.

on leave or overseas will be held in the Pooh's storage facilities in Bronfman until the students have a chance to reclaim them. Alumni with books held within the two-year contractual agreement by the Pooh will be notified of the opportunity to reclaim their books. Books found without inventory slips will revert automatically to the ownership of the Pooh.

'The College Council will be a full partner to the procedure protecting students' rights as regards the inventory.'

Upon completion of the book inventory, the College Council and the Pooh will notify students that books may be reclaimed during a two-week period in the beginning of April. Any books not reclaimed after this two-week period will revert to the ownership of the Pooh and ultimately be sold to Albion. The terms of purchase and sale have not yet been decided.

During this period, Murphy stipulated, hearing to vote on the proposed procedures. At a council meeting two weeks ago, Murphy announced that Albion will sell used textbooks at half price and purchase books from students for roughly twenty percent to thirty percent of their original price. In contrast, the Pooh sold books at two-thirds their original value and reimbursed students at a rate of fifty percent.

What do you think of the change of bookstores?

Photos by Joel Isaacson; interviews by Joel Isaacson and Charley Rardin

I think it's going to be great; we've needed a real bookstore for a long time. --Manny Pelote '91

I'm looking forward to a bookstore that carries trashy romance novels as well as Victor Hill's monumental treatise on group and representation theory. --Kris Johnson '90

We always shop together and this new bookstore will make it more efficient. --Sarah Peterson '91, Mel Fenton '91, and Laura Krebs '90.

I think it's bad to sell the Pooh Perplex, because we're going to get less for the books we sell to them. --Scarlet Tang '92

I'm happy about the new ownership but I'm not psyched (squealed down to Water Street). --Brad Gendell '90

Deficit spending may come to Williamstown as Selectmen contemplate capital improvements

by Mary Moule

Williamstown may have to go into debt in order to fund its budget, according to Town Manager Stephen Ledoux. He attributed the problems to the yearly increase in operating costs, necessary expenditures on capital improvements, Proposition 2 1/2 (which limits the increase in property taxes that local governments can levy), and decreased state aid.

"It's a big year because we've deferred things that should have been done a number of years ago," Ledoux said. A state-required re-evaluation of town property that will cost $80,000, a $100,000 health insurance plan and a $200,000 expenditure to resurface Hancock Road explain some of the budget increase, Ledoux said. Other big budget items include an estimated $4.3 million for local school districts.

The capital improvement projects involve remodeling the town garage and strengthening the water supply system near Spring Street. Ledoux said that both items were safety issues that needed to be addressed as soon as possible. "Inflation and the cost of living increase will affect us," Ledoux added. He said that because the state has its own financial problems, local governments can expect less state aid.

"The selectmen received [the budget] favorably, and I think the general reaction was that we have been living beyond our means, so we do need to borrow now," Chair of the Board of Selectmen Anita Barker said, after Ledoux presented the selectmen with the budget on February 27.

will be reviewed by the Capital Planning Committee and the Finance Committee and then passed back to the Board of Selectmen, Barker said. If the five selectmen vote to put it on the ballot, the town must approve the tax override by a majority vote on May 9.

"P.R. is necessary" "We'll have to do some P.R. before May 9 to get the point across," Barker said. "It's good to realize that school budgets, for instance, are going up 8 or 10 percent each year, so we're constantly getting behind." She pointed out that a municipality can borrow at a favorable rate and then reinvest at a higher rate to help defray the costs.

"[The tax increase limit] has made us budget much more carefully," she added. "It has made us more conscious of where our revenue is coming from."

'[The tax limit] has made us budget much more carefully. It has made us more conscious of where our revenue is coming from.'

paying off both principal and interest on the loan for the next ten years, according to Barker. After the ten years, they would go back to the 2 1/2 percent increase limit, she added.

The budget and the recommendation

Hag's comments cause election controversy

continued from page 1

order to allow us to fairly open back up the nominations for other minority candidates," Blankenship said.

No conversation with Hag Yet, on the afternoon of February 25, Wang told Blankenship and Kesh that she had never talked to Hag about the elections, or about withdrawing from the race if the nominations were not reopened.

"I never had a conversation with [Hag] about that," Wang said.

Hag admitted that he had not talked to Wang, though he said that he planned to talk to her. He apologized to both Wang and the College Council for stating that he had talked to her when he had not.

"I admit that it was an irregular and sort of bad thing to do. I apologized for going to the College Council and saying what I did," Hag said.

Tuesday, February 28, Wang decided to withdraw from the election because she said she was becoming too emotionally involved with the whole situation.

Two more nominations

Two additional nominations, those of Bernard Ofori-Atta '92 and Roberto Serrano '92, were received by the new extended deadline, bringing to five the total number of minority representative nominations which the College Council had received.

According to Blankenship, though the council knew it had been misled by Hag, it did not want to vote on reversing their previous decision to extend the nomination deadline.

Blankenship said, "First, there were too many layers of consequences to think we could simply pretend that all would be peaceful and fair to go back to the beginning. Second, the two new nominees had done nothing personally to warrant disqualification; we couldn't just disqualify them without cause. "It would simply be illegal, since the suspension of the rules was completely legitimate and legal, albeit based on false pretenses. Third, we would, as it stands now, be determining the election's outcome, which we felt totally unauthorized to do," Blankenship said.

For these reasons and because of the complicated and emotional nature of the situation, the College Council decided to refer the matter of the minority representative nominations to the Commission on Campus Race Relations. The council asked the CCRR to make a recommendation about how to proceed.

"The commission advised that the minority representatives should be elected from among the pool of four candidates whose nominations had been received by the extended deadline. The CCRR further urged that the definition of the role of the minority representatives to the College Council should be discussed by the College Council this spring in consultation with the CCRR and minority groups on campus," Assistant to the President for Affirmative Action Nancy McIntire, a CCRR member, said.

The College Council adopted the CCRR's recommendations. The four candidates for the two minority representative seats on the College Council will be Isaac, Ofori-Atta, Pullani and Serrano.

"Blown out of proportion"

According to VISTA coordinator Jose Calero '89, the whole issue has been blown out of proportion. "I don't think anybody is at fault. It's not a big deal and I don't think it should be taken as a big deal," Calero said.

Heleen Lee '90, president of ASIA, said she feels somewhat dissatisfied with what happened, but also does not want the issue to become a major one.

"The officers of ASIA were disappointed and somewhat taken aback by what happened. We just felt like there was this implication that somehow because all three of the nominees were Asian, they would be less able to serve as minority representatives. We were somewhat unhappy with what happened, but we're not pointing the blame. The situation was unsettling, but we don't want to cause any major upheaval. As long as people know what we feel, that's all we want," she said.

Election computerized

by Justin Smith

College Council elections are going high tech. Instead of voting by paper ballot in today's primary and next week's run-off elections, students will register their votes on one of four Macintosh SE computers set up in the Baxter mail room.

With the help of Director of Academic Computing Dennis Aebersold, the Computer Center staff and Apple Computer Corporation, the College Council made arrangements to turn the mail room into an electronic voting nerve center. The Apple Corporation is donating the computers for the voting process.

The four computers, one for each class, will use the "Automated Voting System" program, developed by Pacific Business Solutions. The program is currently used by Boston University, Colgate University and Southern Methodist University.

According to the College Council, the new voting system will increase the efficiency and accuracy of vote counting - results will be known as soon as polls close - as well as eliminate the waste of many paper ballots. The program will also prevent students from voting multiple times.

After registering at their designated tables, students use the mouse to point and click next to their chosen candidate. The computer then saves the vote. When it is finished, the computer says, "Next Voter Please" and lock up until the person registering voters brings up the next screen.

"We're setting it up but the equipment is being donated by Apple. They sent up three SE's and I just didn't want to take them" program, developed by Pacific Business Solutions. The program is currently used by Boston University, Colgate University and Southern Methodist University.

Collegiate reaction to Rushdie far from furious

by Michael O'Keefe
College Press Service

For Mohammed, an Iranian student at the University of Idaho, the fears, riots and controversy about novelist Salman Rushdie's book Satanic Verses seem far removed from the tranquility of the Gem State.

While in 1979 the 50,000 Iranian students then studying in the United States reported frequent incidents of harassment from their American-born classmates who were angered by the holding of American hostages in Teheran, Mohammed said the possibility that he could become a local target for anti-Iranian prejudices provoked by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's offer to pay for Rushdie's murder never occurred to him.

"I haven't heard of any problems," Mohammed said. "The people here in Idaho are very nice."

Mohammed's experience appears to be typical. The 9,000 Iranians still on U.S. campuses say the upheaval about Rushdie and the rise in tensions between the United States and Iran hasn't affected them much at all.

"I'd be surprised if anything came up," said Colin Davies of the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs in Washington, D.C. "There may be heightened anti-Khomeini feelings, but I don't think there will be problems for students." Some others are less certain.

"Unless there is an attempt by the [American] media to understand why the Muslim world is offended, there will be a rise of opposition to Islam in this country," Seyyed Hossein Nasr, an Islamic studies professor at George Washington University, predicted.

Many Muslims maintain Rushdie's book blasphemes the prophet Mohammed in a fictional dream sequence in which Mohammed momentarily recognizes women as saints.

Muslim clerics in Pakistan and Iran heatedly denounced the book as it was professor of economics at North Carolina's Guilford College, if one wishes to understand the controversy surrounding the book.

"You don't hear of Muslims protesting in Indonesia, Saudi Arabia or Nigeria," said Ajluni. "The image the media have painted is that the Muslim world is reacting to this book, but most of the controversy has been in Iran."

Ajluni maintained Islamists in Iran are using the book to help them steer the nation clear of Western influences in the policy vacuum after the war with Iraq.

'If a similar book were published attacking Martin Luther King, it would be called racist and it certainly wouldn't be reviewed by the New York Review of Books.'

being released in Europe and the United States in mid-February, touching off wild anti-Rushdie and anti-West demonstrations.

$4.9 million for assassin Iranian leader Khomeini then called for the murder of Rushdie and anyone else associated with the publication of the book, promising $2.4 million -- a bounty later increased to $4.9 million -- to Rushdie's assassin.

"One has to look at what's going on in Iran," said Salem Ajluni, an associate which ended in 1988. He pointed out the European community's withdrawal of its diplomats from Iran in protest of the murder contract is exactly what Iranian Islamists want in order to satisfy their image of what the Islamic Republic should be.

Ajluni and other Islamic scholars on American campuses say they've been disturbed by the way they're portrayed in the media's accounts.

"Us versus them" "The media portray this as 'us versus them,' that [Muslims] don't appreciate freedom of thought like the West does," Ajluni said. "But there are people who are less than tolerant on both sides. It's the way Iran interprets it."

"I don't buy the argument that the West is more tolerant," Nasr added. "If a similar book was published attacking Martin Luther King, it would be called racist and it certainly wouldn't be reviewed in the New York Review of Books and other prestigious journals."

Nasr called the condemnation of Muslim anger at the book an example of Western totalitarian cultural domination. "Europeans and North Americans don't understand that Muslims view The Satanic Verses as 'hate literature.'"

"If I was the leader of a state that is based on Islam," said Karen Feste, a professor of international relations at the University of Denver, "and there was an attack on that religion, I'd view it as an attack on the state as well. The natural reaction is desperation, and often violence."

Yet most observers don't see students like Idaho's Mohammed having trouble readjusting to such an intellectual climate once they return home from their Western campuses.

"When they return, it depends on how far they've accepted Western values," Nasr said. "If they come home as good engineers, they are accepted without problems. But if they come home and drink every night, that's not acceptable. It varies from family to family, and nation to nation."

Steinman

A not-so-lame duck

Outgoing College Council President Trace Blankenship '89 takes out a year of frustration on cringing Vice President John Kesh '89. Kesh said he does not plan to file charges against his attacker. Blankenship later apologized to Kesh and got him 15,000 free points at the Snack Bar as a gesture of reconciliation.

In Other Ivory Towers

Amherst College

The Apple of Amherst's eye was bruised on February 7, when the only Macintosh in the college's Academic Computing Center was stolen. The forbidden fruit was taken between midnight and 6 a.m. The theft means that those students and professors who have their own Macintoshes will be unable to laser-print their files at the Computer Center. The computer had been secured by a locked aircraft cable, but was not locked into the center's electronic security system. The machine was valued at about $1,800, and the center has no immediate plans to buy a new one.

More Amherst

Amherst President Peter Poiry and University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph Duffey issued a statement last week condemning the annual Amherst-UMass snowball fight. The two officials said that Amherst, UMass and Iowa authorities will do all they possibly can to stop the event from occurring next year. "The statement was issued after this year's snowball fight resulted in $10,000 worth of damage to Amherst College property and a serious eye injury to an Amherst freshman, Gary Gonyea. College authorities attributed the unusual amount of damage to rocks embedded in snowballs."

Union College

The temperature at Union College dropped a few degrees this winter when the college's film committee decided not to show its annual pornographic movie. Those students hoping to see "Debbie Does Dallas" will have to settle for "Betty Blue," an erotic but critically-acclaimed film. "I'm all for porn movies, but not in this situation," said Scott Davis, co-chair of the film committee. He added that many people were offended by pornographic films, while he hoped that "Betty Blue" would rise to the occasion and provide ample entertainment.

Brown University

A federal judge has ordered Brown University to grant tenure to an additional 13 female professors by 1991 because the school failed to meet its hiring guidelines that resulted from a 1977 lawsuit. Brown was supposed to award tenure to 37 women by 1987, but it succeeded in doing so for only 50. The college intends to complain that the court failed to consider the attrition of tenured female professors in its decisions. If the appeal is successful, Brown will only be required to have 63, rather than 70, female tenured professors by 1991.

University of California at Berkeley

Berkeley has decided not to permit gay and lesbian couples to occupy housing reserved for married students. The chancellor of the Berkeley campus said that the decision had been made due to a housing shortage and the fear of future legal difficulties from heterosexual couples.

Compiled by Dan Skwire from college papers and the Chronicle of Higher Education.

Colleges abstain from condoms on demand

College Press Service

Although Williams' upcoming sexual awareness week has received positive support from college groups, such explicit topics have become hot political issues lately on campuses as nearby as Albany.

'The mail room requires a return address....Some of the condom-grams were sent anonymously.'

A senior state senator who helps control how much money public campuses get said on February 21 that a recent condom dance and lecture about the G-spot had turned the State University of New York at Albany into "a center of carnal knowledge."

A month earlier, administrators at Knox College in Illinois decided to delay delivery to students of "condomgrams" intended to be used in an AIDS prevention program.

In fact, as about 650 campuses around the country tried to observe National Condom Week, the little protective devices provoked struggles over the propriety of making them available to students at Michigan's Grand Valley State College, at Big Bend Community College in Oregon and at the Universities of Utah and Nebraska-Lincoln, among other places.

The late February controversy in New York was especially heated because State Senator James Donovan, who blasted SUNY-Albany's Sexuality Week, also chairs the state senate's Education Committee.

Donovan called the week's activities an example of terribly misplaced campus spending. The dance, he charged, amounted to little more than four hours of sexually explicit music.

But SUNY-Albany spokeswoman Christine McKnight said the events were less racy and less well-attended -- only 38 people showed up for the Condom

continued on page 5

Send A Lucky Wish!

Send a trademark card this St. Patrick's Day

McClelland's STATIONERY AND OFFICE PRODUCTS

458-4920 36 Spring Street Williamstown, Mass 01267

Hallmark

RICHARD D. SIMPSON G. VINCENT COUSBOULE

the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-4000

West Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown Phone: 663-6081

-We offer-

- 1) Aren's largest fine beer & ale selection
- 2) Hundreds of quality wines
- 3) Unique videos as well as latest releases
- 4) Ambassador, Blue Mt. Arts, Far Side Oreeting cards
- 5) Dozens of soft furry creatures from Dakin, Applause, and North American Bears
- 6) Soft drinks, munchies, party supplies
- 7) Great advice on matters large and small
- 8) Courteous, professional service

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond" Williams '88

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, by proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best. We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and SHOE and BOOT REPAIR.

(413) 458-4321
66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
01267

Sanitone Complete Laundry System

Drama review

'Krapp,' 'Sacred Places' are worthy tribute to Knight

by Liz Grocman

With age comes wisdom, or as "Krapp's Last Tape" and "Sacred Places" seem to imply, at least perspective. If we do not understand our youth, at least we are not still living through it.

This past Thursday and Saturday, as well as next Friday, Williams Theatre is presenting Samuel Beckett's "Krapp's Last Tape" and Playwright in Residence Kermit Frazier's "Sacred Places" as part of Contemporary Works III, a series of plays by contemporary playwrights (these two shows alternate with a pro-

"Krapp's Last Tape" is the first show of the evening, and as it demands intense concentration, this is for the best; a tired audience might have trouble maintaining such a high level of involvement. Fortunately, the seating arrangement, that of bleachers on the stage, makes this task easier, placing the audience up close to and in the same area with the action, thus creating a very intimate and focused environment. Furthermore (although some may claim that this is merely a distraction), the seats do not allow one to become physically, and, consequently, mentally comfortable and without being contrived. Director Matthew Dubroff '90 does an excellent job of picking out the subtle bits of humor in the play (of which bananas play an important part) without turning them into slapstick. That a play with so little action could hold the audience's interest for almost an hour should be praised enough for both Baratta's and Dubroff's work.

The onedrawback of the show consists of the younger Krapp's taped voice (also done by Baratta). While the words were at times both moving and compelling, the voice itself often seemed not to belong to Krapp, an intellectual bastard turned curmudgeon, but to an announcer for Masterpiece Theatre. This seemed to weaken the sense of absent vitality of the younger Krapp, which later decays into paranoia and isolation.

While Krapp lives out his life in social isolation, the characters in "Sacred Places" must deal with cultural and racial isolation, imposed both by themselves, in the form of an all-black co-op State University, and by others, through segregated elementary school and so-called "urban renewal" projects.

The play is set in 1980, when Calvin Bryant (played by Damico Williams '91) sees his old girlfriend, Denise Rollins (Nakesha Williams '92) on TV. He calls her, and his phone call triggers a chain of memories and reflections for both of them, from the time they first met until their breakup just before Denise's graduation.

Calvin and Denise are obvious representations of the two main trends of the black civil rights movement of the late Sixties. Denise, who goes to a small, predominantly white, liberal arts college (an obvious touchstone for our conditions here), concentrates on her studies, and on succeeding in the "white" world, fighting her way quietly through success and integration. On the other hand, her fiery boyfriend Calvin—who sees every issue in terms of race—is a leader of State's politically and sometimes radically active African student association. He handles his frustrations with feelings of Malcolm X and the Black Separatists. Both are extremely powerful characters who, unfortunately, are not always done justice by the actors and the director (Assistant Professor of Theatre David Eppel). To be fair, this is not an easy play to act in, especially for actors who have not lived through the mass movements and passions of the Sixties. Indeed, Damon Williams is best in his quietest and more personal moments, especially in the second scenelet (call it what you will). During the first part of the play, his style is somewhat declamatory. Although Calvin is supposed to be loudly political in his speeches, Damon Williams does not allow us to see the true fire that lies behind the words, nor the passion that fuels the hidden twin desires of architecture and vision of a better future for black housing problems.

Another problem is the sometimes static quality of the directing, visible most often in the transitions from realistic scene to reflective monologue. These were Nakesha Williams' biggest hurdle as well. For the most part, she seemed relaxed, natural, and entirely believable.

Nakesha Williams is assisted in her role by what is probably the prevailing attitude on campus. Certainly the vast majority of students here would be much more sympathetic to Denise's work within the system, and the struggles thereby incurred, than they would be to Calvin's proclivity towards violence coupled with his slight separatist leanings. Indeed, Calvin and Denise's breakup at the end of the first act serve as a metaphor for the breakup of the civil rights movement which followed the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr. with some groups working increasingly with white liberals in the government and others following the lead of Malcolm X and the Black Separatists.

This break in the play is echoed by a change in the stage set. Obvious throughout the play, and perhaps problematic, were the large stakes that move forward in the second act. Although these stakes confused many people, they certainly were not purposeless. During the first act, they stand as a sort of white picket fence, representing both the suburban attitude that Calvin reviles, and the academic isolation that Denise moves through. They also resemble prison bars, suggesting both exclusion from the "white" world and entrapment by both it and their own natures.

Calvin's simmering rage and Denise's more stoic acceptance. In the second act, these stakes move forward, creating a more intimate playing space for Calvin's living room, while suggesting further entrapment. Calvin has left his job at an architectural firm in order to pursue his housing projects while Denise, who did not drink in college, has to deal with returning bouts of alcoholism. Perhaps there is more than a suggestion that the unlimited possibilities that seemed to abound in the Sixties are no longer so obvious to a disillusioned civil rights movement. Despite all of this, the set could have been used to better advantage, in terms of playing area, in the first act. The title of the play is, after all, sacred places, and a either a stronger sense of place, or one of placelessness and detachment would have reinforced the theme of the importance of having, and "being able to have, a place of one's own that recurred throughout the whole play, whether it be urban attitude that Calvin reviles, and the academic isolation that Denise moves through. They also resemble prison bars, suggesting both exclusion from the "white" world and entrapment by both it and their own natures.

The voice itself seemed not to belong to Krapp, an intellectual turned curmudgeon, but to an announcer for Masterpiece Theatre.

Calvin's simmering rage and Denise's more stoic acceptance. In the second act, these stakes move forward, creating a more intimate playing space for Calvin's living room, while suggesting further entrapment. Calvin has left his job at an architectural firm in order to pursue his housing projects while Denise, who did not drink in college, has to deal with returning bouts of alcoholism. Perhaps there is more than a suggestion that the unlimited possibilities that seemed to abound in the Sixties are no longer so obvious to a disillusioned civil rights movement. Despite all of this, the set could have been used to better advantage, in terms of playing area, in the first act. The title of the play is, after all, sacred places, and a either a stronger sense of place, or one of placelessness and detachment would have reinforced the theme of the importance of having, and "being able to have, a place of one's own that recurred throughout the whole play, whether it be

Party 'til you puke

by Bill Savadove and Todd Owens

Last Friday saw two New York circuit bands playing in Mission, Ransom Jenks in Currier, and the Investment Bankers in Prospect. But we stayed in and watched video cassettes in order to bring you the five best "boon" scenes in cinematic history:

1. Stand By Me
 2. The Exorcist
 3. Monty Python's The Meaning of Life
 4. The Witches of Eastwick
 5. The Fly
 6. Animal House (runner up)
- Quick! I think I'm going to throw up. Somebody get a priest.
- Would monsieur like an after dinner mint? It's wafer thin.
- "I can't believe I threw up in front of Dean Wormer."
- "Flounder, you threw up on Dean Wormer."

March Campus Bestsellers

1. The Bonfire of the Vanities, by Tom Wolfe.
2. Trump: The Art of The Deal, by Donald Trump.
3. The Essential Calvin and Hobbes, by Bill Waterson.
4. The Accidental Tourist, by Anne Tyler.
5. Chaos, by James Gleick.
6. The Tommyknockers, by Stephen King.
7. Beloved, by Toni Morrison.
8. The Shell Seekers, by Rosamunde Pilcher.
9. Codependent no More, by Melody Beattie.
10. Tales too Ticklish to Tell, by Berke Breathed.

Compiled by The Chronicle of Higher Education from information supplied by college stores throughout the country. February 25, 1988. Courtesy of the Association of American Publishers.

Can you write like this?

"Yet the most valuable aspect of their performance for the audience was the display of erotic power that can overcome both performers and listeners."

"You can ski, only to be chain whipped by a body nazi trying to get ahead of you in the lift line."

The Arts section of the Williams Record is looking for reviewers and contributors to write on a free lance basis. Call Bill Savadove at x2869 or The Record at x2595.

Brass Ensemble mellow and bombastic

by Sean Timmons

In honor of the centennial anniversary of the graduation of Gaius Charles Bolin '89, the first black graduate of Williams, the New Brass Ensemble played in Brooks-Rogers Hall Tuesday. At times they were quiet. At times they were mellow. At other times they were loud, bombastic, virtuosic, or jazzy. The group played in a variety of styles, from a variety of time periods, and always seemed to feel at home.

The quintet, consisting of James Tinley and Lenny Foy, trumpets (and flugelhorn), Bob Watt, French horn, Oordon Simms, trombone, and Tony Underwood, tuba, organized their program chronologically, beginning with Renaissance pieces and finishing with works from the twentieth century. It was a very adventurous program, for although none of the pieces were tremendously loud, there were many, and of varying stylistic demands.

Steinman

The group played a variety of styles, from a variety of time periods, and always seemed to feel at home.

The pieces were also challenging in that not all of them were originally intended for brass quintet, but were actually transcriptions. This is a common element of brass quintet programs, for the compositions available specifically for this grouping has been fairly sparse until recent years. The use of transcriptions poses a problem for many brass groups because it is often difficult for an ensemble to make convincing variations in color and timbre, much harder than it would be for a string quartet, for instance.

The players rose to the challenge. They constantly strove to match the tone of the ensemble to the spirit of the piece they were performing, and with great success. For the Handel Aria, they were very bright, but never too loud. For the Bach chorale "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme," they were much mellower, and smoother, obviously keeping in mind that the piece was originally for chorus, and phrasing it as such. In another work by Bach, the Contrapunctus IX, from the "Art of the Fugue," the New Brass Ensemble chose a remarkable group of instruments: one trumpet, one flugel, horn, trombone, and tuba. While this seems a surprising choice, the group obviously has worked hard at making the blend seamless, and the difference in timbres made the voices of the fugue come out even more clearly. Perhaps the most remarkable piece on the program was Divertimento 1 by Mozart. The performers made remarkable contrasts between the light opening section and the more legato second section. All through the work the ensemble showed tremendous dynamic restraint, keeping the airy style that works so well in Mozart, while at the same time maintaining a rhythmic bounce that underscored the playfulness of the piece. This was an extremely convincing performance of a piece that would not seem to be readily adaptable to brass instruments.

Other composers that were featured on the program were Bartok and Debussy. Again, these were transcriptions of pieces for other media. In "A Little Bartok Suite" from "Music for Children, Vol. I," the New Brass Ensemble demonstrated a marvelous understanding of Bartok's rhythmic energy. On the other hand, "La fille aux cheveux de lin" showed the group playing longer, more flowing lines with full backgrounds.

The ensemble showed tremendous restraint, while at the same time maintaining a rhythmic bounce.

These two pieces were played back to back, offering a nice programming contrast, as well as demonstrating the group's prodigious adaptability.

The planned program ended with some jazzy pieces, including a very mellow rendition of Duke Ellington's, "In a Sentimental Mood," and a rousing (and very upbeat) performance of "Just a Closer Walk With Thee," New Orleans style. As encores, the group provided an excerpt from Handel's Water Music, a fast and furious march.

The entire evening was marvelous. The New Brass Ensemble played its difficult program very convincingly, always bringing life to the music.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinemas 1, II, III Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
The Burbs	7:05	9:15
Three Fugitives	7:05	9:15
Mississippi Burning	7:00	9:15
Twins	9:05
Images Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
Another Woman	March 7	7:00	9:00
Lost Temptation of Christ	March 8-9	7:30
Blade Runner	March 10-11	7:00
Robocop	March 10-11	9:00
Metropolis	March 10-11	10:45
The Accused	March 12-14	7:00	9:00
North Adams Cinema Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Dream A Little Dream	7:00	9:30
Beaches	7:00	9:30
Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure	7:10	9:20
The Burbs	7:10	9:20
Pittsfield Cinema Center Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
Working Girl, Mississippi Burning, True Believer, Talk Radio, Beaches	Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30
Rain Man	6:45 & 9:15
Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure, Three Fugitives, The Burbs, The Fly II, Twins	Sun-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30
Berkshire Mall Cinema Rte 8, Lanesborough, 499-2558
Tap	1:00	3:30	7:00 9:30
Three Fugitives	1:25	3:55	7:25 9:55
Her Alibi	1:30	4:00	7:30 10:00
Beaches	12:40	3:15	6:45 9:15
Working Girl	12:50	3:20	6:50 9:20
Rain Man	12:40	3:10	6:40 9:10
Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure	1:20	3:50	7:20 9:50
Twins	12:50	3:20	6:50 9:20
The Burbs	1:10	3:40	7:10 9:40

Subject to change after Thursday

Lisa Pliscou's Higher Education is neither

by Bill Savadove

Amherst has David Foster Wallace. Bennington has Bret Easton Ellis. Williams has Jay McInerney. And now Harvard, not to be outdone, has an author it can call its own—Lisa Pliscou.

Lisa Pliscou is from Southern California. She graduated from Harvard University in 1982 with a degree in English. Her first novel, Higher Education (Penguin Contemporary American Fiction, paperback, $7.95) is about, you guessed it, a Harvard senior English major from California.

This genre of autobiographical-fiction has three distinguishing characteristics. Higher Education conforms to all of these categorizations:

If I want to listen to a bunch of college kids make witty, intellectual remarks, I can sit in Greylock dining hall for two hours.

1. The protagonist/author is different from everyone else—really.
2. Inside every undergraduate is a frustrated writer trying to get out.
3. Drinking is part of a well rounded liberal arts education.

Higher Education is a primer of everything you wanted to know about Harvard that they didn't tell you during the 350th birthday celebration. The book takes place over a ten-day period. It's about a stressed out senior, Miranda Walker, who thinks she is reaching the end of her psychological rope. During these ten days, amidst over a major sociology paper and several disastrous social encounters come to a head. Ultimately, she decides to take things one at a time in order to graduate with her sanity intact. Sound familiar?

Here are few pearls of wisdom from the book:

Dining room hierarchy
Although it's perhaps not evident to the untrained eye, the Adams House dining hall embodies an intricate and ever changing social matrix in which different areas and even specific tables manifest varying degrees of prestige and chic. These days the tables all south of the salad bar are declassé, while those in the extreme southeast corner are the most sought-after seats in the house, verily bristling with a ridiculous number of chairs.

Job hunting
I could go outside and make the tentative trek to the Career Services building. There, crowded on all sides by every known species of job hunter, internship seeker, med-school applicant, Lisa Pliscou, author of Higher Education.

potential fellowship nominee, and other equally unsavory types, I'd sooner or later end up in an ill-lit corner sitting through a stack of outdated job listings, too overwhelmed to even think of trying to approach one of the ostentatiously harassed counselors.

Parties
We trade stories about the horrifying number of papers we each have due, the workdays escalating with shots of tequila, and then he gently brushes the little pieces of lime pulp from my face and asks me to dance.

Thesis
Twenty years from now, your thesis won't mean a thing.

Why read about getting drunk and throwing up when you can go out and do it?

for the Crimson or the Lampoon and they didn't even put you on the waiting list."

That's not true! The application asked how many books I had read in the last year, for Chrissake. I wanted to go to Williams, where all the students are clean and athletic.

Well, if you decide to read the book, I am including this handy character scorecard which you can clip.

Dean—guy Miranda sees up a date with even though he has a girlfriend.

Jackson—guy Miranda falls in love with because of the length and impossible curl of his eyelashes, eventually they break up.

Bryan—freshman year friendship
Tim—reminds Miranda of a Malibu Ken Doll; she sleeps with him once.

Michael—Texan Miranda wants to sleep with; he turns her down because he wants to stay friends.

Guillaume—one-night stand from the romance languages party.

Anthony—unexpected Tuesday night tryst after looking up a passage in Yeats.

Richard—singer and guitarist in the campus band of the moment, "White Bread"; kisses Miranda's hand.

You also may be interested in knowing that I'm working on my own undergraduate novel. The working title is to approach one of the ostentatiously harassed counselors.

During the week, Williams students are more interested in discourse than intercourse, more interested in book knowledge than carnal knowledge. But on the weekend...

Do you think Penguin would be interested?

Arts In View

March 8 At 8:00 p.m., Professor Robert Coover of Brown University will give a fiction reading in Griffin Hall, room 3. Coover is the author of Public Burning.

March 9 At 4:15, the Williams Woodwind Ensemble will present a studio recital in Presser Choral Hall. The recital will feature music by Debussy, Chopin and Rimski-Korsakov.

At 8:00 p.m., Ken Medema, an internationally acclaimed pianist, vocalist, and composer, will give a concert in Brooks Rogers. Medema's music reflects his concern for current social issues.

At 8:00 p.m., Williams Theatre will present three, one-act plays as part of the series "For Michael: Contemporary Theatre." The plays are: "27 Wagons Full of Cotton," "Protest," and "Quartet." Adams Memorial Theatre

March 10 At 8:00 p.m., the Williams Trio will give a concert in Brooks Rogers. The concert will feature pieces by Mozart and Brahms.

March 11 At 2:00 p.m., Paul Metcalf and Janine Pommy Voga will present the first of a three part series of poetry readings in the Clark Art Institute Auditorium.

At 8:00 p.m., there will be a repeat dance performance of the Winter Study project "This House, This House" in Lasell dance studio.

At 8:00 p.m., the final performances of "27 Wagons Full of Cotton," "Protest," and "Quartet" will be given at the Adams Memorial Theatre, DownStage.

SPIRIT SHOP

280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704

New Service!

Professional packaging and/or shipping. Shipping anywhere!

Any size, small or large, near or far. Packaging materials, boxes, peanuts, bubble wrap, tape and labels. Spring break ski boxes for sale—we ship your skis. Pick up service available.

Monday - Saturday 9am to 11 pm

SUMMER JOBS TO SAVE ENVIRONMENT
EARN $2500-$3500. National campaign positions to pass clean air act, stop toxic pollution, tighten pesticide controls & promote comprehensive recycling available in 18 states & D.C. Interviews on campus 3/7, 8, 9. Call Joe at 617-292-4810

Composer Ken Medema to play Thursday night

by Synje Holleck

"Music can, in subtle ways, make connections between areas of our lives which have not been connected," said Christian composer Ken Medema, who will perform this Thursday, March 9, at 8:00 p.m. in Brooks Rogers.

Medema, who is blind from birth, has been called a "herald for justice" because of his ongoing concern for social justice and social issues. He does not hesitate to integrate his political views into the lyrics of his music, and is often criticized for mixing gospel and politics.

He says, however, that "It is impossible to have the gospel in your life without it having some political implications."

Performing some 130 concerts a year, Medema describes his music as "stylistically varied, using all kinds of styles from classical to contemporary, primarily and pervasively within the context of what would be a contemporary pop or jazz style of music."

Medema's Christian background, his time of rebellion and agnosticism in high school and college, his work as a music therapist, and his return to Christianity have all profoundly influenced his music.

In addition to Scripture, he emphasizes the importance of story and children in his music and often incorporates a certain playfulness into his songs. Medema views stories as an essential component of his music because of their ability to "take people off-guard, catch them when their defenses are down and allow them to have a new experience."

The inclusion of children in his music

It is impossible to have the gospel in your life without it having some political implications.

originates from the ideas of exploration and new experiences.

Although Medema is blind from birth, his handicap does not present a major obstacle to his composing, nor to his performing. "His words and his lyrics engage visual concepts like color and texture. When Ken Medema takes the stage it's easy to forget that he has been blind from birth," wrote Chris van Eyle of The Church Herald.

Christian composer Ken Medema, who is blind, tickles the ivories with a social conscience.

Medema began piano lessons at the age of eight. He could analyze a symphony and improvise fugues by the time he was 12. After attending Michigan State University, where he received an undergraduate degree in music therapy and piano performance and a graduate degree in voice, Medema served as the director of the music therapy program in a New Jersey psychiatric hospital for three years before turning to a full time singing career.

STUDENT/YOUTH RATES NOW AVAILABLE!

Low season rates until 6/19 to : *Paris $450 R/T
*Madrid $460 R/T
*Tel Aviv $720 R/T

 60 Day advance notice

Low cancellation penalty : Only $30 up to departure date

Available to any full time student (under 32 years) any youth under 26 years.

OTHER GREAT BARGAINS CALL TO-DAY FOR INFO

THE TRAVEL STORE
We make great vacations!
105 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. 01267
(413) 458-5052
outside Mass. 800-225-5052

How to get through college with money to spare:

1. Buy a Macintosh.

2. Add a peripheral.

3. Get a nice, fat check.

Now through March 31, when you buy selected Macintosh® SE or Macintosh II computers, you'll get a rebate for up to half the suggested retail price of the Apple® peripherals you add on—so you'll save up to $800. Ask for details today where computers are sold on campus.

Apple Pays Half

Computer Center Sales Office
Room 110

© 1989 Apple Computer, Inc. Apple, the Apple logo, and Macintosh are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Certain restrictions apply. All rebates subject to strict compliance with the Terms and Conditions of the "Apple Pays Half" Program Guidelines, available from your authorized Apple reseller. Offer void where prohibited by law.

Leader of the band

Guest conductor Ronald Feldman, newly appointed chairman of the Berkshires Symphony last Friday. The concert featured music by Stravinsky, Mozart, and Beethoven, as well as student compositions by Paul Brainard '89 and Sean Timmons '89. Jay Hertley '90, winner of the second annual Berkshire Symphony Student Soloist Competition, also performed.

Isaacson

Beyond the Bubble

McFarlane given suspended sentence
Former National Security Advisor Robert C. McFarlane received a two-year suspended sentence and was fined $20,000 last week after pleading guilty to four misdemeanor charges for misleading Congress during the Iranian arms scandal hearings. McFarlane received a light sentence because of his willingness to cooperate with independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh in prosecuting others involved in the scandal. McFarlane will testify later this month against Lt. Colonel Oliver C. North, who worked for him at the National Security Agency. "This episode in our history resulted in enormous turmoil. To the point that I contributed to it, I regret it. I tried to serve my country," McFarlane said.

Tower nomination on the rocks
George Bush's effort to secure the appointment of John G. Tower as secretary of defense stalled last week when conservative Democratic Senator Dennis DeConcini of Arizona, one of few Democrats the White House had hoped would support Tower, announced that he would vote against the nomination. Democrats rejected allegations that they were conducting a partisan witch-hunt while Republicans charged that Tower had been treated so unfairly that he should be invited to the Senate floor to face his accusers. Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole (R-Kansas) said Tower should come to the Senate chamber "to stand in this well, and to answer his critics face to face—charge by charge, rumor by rumor and fact by fact."

Stingy astronomer cracks spy ring
West German authorities last week apprehended three computer hackers who were part of an East European spy ring, thanks to the help of Clifford Stoll, an astronomer at the Harvard-Smithsonian Observatory in Cambridge, Massachusetts. The hackers, who were recruited by the KGB in 1985, had regularly broken into key military and research computers in the United States, Western Europe and Japan until Stoll, a 38-year-old computer expert, was billed 75 cents for their computer time. After discovering the 75-cent charge, Stoll spent two years tracking the hackers until he and the Federal Bureau of Investigation traced them to Hanover, West Germany. "In one sense, it was exciting," Stoll said. "In another sense, it was dreadful, because I got zero astronomy done for two years."

Compiled from the New York Times and the Berkshire Eagle by Justin Smith.

THE CLIP SHOP

THE HAIR SALON FOR MEN, WOMEN, AND CHILDREN

- Hair Salon
- Make-up
- Perms
- Facials
- Grooming
- Skin care
- Color
- Manicures
- Pedicures
- Conditioning
- Nail Tips
- Relaxers
- Waxing
- Highlighting
- Ear Piercing

Call for an appointment or just walk in

Gift Certificates
Special Student Discounts

We're a
Sebastian Artistic Center

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.

48 SPRING STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
(413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8665

122 NORTH STREET
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-8903

125 NORTH STREET
BENNINGTON, VT.
(802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

PIP PRINTING
Camera Ready
Resumes
50 for $17.70
Offset Printed in just a few hours!
We do all types of printing
53 Main St.
North Adams, MA
953-3414

YOU QUALIFY FOR INSTANT CREDIT!

Start making credit purchases IMMEDIATELY! We will send you a Members Credit Card at once with NO CREDIT CHECK. Buy any Jewelry, Clothing, Sporting Goods, Watches, Electronics & MORE! All with installment payments out of our "Giant 100+ Pages Catalog." Take 12 months to repay. Your personal credit card is a second I.D.—valuable for check cashing, etc. plus your Students Credit Group A-1 reference will be on file to help you obtain other credit cards. So send in your $5 catalog deposit now. (refundable with your first order) Establish your credit today! 100% Satisfaction Guaranteed (or your Money Back)

MEMBERS P.O. BOX 4649
STUDENTS FORT LAUDERDALE,
FLORIDA 33338

Study Abroad Through Syracuse University.

Study in one of SU's 27 academic programs conducted in England, France, Italy, Spain, and other locations. Grants are available for a semester, a year, or a summer of study abroad.

SEND TODAY FOR OUR CATALOG!

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____ Zip _____
Phone _____
School _____
SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY DIVISION OF INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS ABROAD
119 Euclid Avenue, Syracuse, New York 13244-4170 (315) 443-3471 A10

$60.00 PER HUNDRED remailing letters from home!
Details, send self-addressed, stamped envelope:

Associates
Box 909 • 1
Colon, NJ 07067

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
25 SPRING ST. WILIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01260
TEL. (413) 458-9167

Soft touch

Winston Chang '89 works high above the net during the men's volleyball team's 2-1 victory over Wesleyan in the Little Three Tournament in Chandler on Wednesday. The Ephs were unable to successfully defend their Little Three crown as they lost to Amherst 15-13 in the third game of their championship match.

Steinman

CLINIC EASTWOOD DINNER

Menu

- Rattlesnake Paté
- Hogs Breath Chik
- Dirty Harry's Hot Dog Bar
- Spaghetti Western Pie
- High Plains Corn
- Sudden Impact Beans
- Fire Fox Fries
- Heartbreak Ridge Beer Biscuits
- Any Which Way Ice Cream Bar
- Fresh Fruit

Make My Day.
WED. MARCH 8
Williams Dining Halls

Women's hoops falls to Amherst in NIAC tournament first round

by Asif Jall

Williams traveled to New London, Connecticut on Saturday to seek revenge for last year's NIAC final loss to Amherst but came up empty once again. The Ephs lost to the Lord Jeffs in the first round of the Northeast Intercollegiate Athletic Conference tournament 77-63. There was no consolation game for the four-team tournament.

The second-seeded Ephs were hoping to meet top-seeded Connecticut College, a team it has lost to twice this season, in the final but were denied this opportunity by a tight Amherst defense. Conn College was also upset in the first round, falling to Middlebury 89-88.

Amherst took an early 11-point lead which it never relinquished. Williams could not overcome Amherst's tough defensive pressure. The Lord Jeffs forced 28 Eph turnovers, while committing only 12 themselves. In previous season play, the Eph defense had consistently forced more turnovers and turned them into easy transition baskets, but the careful Jeffs protected the ball well.

Williams tries to come back

Using a trap defense, Williams did get back into the game near the end of the first half. The Ephs cut the lead to five at intermission, 42-37. Williams was unable to even the score in the second period as it struggled from the field. The Ephs connected on only 38 percent of their shots for the game. Williams was forced to foul down the stretch, but Amherst converted its free throws, with Lord Jeff Lisa Salineti going six for seven from the line.

Salineti led the Jeffs with a season-high 20 points. Cynthia Knight also scored 20 points, and Liz Garner added 15. Co-captain Nancy Hedeman '89 topped the Ephs with 18 points and 14 rebounds. Chrissy Cadigan '91 contributed 15 points and senior co-captain Missy Crouchley knocked in 10. Co-captain Julia Beasley '89 had nine assists.

The NIAC loss did not end Williams' season. Because of the tournament, the Williams-Amherst regular season finale has been shifted to tonight at 8 p.m. The Ephs (14-7) will try to end the season on a positive note by going undefeated in Little Three play.

Track

continued from page 12

exciting relay, as Larry Smith '92, Carrey Simon '90, Jonathan Lindley '92, and Brad Behr '92 ran the 4x400 meter event. Paced by Simon's 49-second performance, the team averaged an early season relay loss to Amherst by running 3:27 to beat the Lord Jeffs by half a second and take fifth. Lindsey also competed in the 55-meter dash, where he was fifth in 6.89 seconds, and in the 200 meters, where he ran a season best time of 23.61 to take fifth place. Smith ran the open 400 meters, where his time of 50.34 seconds took fourth. In his individual event, Behr took sixth place in the 500 meters.

Joe McGinn was the only field event performer for Williams, but his effort was good enough to represent the Ephs well. McGinn threw a personal record 52'10" in the 35-lb. weight throw to take fourth place. The performance also bodes well for McGinn as he prepares for Nationals this weekend at Bowdoin.

Women shine individually

The top individual performance for the women's team came from Dawn Macauley. The senior captain won the 600 meters in 1:27.44, and then followed with a fourth place high jump finish and a sixth place in the high hurdles. Williams picked up points in the 1000-yard race, where, two freshmen, Christy Macauley and Susan Donna, finished third and fourth, a half-second apart. The other points for Williams came from Jen Morris '89 in the 800 meters. Morris ran an indoor-best time of 2:23.77 to place sixth and complete a successful indoor season.

Swimming

continued from page 12

400 individual medley on Saturday night, Benson, Dehmel, Giglio and Alex Webster '92 placed first, second, third and eighth respectively. In the 200 breast Ephe Davis, Shaw, Albert Garcia '92, David Caplan '92 and Robert Jeng '92 took second, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth places respectively. Tula Peter Kraaijvanger won the event in 2:09.13.

The Ephs also crushed in the endurance testing 1650 free where Jordan, Snyder and Dehmel took the top three honors and qualified for Nationals in the event.

The Eph swimmers had shaved down mid tapered for the meet to improve their times. The shaving down had a psychological effect on the swimmers: "It is such a commitment to shave your head. It makes you concentrate on your performance," stated Samuelson.

"You feel lighter in the water. It [shaving down] tends to release antagonistic muscle control. You have fewer movements," explained Samuelson.

In the spotlight

The Gridiron Club of Greater Boston has named Williams' head football coach Dick Farley the New England Small College Coach of the Year. Farley had led the Ephs to a 6-1-1 record this fall, their best record since 1975. He has been the head coach since before the 1987 season. Previous to being head coach, Farley served as an assistant coach under Bob Odell and as the head coach of men's and women's track teams.

The Williams riding team took fourth out of 12 colleges last Saturday at Mt. Holyoke in the first of three spring regional shows. The Eph equestrians, lacking the stakes and coaching that their counterparts at other colleges have, still managed to place immediately behind national powerhouse Mt. Holyoke, Smith and the University of Massachusetts. Led by co-captains Lisa West '89 and Liz McKown '89, Eph riders competed against over 200 riders from Massachusetts. Williams standout Gretchen Piper '91 was named the overall champion.

Eph skier Dave Brule '92 took third place in the slalom at the NCAA Division I Skiing Championships in Jackson Hole, Wyoming on Saturday. Fellow Eph Matt Omland '89 placed tenth in the women's race.

Squash player Bruce Hopner '92 was named a Division I second team All-American by the Intercollegiate Squash Association last weekend.

IM Report

Sunday Night Hockey League

Playoff Results from Sunday, February 26

Town and Gown 10, Flying Vegetables
Smokin' Hole 3, N.J. Psychotics 2 (OT)

Championship game: Thursday, March 2

Town and Gown 8, Smokin' Hole 6

Intramural Basketball Final Standings

The Big East Division

The Disease	9-0
Cotton Ponies	8-1
The Faculty	7-2
The Blue Team	6-3
Robin Lloyd	5-4
Snow White / Dwarves	4-5
The Dean's List	2-7
Buildings and Grounds	2-7
The Seamen	1-8
Team Elvis	1-8

The ACC

The Gladden Gays	8-1
Lars Hem	8-1
The Soccer Team	7-2
Black Magic	6-3
Asif Jall	6-3
Julius Yang	4-5
Ted Moore	3-6
The Port Boys	2-7
The Squash Team	1-8
The Gray Team	0-9

Playoff results from Sunday, March 5

The Disease 67, Black Magic 57
Cotton Ponies 55, The Soccer Team 38
The Blue Team 46, The Gladden Gays 35
The Faculty def. Lars Hem by 23

patagonia

MEN'S AND WOMEN'S SHORTS IN STOCK

Get Ready for SPRING BREAK

the Mountain Goat

Williams Campus, Box 1000
March 7-8
100 West St., Williams and Spring

From the Locker Room

Spring brings flowers and baseball picks

Well, March is here, and none too soon, for with March comes the crack of bats and the smell of grass that signal the advent of another baseball season and allow us all to feel just a little bit younger. Here, three writers swallow their pride and advance fearless predictions for the upcoming season.

N.L. East

by Alexander Rachmiele

With the best pitching staff in baseball, the New York Mets will again dominate the division. Their four full-time starters averaged 17 wins each last year, and Randy Myers emerged as the best left-handed reliever in the league. Bob Ojeda, who spent most of last season on the DL, could return to find his spot in the rotation usurped by rookie Dave West. Both West and Gregg Jefferies, still officially a rookie after hitting .329 in 109 at bats last season, have realistic shots at Rookie of the Year honors. As long as Darryl Strawberry has more homers than teammates, Dave Johnson's boys should coast.

With a pitching staff that features the likes of "Starvin'" Marvin Freeman and a lineup spearheaded by Steve Jeltz, the only regular player to remain consistently below the Mendoza line for the last three years, the Philadelphia Phillies posted the lowest team batting average and the highest team ERA in the league last year. Even a healthy Vinny Esposito and future Hall-of-Famer Mike Schmidt won't help new manager Nick Leyva keep his job through May.

With March comes the crack of bats and the smell of grass that signal the advent of another baseball season...

handed reliever in the league. Bob Ojeda, who spent most of last season on the DL, could return to find his spot in the rotation usurped by rookie Dave West. Both West and Gregg Jefferies, still officially a rookie after hitting .329 in 109 at bats last season, have realistic shots at Rookie of the Year honors. As long as Darryl Strawberry has more homers than teammates, Dave Johnson's boys should coast.

After capturing their third pennant of the decade in 1987, the St. Louis Cardinals last year plummeted to fifth place. But the Redbirds' 1988 campaign was marred by injuries and personnel confusion, and you can never count out Whitey Herzog. If Pedro Guerrero and Terry Pendleton can stay healthy at the infield corners and promising hurlers Joe Magrane and Jose DeLeon can finally get some offensive support, the White Rat should be back to his old tricks.

With a core of young stars that includes Bobby Bonilla, Barry Bonds, Andy Van Slyke and Jose Lind, the Pittsburgh Pirates will challenge again this year and for several seasons to come. Skipper Jim Leyland has a solid young starting rotation led by Bob Walk, Doug Drabek and John Smiley.

The Montreal Expos made more offseason deals than any other team in the division. New acquisitions Kevin Ciesek, Spike Owen, and Mike Aldrete should all make immediate contributions. First baseman Andres Galarraga emerged last year as an MVP-caliber slugger.

The nine-player deal that sent pure hitter Rafael Palmeiro to the Texas Rangers for six unproven prospects shows that the Chicago Cubs are looking to the future. Don't expect them to challenge this year, but watch out when Mark Grace and Damon Berryhill, both among last year's top rookies, mature. After the Greg Maddux, the Cubbies' pitching is suspect at best.

The Houston Astros, sporting a n on-proud pitching staff that could be a glaring weakness, are in futile pursuit of Wade Boggs, and should do no better in know that Don August was 13-7 last year) to lead them to victory.

The retooled N.Y. Yankees will still be learning each others' names in May, but with the talented trio of Mattingly, Winfield, and Henderson they ought to scrape by the Detroit Tigers, who are under the command of the best manager in baseball (Sparky Anderson) and somehow always find their way onto my TV screen in September and October.

Bringing up the rear of this talented division will be the Cleveland Indians, who could threaten if their pitchers discover a magic potion that cuts earned runs in half, and the Baltimore Orioles, a group of promising and energetic youngsters that will no doubt be a bit nervous until they win a game, but should wind up with a respectable mark.

A.I. West

by Kerr Houston

Tough call here, but I've gotta go with their search for a pennant.

With the best player in baseball, Kirby Puckett, the Twins should rise to the top of the once-laughable American League Western Division.

Little can be said about the Atlanta Braves' chances for success this season. The Braves have a promising future with a bevy of encouraging prospects and young stars but should not expect to finish out of the cellar this year. If a few of these hopefuls come through, the Braves will be a competitive team in the eighties but can anticipate ending the nighties the way they started them: at the bottom.

A.L. East

by Kerr Houston

Making accurate predictions involving this division is a bit like making original Dan Quayle jokes; it's just plain difficult. Nonetheless, it seems ridiculous to bet against the Boston Red Sox, although Bruce (what's so great about a 3.66 ERA?) Hurst climbed on a jet headed to San Diego, the 1988 division champions still have one of the most awesome as-fied divisions, but they will be hard-pressed to outrun the Seattle Mariners, who held firm with their 1988 lineup but can nevertheless expect to improve as a group of young hitters and mediocre pitchers can only get better.

After a couple of fifty off-season moves, the California Angels are looking to head the second tier of this stratified division, but they will be hard-pressed to outrun the Seattle Mariners, who held firm with their 1988 lineup but can nevertheless expect to improve as a group of young hitters and mediocre pitchers can only get better.

Finally, I challenge anyone who can name three Chicago White Sox off the top of their head to give me a ring. See what I mean?

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Physicians' Findings

BY WARREN W. REICH/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

ACROSS	DOWN
1 Part of the pinna	17 "A Death in the Family" author
5 A savory jelly	18 Spots for bulbs
10 Soviet range	34 Gave a party for
15 Reveal secrets	35 Made amends
16 Mangle	36 Injections
30 Greek letter	37 Darlings
31 Generally valid	38 Canaan
22 Mezzanine section	39 "Golden" songs
23 Unprepared	40 Film comic
25 Sedate	41 Roscoe
27 Spates	42 Aegan island
28 Like lager	43 Solito
30 "Golden" songs	44 Wielded
31 Film comic
41 Roscoe
42 Aegan island
43 Solito
44 Wielded

DOWN	17 'A Death in the Family' author	42 Trol or lops	64 Mirador
1 Swipe	18 Spots for bulls	43 Josh	65 More bizarre
2 Flint plumb	19 Gave a party for	44 What I.e. stands for	66 Adolescents
3 Adonis's killer	20 Spanish epic	45 Like Rudolph's nose	67 Veers away
4 Boards a	21 Parched one's paradise	46 Dubbed	68 First half of the alphabet
5 Made amends	22 Voodoo fetish	47 Moslem law	69 Low cards in pinocle
6 Injections	23 Pressure: Comb. form	48 Upright	70 How the Niagara flows
7 Darlings	24 Upright	49 Actress	71 Actor Rachins
8 Canaan follower	50 Ralston	51 Both, in Bonn	72 Despicable
9 Of the founder of Thebes	52 Caustic	53 Mrs. Tanqueray	73 Metrical foot
10 Reveal	54 Bucephalus was one	55 Super Bowl team: 1980	76 Pupils' delight
11 Haley hook	56 Molder
12 Xiamen, formerly
13 Mae West role
14 With all glass for 15 Cultures' products
16 N.J. city

Male swimmers win New England's by largest margin in history

by Anne Joseph

The Williams men's swimming team won New England's by the largest margin in the history of the meet last weekend at Bowdoin. The Ephs racked up 1561.5 points by the end of Sunday night, more than the combined scores of second- and third-place finishers Tufts and Bowdoin.

Last weekend also saw the number of Eph swimmers qualified for NCAA Nationals rise to eight. Nationals will be held at Bowdoin over the first weekend of spring break. Williams standouts Rob Benson '90, Chris Cleuzo '90, Evan Davis '89, Paul Dehmel '91, Chris Oglio '89, Greg Jordan '92, Dan Snyder '90 and Scott Schwager '91 will be competing at the national level.

"I was totally impressed. We got the greatest number of points ever in the New England Championships. It was absolutely wonderful. It was due to everyone swimming well. Everyone contributed and felt he played a role in the meet," stated Coach Carl Samuelson. "It was so enjoyable that the five-hour trip was easy."

The Ephs began the meet breaking a New England record in the first event. The 200 medley relay of Cleuzo, Davis, Benson and David Brown '89 won the Championship final in 1:35.59, almost a second ahead of second-place Tufts. In the next event, Eph Jordan broke the New England record in the 500 free, hitting the wall at 4:38.72. Teammates Snyder, Dehmel and co-captain Michael O'Malley '89 took second, fourth and seventh respectively.

Benson took third and Dan Rhode '92 took seventh in the 200 individual medley. Donley also set a record in the 200 free where he defeated second-place Eph Jordan in 1:39.82 and in the 100 free where he defeated third-place Eph Brown.

Brown did manage to win the 50 free in 21.63 with fellow Ephs Davis and Shaw grabbing fifth and eighth respectively. The meet did provide some close, intense races. In the last event on Friday night, Tufts squeaked by the Ephs in the 800 free relay in 7:11.14. The Eph relay came in at 7:11.16.

Williams broke the New England record in the 200 free relay with the team of Brown, Shaw, Ivan Sigal '91 and Davis.

In several events, the purple-and-gold dominated the championship heat. In the continued on page 10

Relay record highlight of track competition

by Steve Brody

The men's and women's track teams each competed in ECAC Championship competition this weekend. The women ran at Smith and came away with a sixth-place finish paced by a record breaking relay performance. The men's squad, competing at Bates, featured only five team members due to injuries but still managed to score 15 points with strong efforts by those team members who made the trip to Maine.

Relays provide excitement. The women's 4x800 meter relay team set a school record for the second consecutive week, and this time got a win in the process. Jen Morris '89 ran the lead-off leg, passing to freshman Cherie Macaulay who put the Ephs in third place after the first half of the race. Senior Christie Dempsey's leg moved the team into second before the final handoff to anchor Anne Platt '91. Platt made up ground between herself and the race leader, then shifted into high gear on the final straightaway to pass her opponent and capture the win. Her 2:19 leg made the Ephs final time 9:24.43, eclipsing the previous record by six seconds.

The men also found themselves in an continued on page 10

Men's hoops whips Mules 86-82 in ECAC after loss to Lord Jeffs

by Alex Rachimiel

After Amherst had beaten the Ephs for the second time this season, both Little Three rivals pulled off upsets in their respective opening round games of the ECAC Division III tournament. The seventh-seeded Ephs upset number two seed Colby 86-82 on the losers' home court, while sixth-seeded Lord Jeffs beat third-seeded Plymouth State by a score of 78-73. The Ephs will play at top-seeded Trinity in the tournament semifinals, while Amherst travels to Rhode Island College. Should Williams defeat Trinity, they will play in the championship game on the road on Saturday.

The Ephs led Colby by seven at halftime, 43-36, but their lead was cut to one when Colby scored 11 straight points over a three minute run, bringing the score to 76-75. A field goal and a pair of free throws by co-captain Bill Melchionni '89 held off the threat, but Colby soon came back to within three at 83-80 on a three-pointer by Mule player Tom

'If [Melchionni] doesn't get to 1,000, we're not going to beat Trinity.'

Dorion. Melchionni then took a long post downcourt to beat the Colby press and make the score 85-80 and put the game away.

Melchionni led the Ephs with 24 points, while junior guard Oarcia Major added 17. Matt Hancock of Colby equaled Melchionni's game-high total with 24 points of his own. Melchionni is now poised to join the elite 1000-point club, as he currently has 999 for his career at Williams. "If he doesn't get to 1,000," said assistant coach David Paulsen, "we're not going to beat Trinity."

Ephs lose to rival Amherst. On Thursday night at Amherst, the Ephs closed out the regular season with a 70-63 loss to the Lord Jeffs, which dropped their final record to 15-7. The game marked Amherst's first home-and-away sweep of Williams since 1983. On January 21 at Chandler, Lord Jeff forward Yram Groff, who had a game-

Marcus

Oarcia Major '90 puts the ball up for the Ephs in last Thursday's game against Amherst at LeFrak Gymnasium. Williams lost 70-63 to the Lord Jeffs but won their first round ECAC playoff game against Colby, sending them to the semifinals.

In Thursday's game during the first half, Williams shot only 30 percent from the field, and Amherst jumped out to a 33-30 halftime lead. The Lord Jeffs came out of the locker room hot, and extended their lead to 42-34 two minutes into the second half. But the Ephs scored ten of the next twelve points and tied it up at 44 apiece on a basket by Melchionni with 12:50 left on the clock. At that point, Amherst took the lead

Olympic skaters perform at Williams

Bay State skating is held at Chapman Rink

by Marian Nafay

Last Saturday night, Williams' Lansing Chapman Rink was filled with the screams of young skaters. The objects of their adoration: 1984 Olympic Silver Medalists Kitty and Peter Carruthers and 1988 Olympic team member Paul Wylie. The skaters were headline performers for the "Evening of Massachusetts Stars" exhibition, a non-competitive segment of the Bay State Winter Games.

Wylie, clad from head to foot in purple, performed first. His near-flawless performance included several strong, high jumps and garnered a standing ovation from the over 2,000 people who attended the exhibition. A junior at Harvard, Wylie placed 10th in the 1988 Winter Olympics at Calgary in the men's competition. He is currently training for the 1992 Olympics, to be held in Albertville, France.

Wylie's near flawless performance garnered a standing ovation from the over 2,000 who attended the exhibition.

The Carruthers performed after Wylie as the grand finale of the exhibition. The pair dazzled the audience with their difficult maneuvers. The Carruthers also received a standing ovation from the crowd and performed an encore. Originally from Burlington, Massachusetts, the pair competed in the 1980 Olympics and the 1984 Olympics (where they won the silver medal), and won four straight U.S. Nationals (1981-1984) before going professional. They are currently a part of the Ice Capades.

Other performers in the exhibition, who skated before Wylie and the Carruthers, included New England cham-

Thomas

1984 Olympic Silver Medalists Kitty and Peter Carruthers performed last Saturday night in Lansing Chapman Rink. They were part of the "Evening of Massachusetts Stars," an exhibition set up for the Bay State Winter Games.

ions in the intermediate, novice, novice pairs, novice dance, and junior categories and the Bay State Games champions in the ladies freestyle eight, junior ladies, precision team, production team, and senior ladies categories. The evening ended with a torchlight ceremony. Wylie and the Carruthers skated two laps around the darkened rink holding a blazing torch with the other exhibition performers in tow. Chapman Rink was also the site of the Bay State Winter Games' figure skating competition, which took place last Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. About 1,200 athletes from all over Massachusetts competed in the Games this year; besides figure skating, the Games included alpine skiing and masters hockey, which took place at Bousquet and in North Adams, respectively.

When the Dust Settles

Seven seniors add squash spirit

by Lewis Fisher

The Williams College men's squash team has had a long tradition of success; this year was no exception. The team won every match they played against Wesleyan and Amherst, was ranked eighth in the country, and won their bracket of the Intercollegiate Squash Association's national tournament.

The team owes a great deal of this success, as well as its lighthearted attitude, to the seven seniors in the top nine. "They gave a tremendous sense of stability to the program, which lent me the freedom to do whatever I wanted. In 15 years of coaching I've never been around a group I enjoyed working with more," first-year coach Paul Assalante said of the seniors.

The senior seven, Captain Lou Fisher, Doug Gilbert, Rob Hallagan, Adam Kimberly, Chris Kilpstein, Kaveh Khosrowshahi, and Seth Packard, are a tight-knit group that has come together from a wide variety of squash experiences.

Only Rob Hallagan and Lou Fisher played varsity squash as Williams freshmen. Both had had experience on the junior squash tournament circuit.

"Although there was more pressure, since you weren't playing for a team in junior squash, I still had a great time with it," said Hallagan. "I didn't enjoy junior squash that much because of geeks like Robby," Fisher added jokingly.

Three of the seven seniors, Olibert, Kimberly and Khosrowshahi, picked up squash in its traditional American home, the prep school. Common to their experiences was a lack of good coaches. Kimberly claims that his coach "knew nothing except how to motivate," while Olibert says his coach "was strictly a clipboard coach who told me what a rail and a crosstown were."

Gilbert, who only played one year at Westminster, quickly overcame his inexperience with raw athleticism and was soon teaching others the game.

"My most important lesson was when Doug Olibert taught me how to hold the racket properly. I was holding it like a tennis racket," Khosrowshahi stated.

Geometric fascination. Adam Kimberly, whose father graduated from Williams in 1956 and also played squash here, took up the game "because [he] thought it was the best way for a short, scrawny kid to attract women." "Clearly, he was wrong," said Kilpstein.

Thomas

Senior members of the men's squash team take time to pose for a photo. Standing, from left to right, are Rob Hallagan, Chris Kilpstein, Kaveh Khosrowshahi, Lewis Fisher; kneeling, left to right, are Seth Packard and Adam Kimberly. Missing is Doug Gilbert.

Kilpstein himself never played competitively before college. He started playing for fun with his brother, who holds the #4 spot on the Cornell team. "It looked more fun than tennis and I enjoyed being the only one in my high school to play," he said, explaining why he took up squash as a hobby.

More cerebral than Kimberly or Kilpstein, Seth Packard from St. Catharines, Ontario started playing squash because he "was fascinated with the way pool balls ricocheted on the table and found the same geometric fascination with squash."

All seven players feel that they have improved dramatically while at Williams thanks to four years of excellent coaching. They all agree that former coach Sean Sioane created the technical foundation that current first-year coach Assalante has built on.

"I knew things would be different from Sean which could make things rocky, but the seniors pulled us through," commented Assalante. One rocky spot was Assalante's first interaction with Seth Packard; they did not view squash eye to eye.

"Seth told me he viewed squash as an artistic experience," said Assalante. He replied to Packard, "Fine, hit an artistic winner."

Sticking it to Amherst

All of the seniors agreed that the opportunity to play a Division I sport and represent Williams nationally was an exciting experience. "Playing for Williams was my motivation," stated Kimberly, "not just playing for myself."

The seven seniors' spirit is the legacy that they will leave behind to the Williams squash program.

Divs I, II bear brunt of oversized classes

by Helen Matthews

Statistics from the Registrar's Office confirm what many students have felt for a long time: that upper-level classes in Divisions I and II are larger than their counterparts in Division III. But the factors that create such a problem also make a solution elusive.

Twenty-six percent, or 95 sections, of all classes in the total college offerings have enrollments ranging from 25 to over 100, according to statistics from the Registrar's office. Of those sections, 44, or 46 percent, are in upper-level (200+) courses in Divisions I and II.

According to professors and students interviewed, such classes are large for two reasons: fewer prerequisites required for them and the popularity of some of the courses and the professors who teach them.

For the most part, courses on all levels in Divisions I and II have fewer prerequisites than classes in Division III. This is the result of a trend for non-scientific disciplines to move away from rigidly structured curricula, with constraining prerequisites towards more flexible programs with less stringent course requirements.

This has two consequences, according to students. Upper-level classes in Divisions I and II often are large and tend to have a wide range of experience in the subject matter. There is concern on the part of many students that the focus of these classes is being diluted with an increased use of the lecture format over discussion.

Thomas

According to statistics from the Registrar's office, 46 percent of all classes with over 25 students are upper-level sections in Divisions I and II. Professors and students say that popularity of courses and few prerequisites are to blame. This class is English 307, Arthurian Literature.

Hugh Patterson '91 said that in Religion 209, The Sage, The Way and Zen, "The focus was unclear because when you try to make a discussion class out of a large class just one or two people end up talking and new ideas don't get examined."

Profs and teaching

As class size increases, so does the difficulty of teaching the course effectively, according to Assistant Professor of History Brian Duchin. "For me, the place where it becomes problematic is where it gets over 20. When you get into the range of 20-25, the effectiveness where you can teach by the discussion method erodes. Above 30 it becomes very difficult," he said.

However, Professor of Political Science Raymond Baker said that the idea that small classes are inherently better than larger ones is false. "It's an ideology that we developed to distinguish ourselves from the universities." He added that there is no way to determine, just on the basis of course size, whether a course will go well or not.

Amy Thrasher '91 agreed. "My psychology class [Psychology 201, Experimentation and Statistics] is really big. But it's handled very well. We have three teaching assistants, which helps. If you have a highly organized professor big classes can work out well."

The mixing of students of various years and experience also has its good and bad sides. Professor of History Charles Dew,

continued on page 7

Room draw rule change draws angry response

by Robert Weisberg

A change passed by the Mediating and Housing Committees which would modify room draw so that selection is based exclusively on class year -- met with a storm of student protest last week. A student petition has prompted the Housing Committee to reconsider its decision.

A three-page all-campus mailing sent out March 9 entitled "Where are you going to live next year?" told students that "It is important to realize that when swapping a pick, you are swapping only the opportunity to pick a room in another residence area. The order of selection based on class year is unaffected." In past years, students who swapped picks chose according to the year of the student they swapped with.

According to Dane Dudley '89, president of the Housing Committee and a member of the College Council Mediating Committee, the rationale behind the change was to insure upperclassmen, especially seniors, of a good room on campus. "The idea was to protect upperclassmen. If you're a senior who got your fourth or fifth choice for freshman inclusion, you should not be penalized if you can switch into some house where you want to live," he said.

"This decision will result in the ghettoization of the houses, with sophomores in Mission Park and seniors in the row houses and Dodd/Tyler," Cali Osborne '91 contended. The sophomore trend of going to Mission Park for a year, but then trying to move to the houses, will be formalized, she said. Osborne began the petition to overturn the decision.

"In addition, the housing affiliation process will be obsolete because you know you'll get a great pick senior year," Osborne said. "There will be no incentive to affiliate where you really want to live."

Decision not debated

But this was not the only aspect of the decision that caused the petition to circulate. According to Osborne and Perry-Bascom President Evan Driscoll '91, the procedural change was presented to the Housing Committee by the Mediating Committee as a foregone conclusion. In addition, they added, the Mediating Committee, a College Council subcommittee, has no members from the row houses or Dodd/Tyler, the houses most likely to be affected by the change.

"It was biased against the houses not actually involved in the decision. The petition probably wouldn't have started if [the decision] had gone through proper channels -- the interests [of the affected houses] would have been represented," Osborne said.

Driscoll said, "I spoke up at the House-

continued on page 3

ACSR recommends dumping Williams' stock in Caterpillar

by Rajesh Swaminathan

The Advisory Committee on Shareholders' Responsibility voted unanimously last Thursday to recommend that the college sell all currently-owned stock in Caterpillar, Incorporated. Caterpillar is the college's second largest corporate portfolio.

Professor of Political Science MacAlister Brown, acting chairman of the ACSR, said "The decision was made in view of their continuing sales to the South African Coal, Oil and Gas Corporation (SASOL) and to the Electricity Supply Commission (ESCOM) and their unresponsive and curt response to our inquiry concerning their policy."

SASOL and ESCOM are key South African companies, and Caterpillar had been insensitive to Williams' past recommendations concerning its business activity, Brown said.

Two proposals submitted by various Caterpillar shareholders were discussed in the course of the meeting. The first called for the corporation's severance of all ties with South Africa, including licensing, franchising and the sale of parts. The second proposal directed the corporation "to end forthwith the sales of products to [South African] state oil and electrical corporations." The ACSR approved both unanimously.

Vice President for Administration and ACSR Secretary William Reed said that Caterpillar had not been given a high Sullivan rating (a measure of the commitment of corporate multinationals to combating apartheid). Reed cited this as yet another motive for divestment from the company.

"The decision [we reached on the Caterpillar portfolio] follows into our policy of case by case review. For example, last year, we decided to keep several pharmaceutical corporations in South Africa

continued on page 3

Conservatives hope monthly paper will make debut in May

by Sallie Han

Despite the controversy over The Dartmouth Review, the conservative weekly at Dartmouth, Williams will soon have its own conservative journal. The Williams Observer will begin publication this May. Publisher Bob Howie '90 said that the paper will appear either monthly or bi-monthly.

Students, however, should not cringe in anticipation of the Review's caustic style coming to Billville. "We do not wish to mimic the Dartmouth Review," said Alex Shah '92, who will be one of the Observer's editors. He stressed the fact that it was in no way modeled after the Review. "We feel their journalistic style is kind of Weekly World News-ish."

Howie said that there is a definite need on campus for a conservative paper. "I think the college suffers from not having active conservatives. The campus would benefit from another point of view."

Jim Clarke '91, who will serve as a contributing editor to the Observer, said that conservative views are often inadequately addressed or altogether ignored by existing publications such as the Record and the Issue. He added that the Observer would not be infringing upon either paper, but would merely present a different perspective on issues at Williams.

Clarke said he thought that because people are cautious about what they say here, they sometimes stay clear of more controversial issues.

"We want to be provocative without opening ourselves up to vicious attack," he said. "We're not afraid to say what we think, but we know we have to watch what we say on the Williams campus."

According to Howie, the Observer will focus primarily on campus concerns. These issues include what he called the liberal leanings of the political science and economics departments, and the affirmative action policies of the administration. He said he hopes the Observer will bring forth ideas which could result in significant changes.

'We're not afraid to say what we think, but we know we have to watch what we say on the Williams campus.'

"We want to be constructive, not destructive. We don't want to antagonize," he added. "The paper would be hard-hitting but fair. Howie said the paper will also address national issues."

Concerning the Review controversy, Clarke said he thought that the situation at Dartmouth is very different from the atmosphere at Williams. In general, he said, Dartmouth has more hard-line conservatives than Williams.

Review is 'obnoxious'

Howie, who termed the Dartmouth Review "offensive and obnoxious," agreed that the political climate at Williams is very different from that at Dartmouth. "Most of the dialogue here is, with a very few exceptions, rational and calm." He said that he thought students would like to read about another point of view at Williams, although they might not ultimately agree with that opinion.

Although several members of the Garfield Republican Club are involved in the Observer, Howie, who is president of the Garfield Club, said that there was no official connection between the two organizations. Several members of the Observer staff, including Shah, are not members of Garfield.

Shah said that he hopes to eventually find independent funding for the Observer, although they may need to begin with money from the College Council.

"We need College Council support for a while, the first year. And then we might get funding from subscriptions, advertising and alumni [contributions]," he said.

Another possibility, Howie said, was help from the Institute for Educational Affairs, a Washington D.C.-based group which helps fund independent papers of this kind at other schools. The IEA invited representatives from the Observer to attend a conference in Boston on March 3-4. Funding from the IEA is a possibility once the Observer has begun publication.

Thomas

Stealing Security

With college offices beginning to move into the new Hopkins Hall, temporary space for some staff offices is being abandoned. Last week, workmen took away the emptied Security Office in the temporary Hopkins Hall annex. Students can now file party plans and bitch about parking tickets in the basement of Hopkins.

Music review: the Replacements agonize in Don't Tell a Soul.

PAGE 5

Three Williams students make All-American at track championships.

PAGE 9

The Record Insider examines student activism.

The Williams Record

New room draw policy misinformed

Last Thursday, the College Council mediating committee announced a new policy on trading room picks. On the surface, the policy seems innocent enough: people who swap receive their pick according to their class. A senior who trades with a sophomore, for example, picks as a senior, not as a sophomore. Though this may seem the only "fair" approach to take from the point of view of the senior, this new policy and the way it was decided are actually very unfair.

The most serious flaw in the policy is its effect on affiliates of Dodd-Tyler and the Row Houses. Large numbers of sophomores annually trade out of Dodd-Tyler and the Row Houses and into Mission and Greylock. Juniors and seniors, on the other hand, tend to do the opposite.

Because of the new policy, this yearly ritual will result in an increase in the number of people picking as juniors and seniors in Dodd-Tyler and the Row Houses. Affiliates of Dodd-Tyler and the Row Houses will have to compete for seniority with affiliates of other houses. This is very unjust.

With a larger group of juniors and seniors picking than in the past, some senior affiliates will receive the equivalent of last year's junior picks while some junior affiliates will receive sophomore picks. A person who has stuck it out in West sophomore year, for example, could find himself back in West junior year, bumped down by seniors and juniors affiliated with other housing groups. The new policy is biased against the Row Houses and Dodd-Tyler.

Some have supported the new policy because it protects seniors from being bumped or getting lousy picks. However, no one forces anyone to trade picks; juniors and seniors realize that they are taking a risk.

The affiliation process is largely a matter of choice: in choosing to affiliate with a house, students choose the housing type in which they eventually want to have seniority. For those who did not get their first choice in affiliation freshman year, the affiliation transfer process is the way out. If people believe this process is ineffective, fix the transfer process, not the pick-swap process.

Finally, by guaranteeing them seniority, the new trading process may lead to an increase in the number of Juniors and seniors who switch into the Row Houses and Dodd-Tyler — further segregating the housing groups by class and leading to a decline in house unity. In fact, with the new policy, one might as well abolish affiliation; what good is it to affiliate with a house when you don't get seniority in picking there? For these reasons and others, the mediating committee should reverse their decision.

The worst aspect of the decision is that although it primarily hurts affiliates of the Row Houses and Dodd-Tyler, both of these housing types were completely unrepresented on the mediating committee.

The housing committee was not a part of the decision-making process. Housing Committee President Dan Dudley '89, a Prospect affiliate, was the only representative present at the mediating committee meetings, and he did not solicit input from the presidents of the other houses. The specific change was not mentioned in concrete terms to last semester's presidents, and this semester's presidents were simply presented with the change as a fait accompli.

This incident raises important questions. Exactly what is the function of the mediating committee, and why is it making housing committee decisions? If it was meant to make sweeping housing decisions, why aren't houses equally represented on the committee? These are questions that the College Council must answer.

Letters

Be committed, but show compassion

To the Editor:

It saddens me to note that, during this scholastic year, some student activists pursuing worthy goals have resorted to immature and insensitive tactics, including personal attacks.

The most distressing case of this occurred during the College Council elections, when an anonymous note appeared in the Daily Advisor urging students not to vote for candidates who had used non-violence, and thus non-recyclable, paper. When one candidate who fit this description made a public apology and said he hadn't realized the environmental implications, another, nastier, anonymous note appeared, addressed directly to this candidate. Can you imagine how it would feel to be a candidate who was nervous about the election and trying hard to do everything "just right," to see messages telling people not to vote for and attacking you?

It is possible to speak for the principle without speaking against the man. The signs near the napkins in the dining halls and the BGLU's note about colored paper on their Valentines are examples of ways in which to raise public consciousness of ways to avoid waste, without hurting individuals. Activists who really care about the issues and are working to solve problems rather than vent their personal hostilities can use such upbeat messages as these.

Similarly, although less importantly, the people who posted the pink Security signs, instead politely could have called Security to make them aware that colored paper is wasteful, and have reminded the student population of the same fact via a note in the Daily Advisor that said only, "Remember: use white paper. It can be recycled." Students activists need to recall that "you catch more flies with honey," as the saying goes.

Furthermore, on a different issue that was approached similarly, it is much more productive to raise awareness of the hunger problem by events such as the Hunger Clean-Up and Global Food Night which were held this year, or to encourage students to make monetary donations to organizations or even participate in soup kitchens, than it is to call for a student veto of Lobster Night. After all, Food Service works very hard to think of events which are enjoyable "breaks in the routine" for students. Lobster Night is one of these. Food Service is also willing to host Meatless Meals and Global Food Night, so it seems especially unfair to criticize them for what they do not do, though it was another thing to do for the students.

Let us raise consciousness of and fight to solve worldwide problems, but at the same time, let's remember that the world we're fighting for consists of individuals. These individuals deserve our concern for their feelings as surely as they deserve our concern for their environment.

Devra Lee Bellin '91

Peck dedicated to equality of women's sports

To the Editor:

I read with interest your athletics issue on February 14, 1989. It is well-written and informative. I am concerned, however, that you are unfairly criticizing Athletic Director Bob Peck for "bias against women's sports."

No individual in the Williams College family has been more directly and more completely involved in the elevation of women's athletics to equality than Bob Peck. He is well known in New England and, in fact, nationally, for having developed women's sports at Williams College from their inception to their present equality with men's athletics.

Unfortunately, you have taken two or three incidents and used these to suggest a "bias" which does not exist. I know Bob Peck well, and there is no person at Williams College more dedicated to affirmative action, equality in men's/women's athletics, and dedication to team and individual sport.

Kurt Weneke, Jr., M.D.

Gotta love those Swedish wool socks

Charley Rardin '91 examines the finest apparel and other paraphernalia the world has to offer, displayed at the Army/Navy sale in Baxter Lounge last Monday and Tuesday. Sources say Rardin put away the Navajo satchel and settled for a couple of bandanas instead.

ACSR wants to cut 2nd-largest portfolio

continued from page 1

because they benefited the black population. This is the other side of the coin; we don't often recommend to sell our stock, but Caterpillar [actively] supports many strategic industries and we didn't see any point in going on," Reed said. "[The divestment] indicates the seriousness with which we take the behavior of corporations in South Africa. Caterpillar is a substantial part of our portfolio, but I don't think that selling one stock will have a negative effect on Williams. I hope that it will have a positive effect on our efforts to combat apartheid," Brown said.

"Disinvestment advocacy" While this ACSR decision may come as a surprise to some, it is in line with the normal ACSR policy, which Reed defined as "disinvestment advocacy."

"When there is a proxy vote asking the corporation to divest from South Africa we usually approve, but we review these on a strict case by case basis," Reed said. He added that college policy has evolved over the years. "Last January, we decided to extend our divestment advocacy to include non-equity ties, where a corporation is not [supposed] to market, or [allow] marketing or licensing of its products."

In addition to the Caterpillar issue, the ACSR dealt with a number of other proposals. The committee voted against a proposal sponsored by Boise Cascade

Bryan Jennings '89, Professor of Economics Paul Clarke and Professor of Political Science MacAlister Brown confer during a recent Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility meeting.

Other proposals concerning capital flight, corporate non-partisanship and shareholders' pre-emptive rights were also discussed in the meeting.

The committee approved a proposal submitted by J.P. Morgan shareholders that called for the prevention of capital flight by wealthy foreign citizens who unlawfully transferred funds from their countries to U.S. banks. The committee unanimously approved a

J.P. Morgan proposal that called for corporate political nonpartisanship; it was intended to prevent the coercion of employees into contributing to political action committees for a political party they do not support.

"Companies often ask their employees to contribute to political action committees that support one political party. The proposal gives the employee the choice of who to support," Reed said.

In Other Ivory Towers

Library at Penn may be hazardous to health Library users at UPenn have begun to think twice before relaxing and taking a deep breath. Students and researchers who spend a lot of their time in the Biomedical Library are being plagued by respiratory ailments, headaches, flu symptoms, and chronic illnesses. They say that chemical odors and noxious fumes are circulated through the building's decaying ventilation system, and claim that the University has been negligent in addressing this problem. Environmental Health and Safety Director Matthew Finocane denies that there is a health hazard, but others disagree. "I had pneumonia, bronchitis and asthma all within a short period of time in 1986. There is definitely a problem," Library Assistant Lorie O'Malley said.

Hox at Wesleyan strains student-President relations The 60 to 70 students who showed up for a 4:00 cocktail party on February 27 at the house of Wesleyan President William Chace were shocked to discover that their invitations had been a hoax perpetrated by an unknown Wesleyan student. "We got shut out and left after a few curses," one student said. "We're not going to invite Bill [Chace] to our next party." The time of the bogus cocktail party coincided with a reception Chace was giving for the school's Resident Advisors and Head Residents. "Pranks are pranks," Chace said, "but I really do feel people's feelings were hurt... They had prepared for [the party]." He added that the humor of the prank escaped him.

Dartmouth assembly won't condemn Review The Student Assembly voted 16 to 15 against endorsing a statement condemning The Dartmouth Review. "The Student Assembly has decided not to make a statement," Student Assembly President Scott Sims '89 said. "A conservative journal has a place on the Dartmouth campus [however] The Dartmouth Review should exercise more common decency in its actions." Eric Schwartz '91 agreed. "If we publish a statement condemning the Review, we'll alienate and divide the student body. The Student Assembly will lose its support and legitimacy among the student body."

Dudley said that, before the petition was circulated, he was never aware of

MassMoCA statements run into trouble

by Sallie Hlan

A site study submitted by Sprague Electric, the company which has held the proposed MassMoCA site in North Adams, has run into problems with the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

According to Fred Windover, Vice President and General Counsel for Sprague Electric, the problems are differences of opinion and judgment calls. The DEQE is asking for additional clarifying information from Sprague.

The site study, written by Sprague consultants and outside professionals, contained a history of the Sprague Electric plant, a study of what kinds of chemicals had been used at the plant and information on when and for how long those chemicals had been used. The report also contained studies on possible environmental issues and proposals for a system to test these issues. In the event that testing did detect problems, the report proposed strategies for clean-up or remedy. Windover said it is a standard procedure to produce and submit such a report.

"It's not as if the state said, 'Oh my God, there's something wrong out there, please study it.' We studied it voluntarily," he said.

Kevin Sheehan, who is in charge of the western region of Massachusetts for DEQE, said that they were awaiting additional investigation and information from Sprague. He added that collecting this type of information was an ongoing process and that there was nothing abnormal or unusual about Sprague's report.

The regulations on this type of report, Windover said, were not very clear. "It's been recommended that anyone not end in more things until [the DEQE gets] their regulations straightened out," he said.

"We always knew that there were issues to be dealt with and that Sprague would have to deal with them, but it's not affecting us as in stopping our work," MassMoCA spokesman Rob Freeman said. He said that while the DEQE report was of considerable interest to MassMoCA, it was not a real problem. But, he added, it was fair to say that it might become one.

New room draw rule disputed by students

continued from page 1

ing Committee meeting [last Tuesday], and said how I was against the change and what it would mean to the houses. I was told that this is the way it's going to be."

He added that he received no support at the meeting, but that Tyler president Amy Heald '89, who he said supported the petition, was not present.

He emphasized that the petition was not representative of a narrow group of students. "It's not just a sophomore, row house point of view — there's been a lot of sympathy from students in Greylock, the Berkshire Quad, and from seniors, who have nothing to gain overturning the decision."

Dudley said that, before the petition was circulated, he was never aware of the lack of representation on the Mediating Committee. "That's a point that needs to be considered from now on. That could have influenced whatever decision was made."

Dudley disagrees with the contention that the room draw change was unfair. "What's being missed is that you're lucky to be in the house you wanted most anyway. It doesn't seem fair to me that people are saying, 'We own this house,' and excluding others from coming in," he said.

Dudley added that ghettoization will not occur, saying that there was still a variety of preferences with people of different classes. Also, he said, "There is leeway for house presidents to alter the rules as they want." For instance, if houses wanted people with previous residency to have preference over swappers, as long as the overall draw was

"There will be no incentive to affiliate where you really want to live."

strictly by class, that could be done. Such rules, he noted, still must be approved by the Dean's Office and the Housing Office.

"We want houses to maintain the rules; we don't want to see people creating rules that are restrictive," Dudley said, adding that a major goal of both the Mediating and Housing Committees was to get room draw rules for individual houses written down and formalized. "This has never been done before. People need to be aware of the rules for their house before room draw begins," he said.

Dudley, Assistant Dean Andrew Hernandez and Director of Housing Tom McElroy met with Driscoll and Heald yesterday to discuss the issue and the petition. The petition was to be presented to the Housing Committee meeting this afternoon. Dudley said that he hoped a final decision would be reached at the meeting.

21 Night, but little else, earning big $$ for Log

by Justin Smith

In the eleventh hour of the Blankenship/Keish Administration, College Council Treasurer MaryEllen Sullivan '89 submitted a new proposal for the use of the Log. The Council passed Sullivan's proposal, which called for the continuation of 21 Nights, part of a two-month council-sponsored experiment. According to Sullivan, 21 Nights have made a significant contribution to the revitalization of the Log. "21 Nights were extremely popular. We're going to maintain 21 Nights," Sullivan said.

Roughly 150 to 175 students attended the Log on the three trial 21 Nights and the Log collected gross receipts of over $500 each night, according to Sullivan. These receipts enabled the Log to generate a slight net profit on those evenings.

Friday entertainment evenings, however, were not as successful. Although the Log was filled to capacity some nights, bar receipts never exceeded $20, falling far short of the minimum overhead cost of $75. Unfortunately, profits from 21 Nights were not adequate to compensate for the loss on Friday entertainment nights.

Despite the limited success of Friday entertainment nights, Sullivan recommended that 21 Nights be scheduled on a weekly rather than bi-weekly basis after Spring Break, citing an increase in the number of 21-year-old juniors as the year progresses. Friday entertainment nights will be continued on a bi-weekly basis.

Final Pooh proposal Council President Trace Blankenship '89 presented the final proposed plan for the purchase of the Pooh Perplex inventory by Albion books, and the College Council voted to accept the plan. As before, Albion will subsidize the alphabetization of the Pooh's inventory up to a student-labor cost of $1000. Albion is underwriting the inventory labor costs in order to facilitate student reclamation of books and as an act of good faith. However, the two-week time during which students may reclaim their books has been postponed until the last two weeks of April. Any books that are not claimed by students will revert unencumbered to the ownership of the Pooh and be sold to Albion. Recent graduates will be notified of their right to claim books by a certain, unspecified date. The books will be held in reserve until the alumni reclamation date expires.

'21 Nights were extremely popular. We're going to maintain 21 Nights.'

In addition, $5,000 will be held in escrow as protection for any liability that might be held against Albion. Jim Murphy, owner of Albion books, has asked the Council to present him a document releasing Albion of any liability regarding the inventory once the final purchase is made.

A public hearing was scheduled for Wednesday, March 8th, during which students had the opportunity to address their concerns regarding the inventory transfer and the dissolution of the Pooh Perplex to council officers and the owners of the Pooh Perplex. No students attended the hearing and it was subsequently cancelled.

Events Calendar

Tonight

8 p.m. Wilma Mankiller, the first female to be elected Principal Chief of the Cherokee Nation, will talk on "The Changing Role of American Indian Women." Room 231, Lawrence Hall.

8 p.m. "The United States' Stake in the Global Environment" will be the topic of a lecture by Dr. Norman Myers, Senior Fellow for World Wildlife Fund International. Room 111, Thompson Bldg.

8:30 p.m. The Fellows from the Center for Development Economics will present "From the Other Side: Issues in International Relations from Our Perspectives," in Stetson Faculty Lounge.

Wednesday

7 p.m. Neville Dubow, from the Michaelis School of Fine Arts, University of Cape Town, South Africa, will lecture on "Art and Protest: New Voices in South African Art." Brooks Rogers.

Thursday

4 p.m. Professor of Physics, Emeritus, David Park, will present "The Troublesome Question of How Things Look." Room 214, Thompson Physics.

4:30 p.m. Associate Professor of History Thomas Spear will speak on "Mountain Farmers: Agrarian Change in Tanzania." Brooks Rogers.

7:30 p.m. Karl Kocichin, of the Nicaragua Network, will speak about environmental works in that country. A film and slides will also be presented. Room 231, Lawrence Hall.

compiled from the Weekly Calendar

If you could be any animal, what would you be?

Photos and interviews (and question) by Jay Steinman

"I'd be one of the fat squirrels that you see on campus." —Joel Foley '91

"I think I'd probably like to try being a manta ray for a while." —John Nelson '89

"I would be a golden retriever at Williams because you'd fit in really well and people would love you." —Meg Boyle '89

"I want to be a gnu because they're on Sesame Street." —Heidi Beebe '91

"Not a worm. Maybe a penguin. I don't know why." —Keni Wosepka '92

"An owl." —Darren MacFarland '91

Typing Service by published writer. Limited editing available. Typed or handwritten MS. Word processing disk storage. From $1.50/page. Tel. 458-2614

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond" Williams '58

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, by proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best. We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and SHOE and BOOT REPAIR.

(413) 458-4321
66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
01267

Anniversary of compassion

Bill Hoch '89, founder and director of the Berkshire Food Project, talks to coordinator Pam Fillion at the Project's second anniversary dinner last Friday. Fillion will be leaving later this month.

CCRR holds open house to describe progress

by Peter Kilvans

After holding only closed meetings this year in order to stimulate freer discussions, the Campus Commission on Race Relations went public last Tuesday, holding an open meeting to report on its activities and answer student questions concerning minority representation in the faculty and overall treatment of minorities at Williams.

"There is probably a sense that the commission isn't doing much," said Professor of History Charles Dew, chair of the CCRR. He reassured the audience, however, that the CCRR had been meeting every week to act as a consulting and lobbying group for minorities on campus.

Luana Kenyatta '92 told the CCRR that students were concerned about the opportunities for minority faculty members here. Assistant to the President for Affirmative Action Nancy McIntire, a CCRR member, said that there have been two new minority appointments in the Political Science department, a tenure appointment and a junior entry in Afro-American Politics, and a new minority professor in the Economics department.

McIntire also said that the administration had filled a Latin American studies position and had arranged to bring several visiting minority professors to campus next year. She added, however, that the college did not consider the presence of visiting professors a substitute for the hiring of full-time minority faculty.

Dew explained that it is very difficult to attract minority faculty to a school such as Williams. He said that Williams is an isolated campus without a significant minority community in the area, and that there is very stiff competition among schools to hire the small number of minority students who earn Ph.D.s. Professor of English Peter Berek, another member of the CCRR, addressed a question concerning the fact that there are currently no minority members on the Committee on Appointments and Promotions. Berek said that one possible solution would be to create a new seat on the CAP, but that nothing was definite yet because the CCRR had just begun to research that question.

Members of the Campus Commission on Race Relations discuss their role at Williams and their activities for the year at an open meeting last Tuesday.

"All one can say about this is that something was proposed about a month ago," Berek said. "It may get resolved by the end of this year or early next year." Assistant Dean of the College Roberto Hill said that some fundamental changes were needed in the treatment of minorities at Williams. "There is a need for more institutional support...and to celebrate more of their own cultures on campus so that the burden doesn't fall on them."

CCRR role in new center One means of celebrating non-Western cultures on campus may come about through the construction of the Multicultural Center. According to Dew, the CCRR has played an important advisory role in the new center. Dew stressed the need to hire a good director who would make the center a success. The commission has also met with various groups, including members of the Junior Advisor selection committee and even representatives of other colleges, to discuss ways to facilitate debate on minority issues and increasing recruitment of minority students. "The CCRR is trying to plug in in ways that will have ongoing influence," Dew said at the meeting. He added that the commission wanted to make fundamental institutional changes in the system rather than mere band-aid remedies.

'Tis Fun That You'll Be Bringin'...

when you send a Hallmark St. Patrick's Day card.

McClelland's

Spring Break Sale

For those who must bring a gift home:

Buy one Silk Batik, Berkshire Landscape, Silver Bangle, Pair of Earrings, Mohair Sweater or Scarf, Country Antique, MMA Museum Print, etc. Get the second at 25% off with College I.D.

Elysian Fields Gallery

Eph's Alley (off Spring Street) Williamstown, Mass (413) 458-4707

Arts

Fishkill and Eggbert give thumbs up to two plays

by Caitlin Osborne and Chris Green

Fishkill: The first of the contemporary works we saw was entitled "27 Wagons Full of Cotton," written by Tennessee Williams. The story is of a man, Jake (Jason Gull '91), who burns down another man's cotton gin in order to gain business.

The other man, Silva (Fausto Espinosa '89), finds out about the deed and in return rapes and beats Jake's wife Flora (Katie Firth '92). A cheery little piece to be sure. So, what were your thoughts on the play?

The way Fausto spoke and moved reminded me of a sleek and poisonous snake.

Eggbert: I thought that both Firth and Gull gave solid performances. Firth was believable through the wide range of emotions she was required to play. Her hysteria and fear of both the men were her strong suit. However, when she was not being victimized, she was less credible. Gull, though, he had perhaps the easiest part — an ignorant chauvinistic southern man — played well off of Firth.

Espinosa was the weakest of the three. I couldn't understand why Flora was so frightened of Silva. He struck me as more of an annoyance than a threat. Fish: Now, I have to disagree with you there. Flora's interaction with Silva was much more believable than with Jake. The way Fausto spoke and moved reminded me of a sleek and poisonous snake. Gull was a stereotype, although a very frightening one.

Egg: I was very much impressed with the way in which each of them was frightened. Jake was scary simply because he was powerful, yet completely ignorant of the world around him. Silva, on the other hand, was terrifying because he knew precisely what he was doing and was fully aware that he was torturing Flora.

Fish: Firth's performance, I agree, was strong. However, I felt that she lacked proper direction. I was frustrated with her performance because she had more potential for a range of acting than was utilized. She had one hysteria, one fear, one nervousness. Some of them were better than others; all worked adequately. But why didn't director James Rosenberg allow her more?

Egg: True, perhaps those emotions could have used a bit more variety, but what she had, especially hysteria, were extremely impressive. Fish: In general, the performances were quite solid. I was happy to see a script which gave the actors so much to work with, and, while they utilized most of what they were given, I wish that they had pushed it even more. The most frightening part of the play is that those attitudes are still present in the South, and I didn't get a sense that the actors realized this.

Egg: "27 Wagons Full of Cotton," works well as a character play, but doesn't quite live up to the social statement that it might have been. Overall, though, solid performances and an excellent script make it well worthwhile. Thumbs up.

Fish: Thumbs up.

Egg: The second offering, Vaneek Havel's "Protest," is the story of a reunion between two old friends Stanek and Vaneek, played by Stuart Gutman, '90, and Rob Handel '90 respectively. In their youth, both characters were dissident writers in the totalitarian country in which they live. As they play opens, Vaneek, still a dissident, meets Stanek, who has "sold out" to the establishment after being released from prison. The play is the polite conversation of these two friends, now grown apart, discussing a protest to be written against the imprisonment of another dissident — the friend of Vaneek and the love of Stanek's daughter.

Fish: Overall, I was impressed, especially with the acting. Both Gutman and Handel were excellent; it's hard to mention one without mentioning the other. The contrast between the two was amazing. I was transfixed.

Egg: Of the two actors, who were both equally good, I felt that Gutman hid the harder part, not because it was any more complex, but simply because he had more to say. Handel plays Vaneek in a very guarded manner. Of course, I think it would be wrong to play it any other way, but it's not as difficult to play a reticent character.

Fish: Gutman was especially strong when carrying the conversation, dropping important questions into the middle of pointless small talk. I really got a good sense of what was going on in his mind. Handel's guardedness worked well, and the audience seemed to accept it, but had he let his character's emotions poke through the exterior a little more often, we would have felt even more strongly for him.

Egg: I agree, but Vaneek is better underplayed than overplayed. But that leads to the question of whether Handel's guardedness was his own choice or the choice of director Arden Fingerhut.

Fish: I think that the direction was done well. In a play that hinges on ironic politeness, the blocking was polite as well. Fingerhut's light touch highlights the play's only real problem, which lies in the script. The plot builds to the climax of whether or not Stanek will set aside his hypocrisy and join his friend's protest. And, surprisingly, the problem is sidestepped with a Deus ex machina. I was taken aback because of the author's own position, which closely mirrors that of his characters. He, of all people must know that things don't resolve themselves that easily.

Egg: The ending was quite obviously a conscious choice on Havel's part. His happy ending isn't logical, but he wants his characters to have it both ways.

Fish: Or perhaps Vaneek had a deeper intention. Maybe the lack of a realistic ending is his way of showing that the very problem that he is addressing has no real end in sight either. But this is all conjecture. The real subject here is what we think of this play. I'd give it a big thumbs up.

Egg: Ditto for me. A winner. Thumbs up.

Fish: Well, our night rounded up with a continued on page 8

Jake (Jason Gull '91) tortures Flora (Katie Firth '92) in the one act play "27 Wagons Full of Cotton," one in a series of contemporary works.

was fully aware that he was torturing Flora.

Fish: Firth's performance, I agree, was strong. However, I felt that she lacked proper direction. I was frustrated with her performance because she had more potential for a range of acting than was utilized. She had one hysteria, one fear, one nervousness. Some of them were better than others; all worked adequately. But why didn't director James Rosenberg allow her more?

Egg: True, perhaps those emotions could have used a bit more variety, but what she had, especially hysteria, were extremely impressive. Fish: In general, the performances were quite solid. I was happy to see a script which gave the actors so much to work with, and, while they utilized most of what they were given, I wish that they had pushed it even more. The most frightening part of the play is that those attitudes are still present in the South, and I didn't get a sense that the actors realized this.

Egg: "27 Wagons Full of Cotton," works well as a character play, but doesn't quite live up to the social statement that it might have been. Overall, though, solid performances and an excellent script make it well worthwhile. Thumbs up.

Fish: Thumbs up.

Egg: The second offering, Vaneek Havel's "Protest," is the story of a reunion between two old friends Stanek and Vaneek, played by Stuart Gutman, '90, and Rob Handel '90 respectively. In their youth, both characters were dissident writers in the totalitarian country in which they live. As they play opens, Vaneek, still a dissident, meets Stanek, who has "sold out" to the establishment after being released from prison. The play is the polite conversation of these two friends, now grown apart, discussing a protest to be written against the imprisonment of another dissident — the friend of Vaneek and the love of Stanek's daughter.

Fish: Overall, I was impressed, especially with the acting. Both Gutman and Handel were excellent; it's hard to mention one without mentioning the other. The contrast between the two was amazing. I was transfixed.

Egg: Of the two actors, who were both equally good, I felt that Gutman hid the harder part, not because it was any more complex, but simply because he had more to say. Handel plays Vaneek in a very guarded manner. Of course, I think it would be wrong to play it any other way, but it's not as difficult to play a reticent character.

Fish: Gutman was especially strong when carrying the conversation, dropping important questions into the middle of pointless small talk. I really got a good sense of what was going on in his mind. Handel's guardedness worked well, and the audience seemed to accept it, but had he let his character's emotions poke through the exterior a little more often, we would have felt even more strongly for him.

Egg: I agree, but Vaneek is better underplayed than overplayed. But that leads to the question of whether Handel's guardedness was his own choice or the choice of director Arden Fingerhut.

Fish: I think that the direction was done well. In a play that hinges on ironic politeness, the blocking was polite as well. Fingerhut's light touch highlights the play's only real problem, which lies in the script. The plot builds to the climax of whether or not Stanek will set aside his hypocrisy and join his friend's protest. And, surprisingly, the problem is sidestepped with a Deus ex machina. I was taken aback because of the author's own position, which closely mirrors that of his characters. He, of all people must know that things don't resolve themselves that easily.

Egg: The ending was quite obviously a conscious choice on Havel's part. His happy ending isn't logical, but he wants his characters to have it both ways.

Fish: Or perhaps Vaneek had a deeper intention. Maybe the lack of a realistic ending is his way of showing that the very problem that he is addressing has no real end in sight either. But this is all conjecture. The real subject here is what we think of this play. I'd give it a big thumbs up.

Egg: Ditto for me. A winner. Thumbs up.

Fish: Well, our night rounded up with a continued on page 8

Record Review

The Replacements: Don't Tell A Soul

by John Cort and Jim McDermott

If Paul Westerberg and his friends weren't the Replacements and worked in a factory instead, would they show up drunk and tell the boss to go to hell? Without the band and the outlet for career destruction and aimlessness that it provides, would the Replacements be throwing back Buds in the Torchlight Bar and Lounge, waiting for the last call and hoping it would never come? In rock moment that most every rock band has experienced. It also expresses the band's over-present feeling that everything that does will be judged, and that every action taken is a risk — failure is always a possibility. "In my waked-up hair and my painted shoes/ Got an offer you might refuse." When Westerberg sings "Too late to turn back/ Here we go" he sounds a combined feeling of exhilaration at finally taking the plunge and terror at losing control.

On "Rock 'n' Roll Ghost," a song that spring from uncertainty and self-doubt. "Back to Black" expresses the songwriter's frustration in wanting something he is unable, or more specifically, lacks the self-confidence, to reach. "Back to back/ how am I gonna hold you?" he asks his antagonist. It's not quite the same as "you shook me all night long" or even, "though we lay close together, we're miles apart inside." Westerberg's version of love has the ring of truth. Through his voice, a raspy organ for expressing both affection and pain, Guitars rule every song, but the acoustic lead anchors most. Slim Dunlap, the lead guitarist, adds off-balance fills and aggressive chords to the mix. Silson, who has taken to cross-dressing in recent photos and the "I'll Be You" video, throws in his distinctive bass lines when he can. However, it does not seem that he has had to change to accommodate Paul's low-key songs. Chris Mars provides what could otherwise be soft, and turns it all into rock 'n' roll, but of an unusual, sensitive kind.

If any fault can be found on this superb album, it is that the music is sometimes forced into a form from which it seems to want to escape. The Replacements' songs are casual and goofy and sometimes even sloppy enough to not need excessive production. The echoed chorus on "We'll Inherit the Earth" tends to grate, and Westerberg sometimes piles the angst on too heavily, causing his voice to crack unnaturally. The rasp expresses his lack of self-confidence perfectly by itself.

The Replacements have made an album in the power pop tradition: Aggressive rock 'n' roll is balanced with irresistible melodies and intelligent hooks. The ethos of the hardcore era (no compromises, integrity) has always informed each direction the band takes, and the newest step is the most accessible yet, without compromise. Ultimately, the Replacements' music is good not only because of the musical style, but be-

Don't Tell A Soul is the Replacements' fifth album.

Don't Tell A Soul is the Replacements' fifth album.

Westberg has claimed brings tears to his eyes, nothing is so frightening as failing and fading away — and nothing so romantic. "We'll Inherit the Earth" features an unapologetic affirmation of the meek's right to all it has been denied, with one qualification: even if Westerberg and his fellow doobers can have the Earth, they don't want it. The strong have realized too late whose planet it was always been. "Achilles to Be" is, surprisingly, the story of a misunderstood soul. "Thought about, not understood/ She's achin' to be" sings Westerberg from the station of one who can relate.

Even Westerberg's love life does not

Westerberg brings the listener to the situation and claims him. We cannot doubt that he means it. "I'll be you," the album's first single and a hit of sorts, accounts the multitude of pangs in a relationship-wide malaise and suggests the perfect solution: "You be me for a while/ And I'll be you."

In all this introspection, there is still more to endure and elude than depress. The Replacements approach even serious pain upside down. The lyrics are unfailingly clever, the arrangements notoriously unconventional, and there's that sense of goofiness that characterizes every Replacements album.

There's a sense of goofiness that characterizes every Replacements album.

cause of the way Westerberg tells his truth, sings what he feels.

The Replacements have incredibly loyal fans, mostly because that part of everyone that is unsure and doubting can relate to the band's message. When Westerberg sings "We ain't much to look at/ So close your eyes here we go," we all know the feeling of being on display, to fail or succeed, or most like Westerberg, to never really know what people think. It's all just a talent show. The Replacements will perform at the Palace in Albany on March 17.

Arts In View

March 15 At 7:00 p.m., Neville E. Dubow of the Michaelis School of Fine Arts, University of Cape Town, South Africa, will give a lecture on "Art and Protest: New Voices in South African Art" in Brooks-Rogers.

March 19 At 3:00 p.m., Sally Shafto, coordinator of the exhibit "Refigured Painting: The German Image 1960-1988," will give a gallery talk at WCMA.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinema I, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179

True Believers 7:05 9:15
Police Academy 6 7:10 9:10
Three Fugitives 7:05 9:15

Images

Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
The Accused March 14 7:00 9:00
Emmanuelle March 15-16 7:00 9:00
Pelle, The Conqueror March 17-23 7:30

North Adams Cinema

Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Dream A Little Dream 7:00
The Burbs 7:10 9:15
Skin Deep 7:10 9:15
Police Academy 6 7:10 9:25
Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure 7:10 9:25

Pittsfield Cinema Center

Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
Dangerous Liaisons, Skin Deep, Cousins, Lean On Me, Mississippi Burning, Heaches: Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30
Rain Man: 6:45 & 9:15
Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure, Three Fugitives, The Burbs, Twins, Police Academy 6: Sun-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:15 & 9:30.

Berkshire Mall Cinema

Rte 8, Lenox, 499-2558
Police Academy 6 1:00 3:20 7:00 9:20
The Burbs 1:10 3:40 7:10 9:40
Beaches 12:45 3:15 6:45 9:15
Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure 1:20 3:50 7:20 9:50
Cousins 1:30 4:00 7:15 9:45
Skin Deep 1:00 3:00 7:00 9:30
Dangerous Liaisons 12:50 3:20 6:50 9:30
Three Fugitives 1:25 3:55 7:25 9:55
Lean On Me 12:55 3:25 6:55 9:25

Subject to change after Thursday

Trio hindered by solitary playing, technical flaws

by Beth Neely

Playing good chamber music can be likened to creating good group portraits in sculpture. In the latter, each figure initially appears to be in a solitary cell of space, but a second look usually reveals the individuals as appendages of a single body which either moves off in unity or presents itself in an immobile but integrated mass. Last Friday evening's Williams Trio concert was hindered by both technical weaknesses and the players' unwillingness to get out of their own solitary cells of sound in order to truly integrate into a single body. Their playing did include some lovely moments, especially in the pieces by Adolphus Hallstock, but these were often preceded by some rather trying introductions.

Besides Hallstock, the program included trios by Mozart and Brahms. The members of the trio are Doris Stevenson, piano; Timothy Baker, violin; and Douglas Moore, cello.

I found myself craving the uninhibited, clear lines of a good singer in the piano part's main theme.

The program opened with a carefully studied version of Mozart's Trio in G Major, K. 496. Clearly each player had prepared his or her part well, but these parts did not mesh with the carefree conversation and ill inherent in Mozart's writing. An example of this was in the development of the first movement, Allegro, when Stevenson and Moore neglected to play up on the gesture of a running line which included the left hand of the piano and the cello. This lack of interaction was intensified by Baker's over involvement in his own part without giving a full ear to the other melodic action around him.

The second movement, Andante, was characterized by a warm tone in the strings which unfortunately was not matched in the piano. I found myself craving the uninhibited, clear lines of a good singer in the piano part's main theme, but the overuse of the sostenuto pedal as well as playing only on the surface of the keys without "sinking in" both had dampening effects. There were no overt signs of connection between players at the cadences (usually eye contact and breathing together do a lot) and the ending was a bit too abrupt for the character of the movement.

The finale, a set of variations, did not "dance," perhaps because everyone was still playing very carefully. Moore demonstrated a nice, compelling tone in the minor variation, but this sound needed to be connected from note to note without stopping in between. Finally, the last variation did gain the lift I was looking for, although the momentum for a completely solid finish was marred by a stumble in the final run in the piano.

The next piece, a trio by Hallstock, was played in honor of the Bolin Centennial. Charles Galus Bolin '89 was the first black graduate of Williams. Hallstock says that his music is "music for men's spirits and not merely for their ears or intellect." Perhaps for this reason and because the Trio conveyed his varying ideas with both drive and lyrical contemplation, the work was greeted by the audience with great enthusiasm. Although the trio was written in 1985, it was neo-Romantic in style — a patchwork quilt of various types of "mood music" (although it was hard for me to determine what the unifying thread was that held it all together).

The first movement, Adagio Lamentoso, was introspective in character with smooth liquid solos in the strings and Stevenson making good use of the deep sonorities in the piano chords. In the second and final movement, Allegro Agitato-Vivace, the players conveyed the great rhythmic drive and syncopations with high energy, although the strings had some intonation problems in some of the solos of the lyrical fragments. The technically difficult ending went off well in a jubilant rush, and it was hard to tell who was more pleased, the trio or the audience.

After intermission, the meaty second half of the program was Brahms Piano Trio No. 1 in B Major, Opus 8. Seeing the piece on the program immediately brought back my "confrontation" and subsequent embracing of it as a pianist at a summer music festival during pre-Williams life. It is truly one of the most spacious and luxurious works Brahms ever wrote, and, as I always told the string players, the pianist really gets the bulk of the responsibility with a ratio of about ten thousand notes to every one the strings have.

The Williams Trio (Douglas Moore, cello; Timothy Baker, violin; Doris Stevenson, piano) played last Friday.

When Brahms rewrote the work the first time in 1891, he wrote, "It will no longer be as wild as before, but whether it will be better..." As for the Williams Trio's interpretation of the work, a bit of "taming" all around would have surely made for a better performance.

The first movement, Allegro con brio was probably the trio's strongest playing of the evening. The ensemble here was much improved, and the players matched their intensities quite well. However, there were some trouble spots around the edges. Stevenson often rushed the tempo, getting too carried away with the triplets. In addition, she needed to work out the execution of the large chords filling the score: they needed more fullness and depth on the bottom and more defined voicing of the melodic line on the top.

The Scherzo, started off by Moore, seemed as if it were rolling down a mountain and barely kept in enough control to be effective. The tempo was just too rushed for Stevenson to execute her part well (even the most rubbery wrists would have had a tough time) and the seraphic and imprecise bowings of the strings added to the general aura of sloppiness. Baker did have a full sweeping tone in the middle section, which Stevenson could have matched better if she would have voiced the top notes of her right hand chords via the "iron pinky" approach.

Overall, the Adagio went more smoothly, but instead of the lush sinking release the movement was designed for, I felt the tension of a withheld breath. The middle section showcased Baker and Moore in a fine duet which was satisfying to listen to.

The initial theme of the final Allegro had a good, comfortable tempo, a nice contrast to the scherzo. It carried the listener along quite well until it ran into the second theme, which had some problems. For one each instrument articulated the theme haphazardly instead of deciding on a uniform execution. For another, the theme propelled each player off into a wild frenzy which included only his or her own sound and tempo, although Moore made repeated attempts to keep a consistent pace. The general lack of control was responsible for some blunders in the piano at the close.

Looking back on the program as a whole, the Mozart could have used a tinge of the abandonment of the Brahms while the Brahms would have benefited by some of the discipline the Mozart offered.

Beyond the Bubble

Tower rejected by Senate

In a 53-47 vote, the Democratic-controlled Senate rejected President Bush's nominee for Secretary of Defense, former Texas Senator John Tower. The vote came after six days of bitter and partisan on-floor debate, that revolved mostly around rumors of Tower's alleged drinking and womanizing. The defeat is considered to be a severe setback for Bush, and his administration is working hard to dislodge the image that his initial momentum has already disappeared. The following day, Bush named popular Wyoming Representative John Chafee to be his new nominee for the Defense post. Chafee is expected to have a much easier time gaining confirmation from the Senate.

North Adams students suspended after demonstration

After hearing that the School Committee is considering laying off up to 15 teachers next year, 36 students from Silvio O. Conte Middle School waved signs and chanted in support of their teachers for about twenty minutes. Those students participating in the protest were suspended for either one or three days, depending on whether or not they had returned to class following the demonstration. The possible layoff is attributed to restrictions in next year's budget, which in turn is a reaction to the financial problems of the state.

Eastern Airlines files for bankruptcy

After a federal judge refused to order striking Eastern Airlines pilots back to work, Eastern filed for bankruptcy protection in order to save money and gain time to persuade their employees to leave the picket lines. The strike began Saturday, March 4, when Eastern machinists struck; the pilots immediately honored their picket line. After almost a week, all flights remain cancelled except for the Boston-New York-Washington shuttle and some Latin American flights. An expanded flight schedule seems unlikely in the near future. Worried Eastern ticket holders are trying to obtain refunds or to exchange their tickets. The bankruptcy is seen as part of a strategy to wear down the striking workers until they agree to return to work.

Wife of Vincennes Commander Barely Escapes Car Bombing
On Friday, the wife of Navy Captain Will Rogers III, commander of the U.S.S. Vincennes, narrowly escaped a pipe bomb explosion that destroyed the van she was driving. Rogers, thinking she had been rear-ended, got out of her car after hearing several pops; moments later the car was blown up. The explosion occurred in La Jolla, California. The FBI suspects that the bombing may be linked to the downing of an Iranian civilian airplane by the Vincennes last July. Compiled from the Berkshire Eagle by Sara Dubow

Problems of large classes not so easy to fix

continued from page 1

chairman of the history department, said, "I don't think that's a problem. Williams students are bright enough to master sophisticated material without a lot of background." Duchin added that, "It can be a factor in how a course goes. It depends almost entirely on the mix of students that you get. On the other hand, it's not uncommon for freshmen to be the brightest students in the class."

Capping courses

Many students believe capping courses may be the answer to the class crowding problem in certain sections, but professors do not necessarily agree. Professor of Chemistry and Chair of the Chemistry Department Lawrence Kaplan said that teachers are reluctant to cap courses to keep the enrollment low because professors want to share their knowledge with as many students as they can.

"There is no college policy about capping courses. On the other hand, there are very potent traditions. It's all very informal. This whole concept that capping courses is un-Williams...this concept of entitlement is new to me," Duchin said.

Professor of English Michael Bell, chairman of the English department, added, "How much restriction of their options would students put up with to guarantee classes of a certain size?"

Departments with large enrollments such as history and English often allow a certain range of courses to have larger enrollments than others to insure that

Bell added that student behavior is another factor causing large upper-level classes in Divisions I and II. He said, "If a course is overcrowded it's because too many students are taking it. Since the student teacher ratio here is very good, then I assume you're not talking about institutional behavior but student behavior. I don't know of anyone who is seminars and tutorials stay small, according to the respective department chairmen. "If you're going to let anything get large, that's where you want to do it [at the 200 level]," Bell said. "We tend to let our 300 level courses rise to the level that students want to take. We section everything else," Dew said.

'Student choice and wanting a uniform class size are obviously in conflict. You can't have a place that forbids large classes and a place where everyone gets what they want.'

will be able to drop a class because of an abstract belief that small classes are better." "Student choice and wanting a uniform class size are obviously in conflict. You can't have a place that forbids large classes and a place where everyone gets what they want," Bell added. Bell said he believes that students are well aware of the potential perils of choosing popular classes. The dissemination of this information is an informal student grapevine, which is formalized last year by a Gringole Society meeting which allowed students to share information about very good or bad classes. According to Duchin, this system creates a core of courses that have a reputation for an exceptional professor and/or interesting and timely subject matter. "There are always professors who are victims of their own success," he said.

These classes are almost immune to the solution of increasing faculty size to lower class crowding, because students take the class for its professor, in which case the other faculty teaching the class would be snubbed, or for its subject matter, in which case all the new sections would be filled to capacity.

Ernest Pascucci '90 a history major, said, "For some reason people seem to elect the more generic history courses—Vietnam, 214 [Modern American History: 1929 to the Present]...People tend to gravitate to them and leave others fairly vacant which is fine by me because I've had some great, intense seminars."

West

Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081

We offer:

- 1) Area's largest fine beer & ale selection
- 2) Hundreds of quality wines
- 3) Unique videos as well as latest releases
- 4) Ambassador, Blue Mt. Arts, Far Side Greeting cards
- 5) Dozens of soft furry creatures from Dakin, Applause, and North American Bears
- 6) Soft drinks, munchies, party supplies
- 7) Great advice on matters large and small
- 8) Courteous, professional service

RICHARD D. SHAFER G. VINCENT COUSBOUR

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267 (413) 468-4888

$60.00 PER HUNDRED remaining letters from home!
Details, send self-addressed, stamped envelope:

Associates
Box 309-1
Colonias, NJ 07067

HARVARD Summer School '89

June 26-August 18

Harvard Summer School offers open enrollment in day and evening courses. The curriculum includes courses that fulfill college degree requirements and programs designed for personal and professional development.

Our international student body has access to Harvard's outstanding libraries, fine museums, well-equipped laboratories, and cultural activities.

We feature a college-level program for secondary school juniors and seniors,* as well as a Dance Center and special programs in Drama, Writing, Ukrainian Studies, and English as a Second Language.

For more information return the coupon below or call (617) 495-2494 (24-hour line). Please allow 3-4 weeks for delivery. (*Admission required)

- ☐ YES, please send a 1989 Harvard Summer School CATALOGUE and/or specific information about the following program:
- ☐ Secondary School Program ☐ English as a Second Language
- ☐ Dance Center ☐ Drama ☐ Writing

Name _____

Address _____

City, State, Zip _____

HARVARD UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL

Dept. 691, 20 Garden Street, Cambridge, MA 02138 USA

How to get through college with money to spare:

1. Buy a Macintosh.

2. Add a peripheral.

3. Get a nice, fat check.

Now through March 31, when you buy selected Macintosh® SE or Macintosh II computers, you'll get a rebate for up to half the suggested retail price of the Apple® peripherals you add on—so you'll save up to $800. Ask for details today where computers are sold on campus.

Apple Pays Half

Computer Center Sales Office
Room 110

© 1989 Apple Computer, Inc. Apple, the Apple logo, and Macintosh are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Certain restrictions apply. All rights reserved. See the Terms and Conditions of the "Apple Pays Half" Program Guidelines, available from your authorized Apple reseller. Offer valid where prohibited by law.

This is all you need to apply for the Card.

With Automatic Approval, it's easier to qualify while you're still in school.

Now getting the Card is easier than ever. For the very first time, students can apply for the American Express® Card over the phone.

Simply call 1-800-942-AMEX. We'll take your application by phone and begin to process it right away. It couldn't be easier.

What's more, because you attend this school full time, you can also take advantage of the Automatic Approval Offer for students. With this offer, you can get the American Express Card right now—without a full-time job or a credit history. But if you have a credit history, it must be unblemished.

It's actually easier for you to qualify for the Card now, while you're still a student, than it ever will be again.

Become a Cardmember. Fly Northwest $99 roundtrip.

As a student Cardmember you will be able to enjoy an extraordinary travel privilege: fly twice for only $99 roundtrip to many of the more than 180 Northwest Airlines cities in the 48 contiguous United States (only one ticket may be used per six-month period).*

And, of course, you'll also enjoy all the other exceptional benefits and personal service you would expect from American Express.

Apply now by calling 1-800-942-AMEX. And then you can really go places—for less.

Apply Now: 1-800-942-AMEX

TRAVEL RELATED SERVICES

An American Express company

*Fare is for roundtrip travel on Northwest Airlines. Tickets must be purchased within 24 hours after making reservations. Fares are non-refundable and no itinerary charges may be made after purchase. Seats at this fare are limited and may not be available when you call. Travel must be completed by certificate expiration date and may not be available between cities to which Northwest does not have direct connections or routings. City fuel tax surcharges not included in fare from Boston ($2.50), Chicago ($5.00) and Florida cities ($2.00). Certain blackout dates and other restrictions may apply. For complete offer details, call 1-800-942-AMEX. Current student Cardmembers automatically receive two $99 vouchers in the mail. © 1989 American Express Travel Related Services Company, Inc.

Curricular reform not helping collegians, experts report

College Press Service

Efforts to reform the nation's schools have been less successful, two unrelated reports released in recent weeks claim.

The Center for Policy Research in Education at Rutgers University, for one, found that while students are required to take more academic courses to graduate, they're still managing to avoid the challenging courses reformers envisioned.

And according to the National Assessment of Educational Progress, students are acquiring basic knowledge but few are learning to use it effectively in thinking and reasoning.

The eight-year-old school reform movement, in other words, seems to be sputtering a little.

Since 1980, 45 states have made it harder for students to graduate from high school. But University of Wisconsin law professor William Clune, who worked on the Rutgers study, found that most of the new courses the states now make students take to graduate are at the basic, general or remedial levels.

While that system may benefit students who would have been left behind in previous years, it has its drawbacks, Clune said.

"Raising the [course load] minimums is the easiest, most conventional thing to do," he said.

To improve education for all students, Clune said, schools need to work on less visible reforms like changing the teaching emphasis from rote drills to thinking skills, for example.

"What's true is the requirements were relatively shallow," Clune said. "The reforms failed in getting students into the most rigorous possible courses. They used course labels — math, science — instead of course content in many instances, and they wanted to go quickly so they went to what they're used to offering these students, which is basic remedial classes."

Can't use new skills

According to the NAEP report, students getting basic skills don't know what to do with them.

"If one views this report as a balance sheet on 20 years of American education, our assets clearly include strengthening students' basic skills and improving minority student performance," according to Archie Lapointe, executive director of the National Report Card, an NAEP project.

"On the liabilities side of the ledger, we find deficits in higher order thinking skills, which mean that large proportions of American students do not appear to be adequately prepared for college work, career mobility and thoughtful citizenship."

Colleges, figuring high school reform would make students better prepared, have raised their admissions standards.

But perhaps in response to the problems outlined in the recent reports, at least one — Iowa State — is considering lowering admissions standards. ISU officials say incoming freshmen who aren't adequately prepared for college can make up missing course work after they enroll at ISU.

Melchionni scores 1000th point

Men's hoops crushed by Trinity in semifinal

by Alexander Rachmiele

The season ended not with a bang, but with a whimper for the men's basketball team, as the Ephs were overpowered by the top-seeded Trinity Bantams in their second round ECAC tournament game last Wednesday night. The 80-66 loss in Hartford ended a 16-7 campaign for the Ephs, who had upset Colby in the first round of the tournament and were looking for their second ECAC title in three years.

Trinity sprinted out to a 24-6 lead in the early going, and the Ephs were never able to come back. The Bantams went on to dominate the first half, holding the Ephs to 27 percent shooting and outscoring them by a 41-23 margin in the first twenty minutes. In the second period the Bantams sealed the victory with 17-24 shooting from the floor.

Melchionni joins 1000-point club
Williams co-captain Bill Melchionni, though hampered by a pulled groin, managed ten points and passed the 1000 point mark in the final game of his Williams career. The senior forward became the tenth player in Williams basketball history to reach the milestone. Guard Garcia Major '90, one of the other nine, had scored a school record 48 points in a regular season loss to Trinity, and again proved to be thorn in the Bantams' side, leading all scorers with 28 points, including six three-pointers.

Forward Mike Stubbs led a balanced offensive attack for the Bantams with 18 points. Center John Moorhouse scored 17, and guards Joe Reilly and Ted Lyon added 15 and 13 respectively.

Tournament prognostication

continued from page 10

by Al Motter

In the Kingdom, the Tarheels will triumph over Missouri as the ailing Norm Stewart won't be able to match with the Dean. Steve Bucknall will continue his clutch role, leading the Heels to the finals. In the other semifinal, G'town's defensive pressure and awesome depth will pound the Wildcats to the ground — but not without a fight, as Sean Elliot will prove why he's a lottery pick. In a rematch of the famed '82 title game, Georgetown will gain revenge as Smith and Jackson slash through the Tar Heel 'D as Dikembe Mutumbo and Altonzo Swat J.R. to Canada. Fredy Brown will watch from the stands as Coach John Thompson gets the Bronze Olympic monkey off his back.

by Stewart Verdery

In Seattle's Final Four, Duke and Coack K will continue UNLV's tourney blues and advance to the final led by

Fishkill and Eggbert pay a visit to the theatre

continued from page 5

performance of Heiner Muller's "Quartet." Although it's my turn to give the old plot summary, I'd say that it almost defies description. The whole thing takes place in the memory and imagination of La Merteuil (Shirley Kagan '89).

The scenes include conversations in memory with her ex(?)-lover Valmont (Byron Shah, '89) about their sexual conquest-driven lives. Paris of what they discuss are then acted out by two other actors, Mary Kipp '89 and Tim Moore '90, who play various lovers of Valmont and at times Valmont himself. Quite amusingly, these two individuals play the men's roles and the women's roles indifferently, dressed in wonderfully hideous garb of 18th century French aristocratic gowns. Unfortunately, the trading back and forth of gender and character made me feel that I was spending too much time trying to figure out who was who; likewise, it was frustrating to discern what parts of the action took place in reality, memory, etc.

Egg: As for the actors, I thought Kagan was the strongest. Though all the characters' lines seemed to be similar, she delivered her's with the most variety and feeling.

Fish: Really? I must say I found her delivery tedious. Perhaps it was a directorial choice, certainly the blocking, or choreography I should say, reflected that. All that walking around in squares! Egg: No, no, no. Those scenes dragged because of Shah, not Kagan. He was natural but lackadaisical. Not much energy there.

Fish: But I found him the best physically. He was well chosen in that respect and had a good sense of the fleet. What about the others?

Egg: I thought Moore struggled with the female lines. Kipp was much more adept at handling the gender leap.

Fish: I really can't support you there. Both actors performed as well. Their delivery was stilted, but I think that was a directorial choice, again reflected in the costume and the set.

Egg: True. Most of the problems with the play could be pretty well summarized with one word: directing.

Fish: Yes, I think the script has many possibilities which could prove interesting. Unfortunately, the liberties Hunt chose to exercise were tiresome.

Egg: Tiresome is a apt description. The most memorable moments were simply a series of tortured sexual metaphor. Hunt seemed to be going for the cheap laugh — men dressed in ridiculous costume solemnly reciting "As a woman..." and the like. Good for a few laughs, but unwelcome on the whole.

Fish: I agree. This extended to the blocking as well. Frankly, I got in my way. One was more interested in whether the actors, walking backwards, would fall off the platforms than in what they were actually saying.

Egg: To rap up on a more positive note, though. My congratulations must go to the designers of costume and set, Wayne Fritzsche '89 and Stuart Gutman '90, respectively. They seemed to have the most fun of any of us.

Fish: Yep. Sorry, guys, on the whole I'd have to say, "thumbs down" on that one.

Egg: Me too — thumbs down. Well, that's all for now. Catch us again on "Fishkill and Eggbert go to Adams Memorial."

Can you write like this?

"Yet the most valuable aspect of their performance for the audience was the display of erotic power that can overcome both performers and listeners."

"You can ski, only to be chain whipped by a body nazi trying to get ahead of you in the lift line."

The Arts section of the Williams Record is looking for reviewers and contributors to write on a free lance basis. Call Bill Savasone at x2869 or The Record at x2595.

PARIS	from $470
MADRID	from $780
FRANKFURT	from $470
HONG KONG	from $790
BYDNEY	from $1170
TOKYO	from $750
SAN JUAN	from $245

The Williams Record
LIVE

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
1200-6014 1570-4623

PARIS	from $470
MADRID	from $780
FRANKFURT	from $470
HONG KONG	from $790
BYDNEY	from $1170
TOKYO	from $750
SAN JUAN	from $245

Tracksters capture 3 All-American honors

by Steve Brody

The van leaving Williamstown on Thursday for the NCAA Division III Indoor Track Championships at Bowdoin was filled with three members of the Eph track squad. The van that returned Saturday evening held three All-Americans. Geoff Igharo '90, Joe McClintock '89 and Anne Platt '91 all reached superb performance levels, pushing themselves to attain the honor that comes with top-six finishes.

Their performances cap a season that saw a resurgence by the Williams men's team after a subpar 1988 season, and continued dominance by the women. Prospects for the outdoor season look bright for both Eph teams.

McClintock, competing in the 35-lb weight throw, was having a relatively average day, and found himself in fifth place with one throw remaining. A monstrous heave by a competitor pushed him back to sixth, but McClintock gathered his strength and threw 52' 1" on his final attempt to move back into fifth place for the finish.

McClintock's fellow field event competitor, Igharo, was facing tough competition in the triple jump. The field was dominated by the Czechoslovakian national champion, who studied at Division III school North Central in Illinois. While Igharo was well behind the winning jump of 53', his leap of 47' 3" was his best of the season. On that jump, Igharo took off from a point 18 inches behind the board, added distance that could have moved him into second place. Nevertheless, the jump put Igharo in fifth place, and he took home All-American honors.

Platt equals personal record in 1500
Platt, who was a cross-country All-American with a 10th place finish at the National Championships in the fall, ran the 1500 meters at Bowdoin. She duplicated her school and personal record by running a time of 4:38 in the trials on Friday to qualify for the event final.

In the final, Platt led the field's top-five runners, get away from her during the second half of the race. Platt's competitor for All-American honors came from behind her, as a late charger challenged her sixth place spot. Platt proved herself worthy of the challenge, however: she outkicked her opponent to finish in sixth place with a time of 4:42. The Eph teams now look to achieve large goals during the outdoor season. The success seen for the men's team is a result of several factors.

"When you talk about our outdoor season," said co-captain Dave Nadelman '89, "you have to talk about the return of the distance core, as well as the talented freshmen we have."

"I'm looking for the team to pull together. We'll definitely look to win the Little Three, and I think we have a good chance to for NESAC's Bates is a powerhouse but we have the depth to challenge them," said Gil McCabe '89.

"Personally," McCabe continued, "I'd like to run a good 10,000 meters at the NESAC and New England meets, hopefully under 32:00, and score some year at the Planky Track.

The anchor of the distance core, McCabe expects company this Spring from sleepers Marc Helix '91, Evan Driscoll '91, and Nathaniel McVey-Finney '90, as well as long distance specialists Steve Brody '90, Brian Coan '92, John Cooney '92, Dylan Cooper '91 and Josh Rayman '91.

Nadelman leads the middle distance runners, who are strengthened by Brendan Kearse '92 and Bill McKinley '92.

Leading Williams is three-time All-American hurdler Dawn Macauley '89. Macauley specializes in the 400-meter hurdles, but also competes in the high jump and open 400 meters.

Williams is strongest in distance events. The Ephs boast returning 1500 meters national champion Ann Dunham '90. Dunham ran 4:28 last year to take the title and demolish the Williams record for the event. Joining her in distance events are seniors Mike Urzelski, Christie Dempsey and Jen Morris. Platt and freshmen Andrea Cady, Susan Donna, Cherie Macauley and Molly Martin provide the deeper distance talent in New England for Williams.

In shorter events, Williams looks to hurdlers Noriko Honda '89 and Kira Shields '91 and 400-meter runners Kim Bannard '91 and Alison Smith '90. Field event specialists Kyrin McNeil '90, Susan Northen '89 and Shelley Torgerson '92, should also score points for the Ephs.

The spring season will probably be the most successful ever for Williams. The women's team continues to be a New England powerhouse, while the men's team finds that its new and returning talent is quickly elevating it back to its level of 1987, when the Ephs won the NESAC championship.

Women swim to 12th place Nationals finish

by Anne Joseph

There will be no more formal swimming practices of Chandler pool for the women's swim team. The six qualified Ephs returned home Sunday from NCAA Division III Nationals held at Notre Dame this past week.

The Williams' contingent, albeit small, managed to place 12th overall out of more than 30 schools, with Lee Schroeder '91, Kathia Vondevenne '91 and Patti Althoff '92 earning All-American honors.

"I think we did well. We were so excited to have hosted New England, and it's hard to get back up to that excitement. But with only having that number of people, to end up in 12th place is quite good," stated Coach Carl Samuelson.

Schroeder placed third in the 50 free and fifth in the 100 free, grabbing All-American awards in both events. Although Althoff missed entrance into the three-meter final in which she took ninth, she pulled out fourth in the one-meter event. Vandevenne placed seventh in the one meter and captured second in the three-meter diving. The 200 free relay of Don Lebeau, co-captain Michelle Freeman '89, Elizabeth Eberhart '92 and Schroeder took 10th place, earning the relay an honorable mention All-American award.

Coming back after New England "I think we did well. Kathia [Vande-venne] and Patti [Althoff] dove well. Elizabeth Eberhart had two nice swims in fly," Schroeder said. "It's difficult to come back after tapering for New England. But it was exciting to go. It was hard to only have four people [swimmers], but we did well under the circumstances," she continued.

The women ended their season with an 8-1 record, only losing to Division I power University of Massachusetts, and placed second in the Division III New England Championships. Eight Ephs from the men's team will be competing this weekend at NCAA Division III Nationals to be held at Bowdoin.

Season Scoreboard

Men's hockey:	10-13, won Little Three.
Women's club hockey:	4-9.
Women's hoops:	14-8, tied for Little Three, tied for 3rd in NIAC tourney.
Men's hoops:	16-8, tied for 3rd in ECAC tourney.
Men's alpine skiing:	5th at Division I Nationals.
Women's alpine skiing:	8th at Division I Nationals.
Women's nordic skiing:	10th at Division I Nationals.
Men's nordic skiing:	15-5, won Little Three, 8th at Nationals (across all divisions).
Women's squash:	16-6, won Little Three for 15th consecutive year, 1st place in second bracket of Division I Nationals.
Men's squash:	8-1, won Little Three, 2nd at New England.
Women's swimming:	8-1, won Little Three, won New England by largest margin and largest point total in history.
Men's swimming:	8-1, won Little Three, won New England by largest margin and largest point total in history.
Women's track:	Won Little Three, 6th at ECAC's.
Men's track:	Won Little Three, 8th at Division III New England.
Wrestling:	6-7, won Purple Pail (by defeating Amherst), 10th at New England.

Out of Countenance

BY FRANCES HANSEN/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maloska

ACROSS	DOWN
1 Writer	13 Acad., e.g.
2 Bomber	14 "..." and onions in
3 Attractive girl or cunning	15 Ill. city of concern to actors
4 Maneuver	16 Olympic entrants
5 "Over the Rainbow" composer	17 Trim the hedge
6 Griffin-Neal 1957 film, with "A"	18 Smith or Harper
7 Della from Detroit	19 Mrs. Irving Berlin
8 Aurora, sky show	20 It's an honor, in bridge
9 Numero —	21 Bryce Canyon's state
10 These are numbered	22 Cubic
11 "Do Is Dream of You"	23 "Call Me" request
12 Prepared to pay the piper	24 "Butterfield 8" author
13 Apparently	25 "..." (intermission)
14 The Pink Panther "star"
15 More mammoth
16 Rasp
17 N.C. college
18 Name of the "Psycho"
19 Ice-skating champ
20 Babalonia motel
21 Louise and Turner
22 Agreements
23 Galkay
24 "The London Merchant"
25 Dramatist
26 Trash collector
27 Lively singer from Spain
28 Aurora, sky show
29 Della from Detroit
30 Numero —
31 These are numbered
32 "Do Is Dream of You"
33 Prepared to pay the piper
34 Apparently
35 The Pink Panther "star"
36 More mammoth
37 Rasp
38 N.C. college
39 Name of the "Psycho"
40 Ice-skating champ
41 Babalonia motel
42 Louise and Turner
43 Agreements
44 Galkay
45 "The London Merchant"
46 Dramatist
47 Trash collector
48 Lively singer from Spain
49 Aurora, sky show
50 Della from Detroit
51 Numero —
52 These are numbered
53 "Do Is Dream of You"
54 Prepared to pay the piper
55 Apparently
56 The Pink Panther "star"
57 More mammoth
58 Rasp
59 N.C. college
60 Name of the "Psycho"
61 Ice-skating champ
62 Babalonia motel
63 Louise and Turner
64 Agreements
65 Galkay
66 "The London Merchant"
67 Dramatist
68 Trash collector
69 Lively singer from Spain
70 Aurora, sky show
71 Della from Detroit
72 Numero —
73 These are numbered
74 "Do Is Dream of You"
75 Prepared to pay the piper
76 Apparently
77 The Pink Panther "star"
78 More mammoth
79 Rasp
80 N.C. college
81 Name of the "Psycho"
82 Ice-skating champ
83 Babalonia motel
84 Louise and Turner
85 Agreements
86 Galkay
87 "The London Merchant"
88 Dramatist
89 Trash collector
90 Lively singer from Spain
91 Aurora, sky show
92 Della from Detroit
93 Numero —
94 These are numbered
95 "Do Is Dream of You"
96 Prepared to pay the piper
97 Apparently
98 The Pink Panther "star"
99 More mammoth
100 Rasp
101 N.C. college
102 Name of the "Psycho"
103 Ice-skating champ
104 Babalonia motel
105 Louise and Turner
106 Agreements
107 Galkay
108 "The London Merchant"
109 Dramatist
110 Trash collector
111 Lively singer from Spain
112 Aurora, sky show
113 Della from Detroit
114 Numero —
115 These are numbered
116 "Do Is Dream of You"
117 Prepared to pay the piper
118 Apparently
119 The Pink Panther "star"
120 More mammoth
121 Rasp
122 N.C. college
123 Name of the "Psycho"
124 Ice-skating champ
125 Babalonia motel
126 Louise and Turner
127 Agreements
128 Galkay
129 "The London Merchant"
130 Dramatist
131 Trash collector
132 Lively singer from Spain
133 Aurora, sky show
134 Della from Detroit
135 Numero —
136 These are numbered
137 "Do Is Dream of You"
138 Prepared to pay the piper
139 Apparently
140 The Pink Panther "star"
141 More mammoth
142 Rasp
143 N.C. college
144 Name of the "Psycho"
145 Ice-skating champ
146 Babalonia motel
147 Louise and Turner
148 Agreements
149 Galkay
150 "The London Merchant"
151 Dramatist
152 Trash collector
153 Lively singer from Spain
154 Aurora, sky show
155 Della from Detroit
156 Numero —
157 These are numbered
158 "Do Is Dream of You"
159 Prepared to pay the piper
160 Apparently
161 The Pink Panther "star"
162 More mammoth
163 Rasp
164 N.C. college
165 Name of the "Psycho"
166 Ice-skating champ
167 Babalonia motel
168 Louise and Turner
169 Agreements
170 Galkay
171 "The London Merchant"
172 Dramatist
173 Trash collector
174 Lively singer from Spain
175 Aurora, sky show
176 Della from Detroit
177 Numero —
178 These are numbered
179 "Do Is Dream of You"
180 Prepared to pay the piper
181 Apparently
182 The Pink Panther "star"
183 More mammoth
184 Rasp
185 N.C. college
186 Name of the "Psycho"
187 Ice-skating champ
188 Babalonia motel
189 Louise and Turner
190 Agreements
191 Galkay
192 "The London Merchant"
193 Dramatist
194 Trash collector

Men, Brule third in NCAA slalom; UVM wins top spot

by Jeff Biersach

The Williams College Ski Team spent last week at the NCAA Division I National Championships. This year, the event was hosted by the University of Wyoming, and the races were held at Jackson Hole. The team skied well against a field composed of the best college skiers in the nation. In the final combined men's and women's standings, Williams finished ninth.

One of the highlights of the week was the performance of the men's slalom team. The Eph slalom skiers finished third in the nation, behind first-place University of Colorado and second-place University of Wyoming. Freshman David Brule led Williams with a third place slalom finish. Brule's result made him an All-American. He was backed by strong skiing from sophomores Eric Grosse and Bill Crowley. Grosse, who skied particularly well in the second half of this season, finished fifteenth. Grosse was closely followed by teammate Crowley, who took sixteenth. Thanks to a spectacular second run, Rob Macleod of Middlebury won the day.

Women's slalom

Senior captain Mari Omland earned the distinction of All-American in the slalom. Omland, who has had consistent top-level results all year, finished ninth in the Jackson Hole slalom. With sophomore Amy Sullivan in twentieth and Amy Beliveau in thirty-third, the team finished ninth for the day. The University of Utah, which took second through fifth place, won the event.

In nordic competition, sophomore Kris Hansen led the Ephwomen to a seventh-place finish in the 15K. The University of Vermont, which swept the top four places, won the event. Hansen skied to a strong thirteenth-place finish, while Ann Bokman scored a sixteenth-place finish for the Ephs, and Kristin Seeman contributed a twenty-ninth. In the 5K classic, the Ephwomen finished eighth. With a fifteenth-place result, Hansen again led the team. She was backed by a thirty-third from Bokman and a thirty-ninth from Seeman.

Due to dense fog, there was only one run in the Women's giant slalom. Williams took fifth in the event, behind first-place University of Utah and second-place New Mexico. Sullivan's sixteenth place result was the top Williams finish. Omland finished twenty-first. Beliveau, who skied under horrible visibility conditions, managed a twenty-eighth-place finish. Anke Freidrich of Utah mastered the long and demanding course to win the day.

Men's nordic

Senior Mac Nash, skiing with a shoulder injury, led Williams to a ninth-place finish in the 10K Classic. Nash's twentieth place result in the characteristically foreigner-packed field made him the third American finisher. Nash was followed by thirty-seventh place freshman John Cocquyt and thirty-eighth place junior Peter Millkin. Utah's Inns Sjalstad won this race with a time of 30.03 minutes. The Ephs finished eleventh in the 20K freestyle, led by Mac Nash in twenty-ninth.

Eastern G.S. powerhouse, the University of Vermont, won the National G.S. title. Williams finished ninth in the event. Sophomore Lindon Seed led the Ephs with a seventeenth-place finish. He was followed by Grosse in twenty-first and junior J.P. Parisien in thirty-first place.

Overall, the East managed to steal the top spot on the charts. In the total combined results, the University of Vermont finished first in the nation with 672 points. UVM was followed by Utah in

continued on page 8

Baleo
Eph J.P. Parisien '91 skis earlier this season at the Williams Winter Carnival. Parisien, among others, represented Williams at Division I Nationals in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, from March 1-4.

Women's squash 8th at Nationals behind Brayton's semis advance

by Laurie Burnett

From March 2-4, five members of the Williams women's squash team played at Nationals, held at U.Penn. The team emerged with an eighth-place national ranking across all divisions. The squad, consisting of captain Alisch Buckner '89, Lisa Brayton '91, Judy Kellogg '89, Lori Schaefer '89, and Susie Piper '89, stayed the entire weekend due to Brayton's strong performances; she remained in the tournament until the semifinal round.

Although none of the Ephwomen made the final round, coach Gail Ramsay said she was extremely proud of the Ephs' performances over the weekend.

Piper had a difficult draw, playing and losing to two of the top players in the country. Kellogg finished her senior year (her second year of squash) with several superlative rounds.

Schaefer pitched in with consistent play that carried her to the third round of the consolation bracket, while Brayton ended a season of improvement with several comebacks and victories over players whom she had never previously defeated. Finally, Buckner ended her last year of Williams squash by making it into the second round of the consolation bracket.

From the Locker Room

Georgetown, Duke, or your team?

by Al Mottur

Is Tourney Time again, and that can only mean one thing: fantastic finishes, scintillating upsets, and the unmistakable aura of 'March Madness.' The reigning National Champion Kansas Jayhawks are unable to defend their crown because they are on probation. But no matter, for the Jayhawks wouldn't stand a chance against the likes of Georgetown, Arizona, North Carolina, and Missouri, my picks to go to the Final Four in Seattle.

This time, the Hoyas are for real, and they should win their region with relative ease. With frosh sensation Alonzo Mourning, the rest of the East will be in mourning. Hoyas paratrooper will have to contend with a feisty N.C. State squad in the round of 16, however, as Jim Valvano will have Coach K & Co. riled up after an embarrassing loss to Maryland in the ACC. Number three Stanford will find its NCAA unbeaten streak come to a close, as Duke's Danny Ferry will try to make it three Final Fours in his career. Unfortunately for Ferry, he and his Naismith Trophy will have to go home as Charles Smith will school Quinn Snyder. Mourning will await Robert Bricey and Jaren Jackson should burn Phil Henderson, forcing Coach K to return to the links.

Georgetown will then have to face Arizona, for the Wildcats will emerge unscathed from the weak West. Arizona will dominate Clemson and run n' gun past the Rebels of UNLV before facing Bobby Knight's Hoosiers in the regional finals. Indiana will have just scraped by Seton Hall as the ever improving Pirates will prove they belong in the big time. In the Final Eight, the greatest coach in the land won't be enough to stop Sean Elliott and his sidekicks, as the Wildcats will roll by ten.

Oklahoma, the number one seed in the Southeast, will continue its downward slide by being stunned by tourney-tough Terry Holland and the Wahoons of UVA. Richard Morgan and his troikas will lead this year's Cinderella squad to within a whisker of Seattle, before failing to conquer the North Carolina Tarheels will continue their tradition of making it to the Final Four after winning the ACC tournament but will have to contend with UCLA, and then down Michigan in the sweet 16 for the third straight year to pull it off.

In the Midwest, the region with the most talent but many chokers, Missouri will rise to the top, justifying their high early season rankings. Lou Henson and Illinois should once again be upset fodder, this time for Pittsburgh, which has already felled four top ten squads. The Panthers, boasting the most talented sophomore crop in the country, will then succumb to Louisville in the round of 16. Meanwhile, Missouri will gallop by Georgia Tech and edge Syracuse for the right to take on Denny Crum's Cardinals. The Tigers will stop 'Never Nervous' Pervis Ellison though and take the trip to Seattle.

continued on page 8

by Stewart Verdery

Tourney Time. The Great Wall of Hoop. The Road to the Final Four. It's all part of the spectacle of college hoops during the NCAA tournament, an event which will see the usual conferences, led by the ACC, dominate the action. So now it's time to wade through the brackets and prognosticate, instead of hopping on the bandwagon of every hot team like Brent Musburger will. Watch.

In the East Duke should cruise through a lightweight regional, probably by whupping up on an overrated Stanford team. The only threat may come from whatever measles Siena can give to the ACC power. Meanwhile, the Georgetown Hoyas received a similar gift schedule which presents a team that lost to Maryland by 22 (NC State) and a typical Big 10 choke squad in Iowa as their main opposition. In the East final, John Thompson will revert to the coaching form which enabled him to capture that bronze medal in Korea as the Devils and Ferry head to their third Final 4 in 4 years.

There they will face UNLV, a surprise winner in the West. Stacey Augmon will show Arizona's Sean Elliott why he wasn't an Olympian in the regional semifinals before Turk and Co. face LSU and Chris Jackson in the finals. The trip west for General Knight and the Hoosiers won't be a pleasant one, as Jackson will carry the SEC banner past the Big 10 champs. Clemson and block artist Eldon Campbell might also make waves in this regional, but look to fall to Arizona in a midair struggle. The Tigers also might remind Seton Hall about their first round for, Southwest Missouri State, who shocked Clemson in 1987.

Befitting the location, the Southeast is the toughest part of the draw. Historically, North Carolina goes to the Final Four when they win the ACC tourney, but unless JR reclaims his freshman form, Oklahoma should make the trek to Seattle. Only Virginia or maybe Lionel Simmons and LaSalle seem able to push Stacey King, Mookie Blaylock, etc. Carolina should make it to the Final 8 as usual, since Michigan is in their half of the region for the third year in a row. Look for some upsets here, as Florida State, Alabama, and UCLA are all seeded higher than their performance deserves.

The Midwest also should offer a veritable buffet of hoop talents: the tensile strength of Georgia Tech's "Terminator" Hammonds, the agility of Pervis Ellison of Louisville, the pley-oops and rude jams by Syracuse, and the high-wire act of Illinois' Kenny Battle. Missouri should be able to convert Cuse bricks from the foul line into a regional final appearance after eliminating Tech's Rambler Wreck. On the other side, Prop. 48 Shorter could lead Pitt to a near upset of Illinois, but Lou Henson's squad should survive to top Missouri and end the giggling by the rest of the Big 10.

continued on page 8

1009 points of light

Co-captain Bill Melchioni '89 plays in the January 21st game against Amherst at Chandler. Melchioni reached the 1000-point milestone last week, becoming the 10th men's hoops player in Williams history to do so.

THE RECORD

INSIDER

VOL. 1, No. 4 March 14, 1989

STUDENT ACTIVISM

THE RECORD INSIDER

Volume 1, Number 4

CONTENTS ARTICLES

Section 1: The Politics of Protest

- 3/ Student protest: Involvement and response
- 3/ The effectiveness of protest against the Williams administration
- 5/ Eph involvement beyond the bubble
- 6/ The Nonviolence and Social Change class

Section 2: Activism through the years

- 8/ Williams' Great Rebellion of 1868
- 9/ The demise of fraternities
- 12/ The volatile years of Vietnam
- 13/ Symbols of protest: crosses and shanties advocate divestment

Section 3: Setting the Campus Agenda

- 14/ Political groups battle low membership and campus ideology
- 16/ Does College Council deal with student concerns effectively?
- 17/ In the aftermath: CARE works within the system

CENTERFOLD

10 & 11/ Large majorities of students surveyed do not belong to any campus activist groups, and feel that there is not enough concern on campus about national issues. Apathy is perceived to be the largest barrier to increased student involvement.

OPINION

- 15/ The College Democrats: trying to accommodate the views of the campus majority
- 15/ The Garfield Republicans: fighting the conservative bias
- 19/ Williams students and alumni share their religious faith locally and internationally

INTERVIEWS

- 4/ Farhan Haq '89, a member of CARE and the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition, discusses the Jenness takeover and the nature of student activism in the 1980's.
- 7/ Professor of Political Science Kurt Tauber analyzes the opportunities for activism at Williams and why students don't always take advantage of them
- 18/ Chris Nealon '89 discusses the progress and frustrations of the Williams Bisexual Gay and Lesbian Union.

Cover photo from the 1970 Gul.

Copyright Insider, The Williams Record. No part may be reproduced in whole or in part without the express consent of the editors. All rights reserved. The Insider is published by The Williams Record, Baxter Hall, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267, the second issue of each month.
Editorial: (413) 597-2400

Business: (413)
597-2289

The above cartoon ran in the 1978 Williams Record, but its general message seems in many ways to be applicable to the Williams campus a decade later. Although there are plenty of activist groups on campus, their membership is small, and the campus's attitude towards protests like the CARE takeover and the Baxter body image displays has been less than enthusiastic.

The first section of the Insider, titled "The Politics of Protest," deals with general features of student activism at Williams. Articles include an examination of the apparent apathy and sometimes intolerance of the student body, a look at how the administration deals with protest, and a feature on students who have chosen to direct their activism beyond the campus.

The second section, "Activism through the years," looks back at the history of protest at a small, relatively isolated liberal arts college. Highlights include the struggle to abolish fraternities and the 1969-70 Vietnam protests.

The Insider finishes with features on specific campus groups that struggle to place their particular concerns on the campus agenda. Opinion pieces from the Democrat and Republican organizations demonstrate some of the difficulties that activist groups are up against. Features on CARE and the BGLU provide a look at groups whose concerns are often marginalized and resisted by the rest of campus.

A final note on the Insider's definition of activism is appropriate. The American Heritage Dictionary defines activism as a theory or practice based on military action. Since this is obviously not applicable to Williams, and since the criteria which define activism are not clear, we expanded the concept of "activism" to include ethnic, political and environmental groups as well as the Feminist Alliance and the BGLU.

ANN MANTIL, Editor
BILL SAVADOVE, Insider Asst.
LISA KAESTNER, Productions
BRIENNE COLBY, Productions

ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW, DAN SKWIRE, JUSTIN SMITH,
ROBERT WEISBERG, Assistant Editors

KAREN DUGGAN, JENNIFER MARIGLIANO, ASHESH SHAH, Productions Assts.

BRIENNE COLBY, STEVEN SCOVILLE, Graphics

Demonstration of passivity by THE EDITOR EMERITUS

Politics of Protest

Apathy and response

Today's protests are low-profile, 'sophisticated'

by Lynn Huddon

In the past few years, Williams has had its share of protests and demonstrations. A campus group staged several body-image protest displays in Baxter Hall this year. The Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Union has organized open-air rallies for the last several years. There was an anti-apartheid demonstration on Baxter lawn in the spring of 1987, and the Coalition Against Racist Education occupied Jenness House in 1988.

However, in comparison with activism of the past, interest and involvement by Williams students today is significantly less substantial. A total of 71 percent of students surveyed by the Insider are not involved with any activist group.

Student activism during the 1960s and early '70s saw nationwide campus demonstrations, rallies and strikes concerning the political and social issues of the era with large numbers of students involved.

Associate Professor of Economics Ralph Bradburd was an undergraduate at Columbia University during the late '1960s, a time of intense political activity, especially regarding civil rights issues and the Vietnam War. He recalls how students barricaded themselves into classrooms and administration buildings in 1968, presented the school with a series of demands and sparked violent and bloody riots with the police.

"Politics dominated every aspect of life," Bradburd said. "People chose sides for largely emotional reasons, and then filtered information so as to support their viewpoint. People talked about revolution without really understanding what it meant."

Assistant Professor of Political Science Michael MacDonald, who attended the University of California at Berkeley in the early 1970s, said he had seen similar student protests on the West Coast.

"A very large percentage of undergraduates were involved in the protests, but not all of them were deeply committed. Some were doing it because it was the thing to do, although the pressing issues of the time did capture the imagination of the students."

Professor of History Peter Frost spoke about the activism prevalent at Williams during this same period. For example, in the spring of 1970, a campus-wide strike occurred in protest of the invasion of Cambodia.

"The students pressed political problems that were outside of the college, such as the war and the racial situation, but there was always some degree of self-interest in these protests -- they were concerned they'd have to go to Vietnam," Frost said.

"The sixties was a big cultural movement when you had a fair amount of people making a lot of noise, but I think in a way there's more student activism now. Today, we have a more sophisticated, low-profile way of approaching activism, and we're getting more concrete victories, like passing laws and freeing prisoners," said Derek Cressman '90, head of the Williams chapter of the statewide MassPIRG activist organization.

College Chaplain Carol Pepper said, "Just because there aren't demonstrations every weekday at Williams College doesn't mean that there aren't countless individuals working hard on issues of social justice and social change. I would say without a doubt that at least 12 to 15 percent of the students here are organized in volunteer work, and that's just including the things I know about. It's not like getting high down on the lawn at the Capitol, but it's activism in the 80's."

"The number of people who were concerned with the real issues was not much more back then than it is today," Frost said. "The amount of superficial activism has gone way down these days, but the commitment is just as strong."

Some students and faculty believe the decrease in activism is simply a reflection of today's society, and others see the particular environment of Williams as less conducive to involvement in such activities.

"There's a kind of careerism here and certain established tracks for where to go after graduation," Assistant Dean of the College Andrew Hernandez said. "Thus it's harder for people to get side-tracked into the political activism mode. Political activism may just not be as appealing, especially if it impacts one's GPA or chances of getting to Wall Street."

"We live in a much more insecure society today, and Williams students are very insecure about their fate after graduation," MacDonald said. "They see political activism

continued on page 14

Effectiveness of protest

Administrators like protest tuned to proper channels

by Ellen Drought and Sara Dubow

College officials say they recognize the sincerity and commitment of campus activist groups and see a wide range of approaches used by those groups. While affirming the need for student input into college policies, however, they maintain that protest is most effective when directed through the proper channels.

"A lot can be accomplished through the existing system," Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards said. "The administration is very open -- the president and dean have weekly walk-in hours."

President of the College Francis Oakley also attested to the administration's availability and commitment to hear students' concerns. "We have a role in making ourselves available. We have open office hours and students can make appointments. I like that and it should continue."

"I would remind everybody that I along with the Provost, the Dean of the College, and the Dean of the Faculty visit each house with an open agenda, just to hear students' views. I know of no other college that does this," he continued.

Last spring's takeover of Jenness House by the Coalition Against Racist Education (CARE) was one of the most dramatic and visible examples of student activism in recent years, but according to administration, the most dramatic method is not always the most effective one.

"We would have done almost all the things anyway," Edwards said, in reference to those demands that have become college policy such as the non-Western course requirement and faith and for their part they offered to listen to us, which was very helpful. We talked with them several times; we talked with President Oakley several times."

Oakley said that he felt the takeover was not as effective an agent of change as other approaches might have been. Since the administration and CARE had carried on extensive discussions already, he said he was disap-

'Anyone who rocks the boat in the least will get an undue amount of attention because it's so important to them to keep the ship on an even keel.'

the multi-cultural center. "When [student protest] becomes really disruptive, then you worry. It could really work against what you're pushing for."

Farhan Haq '89, one of the leaders in CARE's takeover, acknowledged the availability of the administration in hearing their concerns. "We participated with the administration in talking about these things in good pointed that CARE remained unsure of the administrations' commitment to their concerns.

"We continued to do what we were already doing... Direct action of that sort poses a strain on the institution. It creates strains and tensions that aren't always positive."

Professor of Political Science Kurt Tauber said that sometimes such tensions are key in inducing the administration to act. "You can talk until you're blue in the face. But those actions are extraordinarily effective. College administrators are very vulnerable precisely because they do want a quiet campus. Anyone who rocks the boat in the least will get an undue amount of attention because it's so important to them to keep the ship on an even keel."

Haq agreed with Edwards that many of the demands may have been forthcoming anyway. "I don't know how much that [the takeover] changed what the administration was going to offer. Certainly after the fact a lot of people in the administration said that the sort of stuff that they offered us were things they were planning on anyway... But it did seriously underscore how important some of our demands were."

However, Tauber disagreed about the relationship between the two sides. He said that sometimes such tensions are key in

continued on page 19

The Insider March 14, 1989/3

Confronting stereotypes

Farhan Haq '89 is a member of CARE and the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition.

Record interview by Todd Owens

RECORD: As a starting point, I'd like to talk about your involvement in the CARE take-over of Jenness House last year. Why did CARE feel that it was necessary to do something that drastic, to make that kind of statement to the campus?

HAQ: It was basically a pattern over several years, after several incidents of racial harassment -- students leaving the school because they were harassed, teachers leaving the school because they felt upset with the environment, other professors got burnt out very quickly. Overall the minority community at Williams and specifically the black community was starting to feel very battered. CARE was started not to take over anything, but for the first two months to sort of pick up the torch on a number of things that had gone down before.

Things last year were sort of at a crisis point. A lot of black faculty were gone, and after [Assistant Professor of Theatre] Michael Knight's death and the way the list of minority faculty was presented with Michael Knight's name on it to a small group of students who asked for it, there were a lot of students who were really upset. CARE was almost at that stage an intermediary, somewhat less tense and upright, certainly not the sort of group who was thinking of drastic things as a first resort, but a group who felt that over the years something had gone wrong and there had been no response.

RECORD: When you did take over the dean's office, did that change the tone of your conversations with the administration?

HAQ: Instantly, yes. After the fact, it did seriously underscore how important our demands were, that there was a perception of a pattern of problems that necessitated fairly drastic action. Roughly a third of the minority community was saying, "We're willing to face expulsion over getting these demands." And that's a fairly strong message.

I also think it changed the discourse about what racism was like on campus. Several months before, when there was a workshop on racism by CCR, some students asked, "Is there any racism on campus?" and a lot of students just tacitly accepted that "well, if I can't see any, it's just not there." I think a lot of students take it for granted now that there is a problem and we have to solve it. They may disagree with CARE's methods, but now the discourse itself has changed because people know there's a problem. For example, the Record itself now tends to cover minority affairs, whereas I remember a friend of mine once tacked up a headline on his door that said "College Council discusses race relations and parking."

RECORD: In comparison with the sixties, this issue hasn't been as successful in uniting people. Do you have any thoughts on that?

4/The Insider March 14, 1989

HAQ: I don't know how much unity there was then. For example, in the late sixties there was the Black Power movement, and I don't know how much unity there was in that. I think in America right now because of the sixties, the 1964 Civil Rights Act, Brown vs. Board of Education, and a certain amount of integration, [there's a feeling] that the problem has been solved, and that any further complaints are somehow needless or whining. That's very wrong, but it's encouraged from the top down. Students fall into the cozy sense that everything's okay, that the only people causing race problems are those who are pointing to it and trying to rock the boat.

RECORD: Do you think that's changing now on campuses, specifically Williams?

HAQ: I think so. I do know that colleges all over America have started to snap back against that.

There's only a certain extent to which people will believe that nothing is wrong. The wealth of evidence tends to work against that. It's not as if CARE created a massive backlash, and it's not as if the student body was unsympathetic. I remember the Greylock houses sent us their cookout food for the weekend. Many white students came and offered to help out. I think that if you can convince people that there is a need to look around them and see for themselves if there's racism on campus, then they'll actually make that effort.

RECORD: Do you think that the administration has responded well to complaints by students, or do they smile and pretty much go in the direction they were already going?

HAQ: Certain organizations within the administration tend to be more effective in handling problems than others, simply because of their access to information and things like that. Not every individual is equally sympathetic. But by and large, as long as you conduct in good faith your efforts to work with them, they're very willing to go out of their way and meet you and change policies.

RECORD: Why don't you think issues are successful in sparking student interest or action?

HAQ: Williams is isolated from other colleges in that way. There are many colleges where there's a big concern about apartheid, or about the homeless, or involvement in Nicaragua, or racism on campus. Williams has avoided those problems because we're removed from a lot of those things.

But also this generation is somewhat different. For a lot of people activism has become something you just do while you're in college and then forget about, or something you forget about while you're even here. The idea that moral and political issues are a part of the real world has lost out to the idea of getting a responsible job and a responsible lifestyle.

I don't see myself as an activist. I wasn't participating in a lot of this activist stuff until after a lot of people I knew were really getting upset. Sometime around last year I wound up getting involved in a lot of things, and I think I'm now perceived as an activist, which is odd because I don't see myself as one.

Thomas

RECORD: The last question is one of the conservative criticisms that have been leveled at what are perceived as the more leftist, or more radical, or more progressive organizations on campus: a lot of times students are protesting more for the sake of protesting than to achieve any kind of goal. How do you feel about that?

HAQ: There are a lot of legitimate concerns to be protesting about. I don't buy at all the right-wing concept that there are no actual issues, that people are just trying to create things, that there's nothing there. At the same time, I also worry about why certain issues become popular at certain times. I don't like it when issues, like apartheid a few years ago, are perceived nation-wide as being an issue. I really resent the idea that the suffering of millions of black people is suddenly a "hot" issue, but it's only that way for a couple of years. It strikes me that it's something that American history is about -- certain issues become hot issues for the right and for the left.

There are actually more people nowadays in the anti-apartheid coalition at Williams than there were a year or two ago. I like that, the idea that people are willing to get involved in something that is important but is not particularly topical. I don't think it's that students are creating the topics, but there are times when there have been students who create an issue and it becomes for a while a hot issue, for example whether or not the Berkshire Quad is a hotbed of vice or something. I do resent how that goes.

I don't think the right wing is immune from that -- I remember the way that for about a month everybody was very hot and bothered about Philip Agee coming to Williams. I think if they wanted to be consistent about it, there are issues on the right wing that could be met with on a regular basis rather than responding to spot crises.

Certainly with minority concerns, particularly since the establishment of CARE, there isn't a feeling among the members of CARE or even among the wider Williams community that this was just a spot thing that flared up, because every now and then the issues still keep coming up and people still wonder about the multicultural center and the divisional requirement. All that has become part of the regular discourse and that's a hell of a lot better than just sort of responding to what you see in Newsweek on a given week or in the Record on a given week.

RECORD: Is there anything else you would like to add?

HAQ: After all this time I really doubt I know what student activism particularly means, especially when it comes to Williams. A friend of mine said a few years ago, "There are no student activists at Williams, and there are no student radicals at Williams," which makes a lot of sense to me. This is going to sound very bizarre, but I always tend to see myself as either politically moderate or politically conservative, depending upon how you slice it.

There becomes a sort of perception of radicalism, which is a shame because I hate for these things to wind up being wrapped up in an idea of 'which side are you on.' To me, everyone at Williams tends to wind up being on fairly similar sides; there are no big extremes.

In a way I kind of wish, for example, that I wasn't being contacted for this sort of thing. Not because I don't like to talk to people about it, but because I don't like my words to have any particular relevance as to what activism is, because first of all, I'm not an activist and second of all, the idea of speaking up about it strikes me as being a very egotistic, very arrogant sort of thing. To me, if there are any sort of real activists, it can't be along those lines.

Beyond the Village Beautiful

National involvement continues despite isolation

by Justin Smith

Williamstown is far removed from the political world of Washington and the issues stirring up more -- er, urban environments. But despite geographical isolation and the additional accusation that students today are apathetic and selfish career-mongers, a significant number of Williams students have taken the time to become involved in nationally-oriented activist organizations and projects.

For example, students recently formed groups to participarticipate in both pro- and anti-abortion rallies in Washington. Erika Elvander '89 and Karen Duggan '91 have organized students to participate in a National Organization for Women (NOW) march scheduled for April 9th. The march will protest the possible reversal of the 1973 Supreme Court decision which legalized abortion.

"I've been waiting for a long time to do something," Elvander said, adding that student response to the NOW march has been overwhelming. "We have two buses going, and we have a waiting list twenty people long."

On the opposite side of the issue, another group of students headed by Russell Day '91 participated in a Washington rally on January 23. Although the group is not currently connected with a national organization, Day said it will try to expand its influence beyond the purple valley.

"One of the things we're going to try to do is network with other campus anti-abortion organizations across the state," Day said. Nevertheless, the location of the college does pose problems. "I feel tremendously isolated."

The limits imposed by the college's location are felt by other groups as well. Cliff Majersik '91, a member of the Williams chapter of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), said, "It is pretty frustrating. Any time we want to get involved we have to expend more effort than other campuses in the state. Yesterday [March 8] eight of us went to Boston to attend a hearing on the toxics use reduction bill. People from Boston College could walk there."

However, the isolation has not seemed to hamper participation by Williams students. Over 100 students are involved in MassPIRG projects -- over 40 people in the toxics-use reduction project alone. "I'm very pleased with the participation rate," Majersik said.

Elvander said that student response to protest opportunities varies. "It depends on the issue. It depends on what your goals are."

The chaplain's office has organized a variety of social service projects outside the Berkshires that have succeeded in drawing the interest of large numbers of students. Assistant Chaplain Kathleen McNeely said she has been very pleased with the turnout. For example, 60 students signed up to participate in the Bronx social service project this past September; McNeely could not take them all.

Ultimately, 15 students went to the south Bronx to help out for a weekend in a shelter and soup kitchen. Eight students went on a later trip to the predominantly Hispanic neighborhood. Five students have gone this semester, with one more trip planned after spring break.

McNeely views social service as a different type of activism. "It's not marching on Washington. It's looking at the underside, instead of what books say. It [visiting the Bronx] changed my view about the kind of things that work and don't work."

A man from the south Bronx told McNeely,

Thomas

"Educated people make decisions for poor people all the time. At least, by coming to visit, this group of educated people will be able to make decisions based on reality."

Sarah Peterson '91 went on another trip that the chaplain's office organized -- to Harlan County, Kentucky, one of the poorest counties in the state. "I went there with the attitude that what needs to be done is modernization. However, you have to work within their framework. You can't look at their way of life as inferior. Our notions of progress and efficiency don't have the same importance there," she said.

Peterson was part of a group of 20 students that Chaplain Carol Pepper took to the Appalachian coal mining community in 1988. The students spent a week of their spring break in Cranks Creek, Kentucky, working at a "survival center" and performing various public service projects like painting, carpentry, and cleaning.

The group split up daily into several small groups to work on individual projects. According to Mike Reisman '90, the group learned that there are definite limits to what 20 college students can do in a week's time. Although the results of their work were sometimes obvious, as in the case of a newly painted house, most of the benefits were less visible.

Last year was the second time a trip to Appalachia had been organized. This year, 39 students will return.

McNeely said she was initially disappointed that she did not see open activism at Williams when she first came here. "You see a lot more issues at a big university, but over the year I've been here I've met many concerned students."

Often, McNeely said, students don't know how to get involved. Such trips to the world outside Williamstown give students a chance to respond to needs that they think they can do something about.

Members of the recently formed anti-abortion group plan to network with similar organizations on other campuses. (Isackson)

Students explore nonviolent alternatives

by Ann Mantil

Both time and place seem to work against the activism of Williams students. The eighties present a different ideological climate and set of problems than the volatile sixties, while the geographical location of Williamstown makes many students feel far removed from the national and international issues inspiring other campuses to protest.

However, students here have taken almost complete responsibility for a course that deals with the world's problems and possible solutions. Nonviolence and Social Change, an experimental and cross-disciplinary studies course, is in its seventh year at Williams. The class has no professors; students take turns "facilitating" discussions with the aid of student teaching assistants.

"The course was first organized by Jeff Sultar '84. 'A friend and I would get into these discussions about different issues, and we knew that there were ways to come up with answers, but we didn't have time," he said. "We looked at different books and readings, and thought that a: this stuff was more important than anything we were studying, and b: we'd never get to it because of our other academic requirements."

The syllabus is put together by the student teaching assistants each year. This year, the course began with a look at the educational philosophy behind a student-run course, and then dealt with nonviolence theory. Readings included Henry David Thoreau, Mahatma Gandhi and Martin Luther King, Jr.

Students are now looking at the application of this theory to contemporary issues like ethnic diversity, women's liberation and gay liberation. The course finishes with a look at nonviolence as a practical method of defense. "We say, 'here are social problems, and one of the problems is that we don't see nonviolence as a possible solution,'" said Ben Pearlman '89, one of this year's TAs.

"We discuss nonviolence as a technique for changing things we see in society," Mary Richardson '91, who is currently enrolled in the course, said. As examples of how nonviolent protest might work at Williams, she cited taking over the dean's office and boycotting corporations in protest of investment and environmental policies.

"The everyday applications of nonviolence take a lot of getting used to," Charley Rardin '91, another student in the course, said. "We're given so few models of it that we think it only applies to these huge movements. Sometimes it's hard to bring it down to a personal level."

Students also consider other methods for acting in the world around them. "I personally have always been dissatisfied with the title of the course," Pearlman said. "It's a course on social change, and nonviolence is one part of that."

"I think [nonviolence and social change] work well together," Cynthia Alldredge '91, another of this year's seven TAs, said. "One is a way of reacting to problems, the other is the problems itself, all the -isms in our society."

However, the application of material discussed in class to the real world is sometimes difficult. "Sometimes we get into feeling like we're a bunch of privileged kids sitting around talking about things we don't know much about," Rardin said. "But on the other hand, we are making an effort. No, we're not blacks in South Africa, but we try to imagine what it would be like if we were."

"This college as a whole is frustrating in terms of activism," Richardson said. "But it's [the course] productive in that you have to work out your own personal feelings in order to be a true activist."

Alldredge said that she would like to see the course focus more on how nonviolence applies to current national and world situations. "It involves learning how to propose ideas in a creative way — because seeking out nonviolent alternatives is a creative process. You have to find a form that works with the environment you're working in."

There is a recognition that the methods of activism have changed from decades past, according to Richardson. "In the sixties, activism was outside the mainstream. Within the course and Williamstown, activism is within the established channels. People in this college generally have some sort of economic and political power — there isn't the same sort of enthusiasm as wanting to go out and get yourions. It brings to the forefront things like problems with relations on campus, why people act the way they do. It gives you a set of tools that you can use to work out these problems."

"The initial thing is learning what context other people are coming from," Alldredge agreed. "The class is really arming you to be able to discuss things with people who don't have the same viewpoint."

The student-run format of the course is also a merit, according to Sultar. "You learn that you can create your own agenda, and find ther means of educating the community."

Students agreed that not having a professor in the class was very beneficial. "I think it's a lot more relaxed," Nancy Hearne '90 said. "You're not always searching for the answer the professor's looking for. You're thinking things through as you go along."

"A lot of students feel much freer to say things and put some of themselves into the course. There's a sense that together you're getting at the issues," Pearlman said. "You're not quite as intimidated."

The course is conducted under an agreement of confidentiality, so that anything personal brought up in discussion will be kept within the walls of the classroom. Alldredge said that the diversity of the students' backgrounds gives an added dimension to the course's dynamics. "We bring our families' attitudes and those of the communities where we grew up."

However, Richardson said that the diversity of students is not what she would like. "There's a certain range, but it certainly doesn't go too far right...We're lacking in ethnic and economic diversity, like Williams as a whole. We don't have as many perspectives as we'd like — it would be nice to hear about these things from someone who has lived that."

"There are some drawbacks," Rardin said, adding that he would not unreservedly recommend the course to everyone. "You sometimes get frustrated with how little you're dealing in reality, how removed we all are from these contexts. And if you don't put enough into it, if you're expecting an answer, then there's a problem."

Sultar said that the course was geared towards students from all kinds of backgrounds. "The first year, the course was mostly 'activists.' But in the second year, there was a broad range. It doesn't matter where you are on the spectrum — the course is not indoctrinating people into the peace movement. It empowers you to act on whatever you feel is a concern of yours."

David Downs '91, Amy Butler '91 and Matt Gable '91 discuss nonviolence as a means of acting on social problems in the student-run course, Nonviolence and Social Change. (Steinman)

The everyday applications of nonviolence take a lot of getting used to. We're given so few models of it that we think it only applies to these huge geopolitical movements. Sometimes it's hard to bring it down to a personal level.'

self arrested."

"We've been told that everyone is pretty happy, that we don't have to worry about things too much," Alldredge said. "In the sixties, people were much more anxious."

She said that one of the course's goals was to show students that activism is not out of place in the eighties. "Hopefully it involved opening your eyes to what's going on, making you realize that you can express your ideas, that you can change someone's opinions a little bit. So that you're not just cynical and depressed about what's going on, but feel that you have some place in making changes that you want to occur."

Pearlman also said that the course changes a student's way of looking at other classes and the campus environment. "It enables you to look at other courses in a different light and see what you're learning as another's opinanswers to your own questions. Whatever they [students who take the course] become involved with, they're actors, not people being acted upon."

Each student writes four position papers, facilitates discussion several times, and completes a final project in the course of the semester. The project can be anything from a paper to performance art to fiction or poetry. Each student has a faculty sponsor, who serves as an advisor and helps in the final evaluation of the student.

"The project is an effort to bring all this theory into something that's real for you," Rardin said.

Richardson said she hoped that the project would help in taking what students are learning outside the classroom. "Part of the course is raising these issues among our friends and families. The final projects may give us a fur-

Kurt Tauber

Activism in Williamstown

Professor of Political Science Kurt Tauber has been at Williams since 1960.

He served as Gaudino scholar from 1984 to 1988.

Record interview by Helen Matthews

RECORD: You used to be the Gaudino scholar, and in that capacity you worked with students and faculty on proposals to improve the college academically and socially. What was your experience with students in that context? How willing were they to change things around them?

TAUBER: Let me first correct a little something that you said. My interest was not primarily oriented towards social life in college, but the intellectual life. I simply felt that the intellectual climate on this campus left a good deal to be desired.

As a matter of fact, this question doesn't on the face of it strike me as having much to do with student activism. It does, I guess, maybe have more to do with it than I first thought because precisely what struck me so powerfully was the absence of passion, the absence of commitment, the absence of taking ideas seriously, taking themselves seriously, taking each other seriously. The relative absence doesn't mean there aren't any people doing it. There are a good many, but I would like to see and continue to like to see many more.

So, my charge to the committee that I set up, what became known as the Gaudino Committee, was essentially to think about the ways in which we can make the intellectual life, the discourse, the dialogue, the multiologue on this campus very much more vibrant and less remotely, abstractly objective. We have students sitting around endlessly discussing the virtues of Proust as against Stendhal and analyze The Charterhouse of Parma and whatever with great intellectual fervor, without being in the least affected by it. It's simply a form of discourse that's part of the academic game, and you just play.

To me intellectual life either has consequences for you and your life and the way you structure your own reality and yourself in it, or else it's merely a kind of adornment of an upper-middle class upbringing. That to me is of no importance whatever.

RECORD: How aware do you think the Williams community is of local and national issues? Do you feel that if people do hold strong opinions, they're willing to back those up with action?

TAUBER: No...Keep in mind, we are dealing with what arguably is probably the top fifth of the top one percent of the American population...we are clearly dealing here with a minute fraction of the population. Given that, I find the level of information, the level of interest absolutely disastrous.

Whether it's a matter of interest or a matter of time I'm not sure, but overwhelmingly students get their information not from reading a good daily paper, let alone from reading good background stories in opinion journals — they get it off the tube. They get it off the garbage that's being spread around by the Cronkites of this world...which is pure bilge. That's the best part of it. Other people don't get around to watching the nightly news cast and they don't even know what the hell has happened. Then in terms of background, in terms of having a sense of the history of a thing, that's virtually non-existent. The historical knowledge on this campus is catastrophic.

'If I were a young radical, no way would I want to come to Williams. What am I going to do, bury myself here?'

RECORD: I think some people see the campus as predominately liberal, predominately liberal students as well as professors. Do you feel that the lack of ideological conflict here is a factor that contributes to the apathy of the campus?

TAUBER: We have in our department a colleague, [Assistant Professor of Political Science] John Drew, who strongly identifies with conservative students. He has outraged a number of people by his constant ideologizing of issues. Even though I strongly disagree substantively with him...I've never thought of that as a negative aspect. I've thought as a matter of fact that his strong sense of the absence of an articulated conservative position was right...I thought that his loud screams about it were well taken. I enjoy that.

There is an absolute ideology, which I think is clearly oriented towards a particular political position, which suggests that the campus is some kind of a dispassionate, nonpolitical Shangri-La, or some kind of an island out in the ocean of the everyday world to which we do not belong. And that's bilge. This campus,

'Even in the heyday of student activism, the 60's and the first year or two of the 70's, the huge tidal waves that seemed to be engulfing Columbia and Berkeley turned out to be ripples by the time they came rushing back to the backwaters of the Purple Valley.'

its financial roots, its orientation, its mission are thoroughly imbued with very clear political and ideological direction. It has a political and ideological mission, and to argue that it does not is itself part of the ideology of liberalism.

RECORD: What place do you think student activism, in the sense of groups oriented towards facilitating social change and in the sense of ideological debate, has on a small, isolated campus?

TAUBER: The fact that we are an isolated college already makes activism very difficult. That is, even in the heyday of student activism, what I consider certainly the most exciting years around here, the 60's and the first year or two of the 70's, even then the huge tidal waves that seemed to be engulfing Columbia and Berkeley, turned out to be ripples by the time they came rushing back to the backwaters of the Purple Valley. Even the things that we consider here to be of major, some even think of apocalyptic import — the takeover of Hopkins Hall by the black students — is nothing to compare to what were daily events on the campuses of this nation.

Steinman

So, being stuck away has something to do with it. One does lose touch. The communication with other colleges is very much less effective. The demonstration effect is not as immediate. Obviously if our school were located in the Boston/Cambridge area there would be a great deal more of it because communication is almost instantaneous and there is a great deal more solidarity and so on. So the activism in terms of geography is likely to be very much more subdued, less radical, more polite and so

RECORD: If Williams College did not have a predominately apathetic student body, what sort of issues would they be concerned about?

TAUBER: There are so many failures in a society that is so rich and which could be doing so much and which does so little. There is a proliferation, a plurality, an enormous quilt of various kinds of outrage: outrage at foreign policy, outrage at our administration, outrage with sexism and racism, outrage even on the part of the conservatives with what they consider to be the outrageous liberalism of the faculty.

The opinions on this campus reflect the opinions of this country in the sense of which American ideological controversy runs the gamut from a to b. No one who has ever been to Europe does not return amazed at how much wider the discussion is in Europe.

RECORD: Since there is so little activism on campus, when something does happen like the black students taking over Hopkins Hall, do you think it gets an inordinate amount of attention?

TAUBER: Of course. You don't think for a minute we would have had either a visit from outside experts on our minority hiring program, let alone have a multi-cultural center or anything else if the people interested in that had not acted...

It is of course absolutely, actively discouraged by the college administration. Any college administration would like, quite understandably, nothing better than to have a quiet, studious, unproblematical campus. Because everything else is a great headache and since the college has all kinds of constituents to worry about apart from the law...they would much prefer to keep things on an even keel...

As you up the ante for so-called radical action or unpopular action administratively, you are going to be effectively squeaking it. On the whole every administration in one way or another will try that, and if it can't do it will go into spin control. They'll try to temporize, moderate, negotiate and do all kinds of things to get the problem taken care of as quickly as it can and get it brushed under the rug.

Activism Through the Years

The Great Rebellion of 1868

Ephs of old protested perfect attendance rule

by Dan Skwire

For most Williams students, skipping a class every now and then is not a matter of major concern. Few professors will begrudge students the right to sleep in occasionally on cold winter mornings. In 1868, however, the faculty was not so tolerant. Fed up with chronic student absences, they passed a strict attendance rule which resulted in the infamous Great Rebellion.

Life as an Eph was very different in the mid-nineteenth century. The entire enrollment of the college was about 200 students, a semester's tuition was $15 and room cost an extravagant $3 a term. Instead of seminars, students attended recitations, repeating their lessons by rote to austere professors.

Despite the low cost of a college education in those days, the years following the Civil War were difficult ones for Williams. Enrollment had fallen steadily since 1853, and many professors had expressed discontent with College President Mark Hopkins' educational philosophy. Hopkins felt that strict rules bred antagonism between students and faculty, and he believed in a very low-key approach to student discipline. Students, however, took advantage of Hopkins' lax discipline.

"Many students, on slight and insufficient grounds, have been repeatedly and protractedly absent from college duties," Secretary of the Faculty Franklin Carter wrote, "and thus from recitations, much of the value of which depends upon consecutive attendance." Disgusted by the number of unpunished student absences, Carter began to push for stricter attendance rules. In 1868, Hopkins named Carter to a committee to study the attendance problem.

On November 6, 1868, the committee announced that the faculty had passed a rule stating that every absence from a recitation, excused or unexcused, would count as a zero on the student's record. It was left entirely up to the discretion of the professor if the student would be allowed a makeup, with the obvious implication that such a retest would be a rare exception.

The students made no secret of the fact that they found the rule abhorrent. More problematic than the rule itself, however, was the fact that it had been passed without the knowledge of Hopkins, who was lecturing in Ohio at the time. The students apparently felt that Hopkins would never have approved of such a strict rule, and that the faculty had underhandedly taken advantage of his absence to impose the new regulation on the students.

As a result, the students submitted a petition to the faculty, reading in part, "Whereas, we, students of Williams College, regard the imposition of this rule as a blow aimed at our personal honor and manhood; therefore, Resolved, that we students protest against said rule and call upon the Faculty...to annul it."

The petition was submitted to Professor of Rhetoric John Bascom, the senior member of the faculty in Hopkins' absence. Bascom refused to consider the petition at all until Hopkins had come back, meaning that the new rule would remain in effect. His failure to consider the petition infuriated the students and was the major factor leading them to rebellion.

"Bascom's refusal...to consider their eminently fair proposition to delay the enforcement of the rule until the president's return, increased the excitement and indignation," Professor of Political Economy Arthur Latham Perry wrote. "If any one were to be singled out as a special target at the time for the ill-feeling of the students, John Bascom...should have been that man."

On November 10, the students met to decide their course of action. Marshall Hapgood, a freshman at Williams in 1868, recorded his impressions of that day and the subsequent rebellion in his diary.

"Today will be a great day in the history of Williams College," Hapgood wrote on the tenth. "After Chapel exercises at night we have a general College meeting and everyone except three of the 170 or so upwards members sign a resolution to withdraw. So I consider myself no longer a member of the College."

The 1868 Williams faculty, pictured above, decided to give students a zero for each missed recitation. (Williamsiana photo)

The students presented another resolution to the faculty, announcing their decision to withdraw from the college until the rule was appealed. Along with the resolution they included a promise to behave in a civilized fashion. "We as a body of young men, agree to remain in this neighborhood and abstain from all objectionable conduct, until the final settlement of our difficulties."

This promise indicated the students' faith that the return of Mark Hopkins would solve the problem. Although they wanted nothing to do with the rule, or perhaps even with the faculty that had passed it, they could not believe that their beloved president would fail to come to their aid. As a result, they were determined not to take any action that would alienate Hopkins from their cause.

The morning after the class meeting, only two students attended class. Carter, who saw that the college was beginning to get a lot of negative publicity, wrote a circular letter defending the faculty's actions to the parents of the rebellious students and many of the leading Eastern newspapers.

"We deem it eminently fair," he wrote, "that absence...should carry with it the presumption of ignorance of the ground passed over, rather than the opposite presumption of knowledge, and that it should therefore affect the standing of the absentee."

On November 14, the students met with the faculty, but did not reach any satisfactory conclusions. An undergraduate committee recommended that the protest be continued and that four Williams students be sent to Cornell to investigate the possibility of that school accepting those who had withdrawn from Williams.

On Sunday, November 15, students and faculty alike rejoiced at the long-awaited return of Mark Hopkins. His first action was to announce that he would meet with students the next morning to discuss the situation.

When Hopkins rose to speak in the chapel on Monday morning, the students paid close attention. His major point was that the college was governed by the faculty, and that if the students had any quarrel with the rules, they could submit petitions to the faculty or trustees, or they could leave the school peacefully. He pointed out that the students could no more withdraw from the government of the college than from the government of the country.

"We have now the same power over you for expulsion as ever....I would sooner see this college raised from its foundations than to recognize these principles on which you are now acting," Hopkins ended his lecture by saying that the doors of recitation rooms would be open the next day at four o'clock, and that he would be willing to aid those students who wished to go elsewhere.

Hopkins' words had a great effect on the students. They were disappointed that he had not condemned the attendance rule -- in fact, he had made a point of not discussing the rule. Instead, he had objected to the students' attempt to overrule the decision of the faculty.

That afternoon, the students met again, and about two-thirds of them voted to return to class the next morning. After the meeting, Hopkins walked around campus and discussed the situation with all the students he met, assuring them that he disapproved of the rule and would work to revise it. By that evening, nearly everyone had agreed to reenter the college.

"Today is an eventful day," Hapgood wrote on November 16. "There is a meeting of the students at half past two. After a great deal of talk, 69 vote not to go into recitation as usual, while the rest vote to follow the recommenda-

A different kind of activism

Struggle over fraternities dominated campus debate

by Stephanie Jones

The days of Greek life at Williams are long gone, with the Perry House initiation room serving as one of the only reminders that fraternities ever existed here. But the struggle leading to their abolition involved a campus activism far removed from what would come less than a decade later during the Vietnam War.

The fraternity system was probably the biggest issue on the Williams campus in the early sixties. One professor referred to the controversy as "the longest debate Williams has sponsored." Most of the early discussion did not center on whether or not the fraternities should exist, as nearly everyone believed they should, but how to make them more compatible with the changing role of Williams. By 1959 these efforts had achieved an anti-discrimination rule, the deferment of rushing until the sophomore year, and total opportunity, which guaranteed that every student who listed all 15 fraternities would be accepted by one.

In an article in the July, 1961 issue of the Alumni Review, Professor of History Frederick Rudolph said, "During this past year the editor of the Record as much as said that the students had abolished fraternities at Williams. This was his most perceptive observation of the year....This transformation has been gradual but steady, almost imperceptible but equally irreversible." Rudolph cited total opportunity as one of the most important factors in changing the nature of the fraternities.

Residential housing?

Some students were still dissatisfied with the fraternity system as it existed at Williams, however. In 1957, a group of 22 students wrote a pamphlet proposing that the college abolish fraternities in favor of randomly placing students in a residential housing system.

Although this proposal stirred up much controversy, no changes were made. The trustees unconditionally condemned the proposal on May 4, 1957. In their statement, they said, "This proposal, which comes from a very small segment of our student body, is obviously sincere. But it does not, in our opinion, present a convincing case. We believe that the social units on the campus are providing a useful purpose, and we hope that they will continue to do so."

An anti-fraternity petition signed by 50 students in the spring of 1961 was much more effective. The group that formulated the petition was headed by Bruce Grinnell '62, the president of Alpha Delta Phi and a junior advisor, and consisted of many fraternity officers and other student leaders.

According to Grinnell, his fraternity's denial of full membership to a Korean student caused him to become disillusioned and upset over the way fraternities operated. He met with other junior advisors to find out if they had witnessed similar events. Grinnell said that so many people felt strongly about the situation that they formed the group which eventually wrote the petition.

The document was originally presented to outgoing President James Phinney Baxter, III. "Baxter gave it short shrift. He said he came in with 15 fraternities, and he was going to leave with 15 fraternities," Grinnell said.

Blackballing

The petition criticized the discrimination of fraternities, which it said was still occurring via "black ball" voting procedures and similar systems. The students also accused fraternities of causing fragmentation of the campus, strained relations between upperclassmen and freshmen and a false system of campus values.

"Everything had been done, I think, that could be done and still keep the fraternities," Grinnell said.

According to the September 11, 1961 issue of the Williams Record, "Reactions varied from vigorous approval of the assertion that 'this is the only way we'll get anything changed' to direct condemnation of the 'movement,' with the argument that the whole thing was 'minority coercion' attempting to force the will of some on the majority who were satisfied with the existing system."

Another group formulated a counter-petition with a similar number of signatures. Incoming President John E. Sawyer agreed with the signatories of both petitions that the best course of action was the formation of a committee to study the problem.

According to Grinnell, Sawyer deserves a lot of credit for paying attention to the petition. "The people at Williams then who felt that

"We like Williams fraternities" stickers were put up all over campus in 1962 in response to the college's adoption of the recommendation of the Angevine Committee to change to a residential housing rather than a fraternity system. (1963 Gul photo) fraternities should go were a very small minority. My guess would be about 15 percent."

Committee report

The Angevine Committee, headed by Jay B. Angevine '11, was appointed by Sawyer to examine the situation. Members included nine alumni and two students. Ten had belonged to fraternities. The committee studied the problems and eventually came to the unanimous conclusion that fraternities played a "disproportionate role in undergraduate life" and prevented education from being the focus of the college.

They recommended that Williams become responsible for the housing and meals that the fraternities had been providing for a large portion of the upperclassmen. This proposal was approved by the trustees.

"It was student-initiated....[The members of the committee] really were people trying to address a problem that the students were crying out to be addressed," Professor of Chemistry J. Hodge Markgraf '52, the secretary of the committee, said.

The students responsible for the Grinnell petition had decided that the problems could no longer be solved by making minor changes in the "plumbing" of the fraternities, according to Markgraf. "I think finally they said enough of a patch on top of a patch on top of another patch."

The conclusion of the report was to a large degree unexpected, and student reaction was mixed. According to the November 1962 Alumni Review, four-fifths of fraternity members signed a petition opposing the change, which they sent to the trustees. They claimed the fraternities would not survive within the new system.

Many alumni also organized written protests of the decision. The report, however, had the support of the presidents of the College Council, the Social Council and Gargoyle Society, the three leading organizations on campus.

Bonfire pyromania

Many students resented the decision. Stickers reading "I like Williams fraternities" were put up all over campus. At a bonfire before the Wesleyan football game, students chanting "We like fraternities" burned a poster copy of the report. "The reaction of the undergraduates was certainly disappointment, and some were outraged," Grinnell said.

According to Markgraf, the decision of the committee was something of a surprise to the student body, as it was a surprise even to the committee members themselves. "We did not go into that year's analysis with the expectation that that would be the result," he said. "Surprise would probably be a mild word," Grinnell agreed.

Markgraf said that although some students were probably fearful about what the "New Williams" would mean for the future, the change was not perceived as a tragedy by most of the students.

According to an editorial in the September 26, 1962 Record, "There are few strong fraternity believers at Williams, and rituals, secrets and the rites of pledging mean little. Rather, the fraternity provides very necessary social facilities, a little better food and a group of people one comes to know by constant association. A social dormitory system can provide all but the status symbol of being 'chosen' by an 'elite' group, but the reluctance to give up the assured for the uncertain is understandable."

'I think they finally said enough of a patch on top of a patch on top of a band-aid on top of another patch.'

National news

The shock was felt not only at Williams, but all over the country. The New York Times Magazine carried a feature on the change on November 11, 1962, written by David Boroff.

"The fraternity members, for all their bombast...have a wistful sense of negotiating dying rituals....What is more important is that Williams, as the grand old fraternity school, is a bellwether for other colleges. If fraternities disappear here, they are likely to give way in many other places," the article read.

The Angevine Committee appointed a Standing Committee and five student committees, with members from both sides of the debate, to help with the transition. The Class of 1967 was the first to be entirely placed in residential houses.

The prediction by the anti-Angevine Report students that the decision would be the death knell of fraternities at Williams turned out to be accurate. After a period of phasing-out, fraternities gradually began to decline in popularity.

Part of the decline was due to the restriction on their activity. Nine of the 15 had already left

continued on page 19

President Mark Hopkins objected to the student attempt to overrule the faculty and succeeded in quelling the "rebellion." (Eclectic Magazine photo, 1857)

Fraternity rituals like the Deke House tradition pictured above, died out when fraternities were finally abolished in the 1960s. (1963 Gul photo)

Are you a member of a campus group which is oriented towards national political issues?

Are you a member of an ethnic group on campus?

How do you perceive student groups at Williams?

Are you a member of any other activist groups e.g. the Feminist Alliance, the Purple Druids, etc.?

What is the total number of activist groups you are involved with?

How much attention do you think the administration pays to student protests about campus issues?

How much concern is there on campus about national issues?

What do you see as the general attitude of the Williams campus towards protest?

How well do you think the College Council deals with student concerns and represents them to the administration?

What do you perceive to be the most important barrier against increased activism by Williams students?

About this poll

The Insider randomly selected 125 students to participate in this poll. One hundred were contacted by telephone.

The poll demonstrates that the apathy of Williams students may not be a myth. Seventy-one percent do not belong to any campus activist groups, with the definition of "activist" encompassing everything from ethnic to environmental to political groups. Students also perceive apathy among themselves; 74 percent felt that there is not enough concern on campus about national issues.

Participants were evenly divided on the question of the most significant factor in the non-involvement of Williams students, with apathy and a lack of time to get involved mentioned most frequently. Students responding that "other" reasons were responsible cited the feeling that Williamstown is too isolated for students to have any worthwhile effects, and the campus is too conservative and intolerant.

The CARE takeover of Jenness House last year called into question the relations between the administration and students. However, the majority of those surveyed believe that the administration pays a fair amount of attention to student protests about campus issues.

Years of hope, days of rage

Sixties sparked protests at Williams

by Anne Joseph

The volatile issues of civil rights and American involvement in the Vietnam War sparked a wave of unprecedented protest in college campuses around the country in the 1960's and early seventies. The wave's effects were felt even in isolated Williamstown, where students expressed their views in protests like the takeover of Hopkins Hall in the spring of 1969 and a strike protesting the invasion of Cambodia in May of the following year.

'We applaud our common effort to end this bloody war. Let's be through with this chicken shit and get on with it.'

"The Hopkins takeover, the Cambodian strike and the snack bar incident [when a black woman was refused service at the snack bar, causing student protest] represented a growing wave of student activism," said Professor of History Peter Frost, who was then an assistant dean. On Saturday, April 5, 1969, at 3:30 a.m., 34 members of the Williams Afro-American Society led by Preston Washington '70 occupied Hopkins Hall. Their goals were to increase awareness of the special needs of black students and to improve the environment for blacks at the college. The group presented a list of 15 "non-negotiable" demands to the administration.

Later that day, a group of more than 200 white students gathered in front of Chapin Hall to demonstrate support of the black students. The following afternoon, the College Council voted in favor of granting the demands, and that evening 200 more students joined to rally for the black students.

"There was no typical student. Some must have been opposed, but said little. The initial white reaction was one of sympathy and support," Frost said. Williams responded to the takeover by suspending classes for the first time in its history, reserving Monday and Tuesday to discuss the incident.

On Tuesday, the students left Hopkins Hall.

Although not all of their demands were met, they said they believed the takeover had realized the underlying purpose of the demands, to make the college aware of the problems of blacks at Williams.

During the next semester, a strong anti-war movement began on campus. On October 14, 1969, a planned protest known as Vietnam Moratorium Day took place at colleges throughout the nation. At Williams the event included a candle-lit march and a community-wide canvass to protest American involvement in Vietnam. The Williams activities were organized by Joe Sensenbrenner '70.

The anti-war protests escalated, and on May 5, 1970, members of the Williams community went on strike. Faculty members and over 800 students met the night before and decided to stop classes for at least two days in opposition to President Richard Nixon's actions in Southeast Asia. Similar strikes occurred at colleges all over the country.

The next day, the faculty supported an indefinite end to classes. Students were given the option of deferring final exams until the following October, and seniors could accept a pass/fail mark in their classes.

During the May 4 meeting, the students and faculty voted on three demands which were proposed as the basis of a national student strike by Tom Hayden in a speech at New Haven.

The first, a demand to end the invasion of Cambodia and renewed bombing of North Vietnam and withdraw U.S. forces from Southeast Asia immediately, passed by a vote of 1054-141. The second demand, for the end of the "systematic oppression" of political dissenters, such as the Chicago Eight and the Black Panthers, met more opposition but passed in a toned-down version. The final demand, to end defense contracts with universities and abolish ROTC programs, failed to gain majority support.

"We applaud our common effort to end this bloody war. Let's be through with this chicken shit and get on with it," Professor of History Robert Waite declared to thunderous applause and a standing ovation the next evening, when students and faculty gathered to begin work on protest campaigns.

Not all students were in favor of the actions of the anti-war group, however. The Young

Hundreds of Williams students went to Washington in 1969 to march in protest of the Vietnam War. (1970 Gul photo)

Professors of Political Science George Marcus and David Tabb.

"I was so engaged in that project. About 100 students got involved. It lasted for about a week, when we ran into some roadblocks," Marcus said.

The major problem was that although the labor unions wanted to strike, they wanted to strike without legal penalty. Yet the corporations refused, citing fears of stockholder retaliation. "We folded the tent and went on to other things," Marcus said.

Williams students also opposed involvement in Vietnam through an anti-war march on Washington that involved over 400 students, a policy of draft resistance and a letter-writing campaign to Congress.

Yet the excitement dwindled throughout the summer when few students kept in contact with the movements started at the college. The front page of the September 18, 1970 Record read "Students return to classes; activism wanes" and continued, "Despite the optimism of many students, the campus has seen a backlash against overt political demonstrations." The faculty voted against students taking time off to campaign prior to the November elections.

Marcus said the perception that the 1960s were much more active than the present era is not valid for the whole time period. "It was quiet in 1967, in late 1970 and in 1971. Some years were still quiet."

The Williams faculty and students were surprisingly united in their protest of the war. Frost said he remembered that during the May 6, 1970 meeting at Chapin, a few students tried to separate the faculty from the students.

"We resisted. We were united in the common purpose. Education could not continue when our position in Vietnam was deteriorating. Both the students and the faculty were engaged in education." After Professor Waite's speech, any move to alienate the faculty continued on page 19

On May 5, 1970, members of the Williams community went on strike in opposition to President Richard Nixon's actions in Southeast Asia. (Sato) 12/The Insider March 14, 1989

Symbols of anti-apartheid

Students urged universities to divest

by Bill Savadove

In the mid-1980's, two catch-words found their way into the language of campus activism -- divestment and anti-apartheid. Following a national lead, students at Williams erected shanties and crosses to protest the plight of South African blacks.

No one is quite sure who invented the shanty

as a political symbol, though Rob Jones of the American Committee on Africa -- the New York-based group that has helped organize many anti-apartheid efforts in the U.S. -- remembers someone coming up with the idea at a meeting as early as 1984.

"The idea didn't develop in a vacuum," Jones recalled. "It came out of regional conferences in which people sat down and said, 'What can we do?'"

In those days, of course, the anti-apartheid movement here was looking for ways to publicize itself. After enjoying a brief period of popularity in the late seventies, movement activists had been reduced to trying to get speech time at nuclear freeze rallies.

But the awarding of the Nobel Prize to South African bishop Desmond Tutu and a spate of attendant publicity in late 1984 abruptly caught students' attention. In November, campuses from Oberlin to Wesleyan began erupting in divestment protests.

By April 1985, more than 100 campuses had joined the movement and tactics escalated. Students at Berkeley, Rutgers, the University of California at Santa Cruz and Columbia, among others, held sit-ins. Syracuse University students pitched a tent city.

But on April 21, 1985, students at Cornell

University opted for something sturdier than tents and built what apparently was the first campus shanty.

"We built it as a symbol of solidarity with the people of South Africa who were forced to live in similar structures all their lives," said Brett Beeman, then a

Cornell freshman who helped build the structure.

The original wood and scrap metal shanty was called an "Inhumanities Library," and was used to distribute anti-apartheid pamphlets.

"We were looking for an ongoing symbol," Beeman said, "that the administration would have to face every day."

Williams students joined the burgeoning protest movement on April 25, 1986. Approximately 100 students helped construct four shanties on Baxter lawn to protest apartheid and to urge divestment by the college.

Eight days later, the WAAC (Williams Anti-

The Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition placed crosses on Baxter lawn in 1986 to commemorate those who had died in the struggle to end apartheid. (Camp)

Apartheid Coalition) removed the shanties after President Francis Oakley agreed to enlarge the college's collection of written materials pertaining to divestment, to provide additional funding for speakers on divestment, and to allot space in the fall Alumni Review for debate on divestment.

But the protest was not over. Next fall, on October 21, another symbol of protest appeared on Baxter lawn -- 159 wooden crosses.

"The crosses are in commemoration of the people who have died in South Africa in the last three and a half years in the struggle to end apartheid," WAAC member Charles Cochran '88 said.

According to the October 21 issue of The Record, WAAC was motivated to erect the crosses out of dissatisfaction with the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility's (ACSR) conservative reaction to the Trustees' "disinvestment advocacy" decision three weeks previously.

In response to the actions of WAAC, the administration issued the following statement: "At the moment this form of expression does not interfere with the rights of others to speak and assemble freely. As in the past, we expect responses to demonstrations of this type to be focused on the issues they attempt to raise." During the time the crosses were up, college security provided a continuous watch.

By January, 1987, most of the crosses had disappeared. After sparking a brief flurry of debate early in the fall, the issue of the crosses dropped quietly out of sight.

Nationwide, the shanty remains a symbol of protest, but not necessarily against apartheid. Anti-Soviet, anti-Zionist, anti-rape and even anti-shanty shanties have sprung up on campuses this year.

"Symbols are always fluid," noted Todd Gilin, a University of California-Berkeley professor who authored The Sixties: Years of Hope, Days of Rage. "People are always adapting a symbol with one meaning and giving it another."

On October 1, the members of Washington University's Students Against Apartheid voluntarily dismantled their shanty, although the university has yet to divest itself of all its stock in firms that do business in South Africa.

"This doesn't mean the shanty didn't serve its purpose," said SAA spokesman Gary Nelson. "It also doesn't mean we're giving up. It simply means we're trying another tactic."

The Williams shantytown stayed on Baxter lawn for eight days in 1986. (Somers)

Note: The information in this article was compiled from back issues of the Record and from College Press Service articles.

The Insider March 14, 1989/13

Setting Campus Agendas

Parties at Williams

Democrats and Republicans -- getting out the vote

by Peggy Kohn

"Republican does not mean neo-Nazi."

--John Nicholson '90, member of the Garfield Republican Club

"Because the campus is largely Democratic, people take it for granted."

--Duniya Williams '90, member of the College Democrats

While these voices come from different parts of the ideological spectrum, students in both major campus political organizations see problems in their goals of encouraging discussion and educating Williams about political concerns.

Compared to the political activism which rocked college campuses in the 1960s, these problems may seem relatively trivial. However, members and potential members on both left and right complain about a lack of action on the part of both groups.

Reed said that one could not define the College Democrats as an activist organization. To be truly activist, he said, an organization must work outside of traditional political structures; the two-party system, however, is about as structured as one can imagine.

He drew, however, a distinction between being an activist organization and being active. During the fall election campaign, the Democrats endorsed incumbent Sherwood Guernsey against Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew for a seat in the State House of Representatives. Drew criticized the measure heavily at the time.

The College Democrats also assisted in the fall voter registration drive and recently sponsored a debate between Bernard Sanders, the socialist mayor of Burlington, Vermont, and Professor of Government, Emeritus, James MacGregor Burns about the role the far left should play in the revitalizing the party.

"Partially we function as a liaison between the National Democratic Party and Williams College...Also [we provide] a really easy opportunity for people to get involved in politics," Reed said.

The group is in a transitional period, according to Reed. "We're establishing an institutional identity," he said.

Duniya Williams '90 cited organizational problems as the root of the Democrats' limited visibility on campus. In the past, meetings were very sporadic. After the excitement of the election, membership dropped significantly, she said. Thus one of the major goals for this semester is to increase membership in the organization.

To do that, Williams said, there needs to be a unifying cause to fight for. "At election time there was one issue. Now what is there to stand up for? People feel like they need to make an impact [in order to get involved]," she said. "We're looking for one issue to attract people."

This issue may be the legality of abortion.

cluding two Garfield members, attended a conference sponsored by the Washington, D.C.-based Institute for Educational Affairs. The conference dealt with strategies for forming conservative newspapers. Garfield Vice President Brian Carlson '91, chair of the Williams delegation, is looking into the possibility of developing such a paper, independent of the Republican Club.

With Republicans in the minority at Williams, members of the club said that the organization's function is primarily aimed at communication of and campus education have a reputation, maybe well deserved, [as] a frat of white males."

He said that the club hopes to debunk this stereotype through increasing its female and minority membership, adding that although this membership is on the rise, the club still does not represent the broad base of support received nationally by the Republican party.

The Garfield Club is also tackling what Howie said is a shunning of conservative ideas in the classroom. "I think there's a certain type of bias in certain departments, [such as] Economics and Political Science. There are few conservative courses. There can be a liberal/conservative slant to classes."

Both students and faculty are guilty of perpetuating this anti-conservatism, according to club members. In addition, Howie said that a lack of strong conservative voices among the faculty and administration leads to what some members see as an overwhelmingly liberal slant to school policy.

Another problem for the Garfield Republicans is internal factionalization. Because the club is one of the few forums for conservative voices, it represents a wide political spectrum.

Like the Democrats, the club aims at promoting unity within its ranks. While the club charter only requires majority approval, members said they try to reach a consensus whenever possible. One recent exception was the club's decision to support the MassPIRG re-affirmation drive. The 10-4 vote represented a rift among vocal members.

Howie also said that a mailing on child care planned for April should cause some acrimonious debate within the organization over the issue of how far the government should go in providing national child care legislation.

This debate, however, is one of the central purposes of the organizations, according to members. "Everyone holds a different opinion. The purpose is discussion. It gives all different points of view...It helps everyone," Nicholson said.

To work well, groups emphasizing communication and the exchange of ideas obviously need people, and Howie could have been speaking for both Democrats and Republicans when he expressed the frustrations caused by low membership. "There's a great body of people in the middle who are not aware or don't care. I wish more people would get involved."

about conservative views.

"We provide a forum for moderate and conservative voices to express their points of view in an organized fashion," Garfield President Bob Howie '90 said.

"I feel our purpose is to increase awareness of conservative philosophy and bring to the campus' attention issues being ignored by the liberals on campus," member John Nicholson '89 said. "Our main tools are letters to the campus, letters to the editors."

Howie stressed the need for educating a campus which has many stereotypes about conservatives in general and the Garfield Republicans in particular. "Unfortunately, we derogatory terms."

Kevin Hinton '89, who participated in the Jenness occupation, agreed that many students had difficulty accepting the actions of activist groups.

"A takeover just isn't envisioned as polite. People thought we were creating a good guy/bad guy situation, when in fact there was no bad guy. People believed that not only was the occupation not necessary, but it wasn't an acceptable way to put pressure on the administration."

It is difficult to think of any group whose actions have been resisted more by the student body than the Williams Bisexual Gay and Lesbian Union (BGLU). The organization's glass case in Baxter has been smashed and many of its posters defaced.

However, Chris Nealon '89, a BGLU member, said that the intolerance is not universal. "Many people on the Williams campus are willing to accept gay students as another special interest group. There's also always a degree of hostility, and homophobia is by far the most sanctioned form of hatred, certainly on college campuses today."

Opinion

Democrats focus on meeting needs of majority

by Matt Reed '90

The College Democrats this year have sponsored a debate between a socialist mayor and a Pulitzer-prize winner, issued multiple-author newsletters on issues of the day, presented a U.S. congressman, fought the good fight (successfully) for Sherwood Guernsey against John Drew, and participated with everyone else in a voter drive. The editor from the Record who asked me to write this article, however, asked me to address why the Garfield Republicans have more power than the Democrats on campus.

That she could be so matter-of-factly wrong got me thinking. Thinking back over the last few years, I couldn't remember a single issue on which the Republicans won the fight. (Examples: affirmative action, minority course requirement, John Drew for state representative.) They moaned a lot, and got a lot of press, but are also on an impressive losing streak. This had no effect on the editor. Somehow, their losing was more powerful than our action.

An answer occurred to me when I heard someone complain for the umpteenth time about the "liberal bias" on campus. Bush complained endlessly about "Massachusetts liberals," and this is Massachusetts. Williams, as evidenced by the last election, does have a "liberal" slant, and therefore a lot of people see the Democrats as redundant. Garfield stands out as the self-proclaimed protectors of a dying way of thought, an almost embarrassingly reactive white-men-against-the-world mentality that alienates even "moderates" on campus. Democrats here are so appropriate that we almost recede into the wallpaper -- ten well-executed programs pale in the memory next to just one well-chosen reactionary statement in an S.U. box.

This circumstance, while basically good for us (we win more often), does present the problem of establishing an institutional identity. We've been taking steps in this direction, most recently establishing weekly lunch meetings Thursdays in the Stage Room of Greylock. We are also continuing to encourage politically active liberals on campus to write articles for our newsletter, whether they are members of the organization or not. In short, we are trying to encourage the old political idea of participation in some form; some people like discussions, some like writing, most don't like rigidly programmatic approaches. As a coalition, the party does not seek to be an all-consuming part of the member's life, but simply one facet of somebody's political activity.

As a political party, we both want and need to be inclusive. The unique role of the Democratic party on the left is as a place where people of all races, sexual orientations, ages, religions, and the like can come together not to become the same, but to work together constructively for common goals. As a practi-

Republicans battle campus stigma of conservatism

by Robert Howie '90

Student activism should take an important role for all college students. This activism can take many different forms that range from subtle and quiet things to violent and confrontational methods. Most students tend to think of activism as reserved for more liberal students against a "conservative" power structure. At Williams however, activism runs both ways, and this is one of the most positive aspects of the college. The biggest problem is that only a small percentage of the students get involved on either side. I will review here some of the problems conservative students encounter on this campus while trying to be active.

One of the first drawbacks to conservative action is the perception that since conservatives are in charge, they don't need to protest anything. First, the school is not controlled by conservatives, at least from the perspective of conservative Williams students. Second, plenty of school policies can be opposed from a conservative point of view. An example from last year involved the proposed minority course requirement. Conservative students circulated petitions and tried to drum up support against the administration position. Conservatives at Williams are not trying to preserve the status quo, but rather change policies. For example, conservative students are trying to change hiring policies for professors to end the liberal bias that exists in some departments. Conservatives are actively seeking change at Williams.

Conservatives on campus run into stereotypes just like any other groups. Last spring, conservatives organized a demonstration where toys were placed around Baxter Hall.

These toys represented Russian bombs which were being used in Afghanistan to maim and kill small children. Many students reacted as if conservatives had no business complaining about human rights. Some students believed that all conservatives supported power-hungry, right-wing, fascist dictators and therefore should not gripe. This example reflects a larger problem. Conservatives are only supposed to be concerned about certain problems. Williams conservative activists are as varied as their counterparts on the left. Some are concerned about the military, others about health care and homelessness, and others about the environment.

One of the most common ways of confronting conservatives is to attack motives or to use names to denigrate them. Frequently, conservative activists are labeled racists, sexists, militarists, fascists, or other names with equally bad connotations. This name calling is damaging to all campus dialogue. It dissuades people from debating and discussing honestly because fear and intimidation are used to quiet them. It also poisons the air of the college and creates many bad feelings. Most conservative activism at Williams is positive and contributes to rich campus dialogue. The name calling method of response serves only to discredit both sides.

One other problem true conservative activists face comes from people on the far right. Some, in the name of conservatism, deface posters, write racial slurs, or otherwise vandalize property. These actions are not conservative, they are racist and disgraceful. Thinking cal matter, the national identification the name "Democrat" gives is a useful tool for campus activists in hooking up with speakers and communication networks nationally, such as the candidate information tables we sponsored during the primaries.

Williams in particular is a challenge because it has a fair number of students and faculty who consider themselves to the left of the party, who prefer us to Republicans but see the distinction as splitting hairs. As a group, we have tried to address this critique, most recently by sponsoring a debate between James MacGregor Burns and Bernard Sanders on the topic. Additionally, judging by the experience of several of the members of the campus group, working within the party and outside it are not mutually exclusive options. We are open to all, and want to include as many as we can. This includes those (such as myself) critical of the rightward drift of the national party in the last decade, and even those who are somewhat uneasy about joining a party.

Now that the election is over, and attendance has dropped back down to the faithful, we need to redouble our efforts. In between elections is a particularly good time to focus on local and campus issues (such as the abortion panel we are currently organizing for sexual awareness week), and that means we need people more than anything else. With strong student involvement and participation, we can provide a coherent liberal voice often implied, but rarely stated, in campus politics.

people must distinguish between these obnoxious thugs and mainstream conservatives. For campus dialogue to flourish, these fringe elements must be isolated and their destructive methods stopped. They injure the reputation of conservatives and harm the whole community. All activists should be allowed to express themselves in a conservative manner, but there is no place at Williams for racism, homophobia or vandalism.

Despite these problems faced by conservatives, namely balancing the stereotypes of the left with the real bigots on the far right, activism has and will continue to flourish at Williams. To make a point, both conservative and liberal groups have gone to the students with building seizures, petitions, marches, and demonstrations. Williams has been fortunate not to have encountered the nasty problems of Dartmouth, the University of Massachusetts, or other schools. Activism here is more retrained, perhaps, but healthy. More students should involve themselves in campus debates.

With mutual respect and healthy disagreement, both sides can make their cases to the Williams community. Activism is a sign of student awareness and concern. A student can work with MassPIRG, the Feminist Alliance, SOAR, the College Democrats, the Garfield Republicans, Williams Against Abortion on Demand, or other groups. Activists on both sides must take care to keep debate focused on real problems and not degenerate to insults and unproductive mudslinging. If liberals and conservatives keep this respect, Williams will continue to be a campus where constructive dialogue and positive activism are the rules and not the exceptions.

Students and faculty discuss tolerance and involvement in protest

continued from page 3

as a threat to the life they want to lead, so they act instead in ways to improve their job prospects -- to be more marketable."

Cressman, however, said that Williams students are not as unenthusiastic as they are often made out to be. "There's an initial reaction of apathy, but once you present the students with something they can do easily, allowing them to participate on whatever level they can, Williams students are willing to get involved."

Some students have complained that the recent protests and demonstrations at Williams 14/The Insider March 14, 1989 have generated an unsympathetic response and met with vocal opposition from others. Actions such as the CARE takeover and the body-image protests have received the label of "radical" or "leftist."

"People want to maintain the monotone norm, and if anybody says anything then it's already a problem," Christy Calame '89, co-coordinator of the body-image protest in the fall, said. "Normal life is when nothing happens. People get threatened if something doesn't fit their conception of the world and they write it off by describing it in extreme and

Institutional activism

College Council strives to work within the system

by Bill Savadove

On Friday, March 17, at 5:00 p.m., College Council President Trace Blankenship '89 -- the sincere, soft-spoken Southerner -- will step down from college council. Matt Levin '90 -- the outspoken Tyler House representative and devil's advocate of the council -- will also step down.

The two have been on opposite sides of the political fence before, but they agree on one thing: the role of the College Council. In their minds, the council should serve as deliberative, representative body. One might call this institutional activism, or working within the system.

"If we want to press at the seams, we have to do it in a wise way, a leadership way as opposed to a reactionary way," said Blankenship, defining his perception of the role of the College Council. "We're not a non-revolutionary body, but we're here to represent all interests." He views the council as a responsive organization, not a program initiating organization.

"The College Council is not political. It can't be and it shouldn't be," Levin said. The main function of the council as he perceives it is to act "as a collector and disseminator of student opinion, and indeed an activist when the college administration is not paying attention to that voice. It's the only group that's able to fulfill that role."

"They're often used just as a sounding board, just to get advice on student opinion," Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards said.

Outgoing College Council President Trace Blankenship '89 (Isackson)

16/ The Insider March 14, 1989

The student body as a whole seems satisfied with the role the College Council plays in the Williams community. Only 20 percent of those surveyed in an Insider poll felt that the council was not effective enough in dealing with student concerns and representing them to the administration.

The officers of the College Council have tried to emphasize flexibility and accessibility. Any student can suggest items for the agenda, which is set by the officers a few days before the weekly Thursday night meeting. "It's really not a very exciting or dramatic process," Blankenship said. "It's not difficult to see the top items on people's minds. We feel very confident that most of the items on the agenda are need based."

In deciding which issues go on the agenda, College Council officers have tried to reconcile topics like parking, on one hand, and issues of teaching and the educational mission of the college on the other. Parking, in Blankenship's lexicon, is a snack bar issue. "Any student leadership body can o.d. on what I call, for lack of a better word, snack bar issues -- consumer issues. College Council can discuss those things ad nauseam and not help the college very much at all."

The newly instituted constituent concerns, a monthly list compiled by representatives, also serves to eliminate easily handled student requests or complaints, like concerns over hot water or bike racks.

According to Blankenship, the relationship between the administration and College Council has been very open and responsive. Edwards said that weekly meetings with the council's officers have fostered a good, working relationship.

Blankenship said, "For the College Council officers to be able to work well and effectively, they've got to have a strong relationship with the dean of the college, the president, and the president's executive group."

"I sometimes worry that Trace lets that get in the way of what we need to do," Levin said. "He's afraid of confrontation." "Maybe I'm too much of a member of the establishment," Blankenship said. "I hope not. I really hope not."

He maintained that knowing President of the College Francis Oakley on a friendship level has not hampered his ability to communicate the feelings of students or of the council. "There have been a few things which we [the College Council] have felt very strongly about in terms of decisions being made on the administrative level, and have made those very clear and in very pointed ways."

"College council officers really pushed on some items," Edwards agreed.

For example, the January 17 issue of the Record quoted Blankenship on the new fine system for kegs in freshman entries: "I told [Dean Edwards] in no uncertain terms that [term bill fining of J.A.'s] doesn't seem right." Overall, Blankenship said, he has found the administration to be solicitous.

Levin disagrees. He said that the College Council, as a body, is distanced from the administration. He is disappointed with the attitude of Oakley and the administration towards students. Citing such issues as the new fine system and sophomore parking, Levin said it has been a case of students going to the administration, not the other way around: "His [Oakley's] style has been to railroad things through. He doesn't tell students about what's going on."

The faculty is not obligated to ask for College Council input. The only influence the council has in this arena is that they appoint all students on faculty/student committees. In January 1988, Professor Frank Morgan of the math department solicited suggestions from the council concerning proposed changes in that department's curriculum. According to former President Carter Zinn, this was a novel occurrence.

Levin said, "It's [the College Council] a resource that professors should pay more attention to."

But some professors are wary of student input, according to Blankenship. "It's a little touchy if the student body or elected leaders come to challenge their [professors'] right to govern the institution, or even challenge rights made within that framework."

The council purposefully stayed out of the debate concerning Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright's tenure decision, except for holding an open meeting for students to air their concerns and writing a letter to convey these concerns to the administration.

"We dealt with the issues at hand, which were how to increase and maximize the effectiveness of where we are already participants in the tenure decisions," Blankenship said. "Our role this year has been to respond to problems in the existing way. We comment on things to make sure the college openly solicits all forms of student comment that are part of the process."

Devil's advocate: Tyler representative Matt Levin '90 (Isackson)

This non-partisan nature of College Council adds up to a different kind of activism. "It is a community working together," Blankenship said. "Quite frankly, they [CARE] strained the sense of community when they did that [took over Jenness]. We're not advocates of surface reactions and what might be a quick fix. There are no quick fixes. And often quick fixes don't have implications or ramifications that don't work out for everyone's best interests. We couldn't act as CARE acted and I'm not sure that it would have been a wise thing to have done so -- you don't deliberate that way. Those actions have to be consensus kinds of things."

"It's not necessarily bad for institutions to be tested or the real marrow of an institution to come under scrutiny once in a while," he added. "But the extent that we could meet needs before eruptions happen is a key thing."

The role of the council is growing, according to Blankenship. He cited the council's input on faculty course load reduction and the multi-cultural center, as well as the improvement of the Williams Bookstore and the advent of the new Albion Bookstore.

"In the last two years this little body, this little College Council thing -- the presence of it, the visibility of it is greater than it was in my first two years here," Blankenship said. "Hopefully, we've made it a more accessible group. Hopefully, it's a more dynamic, flexible, and responsive body." Levin concluded, "The College Council doesn't do flashy things. A lot of things we do we think are big victories, but they're really not that big on campus. But every once in a while, something does come up."

Behind the scenes

After takeover, CARE drops out of sight

by Mary Moule

The Coalition Against Racist Education (CARE) received much attention last spring from not only the Williams community, but local and state papers as well. From April 22 until April 25, members of CARE occupied Jenness House after only three of their 13 demands were met by the administration.

The group's visibility has dropped sharply this year, and Kevin Hinton '89 attributed this to the gains resulting from the takeover. "I don't anticipate CARE taking over buildings or having demonstrations this year. We prefer working through the system, but unfortunately it doesn't always move at a pace we like."

The original 13 demands involved faculty hiring practices, student recruitment and other suggestions for making the minority presence more widely felt on campus. The administration agreed to create a memorial for Michael Knight, explain the non-consideration of Mary Kenyatta as acting

Dean of the College and officially increase the number of Bolin Fellowships to two per year. These fellowships are awarded to bring minority graduate students to Williams.

CARE was dissatisfied with these results, according to press releases by the group, and decided to occupy the building in hopes of making the administration move more quickly in considering their demands.

Divestment advocacy

The group was also protesting the decisions of the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR). "Williams' present policy with regard to investment in South Africa is directly opposed to the views of the overwhelming majority of black students," a statement issued at the time of the takeover read.

'We shall overcome'

After the settlement was reached, CARE cleaned Jenness before leaving, took down their banner which read "By any means necessary. We shall overcome," and the deans moved back in. No disciplinary action was taken by the college.

Since last year's settlement, CARE has continued to work with the administration to help

The occupation ended on Monday, April 25 after over ten hours of negotiations between the group and the administration. President Francis Oakley agreed to support a divisional requirement designed to acquaint students with minority and Third World concerns, set up a multi-cultural center, establish new scholarships for minority students and hire affirmative action consultants to review hiring practices and possibilities at the college.

Student reactions to the takeover were mixed. Over 100 minority students went into the building during the weekend, and many white students showed support by coming to the building and attending a rally held on Saturday, April 23.

There were many people, however, who did not agree with either the goals or methods of CARE. A petition denouncing the takeover as a publicity stunt was signed by several students. Some people said they felt the occupation would create a more strained, less open discussion

'None of us are activists for the sake of activism. It only arises when there's a clear sense of a crisis.'

This banner hung from Jenness House for the duration of the CARE occupation of the building last year. (Ward) institute the changes that were agreed upon, according to Farhan Haq '89. "We need to do our fair share of the work in working through the details."

Hinton said that this year CARE is concentrating on keeping the college accountable to their agreement. "That's a big task in itself," he said. "If we were to take on any more than that, we'd have to go pro."

"This year, CARE has worked on plans for the multi-cultural center and the new divisional requirement, and we met with the [affirmative action] consultants," Haq said. "Right now we're working with individual deans and within various committees."

Hinton said that he felt things have gone pretty slowly, but that he recognized the necessity of working through the system. "We can't build a cultural center ourselves."

"Protest can't accomplish everything," Haq said. "It becomes necessary to talk to committees and have groups deal with each other."

Look to the future

Members of CARE are still waiting to see how everything will work out. "I don't expect everything that we agreed on last year to come to full fruition," Hinton said. "For example, the only way to see if the center works is to see what happens in the future. We did not put forth demands that could be met overnight."

Haq said that he thinks the college is doing what it promised. "Both [CARE and the administration] were winnowing down our demands to get something achievable. For example, the divisional requirement we got was the one stated in our final proposal."

CARE leaders said that they do not expect any problems to arise as long as the college fulfills its promises. "It depends on how well things work," Haq said. "None of us are activists for the sake of activism. It only arises when there's a clear sense of a crisis. Last time, everything had slowed down to a halt and that's why it was necessary last year."

"You can go by structures and systems available to you, or you can revolt against them," he continued. "If the system is working, you can go with it."

Hinton said he didn't feel that the group was involved in a revolution. "We didn't see ourselves as working against the system. We were just raising an issue and working against a norm of behavior. Ultimately we were just trying to push the system, or more accurately, the people involved. We knew we'd have to be involved with processes and committees, and that's working within the system."

Spokespeople for CARE discuss the group's thirteen demands for making the minority presence more widely felt on campus. (Ward)

Fighting homophobia

Chris Nealon '89 is a member of the Williams Bisexual Gay and Lesbian Union

Record interview by Todd Owens

RECORD: How does BGLU function as a unit—what are its goals, and what approaches does it use achieve those goals?

NEALON: The first thing that makes it different from other student groups is that it's pretty much non-hierarchical. There's nothing that really constitutes membership, per se. There are no permanent offices: we delegate responsibilities in terms of Daily Advisor announcements, publicity or making liaisons with other groups, but that's all really flexible and there's no set hierarchy. The goals of the group are, in a broad sense, twofold — support and consciousness-raising.

Support meaning a place where gay, bisexual or lesbian [students] or students who are questioning their sexuality can come and be in a non-hostile environment and discuss ways in which they've perhaps been oppressed. Consciousness-raising in terms of speaking outward to the community, specifically the Williams community, either through entry talks or panel discussions or the gay pride week so that visibility is a crucial issue.

RECORD: In terms of the consciousness-raising aspect of the group, what kind of responses have you gotten from the college community?

NEALON: There have been absolutely the broadest diversity of responses and some interesting stratifications have occurred. One thing that makes Williams interesting is that the faculty and administration are more positive and encouraging than the student body. Although I get the sense that within the parameters of mainstream liberalism we've been fairly well-received over the past few years. That is, many people on the Williams campus are willing to accept gay students as another special interest group. There's also always a degree of hostility, and homophobia is by far the most sanctioned form of hatred, certainly on college campuses today.

RECORD: Do you feel like that is changing on college campuses? Can you see any improvements?

NEALON: Ironically one of the gains we can see is the amount of hostility directed towards us. As we have become more visible and larger over the past couple years we've had more resources to draw on in terms of making ourselves visible. Even as more people have come to the meetings, or more people make statements of support, so will more people take down our posters, smash the glass case in Baxter, make obscene phone calls, whatever. So that the degree to which we threaten people who are hostile to us is in some sense a gauge of our success.

RECORD: Could you elaborate on the idea that the faculty and administration is more encouraging than the student body? That seems out of character from the perception of a more progressive student body vs. the administration.

NEALON: I was talking in terms of liberal humanism to a large degree, in terms of the deans' office, for instance, being willing to put out an all-campus mailing when our posters were taken down, to sort of implicitly endorse us in a way that many students are afraid to do. The interesting thing about the mailing was that it was a universal gesture, sort of phrased as 'hatred of all kinds must not exist at Williams.' So that it didn't particularize. But there's the sense at least that faculty especially are willing to wear a 'why assume I'm heterosexual?' sticker or come to a rally in a way that many students wouldn't. I'm sure there's hostility in the faculty just as there is in the student body but it's not expressed.

'I would say we are hovering around sort of a middle ground of tolerance.'

RECORD: Do you feel like the liberal humanism approach to gay rights is enough? Comparing it to race relations, in the '60s there was a lot of administrative changes, but a lot of black students especially would argue that there's still an entrenched below the surface racial tension. Is that true with gay problems as well?

NEALON: Yes. There's a whole Malcolm X wing to the BGLU in some sense. It involves arguments concerning the construction of sexuality and what it means to identify yourself as gay. The thrust of those arguments would point to homophobia as a deeply entrenched mechanism in our society, a mechanism of control and whose use is to artificially bifurcate sexual roles in a way that creates easy oppositions and easily identifiable gay people. The argument against that would be that it's very historically specific and that one long-term project is to disrupt the maintenance of the sexual identity. So there are some of us who would like to argue that sexual identity is something that is maintained however that at some level requires coercion.

RECORD: Can you compare the gay rights' struggle with the civil rights struggle in the '60s in terms of student response?

NEALON: That goes back to the issue of liberalism. Those were the terms of the mainstream civil rights movement: 'we are being oppressed unjustly within the terms of your very own constitution, or within the terms of your very own value system — we are human beings too.' And it was an appeal to humanity, especially through King that gave the civil rights movement its momentum and its largest legislative gains. And that's exactly the appeal of this program to a large majority of gay people in the mainstream: 'We're people too, we're your brothers and sisters and teachers and children, and pass a law.' That's the terrain, largely speaking, on which this stuff occurs. There's also a parallel between something like black power and groups like Act Up, a very confrontational and grass roots organization that through AIDS activism is trying to establish a politically charged gay presence that doesn't appeal to the mainstream liberal values. It appeals to the structure of power it says we're going to try to manipulate this to our advantage. So those are two important parallels.

RECORD: Why do you think gay rights hasn't achieved the mass appeal that the civil rights movement did? And if it hasn't do you think it will?

NEALON: I think that's very much up in the air. There has been a kind of consolidation in the past five years especially of gay politics; there is a more coherently articulated feeling that could lead either to revolution or backlash. I'm fairly pessimistic, but I don't want to make any predictions. I think the reason that the gay rights movement hasn't taken hold as immediately is that at some level sexuality is a more individually threatening thing than race. Your racial identity is fairly historically stable, and so you are either the white person helping or the black person doing something on his own or being helped. Whereas sexual identity, I am determined to argue, is a more fractured or fluid thing, so that people may feel implicated just by the existence of gays in a way that threatens them.

RECORD: How do you perceive Williams students compared to the general population and compared to other colleges in terms of being tolerant or encouraging gay rights?

NEALON: With Williams students as com-

'The mechanism that works most effectively against us is silence.'

pared to the population at large, I think in general the college environment fosters some degree of thought about these issues. Simply by virtue of being in a college Williams students first of all have a greater opportunity to become more sensitive and perhaps actually do become more aware than in the population at large. I think college campuses are one of the primary locations of gay activism. In terms of Williams students with respect to other colleges, that's really up in the air. Obviously there are places like Berkeley that to me make this place look utterly laughable; there are places where in comparison to which we're actually relatively enlightened. To place us on a spectrum I would say that we were hovering around sort of the middle ground of tolerance.

Steinman

RECORD: Do you see any major attempts of the BGLU to bring this issue before the campus? What do you hope to gain from Gay Rights week?

NEALON: Visibility is very important to a group like us because the mechanism that works most effectively against us is silence. This is a week in which we are high profile. Speakers are fairly important because they get the campus at large to come out to a talk that involves issues of sexuality. I think the rally at the end of the week is maybe the most significant thing because that's a time when outdoors people are speaking out loud with a microphone and there's one hundred or two hundred people standing around. It's very slightly confrontational if only by the fact that it's amplified. Visibility is important as a goal almost in itself because it encourages more people to come out. Scheduling the pride week at the time that it will be, around prospective weekends, is useful because usually after the week there's an upsurge of people coming to the meetings and often many people come out at that time of the year. Also we found that doing it the prospective weekend made entry talks the next year somewhat easier in some sense because we could say to freshmen, 'We were here when many of you were prospectives and we got lots of enthusiastic nods. In a way it allows us to infiltrate the freshman class of the next year before they get here which is very useful.'

RECORD: Is there anything you'd like to add?

NEALON: Since there has been an upsurge in hostility or violence, the question which I'm interested in asking or having answered is if heterosexuality is so great, why the violence? If people would be willing to answer that a little bit more articulately or in forums outside of bathroom walls I think a lot of more useful discussion will get done. That's a bit snide, but it does sort of encapsulate a certain logic, I think.

Keeping the faith

Williams shows strong history of religious activism

by Bill White '90 and Alec Vance '92

A Williams student hears "Mission" and, especially if the weekend is near, wonders to himself, "Dennett or Mills? What time? How many kegs?" Curiously, the ugly complex where all the parties and sophomores seem to be has a heritage apart from beer and demented architectural demand and akin to what the name implies.

Did you ever wonder what that huge concrete globe was doing on top of a pedestal between the Freshman Quad and Mission? Well, like the name of the park and the adjoining house, it is a symbol of Williams' strong leadership in student activism in foreign missions.

In 1806, several Williams students, including the young Samuel J. Mills (after whom the house was named), were out praying by the banks of the Hoosac River. The religious atmosphere on campus was not one to allow for any such activity there. When a sudden thunderstorm rose, these zealous students took cover underneath a haystack and continued to pray for the world. It was under that haystack, now marked by the Haystack Monument, that they came up with the idea that the United States could send missionaries to share the word of Jesus Christ with other countries. Thus, it was Williams students who launched the first of the three major missions movements of the modern era.

It was Williams students who launched the first of the three major missions movements of the modern era. That heritage of student activism in missions has continued to this day.

That heritage of student activism in missions has continued to this day. Currently, Amy Barstad '87 is between short term missions research trips to Bangkok and Malaysia, Mark Meyer '88 is in Taiwan teaching English in local churches, and Laurie and Dilip Nair '88 are at the University of Connecticut Medical School preparing to be medical missionaries to India.

These people aren't the Bible blasters that you hear about on television, but ordinary students who have found the love of God through Jesus Christ and want to give others the opportunity to find the same. They aren't giving their lives to foster dependence on Western monies, but rather to ameliorate the structural system — not only giving aid, but helping people to help themselves.

Students now at Williams are also involved with missions. Several have been planning summer trips which would give them the opportunity to live their lives of faith in different lands. For example, Rob Kunzman '90 will be playing basketball with a sports outreach team in Europe, competing with local teams, and sharing his faith with spectators.

When asked if his team was forcing their faith on the fans, Kunzman said, "No one's chaining them to the bleachers — they can leave if they don't want to talk. We're there as an option for people who think there may be more to life than what they already know."

Students have also been active on the home front. The Newman Association has sponsored several weekend trips into New York City which have provided students the opportunity to catch an insider's glimpse at what life is like for the homeless. A group spent the first weekend of this month working in a soup kitchen which Mother Teresa had visited the previous month, and then visited the Covenant House, a halfway house for youth on the streets of New York.

This spring break, a dozen students will be spending a week in Fort Lauderdale on a outreach project sponsored by the Christian Fellowship. Many of the thousands of students who descend upon that place are quickly disillusioned with its thin promises. They become more than receptive to discussion of spiritual issues. The Christians will spend time hanging out on the beaches and in the bars building relationships and talking about God. Many of those attending see the project as a natural extension of their faith — if its real, then it's worth sharing.

"I don't see spring break as much of a departure from how I'd like to be living my life," Trace Blankenship '89, one of the students who will be seeking more than a tan in Fort Lauderdale, said.

After 182 years of missions heritage, Williams students are still activists.

Administration and protest

continued from page 3
tionship between the takeover and subsequent actions on minority issues by the administration. "You don't think for a minute we would have had either a visit from outside experts on our minority hiring program, let alone a multi-cultural center, if the people interested in that had not acted."

Ilaq also complimented the administration on its actions regarding investment in South Africa. "Since Oakley has been president of this college we've moved from full compliant investment with South Africa to disinvestment advocacy. It was an effort to change a fairly entrenched long-standing policy that was wrong, and I think it was made in good faith by the administration, and President Oakley had a lot to do with that."

"No institutional structure will give you anything without an effort or without a sort of struggle, but I don't think that the administration at Williams is entirely unwilling to listen," he added.

Both Edwards and Oakley saw areas where student organizations can make a positive difference. "I think it would be great if students were more active about alcohol, for example. There are areas where students can make a difference, where it can be literally healthy to take action," Edwards said.

"There is great student energy and drive in areas that don't always attract attention, and that is something to be honored," Oakley said. "Students get involved and give up time to fairly unromantic causes. I know they matter. They don't get recognition, and I think it's terrific. That is activism involving personal sacrifice and commitment." He pointed to the Berkshire Food Project as an example of this type of quiet commitment.

Oakley also said that students have a different perspective on change than do faculty and administration. "The timetable for students is much shorter than it is for faculty and administration. Every four years the student body is new, but this is a long-haul process for the college. I don't think anyone here is complacent about these issues."

Administration and students might disagree about methods of protest and student involvement, but there is a consensus that student input is needed to keep the college functioning well.

"It's important for students to be active," Edwards said. "It's helpful for us to know that students are concerned. Students often have terrific ideas that wind up in policy. The more minds there are working on it the better."

Demise of Fraternities

continued from page 9
campus, and the legal role of fraternities gradually declined to weekly meetings.

The eventual decision in to abolish fraternities altogether as soon as the last current member had graduated in 1970 was made in October, 1968. The trustees' announcement attributed the decision as a response to student and fraternity desire for a clear-cut decision on their future, as well as requests by successive senior class leadership and faculty that they be abolished.

Student reaction in general focused on the fact that they had not been consulted, instead of demonstrating real regret for the fraternities' death. Between 1961 and 1968, fraternity membership had declined from over 95 percent of the upper three classes to only ten percent of the college, all juniors and seniors.

The college pointed to the residential college system as the new means of providing the objectives of the fraternities. The trustees' announcement said, "In these circumstances and on their future, as well as requests by successive senior class leadership and faculty that they be abolished."

Activism in the sixties

continued from page 12
ulty collapsed, according to Frost.

But although the faculty and students had joined together during the May strike, there was still a range of opinion on campus about the government's activity. "People who supported the war kept fairly quiet," Frost said.

Also, the scope of issues broadened. Martin Luther King, Jr. linked the civil rights movement and the Vietnam War, saying that the war was racist.

"It all became mixed," said Frost, referring to women's rights along with civil rights. "The male attitudes had some growing up to do and the women [then at Williams] did it for them."

Moreover, Frost said that the widespread idealism was somewhat self-centered. "Students were active in protesting the war. They were idealistic about concerns for peace. But this was clearly linked to the concern of being drafted. When Nixon went to an all-volunteer army, the bottom dropped out of the peace movement."

"The protest of prestigious colleges had enormous impact on political leadership..."

Parents saw their kids in distress," Frost continued.

At the same time that students were protesting against racism and the Vietnam War, a new problem was arising on campus. Students had increasingly begun using illegal drugs.

"I tended to get discipline matters rather than academics because I was in charge of the residential house system," Frost said, adding that marijuana and LSD were prevalent in the era on campus.

Marcus said that due to the nature of activism, not all periods should be expected to be as exciting as the late 1960s. "Student activism ebbs and flows. There are moments of ascendancy and quiescence."

"The campus is different now than in the 1960s but it [activism] can still give a taste of political involvement which may change how students live their lives. Activism can make a significant impact [on the individual] even if nothing is changed...It is good for students to be confronted by events which provoke them to get outside of individual concerns."

Great Rebellion of 1868

continued from page 8
tions of the committee and go in. I voted No and meant to live up to it but the others deserted me except one or two."

On the morning of November 17, Hapgood and all of the other students returned to class, encouraged by Hopkins' promises to review the rule. After a week and a half of stalemates, the Great Rebellion of 1868 had come to an end.

Under the careful watch of Hopkins, the faculty voted on November 24 to amend the rule so that any excused absence from a recitation could be made up, putting a final end to the bitter dispute. The authority of the faculty had been preserved, but the students had not been forced to submit to a rule that they found intolerable. Hopkins' personal appeal to the students and his diplomatic compromise may have saved the academic reputation of the college.

The news of the dissent reached beyond Berkshire County, and on November 18, the New York Tribune ran a small notice of the end of the rebellion. "We have received a number of communications from the students of Williams College, several of which are neither polite nor grammatical...We are rejoiced to know that the young gentlemen have gone back to their books. It is clear that their education is not yet completed."

Activist Directory

The following information was given to the Insider by members of the different organizations. This is not a complete list of "activist" groups.

Asian Students in Action (ASIA)

Helen Lee, S.U. 2343; William Lin, S.U. 2895
Meetings: biweekly in Rice House, Wednesday at 7:00

30 members

Goals: to provide a support group for Asian students and to address issues that concern Asian students on campus and elsewhere.

Projects: Lunar New Year dinner, International Weekend, organize speakers, movies, discussions.

Amnesty International

Ivy Chen, S.U. 2162

Meetings: biweekly in Baxter Lounge, Wednesday at 7:00

Goal: Amnesty is a non-partisan organization working for the release of all prisoners of conscience, fair trials and the end of torture and the death penalty.

Coalition Against Racist Education

(CARE)

S.U. 3184

Meetings: Tuesday at 7:30

72 members

Goal: organization dedicated to equal opportunity in education

Projects: multicultural center and all other demands made in the spring of 1988

Feminist Alliance

Rebecca Teed, S.U. 2537; Erika Elvander, S.U. 2753

Meetings: Hardy House, Wednesday at 7:30

Membership varies

Goals: to provide forum for women to discuss issues ranging from sexual harassment to men's vs. women's classroom participation; to educate rest of campus about women's concerns; to hold women's parties; to involve students in regional and national demonstrations; to fund singers, speakers and films

Projects: brought singers and speakers concerned with women's issues, co-sponsored Women's Studies "Women in Power" lecture series, put together a Women's Center library, talking to administration about educating freshmen about date rape and sexual harassment, sending buses to NOW march in Washington

James A. Garfield Republican Club

Affiliated with College Republicans (national)

Bob Howie, S.U. 2293

Meetings: Gibson Room, Dodd, Thursday at 6:00
90 members

Goal: to provide a forum and voice for moderate and conservative students at Williams to express their ideas to serve as a base for Republican political activity

Projects: supporting Republican candidates for state and national office, articles, all-campus mailings, securing campus speakers

Massachusetts Public Interest Research

Group (MassPIRG)

Statewide organization

Derek Cressman, S.U. 2179; Josh Becker, S.U. 1568

Meetings in Baxter Lounge: Monday 8:00 for child care, Monday 9:00 for pollution prevention/toxic reduction, Thursday for hunger cleanup

109 members

Goal: Environmental and consumer concerns

Projects: voter registration, hunger, safe energy campaign, child care, pollution prevention

Student Defense Alliance

National organization

Michael Barbera, S.U. Box 2640

Meetings twice per semester

Goals: to provide information to the campus and community regarding defense and national security issues. The club believes in a strong U.S. national defense to protect freedom and preserve peace.

Projects: three all-campus mailings on defense issues, one major speaker, occasional information tables in Baxter

Student Environmental Awareness Group

(The Purple Druids)

Mary Richardson, S.U. 1923

40 members

Goal: to promote awareness of environmental issues and consciousness of consequences of everyday actions.

Projects: 1. animal rights: survey of biology, chemistry and psychology professors, table in Baxter, boycott of Gillette for animal rights violations, films, speakers, articles. 2. recycling: promoting more recycling on campus, increased use of recycled and recyclable products, raising money to buy rain forest in Belize. 3. local development: talking to administration about college influence on local development, monitoring progress.

Vista

Jose Calero, S.U. 2686

Meetings at Hardy House, Wednesday at 8:00

28 active members

Goals: to provide opportunities for Hispanic students to get to know their own culture and share it with the larger environment, and to provide a support group for Hispanics on campus.

Projects: discussions within group on ethnicity, International Day, sponsor speakers, cultural dinners for Hispanic students and their friends, faculty and administrators.

Williams Bisexual Gay and Lesbian Union

(WBGLU)

S.U. 3209

Meetings: Hardy House, Tuesday at 10 p.m.

40 members

Goal: support and consciousness-raising

Projects: freshman entry talks, campus-wide panel discussion, Pride Week in April

Williams Black Student Union

(WBSU)

Germaine Bell, S.U. 2649; Cassandra Kirk, S.U.

2867; Kirsten Lewis, S.U. 2893

Meetings: biweekly in Rice House, Wednesday at 7:00

40 active members

Goals: to provide a support group for Afro-American students and students of African descent; to address issues that concern these students on campus and elsewhere; to promote educational programs on topics related to Afro-Americans; to provide resource center for campus (e.g. Sterling Brown Library, information on minority fellowships, black periodicals)

Projects: freshman orientation, four all-campus lectures, yearbook, film series, gospel choir concerts.

Williams College Democrats

Matt Reed, S.U. 2464

Meetings at the Stage Room in Greylock, Thursday at 12:15

Membership varies from 10 to 50

Goal: see article in this Insider

Projects: voter registration drive, endorsement of Sherwood Guernsey, election-night party, sponsor speakers, debate between James MacGregor Burns and Bernard Sanders, all-campus newsletters, abortion panel

Williams Disarmament Forum

Betty Dunkum, S.U. 2205

Goal: to educate the Williams community about nuclear issues

Projects: showed several films, organized lecture by Admiral and Mrs. Noel Gayler, will sponsor lecture by Hiroshima survivors and panel on economic diversification.

Dewey plans lawsuit for breach of contract

by Mary Moule

The college's decision to give Albion Books its textbook business beginning next fall has met with great approval from faculty and students, but at least one person is not pleased with the change. Joseph Dewey, owner of the Williams Bookstore and current holder of the textbook contract, has said he will sue the college for breach of contract, seeking compensation for his loss.

Dewey cited an agreement drawn up seven years ago in which he bought the rights to sell textbooks from Ralph Renzi, then the owner of the College Bookstore. Until that time, both businesses had sold textbooks, which proved to be an inefficient and confusing system.

Seeking to provide a better service, the college approached Dewey and Renzi and suggested that one buy out the other. The terms of the agreement were agreed upon by Dewey and Renzi with the college as intermediary.

The document stated that Dewey would pay Renzi's College Bookstore a sum of $100,000 at 14 percent interest over 10 years, and the college guaranteed the obligation if something prevented Dewey from fulfilling it. Dewey still owes more than $47,000.

Although this contract prevents the College Bookstore from selling textbooks, it is legally impossible for the college to give anyone an exclusive right to the business.

"The college never promised that no one else could come in and sell textbooks," said Bruce Grinnell, the college's lawyer. "They can't legally keep another bookstore from setting up shop. [Under the new solution], they have encouraged the faculty to order their books through Albion, but the college has no legal control over where the faculty orders books."

Vice President and Treasurer of the College William Reed said that Dewey or anyone else could still have access to textbook lists for Williams courses and could compete with Albion. "It's more complicated that way, and I would hope we could come to a satisfactory agreement to all parties," he added.

Joseph Dewey

However, Dewey said that because the contract doesn't expire for three more years, he would expect some compensation from the college. In earlier reports to the faculty and the press, Dewey reports to the faculty and the press,

Reed, who chaired the college's Bookstore Committee, suggested that a settlement with Dewey would be made.

Dewey said he feels that because the college initiated the original agreement, between the two bookstores, it should help him pay off the amount he currently owes to Renzi as well as compensate him for lost income.

"[The contract] was a hefty obligation to take on, and I never would have been able to pay it off without the ten-year agreement," Dewey said.

Williams is not liable. In early March, however, Dewey received a letter from Grinnell, stating that he didn't feel that the college was

continued on page 4

A college and its town

Town angry as gown expands

by Dan Skwire

When Julius Siskind moved onto Grace Court in 1976, it was a quiet, residential street with seven homes, some of which were owned by the college and rented out for faculty housing. Since that time, he has seen Rice House become the Black Student Union, Hardy House the Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Union, Jenness House the Dean's Office and Chandler House the office of the Vice President and Treasurer.

"They're doing a job on my neighborhood," Siskind said. "I've got no neighbors except office buildings."

When Dagmar Bubriski looks to the north of her Halsey Street home, she sees the imposing edifice of Bronfman Science Center. When she looks to the west, she is faced with the parking lot of the Biology building. To the south are co-op housing and the Thompson Health Center, and to the east is Spencer House.

When Bronfman was built in the 1960s, Bubriski's house was included in the blueprints -- as a parking lot. She refused to sell, however, and has maintained her private residence as a tiny island amidst a sea of college property.

Siskind, Bubriski and other Williamstown residents have complained for years that the college has been extending its borders and encroaching on residential areas of the town. In recent years, they say, the problem has become worse than ever, due in part to the college's need for temporary office space during the reconstruction of Hopkins Hall.

Now that Hopkins has been completed, a few of the buildings around Grace Court will be vacated. Siskind said he hopes they will be returned to residential status, perhaps as rental units for college faculty.

College Vice President and Treasurer William Reed said that Williams has other plans for the buildings.

New functions for old offices. Rice and Hardy Houses will remain unchanged, but Chandler will be home to the Personnel Office and Credit Union, and Jenness is under consideration as a site for the proposed multicultural center. Reed acknowledged that the college had made significant changes to the Grace Court area, but he defended these actions as a natural result of the school's growth.

"It used to be a lovely residential neighborhood," he said, "but it's very hard to predict the needs of the college. [Grace Court] is a very desirable area. It is in the center of campus and easy to walk to. The character of the court will change, and there will be more students walking up and down."

The home of Mrs. John Miller is one of two residences still on Grace Court, behind the Science Quad. Town residents have complained that the college is unsympathetic towards the feelings of townspeople. In the background is Jenness House.

Some residents have asked why the college is not using its 2000 square feet of office space above the Williams Newsroom on Spring Street instead of the homes on Grace Court for its new offices. Reed explained that the Spring Street space would probably be used for classrooms, adding that this new classroom space would be necessary because the basement rooms in Bronfman would eventually be changed to laboratory space.

Residents such as Siskind and Bubriski who oppose the college's expansion into residential areas find it particularly difficult to dispute the college's plans, because under Massachusetts state law, educational institutions are exempt from most local zoning restrictions.

In other words, once they have submitted a satisfactory site plan and met the necessary building codes, administration officials are virtually guaranteed governmental approval of any building project they undertake, without extensive hearings before the Zoning Board of Appeals. Siskind said the law puts him in a no-win situation.

"Unfortunately, I'm in the wrong spot. Since the college isn't subject to the laws, all I can do is bitch once in a while and that's what I do, but it doesn't get hoods."

College should disclose its plans. At a recent meeting of the Board of Selectmen, town resident Penelope Corbin argued that the situation would improve for everyone if the college would simply give the town more advance notice of its projects so that opponents would have time to discuss the effects on their neighborhoods, and organize some kind of opposition.

"If the college would spell out its plans to the Selectmen a month or two in advance, it would help things out a little bit," Corbin said later. "But they come in with plans already laid and just start building. So many things could be done with just a little give and take."

Reed, however, said that the college does not always know its plans very far ahead of time. Citing a previous construction project that had fallen through after it had been highly publicized, he said that he had learned his lesson about early announcements. He added that he did have a great deal of contact with area residents and their opinions on college projects.

"The citizens are not at all afraid to call me and talk to me. I think I have a pretty good sense of their views. I'm very concerned about the tension that exists now, and I'm not sure how to resolve it."

Student study finds female class participation lacking here

by Peggy Kohn and Robert Weisberg

The discussion class is supposed to be the centerpiece of the Williams education, the favorite learning method for both students and professors alike. But an informal study conducted by 15 Williams students concluded that, in general, females reap fewer benefits from the discussion format than their male classmates.

On March 15, the students presented the results of this study to the Junior Faculty Seminar, a regular meeting group of second-year professors.

The participants in the project observed a random sampling of twenty discussion-oriented classes over a period of two weeks. While observing, they kept track of who spoke, who interrupted, which students raised their hands and how the professor modified the discussion.

Caroline Boyden '89, a participant in the study, said the idea for the project originated in the Free University class "Who Said That?", which focused on gender issues both inside and outside the classroom. A core group of participants decided that rather than just discussing the gender problem, they would try to effect change in the Williams community, she added.

At the March 15 seminar, which was organized by Professor of Religion H. Canse Little, the faculty were given copies of Catherine Krupnick's article

An informal study concluded that, in general, females reap fewer benefits from the discussion format.

"Women and Men in the Classroom: Inequality and its Remedies." It reported the findings of the Harvard-Danforth Center's study of gender relations at Harvard College.

According to that study, "The advantages of classroom discussion, long considered to be an integral part of education in section and tutorials, are unequally distributed between the sexes."

The study concluded that, "Male students talked much longer in the predominant classroom: i.e. the situation in which the instructor is male and the majority of the students are male."

While the methodology of the Williams' study was not completely objective or statistically precise, the group intended their results to support Krupnick's general conclusion about gender communication and apply them to specific concerns at Williams, according to Steve Butler '92, another participant in the project.

Tracked classroom behavior. The Williams study tracked several variations of classroom situations during the course of the project. At the Junior Faculty Seminar they referred to the more specific Harvard study to bolster their results, participant Steve Butler '92 said.

Because they were unable to collect much data on classes led by female professors, the group could not specifically

continued on page 4

About 130 Williams students attended the March for Women's Lives in Washington, D.C. on Sunday. They were part of a crowd of at least 300,000 people that went to the Capital to keep abortion legal in the U.S. (See story on page 3)

Former First Service branches in Williamstown resume operation.

PAGE 3

The Record interviews heavy metal heroes Holler Lauder.

PAGE 7

Women's lacrosse defeats Bates and Bowdoin.

PAGE 11

The Williams Record

Restore college's credibility

Few people would dispute the claims of Williams-town residents that the college is encroaching on residential areas of town to fill its need for office space. Just recently, for example, Vice President and Treasurer of the College William Reed said that Chandler House is slated to become the Personnel Office and Mrs. John Miller remain as private residents.

At the core of the current debate over college encroachment is Julius Siskind, who at a recent Siskind's meeting termed the school's actions "block-busting." Siskind said he finds Williams' plans for Chandler and Jenness particularly disturbing, because administration officials had promised the elderly Mrs. Miller that those buildings would be returned to residential use once Hopkins was completed.

Reed confirmed he had promised Miller that Jenness would become residential again, adding he had recently written her saying that would no longer be possible due to the college's changing needs.

"There is a real question as to how good [the college's] word is," Siskind said. "They always come in and say the situation has changed. Well, of course it's changed, but a promise used to be a promise. They have a real credibility problem now. You can't believe anything they say."

The chief complaint of Siskind and other residents is not that the college is expanding its borders, but that it is doing so with all the finesse of a Mack truck. Indeed, it does seem that the college has developed a callous disregard for the concerns of residents. Broken promises, after all, are not the stuff of which good town/gown relations are made.

If the college has determined to expand come hell or high water, why not try to do so with a little bit of discretion? It doesn't seem unreasonable to ask that Williams be willing to openly discuss its plans with residents before asking the Zoning Board for approval. Residents say that they typically have only a few weeks notice of college plans before Zoning Board hearings are held. Reed has said the college often doesn't know its plans too far ahead of time, but this is a little tough to swallow. Why not officially inform residents of the affected areas about proposed projects a few months before the hearings, inviting them to discuss their concerns with the college?

Such discussions would probably not do much to dissuade the college from its planned expansion, but they might go a long way toward convincing townspeople that the college genuinely cares about their views. It's also just possible that the college might be able to restore a little bit of its credibility with Siskind and Miller.

Letters

Dangers of apathy should be noted

To the Editor:

My classmate Helen Tkaczewski Strapko's letter in the February 28 edition hit an interesting chord with me with just seven words: "the liberal air that predominates [at Williams]." Funny, I thought, I must have missed something. Williams? Liberal? In my memories, I don't often connect the two words.

As a liberal, I feel better qualified to say whether or not the campus mood was liberal, and I must be staunch in saying that it was not. However, since I am a liberal, I will not take the liberty to say that the campus was primarily conservative. After all, the conservatives say that it is liberal, and the liberals say it is conservative. How can it be both? It could be, but it isn't. The campus is predominantly apathetic.

This is probably what angers both the liberals and the conservatives most. We (liberals and conservatives) cannot exert any great number of people to "take action" or join with us, or even feel as passionate as we do about issues, be they abortion, civil rights, apartheid, or whatever. Drinking age laws, that gets people excited. With a little perspective you laugh at apathy.

But, I have one more thing to say: do apathetic students (you, the great silent masses) think they are moderate or neutral because they say or do nothing? I warn them that such apathy will only make them victims in the end, tools of those who wield power. (Be they liberal or conservative. It just happens that in the present society they are conservative, but that could change, I hope.)

Apathy is not a position, it is an escape. But it can be dangerous. Williams students are intelligent. Talk to the few open (and loud) conservatives and liberals and start making up your own mind before someone does it for you. Because you may not even know it if they do.

Brian M. M. Watson '88

Conservatism adds diversity, helps college

To the Editor:

Your issue on campus activism inspired me to reflect on the recent revitalization of the moderate-conservative community at Williams College. When I first arrived here three years ago, the campus debate was largely dominated by liberal Democrats. How much has changed!

Today, we have our own newspaper, a district-wide television program, and -- most recently -- a call-in radio talk show. While the College Democrats remain a small, marginalized organization, the membership of the Garfield Republican Club has grown and diversified to include the full range of moderate and conservative views. What's more, a wide variety of new, independent organizations have sprung up including the Student Defense Alliance, the Anti-Abortion Club, and other ad hoc groups like the one seeking to eliminate the liberal bias in the Peer Health Guide.

We have done much for the local community too. We have been active in the North Adams Santa Fund, and in the formation of the new North County Chapter of the American Heart Association. Largely due to our efforts, the Republican party was able to launch an unusually powerful challenge against the existing Democratic incumbents in the State Representative races. Although neither Ed MacDonald or I won, neither of us could have run so hard without the support of this revitalized college community.

We are a growing, diverse group. We have little in common except for our disgust with prison furloughs, and yet we have accomplished great things. While I will not always be around to see what becomes of all this new activity, I will always remain unspeakably proud of what we have accomplished, and forever convinced that we have altered the course of Williams College for years to come.

John Drew
Assistant Professor of Political Science

Opposition to pro-life claims unconvincing

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to the two letters appearing in the March 7 Record which were written in rebuttal to my letter to the editor of February 28.

Firstly, Ms. Katherine Boyle described the unborn child as a "non-sentient conglomeration of cells." This is an interesting choice of words considering that they could equally apply to each and every one of us. From our skin to our complex brains, we are all "conglomerations of cells." Even our thoughts and emotions can be explained by biochemical processes. Therefore, since we can all ultimately be reduced to mere cells and their biochemical reactions -- then why homicide a crime? After all, it is that not also just a destruction of cells and a cessation of biochemical processes?

Ms. Boyle also notes that making abortion illegal will not halt its practice. She illustrates her point by drawing a parallel with the illegality of drugs and their continued prevalence and use. Such an argument is weak at best. Adopting such a pragmatic approach in legal matters would necessarily force our society to legalize drugs, murder, rape, theft, prostitution, child molesting... shall I continue? All of these crimes prevail, and undoubtedly will continue to do so despite their illegality. Where is our technologically advanced culture headed if we readily embrace such a solution to all our societal problems. If we can't prevent it, let's legalize it!

Secondly, I would like to address Ms. Christine Wormuth's letter in which she elaborates on the emotional difficulty with which a woman decides to terminate the life of her unborn baby. According to Ms. Boyle, choosing to abort is a "difficult decision to live with." I am sure that many women do find it exceedingly trying to undergo an abortion. Well, I ask you, why is it such an emotionally agonizing experience? If it is simply a "conglomeration of cells" that a woman is removing from her body, as Ms. Boyle contends, then why does a woman's conscience torment her? Why is she wrought with such indecision? If there is nothing morally wrong with what she is doing then why doesn't she go "tripping lightly down to the abortion clinic?" Why is the allegation of the "convenience" of her decision so offensive? Is it not precisely because of the sanctity of human life?

Lastly, Ms. Wormuth charges me with cruelty and insensitivity towards the emotional trauma experienced by women who opt for abortion. She suggests that I attempt to put myself in their shoes. I can try to understand, but I'm afraid understanding doesn't make it right! When someone decides to become sexually active it is usually a conscious and willful decision. Therefore, it is one that should be accompanied by an acceptance of responsibility for one's actions. If a woman feels that she is too young, emotionally unprepared, and financially incapable to raise a child, if pregnancy is out of the question and adoption too wounding, then opt for the birth control method known to be 100 percent effective -- abstinence. The innocent lives of one and a half million unborn babies in the U.S. alone should not have to be sacrificed each year as the price for our society's irresponsibility and lack of self-discipline.

I fully realize that my view will not solve the problem of unwanted children amongst the underprivileged, nor will it eradicate their misery and poverty -- but neither has abortion.

Helen Tkaczewski Strapko '88

Editor's Note: In the March 14 Insider the following acknowledgments should have appeared at the end of Dan Skwire's article on The Great Rebellion of 1868:

The excerpts from the diary of Marshall Hopgood were made available with the permission of the Special Collections of the University of Vermont Library. Published works consulted included Arthur Latham Perry's Williamstown and Williams College (1899), Franklin Carter's Mark Hopkins (1892), and Frederick Rudolph's Mark Hopkins and the Log (1956). Additional documents came from Williamstown and the special help of archivist Sylvia Kennick.

Fewer students accepted for next freshman class

by Deirdre Pappalardo

Students from around the United States and from more than forty countries will be receiving letters of acceptance or rejection from the Williams College Admissions Committee early this week. Acceptance letters for the 20th class of Williams College, the Class of 1993, were mailed out Friday, April 7.

Selecting 126 fewer students than last year, the Admissions Committee accepted 1082 applicants, 135 of whom were selected early decision. Director of Admissions Philip Smith said that the anticipated class size is 510.

Smith pointed to significant changes in the applicant pool of 4329 hopefuls. Continuing a well-known trend, the applicants for the Class of '93 had higher SAT and achievement test scores, higher class rankings and more National Merit Scholars than any class ever before.

While minority applications increased by one percent, there was a 12.8 percent decrease from last year in the total number of applications. This decrease appears to be a national trend at selective colleges and universities; applications to Amherst, Yale, Wesleyan, and Dartmouth were down by five, six, seven, and eighteen percent, respectively.

'People hear of us from around the world, but not from around the block.'

Financial aid decisions will not be made until April 12, but more applicants than last year have requested financial aid, Smith said. Fifty-three percent of the applicants requested aid while 60 percent of those admitted requested aid. It is expected that 40 percent of the class will receive approximately two million dollars of need-based Williams aid.

The anticipated housing crunch arising from the large size of the Class of 1992 will be eased by a decrease in the number of transfer students, rather than in the size of the freshman class. The committee anticipates that it will take about twenty-five students out of the 600 applications.

The three percent increase in yield of last year's class, which Smith said was one of the highest ever among selective colleges, created a higher male-female ratio as well as an unusually large class size. This year, forty-eight percent of those accepted were women, although only forty-five percent of the applicants were female.

"Massachusetts, here I come!" Leaving the sunny weather at home, Californians are taking over. Following the traditional leader New York, California has replaced Massachusetts as the second largest state represented. North Dakota was the only state with no applicants this year, and record numbers were received from Louisiana, South Carolina, and Washington.

Foreign applications numbered 284, and 37 applicants were admitted from countries including Egypt, India, Greece and Yugoslavia. "People hear of us from around the world, but not from around the block," a member of the Admissions staff said.

Applications were received from over 2,000 different high schools. With thirty-seven states applying, and seventeen accepted, Stuyvesant High School in New York City led the pack. Receiving at least six letters of acceptance were Regis High School, Trinity High School, Hunter High School, and Herricks High School of New York; Milton Academy, Northfield Mount Hermon, and Mt. Greylock High School in Massachusetts; Chapel Hill High School and Punahou School in Hawaii; St. Paul's in New Hampshire; and Walt Whitman High School in Maryland. Accepted sons and daughters of past Ephs total seventy-six, out of the 150 that applied. Forty-two out of the 125 siblings of Williams students were accepted.

The Admissions Committee now waits for responses, which are due by May 1. Overnight visits for the prospective students are scheduled for the end of April. Soon after that, interviews begin for the Class of 1994.

Ephs march in Washington for abortion rights

by Ellen Drought

Approximately 130 Williams students along with professors and alumni participated in the biggest march for women's rights in history, sponsored by the National Organization of Women last weekend in Washington, D.C.

Estimates for the turnout varied from 300,000 to 600,000 and 500 college campuses were represented. The initial rally congregated at the Washington Monument, where speakers including Senators Alan Cranston (D-Cal.) and Howard Metzenbaum (D-Ohio) and singers Peter, Paul and Mary addressed the crowd. The march proceeded down Constitution Avenue to the capital, where Jesse Jackson and former New York representative Bella Abzug spoke.

"The amount of people was inspiring, all the speakers were moving and the music was great. So many people were there to show that pro-choice is the majority opinion in the country," said Karen Duggan '91, one of the organizers of the Williams group.

"There were so many people there," another organizer, Erika Elvander '89, said. "I got up on a bleacher at one point and looked around -- there wasn't a single space on the Washington Monument to be found."

"We moved as a mass" "You felt like you had to be changing something even as we were marching," Monica Brand '91 said. "It felt like everyone around the world had to be watching us. We moved as a mass; there was no way everyone couldn't hear us."

Although the march was originally conceived as a way to support women's rights in general, NOW decided to narrow the focus of the event. It became a rally for the pro-choice movement, inspired by the imminent Supreme Court review of the 1973 Roe v. Wade case which legalized abortion.

Duggan said, "I'm hoping the march will influence the Supreme Court. I hope [the court] won't put any restrictions on abortion and I'd like ERA to be passed. The march should influence the Bush administration and make them look at their position [on abortion]."

Elvander and Duggan added that they felt Williams' involvement was also necessary because of the attention applied to the issue.

Williams students express their support for Roe v. Wade, the 1973 Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion. These Ephs were some of a crowd of 300,000 people protesting the attempts by the Justice Department and anti-abortion groups to overturn the ruling. Steinman abortion groups have gotten on campus and across the country. Duggan referred to the March for Life in January in Washington, which was attended by Williams Against Abortion on Demand.

"[The rally] is not in response to that, but we definitely want our march to be bigger because right to life has gotten a lot of publicity and they're really a small thing I can do instead of just steam," she said.

"The pro-choice advocates have not been organized effectively and the anti-choice people are very organized; they've been very good at getting their point across."

"Very symbolic gesture" "This rally is a very symbolic gesture

'This is something that, because of the mass numbers of people involved, can have an effect of politicians.'

percentage of the population. We want to show the Bush administration that a lot more people want a right to choose; the march will show this."

Elvander said that she was also upset by the Justice Department's insistence that the high court review Roe v. Wade up for review. "It's outrageous and this is some-and it gives a lot of students who wouldn't normally get involved the opportunity to say "This is something I can support and I don't have to be radical." It makes a lot of people feel good about themselves," Elvander added.

Students attending the event expressed similar views about the importance of the march. "Women's rights and the abortion issue in particular is something I feel very strongly about. I've signed petitions but it seems there isn't much you can do. But this is something that, because of the mass numbers of people involved, can have an effect on politicians," Lisa Kaestner '91 said.

Williams sent two buses to the event, which cost $3000, according to Duggan. "About half was subsidized by the college. Different campus departments and organizations gave us money. The people going paid $15 each," she said. The group left at 11 p.m. on Saturday night and drove all night to reach Washington Sunday morning when the march began.

One theme of the rally was the need for the message to continue to spread, according to students attending the event. "I feel like the rally gave my position a lot of support and backed my own argument," Brand said. "Now I feel like I can justify and passionately convince someone about pro-choice more than before."

Beyond the Bubble

Russians vote in new elections

Two weeks ago Russians voted in their first multi-candidate elections for the Congress of People's Deputies, a new parliament. Across the Soviet Union, election results showed that many senior Communist Party officials were defeated, even some who ran unopposed lost when they failed to get a majority of votes. However, the party retained majority status because of rules limiting the number of directly elected deputies to one-third. Boris Yeltsin, a former Politburo member who was dismissed last year because of excessive criticism of the party, made a comeback by winning 89 percent of the vote in his Moscow district. He beat the government-sponsored candidate, the head of a local limousine factory.

Poland legalizes Solidarity

Poland's Communist regime signed an agreement with the independent trade union Solidarity, making the union legal once again after a seven-year ban. The government also announced that free elections will be held for the first time since World War II this June. If the spirit and word of the agreement are carried out, a 100-seat Senate, which had been dissolved after the war, will be reconstituted. The lower house of parliament will be 35 percent Solidarity, 38 percent Communist, and the rest will be split between parties now allied with the Communists. The upper house will be able to veto laws passed in the lower house. Both houses will elect a powerful President. The agreement may also guide Poland toward a market-oriented economy.

Taxxon Valdez captain gets $1 million bail

The captain of the Exxon Valdez, the supertanker that ran aground in Prince William Sound in Alaska and caused the biggest oil spill in U.S. history, has been charged with operating a vessel while intoxicated, reckless endangerment, and negligent discharge of oil. Bail for Joseph Hazelwood was set at $1 million last week, 40 times what the prosecutor recommended. Cleanup efforts in the sound have practically halted, as the oil has become too heavy and dispersed too widely to be effectively collected. Environmental damage to the sound is expected to be catastrophic.

Vietnam to withdraw all of its troops from neighboring Cambodia

Vietnam has promised to withdraw all of its troops from neighboring Cambodia by the end of next September. The Vietnamese invaded Cambodia in 1978 to overthrow the Khmer Rouge government and its leader, Pol Pot. That regime had killed a third of the Cambodian population. Since then, a Vietnamese-backed government and the Vietnamese troops have been battling rebels supported by exiled Prince Norodom Sihanouk and the Khmer Rouge.

Rain Eases Drought Fears

The region's reservoirs were low this spring because of the snow shortage last winter, but Pittsburgh officials note that recent rainfall has ameliorated the situation. Commissioner of Public Utilities William Forestell said, "Pittsburgh's reservoirs are now full." Only two weeks ago he was warning of impending conservation measures.

Compiled by Peter Kilvans from The Berkshire Eagle and U.S. News and World Report

On the Record..

"The problem isn't that women aren't comfortable; class isn't like a jacuzzi: a bubbly place where you go to relax. You need conflict in order to learn."

--Caroline Boyden '89 on an informal study done at Williams showing that women reap fewer benefits than men from discussion classes at Williams.

"I insist never again. Never again war. Never again atomic bomb."

--Mr. Takeshita, a survivor of the bombing of Hiroshima, in a panel discussion last Thursday. A survivor of Nagasaki and representatives of two environmental groups involved in the nuclear disarmament movement also took part in the discussion.

"I can only describe the meeting as humiliating. My purpose was to present my case for compensation, and their reaction was awful. It was suggested that I was trying to gouge the college."

--Joseph Dewey, owner of the Williams Bookstore, on his meeting with college representatives to determine the amount he should be compensated now that Albion will be selling textbooks. As they failed to come to an agreement, Dewey is planning to sue the college.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible and not more than 500 words. They must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. They must be typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-2289.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor BILL SAVADOVE, Arts Editor
MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors
BILL PHILPOTT, Productions Editor

Assistant News Editors
DAN SKWIRE, ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW
GREG HART & JUSTIN SMITH
Assistant Sports Editors
STEVE BRODY, KERR HOUSTON, ANNE JOSEPH
Assistant Layout Editors
ASHESH SHAH, ELISA DUGUNDJI, SARAH OUCHI

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Kovacs concedes to MassPIRG petition

by Lynn Huddon

After several months of negotiation, Williamstown Town Clerk Betty Kovacs has reached an agreement with the Massachusetts Secretary of State's Office over appropriate voter registration procedures. Last fall, MassPIRG filed an official complaint with the state charging Kovacs with using unfair registration methods.

The complaint cited Kovacs' alleged practices of attempting to discourage student voters from registering in Williamstown, including her refusal to register some students if Williamstown officials agreed to discontinue those registration practices that had been addressed in the complaint filed by MassPIRG last fall.

Robin Hall, assistant legal counsel for the Election Division of the Secretary of State's Office, said that the new agreement is not all that different from the original affidavit.

"The Town Clerk has agreed not to advise students about the negative ramifications of local voter registration," Hall explained. "She can ask for identification if she wants to, as long as it's not on a haphazard basis, but she can't refuse to register any voters, as long as they sign the affidavit of registration."

The Secretary of State's Office will provide a pamphlet called Bay State Basics 101: A Student Guide to Living in Massachusetts to the Town Clerk's office. Whenever students have questions about voter registration in Williamstown, Kovacs has been advised to give them the state pamphlet for information, or to refer them to an appropriate government agency if necessary.

In addition, students wanting to register in the future will not be asked to present any identification, though town officials may later investigate the student's credentials if an irregularity is suspected, according to a press release from the Secretary of State's Office.

"We just wanted a resolution to the whole problem," Joel McElvain '91, co-coordinator of MassPIRG's Voter Registration Drive last fall, said. "The purpose wasn't to put Kovacs through a bad experience, just to get her to comply with the law."

"She can ask for identification if she wants to, as long as it's not on a haphazard basis..."

they could not provide proper identification, and her selection of minority or ethnic students from which to ask such identification.

In February, the Secretary of State's Office issued an affidavit of compliance to Kovacs, a voluntary agreement stating that she understood and would comply with the law. Kovacs refused to sign on the premise that she had the right to tell students about the possible consequences of registering to vote in Williamstown. By the middle of March, however,

With room draw coming, housing rules finalized

by Justin Smith

Assistant Dean of the College Andrew Hernandez, Director of Housing Thomas McElroy and Housing Committee President Dane Dudley '89 announced a revision of this year's new room draw procedures last week.

The revision, which was announced in an April 5 mailing to all freshmen, sophomores and juniors, will require all students who swap picks with a person who is in another class to pick with the class behind them.

According to the new rules, a junior who swaps a pick with a senior will be required to pick as a sophomore. Those who swap with someone in their own class are unaffected and still pick with their own class.

The change was made in the wake of a storm of protest against the procedure outlined in the March 5 mailing. "There are you going to live next year?" Students feared the plan would result in the ghettoization of housing by class and claimed the Mediating and Housing committees developed the plan without adequate input from row houses or Dodd/Tyler.

The revision is a compromise solution arrived at during meetings between the College Council Mediating Committee and the House Presidents.

"We met with Evan Driscoll from Perry and Amy Heald from Tyler and we discussed the problems we were having and tried to work through what was the best decision," Dudley said. "We discussed it among the [house] presidents extensively, and all of the presidents were aware of the controversy. They were encouraged to discuss it with their own houses so they could make a knowledgeable vote...."

"There was a long discussion with different people saying different things all the time and we could not get down to vote on this issue," he added. "But there was a proposal made by Ray Neufeld, who's the president of Gladden, and he had a compromise which seemed very reasonable for everybody. The row houses weren't completely pleased, and Mission Park was definitely not completely pleased, but it seemed like it was the best compromise that could be made, and we voted on that."

Thirteen house presidents cast votes in favor of the proposal, one against the proposal, and one house president was absent.

According to McElroy, the new revision will apply to all those who made pick

During discussion of the new rule at the College Council meeting last week, Council President Sanand Raghunandan '90 announced his plan to effect change in the housing system. "We're going to re-do the whole process once and for all," Raghunandan said.

"I think that the only thing that could be a problem for freshmen trying to switch into Mission would be that they might end up not being able to have a seven-person suite with the seven people they wanted to be with," Dudley said. "I don't think there's going to be a problem

'I think if students feel that housing at Williams needs to be looked at I want it to be a student-raised initiative.'

swaps prior to the announcement of the revision, but swaps that have become less desirable because of the new rule may be rescinded.

"They can change their minds and switch. There's a deadline of April 13 with pick swaps, so if someone feels that they made a bad choice prior to the second announcement then they can rescind it just by coming down here," McElroy said. Swaps may be rescinded even if one party refuses to reverse the swap. "That will be a case that they can work out here," Dudley said.

Otherwise, McElroy explained, the new rule should not pose unusual problems. "The seniors are a little bit worse off, they drop down to junior status, but they're still going to have a reasonably good pick, and not hurt the seniors who have been living in that one particular house," McElroy said.

According to the new procedure, current freshmen who try to swap into the traditionally sophomore-dominated Mission Park with a member of a different class will pick after all other freshmen pick their sophomore-year rooms.

of getting people into Mission because if there is it'll be the first time in history.

New rules fight ghettoization
"Part of the reason this rule is in effect is because people were concerned about ghettoization by class. If the sophomores aren't willing to risk going down to Mission (say they're affiliated with Wood House or something), maybe they'll think twice, maybe they'll say 'maybe I should just live in Wood House.' That is good for Wood because it keeps unity there, and it also keeps a couple of upperclassmen in Mission Park, so you have a more diverse class rank in Mission Park," Dudley said.

Hernandez explained that the new room draw procedures will not alter the procedure sophomores must follow if they plan to go away junior year. "Until they have officially received word that they are going away they can participate in room draw," Hernandez said. "The junior going away is the real variable in the whole situation, and it's just always been that way."

Gender in the classroom

continued from page 1

validate the Harvard conclusion that women tend to talk more in classes with female professors.

In addition, the Harvard study said that women are more vulnerable to interruption in the classroom. The Williams project did agree with this finding, according to Clark West '89.

On the other hand, the students with the Williams study did not find that female participation generally was limited to many women making short, successive statements one after another. In six out of nine surveys which provided written evaluation of the data, the students noted that female participation tended to be dominated by one or two assertive females while male participation tended to be more equally distributed.

Despite this anomaly, the Williams students concluded, as did the Harvard report, that discussion classes benefit men more than women.

Ways to equalize participation
After the presentation of the study, the students and faculty members discussed ways to redress the inequalities in the classroom.

One concrete model for encouraging egalitarian discussion was tried successfully in the Freshman Residential Seminar. Professor of Philosophy Philip Clayton started discussion by asking that for the first fifteen minutes, only those who seldom participated should speak. FRS students reported that even though this meant a few moments of awkward silence, it eventually encouraged a lot more participation.

"The problem isn't that women aren't comfortable; class isn't like a Jacuzzi: a bubbly place where you go to relax. You need conflict in order to learn...[we want to make sure that] the classroom is a place that will accept your ideas and allow you to discuss them," Boyden said.

Dewey wants settlement from Williams

continued from page 1

legally bound to make any compensation. "Up until this point, I haven't seen anything that persuades me that Williams College has any liability to Mr. Dewey," Grinnell said.

"[When the agreement was made], apparently students and faculty were dissatisfied with the service, and the college, in response to that dissatisfaction, approached the two owners and suggested that one buy out the other. Dewey and Renzi got together and decided upon the agreement. The college had nothing to do with it."

In a press release of March 14, Dewey expressed a different opinion. "The college conceived, orchestrated and supervised a plan, written by their attorney, whereby I would buy Renzi's right to sell textbooks, and if I would do so, the college would agree to my having the textbook business for the term of the agreement."

In the letter informing Dewey of the lack of legal obligation on the part of the college, Grinnell gave him the opportunity to present a legal basis for his claim. "After receiving the letter, Dewey and his attorney met with Grinnell and Reed to discuss the disagreement."

"I can only describe the meeting as humiliating," Dewey said. "My purpose was to present my case for compensation, and their reaction was awful. It was suggested that I was trying to gouge the college."

"I thought long and hard about it, and it was a tough decision, but under the circumstances, I felt that I didn't have any choice."

Without the textbook business, Dewey said that he could see no way to stay in business. "There's not enough business for three bookstores in town," he said. "I'm going to lose the equity that I built up in the store for 35 years."

"It's especially serious for me, because in three more years I will be 65 and would want to think about retiring. If it was unwilling to compensate him for expected profits, he added that he wasn't satisfied with this offer, and this was the cause of the disagreement.

Since the college announced its decision not to compensate him, Dewey said that he felt his only alternative was to bring a lawsuit against the college. A 1952 graduate of Williams, Dewey said he had generally good feelings about his alma mater and was reluctant to hurt the school in any way.

"I thought long and hard about it, and it was a tough decision, but under the circumstances, I felt that I didn't have any choice."

Without the textbook business, Dewey said that he could see no way to stay in business. "There's not enough business for three bookstores in town," he said. "I'm going to lose the equity that I built up in the store for 35 years."

"It's especially serious for me, because in three more years I will be 65 and would want to think about retiring. If the contract had been continued, at that time I would have gone to the college to make plans for a successor in the textbook business. I could have sold the business or made some kind of financial arrangement."

He added that he is concerned he will no longer be able to sell his business because of the competition. "Come June there will be an inventory in the store of $80,000 net value. I'd like to be able to get some money for that."

Dewey said that the Williams Bookstore will continue to operate through the exam period, no matter what happens. "Shortly after that we'll take a hard look at the situation to determine what to do. If we receive some compensation, we could taper down nicely and sell off the inventory."

Without help from the college, he said he feared that bankruptcy proceedings would be necessary to pay off his publishers and the other people he does business with.

validate the Harvard conclusion that women tend to talk more in classes with female professors.

In addition, the Harvard study said that women are more vulnerable to interruption in the classroom. The Williams project did agree with this finding, according to Clark West '89.

On the other hand, the students with the Williams study did not find that female participation generally was limited to many women making short, successive statements one after another. In six out of nine surveys which provided written evaluation of the data, the students noted that female participation tended to be dominated by one or two assertive females while male participation tended to be more equally distributed.

Despite this anomaly, the Williams students concluded, as did the Harvard report, that discussion classes benefit men more than women.

In Other Ivory Towers

Students at Michigan protest paper's perceived anti-Semitism
In February, 200 students marched against what they perceived to be The Michigan Daily's anti-Semitic editorial policy. The editorial page of the Daily has included editorials, supported by at least a majority of the editorial board, critical of Israel and Zionism. Daily Opinion Page Editor Amy Harmon said that the protestors were mistaking criticism of Israel's policies for criticism of Judaism. However, the Daily did set up a panel of Jewish editors to meet with Jewish leaders in order to bridge the communication gap. There are several Jews on the Daily's editorial board, but protest speaker Professor Todd Endelman said, "There are always Jews who want to separate themselves from the Jewish community."

Women's Studies to start at Wesleyan
Last month, faculty members overwhelmingly approved a proposal that creates a Women's Studies major starting next fall. Prior to the proposal's acceptance, Women's Studies had only been offered as a concentration through other departments. At first, the proposal was dependent on a clause requiring the hiring of an additional faculty member, but a new motion without that clause was voted on instead. Professor Elizabeth Young-Frueh, who introduced the new motion, said, "The major is ready to go now. To push this program into the future would be disrespectful." Jennifer Rhodes '91 said, "I think the major is good in the sense that Women's Studies is recognized, but the fact that it is set aside as a special study isolates it."

Squirrels eating food in student's rooms at Penn
Students at the University of Pennsylvania have been entering their rooms only to find squirrels eating their food, despite a high-tech security system around the Quadrangle. South Campus Residences Services Assistant Kevin Karg sent a memo titled "Rodentia" to all students. The memo instructed students not to feed the squirrels, and there was a fine for hosting any pets in one's room. Karg said, "The world isn't ending, but it's serious enough to justify the writing of a memo."

Compiled by Peter Kilvans from college newspapers

Atomic bombing survivors recount experiences

by Sallie Han

Two survivors from the bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki spoke at Bronfman auditorium last Thursday. Joining them in a panel discussion entitled "In the Nuclear Shadow," were two representatives of environmental groups involved in nuclear disarmament activities in the United States.

"I must come here to explain my whole experience," Mr. Takeshita, a survivor from Hiroshima said. "Because without experience, nobody knows [about] actual war."

Takeshita related his personal story about Hiroshima. He described how he had been burned and told of his resulting illness. He said there had been little medicine available and that, as a result, maggots had infested the side of his face. He required blood transfusions daily.

Takeshita warned against the use of nuclear weapons for the sake of the future and the harmony of the cosmos. "I insist never again. Never again war. Never again atomic bombs."

"No more Hiroshima. No more Nagasaki," Nagasaki survivor Mrs. Sugito said.

Mrs. Sugito, a survivor of the atomic bombing of Nagasaki, tells a crowd at Bronfman about oragami swans, a symbol of peace. The environmental danger of nuclear weapons plants was also discussed at the event last Thursday. Thomas groups then told the audience of the leaky nuclear plants that make weapons production an unbearable evil. Michael Lowe of Greenpeace/Nuclear Watch in Columbia, South Carolina, told of the conditions which finally led to the Department of Energy's 1988 shutdown of the plutonium and tritium production plant on the Savannah River. Problems included fuel rod melting, radioactive contamination and cracking in the core cooling system.

Lowe said that the DOE had identified 168 separate waste sites in that area of South Carolina. These sites, he said, ranged from rubble pits where radiated equipment had been dumped, to "leaks" of several acres of acids or solvents. He told of how millions of gallons of radiated water and toxic chemicals have been released into creeks and streams in South Carolina.

The Savannah River plant, which had been producing for thirty-eight years, was closed recently largely due to public and congressional pressure, he said.

Mary Butters, a representative from the Palouse/Clearwater Environmental Institute and Linford Watch, described contamination at the Hanford plant on the Columbia River in Washington. The DOE recently released information on off-site spills and releases of radioactivity at the plant.

"A moral problem"
"This isn't a scientific or technical problem; it's a moral problem," Butters said. Of twenty-seven families who lived across the river from the Linford plant, 98 percent were afflicted with radiation-linked illnesses or complications, such as sterility, children born with birth defects, and cancer, she said.

Butters quoted a worker who was dying of fibrosis of the lung following radioactive contamination: "You know, when we dropped the bomb on Japan we went over later with our best doctors and provided some aid for them. And when Chernobyl blew up we went there with our best doctors and provided some aid for them. And we have done nothing for the radiation victims in this country, except to call us a liar."

ACSR wants GE, Citicorp out of South Africa

by Rajesh Swaminathan

In accordance with the new college policy regarding South Africa, the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility passed proxies calling for total divestment of three corporations from that country.

In a related decision, the Finance Committee of the Board of Trustees approved the ACSR's recommendation to sell the college's holding of Caterpillar, Inc. stock.

Two proxies submitted by Citicorp shareholders called for the corporation's total divestment from South Africa and for the termination of its all financial ties (through the international banking system) to South African banks. Both resolutions were approved by a unanimous vote. The ACSR also approved unanimously a proxy submitted by General Electric shareholders that called for total divestment.

But the ACSR balked on a similar measure for Abbott Laboratories. After a lengthy debate, the ACSR abstained from a proxy that called for the total divestment of Abbott, Vice-President of Williams College and ACSR Secretary William Reed, explained that Abbott Labs manufactured medical drugs that were important to the South African population. Asking Abbott Labs to withdraw from South Africa would harm, rather than benefit, blacks. Moreover, the company has consistently received a very high Sullivan Rating in its efforts to end apartheid. According to Reed, the ACSR felt that its presence in South Africa might be constructive in the long run. The committee vote on the proxy was three against, three for. A tie vote in the ACSR means the college will abstain from voting on the proxy.

On other topics, three resolutions submitted by the so-called Military-Industrial Complex, a GE proposal that called for the publication of a list of corporate employees who might have worked for the federal government or the Department of Defense was rejected unanimously, because such information is already available. The GTE proposal called for an estimation of the cost that would be incurred by the company if all defense or military-oriented production was to cease. The proposal was rejected on the grounds that corporate decisions should not interfere with federal policy or defense contracts.

"We have had these issues over the years; these proxies ask for information that is already available. It is not as if we are debating the future of nuclear technology in the US. Faculty here are generally divided over this issue and in general, we tend not to vote for these proxies," Reed said.

The ACSR also reaffirmed its resolve not to interfere with governmental policy decisions in its discussion of General Electric and GTE resolutions that dealt with the so-called Military-Industrial Complex. A GE proposal that called for the publication of a list of corporate employees who might have worked for the federal government or the Department of Defense was rejected unanimously, because such information is already available. The GTE proposal called for an estimation of the cost that would be incurred by the company if all defense or military-oriented production was to cease. The proposal was rejected on the grounds that corporate decisions should not interfere with federal policy or defense contracts.

"We have had these issues over the years; these proxies ask for information that is already available. It is not as if we are debating the future of nuclear technology in the US. Faculty here are generally divided over this issue and in general, we tend not to vote for these proxies," Reed said.

The ACSR also reaffirmed its resolve not to interfere with governmental policy decisions in its discussion of General Electric and GTE resolutions that dealt with the so-called Military-Industrial Complex. A GE proposal that called for the publication of a list of corporate employees who might have worked for the federal government or the Department of Defense was rejected unanimously, because such information is already available. The GTE proposal called for an estimation of the cost that would be incurred by the company if all defense or military-oriented production was to cease. The proposal was rejected on the grounds that corporate decisions should not interfere with federal policy or defense contracts.

Caterpillar decision no 'watershed'

In an interview with the Record, Reed discussed the college's decision to sell its holdings of Caterpillar, Inc. stock. He said, "It is not a watershed decision in any way; we consider each such proxy carefully on a case by case basis." He added that he did not foresee any such major divestment in the near future; he added, "I don't see any other companies in South Africa in the same position as Caterpillar."

Reed went on to emphasize the importance that the ACSR's recommendations have had on the decisions of the Board of Trustees. He dismissed the notion that the Board is a conservative and highly pro-establishment body.

"The Board's position is misconstrued; the whole range of the political spectrum is represented," Reed said. "The Finance Committee of the Board of Trustees has agreed with every ACSR recommendation; they regard us as a front-line body."

He also stressed that ACSR policy with regard to South Africa is geared toward corporate divestment as of this year, and that each submitted proxy is reviewed on a case by case basis on its ability to ameliorate the situation in South Africa.

Old Forge Restaurant

Burgers
Ribs
Steaks
Chicken
Salad Bar
daily specials
Imported Beers
7 draughts casual dining reservations requested

Rt 7, Lanesboro, MA

413-442-6797

ADVERTISEMENT

(413) 597-2289

CLARKSBURG BREAD CO.

PRODUCTS BAKED FRESH FROM SCRATCH DAILY

Coffee • Tea • Juice • Soft Drinks

OPEN EVERY DAY (413) 458-2251

THE CLIP SHOP

THE HAIR SALON FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Call for an appointment or just walk in

Gift Certificates Special Student Discounts

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center

The salon that makes the difference between old and extraordinary

40 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-8167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-9963

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT. (802) 442-0823 or (802) 447-2848

Drummond Cleaners

- 1989 SUMMER STORAGE SPECIAL -

ARE YOU WONDERING WHERE TO STORE YOUR CLOTHES AND BEDDING OVER THE SUMMER?

DRUMMOND CLEANERS WILL CLEAN AND STORE THEM FOR THE PRICE OF HAVING THEM CLEANED, IN OTHER WORDS, YOU GET FREE STORAGE!

FULLY INSURED — NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR INSURANCE.

FILL IN THIS FORM AND BRING IT IN WITH YOUR STORAGE TO BE ELIGIBLE FOR OUR STORAGE LOTTERY

First Prize
$100 Gift Certificate to Le Jardin RestaurantSecond Prize
$50 Gift Certificate to any store on Spring St.
3rd, 4th, & 5th Prize
$25 Gift Certificate to any store on Spring St.
6th thru 10th Prize
$20 in free cleaning or store on Spring St.DRAWING WILL BE HELD ON JUNE 15, 1989.
Winners will be notified by mail in June.
Call 458-4321 for free campus pick-up

Please Print Home Address Below:

Name _____
Street _____
City, Zip _____

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

66 Spring Street
458-4321Jim Drummond, Williams '58
Owner

Sexual Awareness Week Cabaret clever, but lacks focus

by Chris Green and Caitlin Osborne

Flashlight: Ah, The Sexual Awareness Week Cabaret... what can one say about such a production?

Eggbert: Well I suppose we should start off by describing exactly what it was: a series of often clever songs, hosted engagingly by Mary Kipp '89, dealing with sex and its "where and why and how." Often, these songs dealt with sex at Williams, though this was not always the case.

F: I wish that the show could have been more sharply focused. There were some parts about sex at Williams, some parts of attitudes about sex at Williams, and some parts that had nothing to do with Williams. It seemed to lack cohesion.

E: The diversity in range of songs was also matched by a diversity in quality. In general, the show was spotty, with some very noticeable highs and lows. I felt one of the highs was the smiling, provocative presence of Kipp. She seemed to provide whatever cohesion the show had, and her off-the-cuff interaction with the audience was very strong.

F: I agree that Kipp's style and composure were two of the show's major assets, but it seemed to me that she had to work too hard to do everything together. This isn't really Kipp's fault, rather the fault of the disparate subject matter, but she seemed to have to talk too much to get the show and the audience to the place where they wanted it to be. This may have been due to a lack of rehearsal, but she handled it as well as she could.

E: The songs are the true heart of the show, and they started off with promise. Luanna Kenyatta '92 performed the first solo, about the sexual attitudes and experiences of an "Ordinary Girl" at Williams. The lyrics and music were undeniably clever, and Kenyatta had a very personable style.

F: This was one of my favorite numbers. The lyrics were, indeed, hilarious. Their very cleverness leads us to question the validity of the stereotype around which the song is based: a girl who simply "won't say no" and is completely submissive to men.

E: The next solo, a poem about an "ordinary man" at Williams, by Peter Ruggerio '89, does not work as well. It just wasn't as flat-out clever as the song that preceded it. The few laughs it got were more a result of the inanity of the rhymes than any truly inherent merit.

F: I agree, and also think that the piece was hurt immeasurably by the lack of music. It didn't truly seem to be cabaret, just ordinary theatre, and, arguably, not even very good theatre at that. Ruggerio seemed to be rattling off the lines like a schoolboy. In any case, making fun of a guy-bashing joke seems almost too easy. But it really suffered the most ful Tonight," "I'm Gonna Get Laid Tonight" covers the anatomy of a steamy night at Williams, from the first lustful thoughts of the participants all the way up to the post-coital malaise. It's the most graphic of the songs, and from and details that every sexually active person at Williams is all too familiar with. My one criticism of the song is that it demonstrated the cast's sometimes questionable singing ability.

Luanna Kenyatta '92 sings about the sex life of an ordinary girl at Williams. Other cabaret members are (from left to right) Shirley Kagan '89, Doug Hunt '89, Tim Shaw '89, Katie Firth '92.

E: That didn't bother me that much. I thought that it was forgivable, given the raw, informal atmosphere.

F: All the same, if done properly, it is possible to retain that raw informality without sacrificing good singing. But as a whole, the song itself was excellent. At this point, the show was still discussing sexual attitudes at Williams.

E: The next song, about cheating on one's partner was also clever, but nowhere near so good as "I'm Gonna Get Laid."

the audience's reaction, it struck home the most frequently. I noticed you squirming a bit there yourself, eh, Flashlight?

F: Quiet. I did nothing of the kind. But it was easy to see why the audience responded so well; there was an astounding volume of funny, minute problems same, it was a logical number to follow that one. I felt that as the song went on, and the lies that characters told their partners grew less believable, the company was sacrificing accessibility for silly laughs. It was the very accessibility of previous numbers that made them so enjoyable.

'I'm Gonna Get Laid Tonight' covers the anatomy of a steamy night at Williams from the first lustful thoughts to the post-coital malaise.

F: Exactly. While "I never really loved you" works. You just can't expect students to respond to ludicrous explanations such as "I'm getting married in three months." All the same, it was a strong enough number to hold the audience's attention.

E: True. And it also made a nice transition to the next song "Who Have You Been With?" Unfortunately, this song was rather forgettable. I realized that the cast was attempting to make a point about the necessity of knowing your sexual partners past, but from a theatrical perspective, it fell flat. The music wasn't particularly good, and the lyrics lacked the cleverness and finesse that other songs in the show had.

F: I agree. It was badly staged as well. The cast members kept moving into the audience, some of them with microphones, others without, and much of the song was simply lost.

E: Yes, the show at this point seemed to be losing momentum. The piece that followed was a monologue by Katie

Firth '92 about a woman who refuses to leave her HIV positive lover. Frankly, I felt it was out of place in the show because it lacked the biting humor which should be present in any cabaret. Furthermore, it was an uncomplicated prose and lacked out as a piece of "dramatic" or "poetic" merit.

E: True. And it also made a nice transition to the next song "Who Have You Been With?" Unfortunately, this song was rather forgettable. I realized that the cast was attempting to make a point about the necessity of knowing your sexual partners past, but from a theatrical perspective, it fell flat. The music wasn't particularly good, and the lyrics lacked the cleverness and finesse that other songs in the show had.

F: I agree. It was badly staged as well. The cast members kept moving into the audience, some of them with microphones, others without, and much of the song was simply lost.

E: Yes, the show at this point seemed to be losing momentum. The piece that followed was a monologue by Katie

Maybe we were supposed to see her hardness as a veneer, but I failed to discern what the veneer covered.

E: This piece turned the show to "the issues." The song that followed featured Doug Hunt '89 and Tim Shaw '89 as two homophobic conservatives rejoicing the destruction of the scum of America by the God-sent virus. The lyrics to this piece were enjoyable in the true cabaret fashion. Shaw had my favorite line of the show as he described how the virus arrived in the rear of "a queer from Zaire." Over all, I thought Hunt gave the better performance. He was a stereotype you love to hate while Shaw seemed to be merely an accessory.

F: I disagree. I could hardly find Hunt for lampooning a stereotype with simply another stereotype, the conservative with whom no one would claim to be friends. It was just too easy. The strength of this show was in the moments where the audience could see themselves or people they know in the lyrics of the song — like "I'm Gonna Get Laid Tonight" or the song which came next dealing with rape. Yes, this song was perhaps the key moment of the show. The music struck me as particularly good. Unfortunately, the song ran too long.

E: True, it did seem to be the longest of the numbers, but I don't think that there's any way that they could have made it any shorter and still made their points as powerfully as they did. Then there's the issue of whether the song was powerful at all. F: I think that, without a doubt, it was. More than any other number, this was the one that made me truly uncomfortable. Rape, by nature, is an uncomfortable subject, but the cast handled it expertly. The song was composed of three verses, each verse describing a different "rape scenario," ranging from an outright act of extreme physical and sexual violence to the more nebulous region of intimate "date rape." I don't see how they could have left any of these three scenarios out and still made their points.

E: I suppose that my problems with the number weren't with the song's message, but with the staging. Throughout the show, my personal favorite moments came when I could see actual characters emerge from the songs; Hunt's reactionary was one, Shirley Kagan '89, was often in character, a goofy bimbo type, even while, in the background, I was sorry to see this character disappear when she came to the forefront to sing the rape song, but, in retrospect, I suppose such a character would have clashed with the song's intentions.

F: I also agree with you on Kagan. She was one of the strongest members of the show. Even when, as you said, in the background, she seemed to be fully immersed in the show, and not just hanging around waiting for her next number.

E: My problem with the rape song was that the presentation of the scenarios was too similar, especially by the "male chorus." Maybe they meant to equate in the audience's mind the idea of violent rape and date rape, but if that was their dramatic form which leaves little room for that style.

F: I had a problem with the content as well. Firth's character was fairly unattractive. From the text one could only assume that she stayed with her lover because the sex was good, rather than because she was compassionate or loyal.

continued on page 8

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinema I, II, III Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
The Dream Team	7:00	9:15
Major League	7:05	9:15
Chances Are	7:05
Bill & Ted's Excellent Adventure		9:05
Images Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
True Believer	April 11	7:00 9:00
Brazil	April 12-13	7:00 9:15
U2 Rattle and Hum	April 14-15	7:00
Tapheads	April 14-15	9:00
Matador	April 16-20	7:00 9:00
North Adams Cinema Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Rain Man	7:00	9:30
Troop Beverly Hills	7:00	9:30
Fletch Lives	7:00	9:30
Dangerous Liaisons	7:00	9:30
Pittsfield Cinema Center Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9630
Dangerous Liaisons	7:00	9:30
The Accused	7:00	9:30
Chances Are	7:00	9:30
The Accidental Tourist	7:00	9:30
Working Girls	7:00	9:30
Major League	7:00	9:30
Rain Man	7:00	9:30
Bill & Ted's Excellent Adventure	7:00	9:30
Fletch Lives	7:00	9:30
The Accidental Tourist	7:00	9:30
Berkshire Mall Cinema Rte 8, Lenox, 459-2358
Major League	1:00	3:30 7:00 9:30
Dangerous Liaisons	1:00	3:30 7:00 9:30
Rain Man	1:00	3:30 7:00 9:30
Troop Beverly Hills	1:00	3:30 7:00 9:30
The Dream Team	1:15	3:55 7:15 9:45
Bill & Ted's Excellent Adventure	1:20	3:50 7:20 9:50
Leviathan	1:15	3:45 7:20 9:45
Fletch Lives	1:05	3:35 7:05 9:35
The Accidental Tourist	12:45	3:15 6:45 9:15

Subject to change after Thursday

Rock 'n' Roll

Bang your head, Holler Lauder

by Tom Iuck

Hair still matted with sweat from the concert, their eyes heavy with sleep, the two musicians were awakening from a drunken slumber. Axeman Tommy-Lee Lauder and vocalist Jurgen Lauder are the driving force behind the German myth-metal band Holler Lauder. In thick accents — Jurgen's voice still hoarse from his vocal tirade — they spoke about their weekend assault on Williams on March 4, when they played the Crow's Nest.

We found much in common — greasy blonde hair and a scorching desire to play heavy metal.

After expending so much energy in their frenzied concert, I was amazed they were coherent enough to talk to me in this interview. Throughout the course of our conversation, I realized that no matter how humorous the band seems to American ears, they actually have a strong and sincere following in Europe. For the piercing heavy metal of Holler Lauder, the music is the message.

RECORD: How do you feel? Would you like some coffee?

TOMMY-LEE: Thanks, but no thanks. We drink only whiskey in the morning. JURGEN: Ja, but we have grown to like — how do you say? Jacques Daniels.

RECORD: J.D., huh. Where are Lars (bass) and Korg (drummer)?

JURGEN: Korg is in his box; Lars is out jogging. He says in shape by hitting, rowing, longboats, hunting, that kind of thing. He's sort of the opposite of us — a devil's advocate. We drink! He drives.

RECORD: How did your band form?

TOMMY-LEE: Through the course of our legacy there's been a lot of mal-zelung (bad press) about our creation. The truth is we're brothers separated at birth — how we formed a hard to say — we just all knew what we had to do. There was a mental link — like in that new Schwarzenegger movie, Twins. We all saw the light. Lars was studying cello at the Vienna Conservatory, and we heard a heavy metal schallplatter [album] one day.

JURGEN: It was hotter than Hell by Kiss.

TOMMY-LEE: Yeah. He gave up Bach and studied Rock. He did much skipping of school and hung out at a bar. At his graduation recital he set his cello on fire with lighter fluid.

JURGEN: With Zippo. And then he started a band called Zippo. Well, one evening Tommy and I was in the bar and the band was playing. And the three of us met. We found much in common — we all had the same last name, chiseled Nordic features, blue eyes, greasy blonde hair, yellow teeth, bad breath, and a scorching desire to play heavy metal.

RECORD: When was all this happening?

TOMMY-LEE: We only drink beer — preferably Coors — it's the nectar of the gods. But we sometimes do hallucinogenic [hallucinogenic]. LSD is a mind link to Valhalla, without it we wouldn't be able to spread the true metal message.

RECORD: And why have you chosen to spread your message to America?

TOMMY-LEE: Well, a priest at our

Tommy-Lee, Lars, and a faithful fan

Photo courtesy of Ekelhof Records

TOMMY: In 1987, the same month when Halley's Comet was closest to the earth, mind you. Before that I was a woodcutter in the Black Forest. I traded my axe for an AXE — and you know what I mean (laughs).

JURGEN: (laughs) I was a sheep herder. I would sit around all day and write poetry and sing to my sheep. All I thought about was wool and the gods and I couldn't figure out why I'll I met the other brothers. Korg made everything come together — he was the germ in the crown. He was a cobbler's apprentice making shoes and astrays at a tannery. Right out I knew he had a way with his hands — and with leather scraps that were lying around the store he made some costumes for us.

RECORD: Costumes? How has the band's image evolved?

JURGEN: Well the hair has gotten longer, like horse's manes. Tommy dyed his hair purple. I stopped wearing the spiked codpiece and now have a leather collar. But we have always basically looked the same — like our ancestors, the Nordic gods. But when we came to America, customs confiscated our helmets and most of our torture paraphernalia. Not to mention our drugs.

RECORD: Drugs? I thought you were a clean band.

TOMMY-LEE: As we prevail. Right now we are finishing our Hellraiser '89 tour. America I love — it is full so much inspiration. Like when Korg got hit by a car.

JURGEN: He got run over by a red Camaro — killed like a deer on the autobahn, and out of that came our ballad "Red Camaro." Then there is "Jagella" a song based on our records — our homeland has not always been kind to us.

RECORD: And you plan to stay in this country for a while?

TOMMY-LEE: As we prevail. Right now we are finishing our Hellraiser '89 tour. America I love — it is full so much inspiration. Like when Korg got hit by a car.

JURGEN: He got run over by a red Camaro — killed like a deer on the autobahn, and out of that came our ballad "Red Camaro." Then there is "Jagella" a song based on our records — our homeland has not always been kind to us.

RECORD: And why have you chosen to spread your message to America?

TOMMY-LEE: Well, a priest at our church in Cologne used to live in Boston — before he got thrown out of his parish for alcoholism. Anyway, he said there were many universities here — he called it "Metachustels." So it was very natural. We got a gig playing at the Quechua Lake Motel, but it was cancelled when the owner found his daughter tied to a telephone pole with cat gut guitar strings.

JURGEN: So we met an ice fisherman who said we should play in Williams. Personally, I like the university scene.

My guitars are custom made by an old, blind, limbleless mute who lives in the forest.

Everybody is so young and beautiful and innocent — like fresh snow in the Alps. And don't you ever forget it. Your minds are so pure, so ripe, so open — like the doors of Ragnarok — you are eager to learn from the metal masters.

RECORD: And you plan to stay in this country for a while?

TOMMY-LEE: As we prevail. Right now we are finishing our Hellraiser '89 tour. America I love — it is full so much inspiration. Like when Korg got hit by a car.

JURGEN: He got run over by a red Camaro — killed like a deer on the autobahn, and out of that came our ballad "Red Camaro." Then there is "Jagella" a song based on our records — our homeland has not always been kind to us.

RECORD: And you plan to stay in this country for a while?

TOMMY-LEE: As we prevail. Right now we are finishing our Hellraiser '89 tour. America I love — it is full so much inspiration. Like when Korg got hit by a car.

JURGEN: He got run over by a red Camaro — killed like a deer on the autobahn, and out of that came our ballad "Red Camaro." Then there is "Jagella" a song based on our records — our homeland has not always been kind to us.

RECORD: And why have you chosen to spread your message to America?

TOMMY-LEE: Well, a priest at our

Sex

Awareness Week Cabaret also addressed serious issues

continued from page 6

intention, well, I just had a hard time believing that. I was left unconvinced that violent rape and date rape were the same thing. If, on the other hand, that wasn't their intention, then their intention was unclear.

F: I'm not sure if there was a solid intention. The self-professed goal of cabaret is not to pass judgement on, but merely to report, to "tell it like it is." I was struck by the song, and I think the rest of the audience was as well. The reason that I thought the rape song worked better than the AIDS song was, again, the awareness of date rape on campus, where fewer people believe they have to deal with AIDS. Again, effectiveness was a matter of accessibility.

E: Speaking of accessibility, how about that last song?

F: I assume that by that exquisite reference you mean the "Dartmouth Safe Sex Kit" song?

E: That's the one. Lord knows what it was doing at that point in the show. The show seemed to follow a definite trend in dealing with funny, college-related issues first, then moving on to, as you said, "the issues." This was an anomaly.

E: I don't think that they did. The audience seemed to be wholly attentive throughout the whole show. And on issues that the cast was almost obligated to touch on, rape and AIDS, they made it as entertaining as they could while still went on before. It had its moments, but you're right, as a closing number, it was a curious choice. As a whole, my biggest criticism of the show was that the "important" numbers just weren't as clever and appealing as the lighter, Williams-related songs. The black humor of the AIDS song was harder to really laugh out loud at, and the rape song was the only expressly non-funny song.

They made it as entertaining as they could while still remaining within the bounds of good taste.

E: Of course, a funny song about rape seems to defy sensibility.

F: True, but I wonder if the audience perhaps "tuned out" those songs to some extent, for the simple reason that they weren't as entertaining.

E: I don't think that they did. The audience seemed to be wholly attentive throughout the whole show. And on issues that the cast was almost obligated to touch on, rape and AIDS, they made it as entertaining as they could while still remaining within the bounds of acceptable taste. My major criticism was something altogether different. Throughout the first part of the show, the cast, and especially Kipp, did a fine job of creating a real cabaret atmosphere, putting audience members on the spot, and generally communicating very well. This waned noticeably throughout the second half, and the show soon became less of a cabaret than a mere sequence of songs. The atmosphere was inconsistent.

F: I agree. But the show had a lot of things going for it as well. The music was, as I mentioned before, superb. I loved the costumes as well. They made a strong and sharp point by costuming the women as bimbos/whores and the men as nice, young, clean cut guys.

E: I wish that they could have had more technical capabilities. I think that more complex lighting and tech work could have helped several songs. The AIDS song comes to mind. But, given the location, Hexter South, this is a bit much to ask.

F: I missed any kind of dancing or choreography. I really saw that as being integral to cabaret.

E: Given the amount of time in which they had to put this together, I think that this can be forgiven.

F: Well, I don't know... E: Don't be such a grump. Overall?

F: With some reservations, thumbs up.

E: The same.

COLDWELL BANKER REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT BANKING SERVICES

ANALYST POSITION

Immediate employment opportunities are available for candidates who possess exceptional analytical and writing skills and have demonstrated a record of academic distinction, personal achievement, and integrity. Experience with PC-based interactive software is a requirement of the position.

This two year position provides outstanding undergraduates who expect to go on to pursue graduate degrees in business, law, or other fields, an opportunity to develop in-depth expertise in real estate financial transaction analysis, evaluation, and offering material preparation.

The general responsibilities of the Analyst include providing general support to the firm's partners and associates for all activities relating to the origination, processing and placement of large real estate transactions.

For immediate consideration, please submit a resume and cover letter to:

Mr. Thomas B. Townley
Personnel Manager
Coldwell Banker Commercial Group, Inc.
533 South Fremont Avenue
Los Angeles, California 90071-1798

Re: IBS Analyst Recruitment

BOSTON UNIVERSITY LONDON • BRUSSELS • ISRAEL

Master of Science in Management

- Programs emphasize international management
- Internships with multinational companies in London and Brussels
- Optional foreign language study
- University campus facilities
- Program completion in one calendar year (three terms)

For more information, call 617/353-2982

or write:
Boston University
Metropolitan College
755 Commonwealth Avenue
Room 105
Boston, MA 02215

1839 1989
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
SESQUICENTENNIAL

An equal opportunity, affirmative action institution

Give Blood. Get Za.

Don't make us twist your arm.

Please support.

Today and Tomorrow Bloodmobile

Mellon Foundation gives $200 G's for minority program at Williams

TOMMY-LEE: You sound scared. Aren't you ready for us? We have already planned our next invasion -- the Blitzkrieg Tour!

"We hope to get at least a good number of students to participate in the program and go on to get Ph.D.'s. The aim is to increase the pool of black, Hispanic and native American Ph.D.'s. This is an area where there is a critical need," Dickerson said.

The aim is to increase the number of black, Hispanic and native American Ph. D's.'

Students selected for the program would start in the fall of their sophomore year, although this year the selection process will occur during this semester. Fellows will work with faculty members on research projects, and will be paid stipends on the same basis as other student research assistants at Williams.

"Students will be paired with faculty members. They will be engaged in meaningful research assignments, the kind of work that will give them a feel for what professors do. I am very excited about it. We have a great chance," Dickerson said.

The Mellon Foundation has established similar programs on other campuses, and has also started similar programs aimed at Asian-American students. The grant Williams received, however, only provides money for black, Hispanic and native American students.

"These are conditions that are required by the Mellon grant. We are just adhering to the grant. There is another [Mellon] program similar to this one that includes Asian-Americans," Dickerson said.

"We will try to identify persons through G.P.A. and by professors' recommendations about students who have done outstanding work. All students will be selected by nomination...they will be faculty-selected across the board."

The Williams
Record LIVE

- 1) Area's largest fine beer & ale selection
- 2) Hundreds of quality wines
- 3) Unique videos as well as latest releases
- 4) Ambassador, Blue Mt. Arts, Far Side Greeting cards
- 5) Dozens of soft furry creatures from Dakin, Applause, and North American Bears
- 6) Soft drinks, munchies, party supplies
- 7) Great advice on matters large and small
- 8) Courteous, professional service

Stop fooling around. It's time to get hardcore about software. With Microsoft.
We'll give you all the resources you want. Tens of millions in R&D funding. Along with one of the most elementary tools for thinking — a door, which leads to your own private office. All backed by management that truly does speak your language, because they probably helped write it.
We're serious about software design. If you are too, then apply right now for one of these positions.

We're working on everything from object-oriented methodology, compilers, operating systems, and networking to sophisticated graphics, powerful applications software and more. In fact, we're working on some truly visionary ideas we can't even reveal yet. You could be too, if you have programming experience and a background that includes micro's, "C" or Pascal, 8086, 68000, LINUX®/XENIX®, Macintosh® Toolbox, or MS-DOS®.

Instant responsibility. You select the features, you shape the product, you design the user interface for new generations of software. Guide product development from programming through documentation and testing. Keep your product at the forefront of technology by knowing your competition and product trends.

We are an equal opportunity employer.

Microsoft®

Elvis Costello burns down the Palace

mate settings. His first Albany appearance in ten years, the show -- featuring Costello and his acoustic guitar -- proved to fans and interested listeners alike that the name Spike the Beloved Entertainer was by no means an overstatement of Costello's abilities.

Costello opened on an ironic but typical note -- "Oh I just don't know where to begin" ("Accidents Will Happen," from 1978's Armed Forces), but once he had begun, his purpose for the evening was evident: to entertain an expectant audience with fresh interpretations of new and old songs, with affable wit, and with a characteristic -- and somewhat twisted -- dramatic element: on this tour, the Broken Heart of Unknown Deadly

Costello's set, which lasted just over two hours, struck a good balance between new and older numbers, from his 1977 debut My Aim Is True through this year's Spike. Of the fifteen songs recorded for Spike, he performed only six over his three sets, including "Let Him Dangle," a meditation on capital punishment, "Deep Dark Truthful Mirror," and two songs written "with that left-handed guy" (Paul McCartney) — the single "Veronica" and the amusing "Pads, Paws, and Claws" (during which the audience was invited to make cat-like meows). Costello displayed biting wit in "God's Comic," a parody of American television. He explained, "This song is about an interview between God and Geraldine Rivera. It's like when Geraldine interviewed Manson... Gr... What if God looks just like Morton Downey Jr.?" The entire song was punctuated by Costello's one-liners on the media. "I really like the Solid Gold Gods!" His Irish roots and London upbringing made his seemingly absurd comments quite funny. But more immediate than the amusing "God's Comic" and musically the finest song of the night was "Baby Plays Around," a jazz-inflected, plaintive number Costello wrote with wife and ex-Pogue Cait O'Riordan. During the pauses between Costello's final tortured pangs of guitar, the 2,500 onlookers fell completely silent, leaving Costello small and exposed in his chair, but confident nonetheless.

Costello balanced out newer material with several classics, including a dissonant, fiery "Watching the Detectives," the trademark "New Amsterdam," Lennon/McCartney's "You've Got To Hide Your Love Away," and the country-tinged "Radio Sweetheart," which closed out his eleven song first set. A second set, which featured more recent songs, was the evening's finest. Costello began with the biting "I Hope You're Happy Now" from Blood and Chocolate ("I know then what I know now/never loved you anyhow") and "Let Him Dangle" from Spillikate. After mediating on self-doubt in "Britannia, Mistake," Costello closed the set with the most powerful performance of the evening

Costello proved himself a feisty, bitter man who simply won't be satisfied — after fifteen records, his bitterness has only slightly diminished. Yet the thirty-four-year-old's channelled anger was regularly offset by his humor — "God's Comin'" became a stand-up comedy routine, and "I'm Not Satisfied" ("a tribute to Justice Batesman") left the audience reeling.

After a short break, accompanied by thunderous classical music, frenetic light effects, and trailed by an eight-foot high stuffed henr, Costello returned—wielding a pitchfork? "From now on, I am Monsieigneur Napoleon Dynamite, and you are my sinners!" he screeched. Pointing with his pitchfork to the "Broken Heart of Dandy Sins" (a stage prop Houdini left in the basement of the theater for "last gift"), Costello explained that members of the audience would be responsible for unveiling those sins—and determining what songs he would play in the process. After obtaining the assistance of four women from the audience (procured by the "Wolfman"), Monsieigneur Dynamite had each woman pick a sin from the henr—"Quayle" (Anyone who came to the show doubting Costello's ability to translate songs from arranged compositions on record to loose acoustic accompaniment was most likely convinced: in Costello's case, stripped-down renditions of songs are often the most immediate and powerful. Without cluttered backing arrangements (as on his recent "Saturday Night Live" appearance), the audience could focus on Costello's superb singing (not to be confused with a superb voice) and crafty wordplay. Convincing and impassioned throughout, and occasionally hilarious, Costello's "I Wanna Sex You Up," "I Wanna Sex You Down," the angry but humorous "Sins" showed that after twelve years of recording and touring, he can, on his own merit, still burn down little nagales.

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

Army National Guard

MAIL TO: Army National Guard, P.O. Box 6000, Clifton, NJ 07015

NAME ☐ M ☐ F

ADDRESS

CITY/STATE/ZIP

AREA CODE PHONE US CITIZEN ☐ YES ☐ NO

SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBER BIRTH DATE

OCCUPATION

STUDENT ☐ HIGH SCHOOL ☐ COLLEGE
PRIOR MILITARY SERVICE ☐ YES ☐ NO

BRANCH RANK AFM/MOS

 ARMY
National Guard

A1CJC17049N

Complete Repair on All Bikes

Water Street, Williamstown
Extended Hours Open 7 Days 458-8445

TheLibrary

Bridal Registry Mont Blanc Refills
Ethnic Jewelry Unusual gifts
Small Leather Goods
Old Prints of J.J. Audubon & others

Visit us this weekend

Sports

Tanned oarsmen drop a close match to Dartmouth on Saturday

by James Lee

The Williams crew teams opened their second varsity season with fine performances at the Augusta (Georgia) Invitational during their Spring Break training trip. Williams won sixth place overall: the varsity women, junior varsity women, novice women and novice men finished third and the varsity men finished seventh. The Eph oarsmen went on to suffer a close loss to Dartmouth at Hanover, N.H. last Saturday.

"I am very pleased with the effort made at Augusta. Considering that we were on water for only two weeks while the other teams were since February, we did very well," said head coach Peter Wells. Williams participated in the Augusta Invitational for the first time this year; among its regular season competitors, only Temple University finished ahead in the men's varsity category.

Facing the Big Green
The Ephs faced tight races in freezing weather last Saturday against powerhouse Dartmouth. Of the three varsity eights and two novice eights, only the second novice eight emerged victorious in the end. The match-up was even as varsity was paired with varsity and novice was paired with novice.

The first Eph varsity eight was composed of co-captain Seth Burns '89, seniors Andy Haddock, David Katz, Jeff Kip, juniors Mark Cullen, Andy Haddock, Michael Mader, Todd Owens and sophomore John Kennel with coxswain Kate Iverson '90. They lost by a deck as their effort at catching up after lagging a boat's length behind Dartmouth at the 1000-meter halfway point proved to be inadequate. The second Eph boat found itself down by a small amount of open water at the midway point. It ended up losing by an open-water boat's length as its efforts to row around an iceberg, in addition to the Big Green charge in the sprint, widened up the margin.

Season prospects

Though the men's team had an unbeaten season record last year, some oarsmen are confident that the team is even stronger this year.

"We're the fastest we've ever been and, potentially, we are better than last year. We've just got a lot of work ahead," said Kip, who stroked the first varsity eight against Dartmouth.

The crew teams face University of Connecticut and WPI this Saturday in Worcester.

M. swimming (cont)

continued from page 12

tion All-American title with his 11th place finish of 387.95 points in the 3-meter diving.

Relay Competition

Since Williams is part of the NESCAC conference, each swimmer had to qualify individually for the Division III Nationals. In order to have entered a relay team, each Williams relay team member would have had to qualify in an individual event. According to Samuelson, other teams outside the league could bring a relay if only one member had qualified individually.

"We were missing some swimmers who didn't make the times individually. Thus our relays were not as good as the ones from New England. We would have done better in the final scoring and place-ing if we could have used the swimmers who were on the relays at New England [where Williams won the meet by the largest margin in history]," stated Samuelson.

The 200 medley relay composed of Cleuzo, Davis, Benson and Giglio placed sixth, gathering another All-American award. The 400 medley relay of Cleuzo, Davis, Benson, and Snyder took fifth place.

Three other relays earned Honorable Mention All-American. The 800 free relay of Snyder, Dehmel, Benson and Jordan, the 200 free relay of Giglio, Jordan, Snyder and Davis, and the 400 free relay of Giglio, Davis, Snyder and Jordan took ninth place, 11th place and 16th place respectively.

The Record pays

Positions on the business staff now open

Call x2400

This is all you need to apply for the Card.

With Automatic Approval, it's easier to qualify while you're still in school.

Now getting the Card is easier than ever. For the very first time, students can apply for the American Express® Card over the phone. Simply call 1-800-942-AMEX. We'll take your application by phone and begin to process it right away. It couldn't be easier.

What's more, because you attend this school full time, you can also take advantage of the Automatic Approval Offer for students. With this offer, you can get the American Express Card right now—without a full time job or a credit history. But if you have a credit history, it must be unblemished. It's actually easier for you to qualify for the Card now, while you're still a student, than it ever will be again.

Apply Now: 1-800-942-AMEX

*Pure is for roundtrip travel on Northwest Airlines. Tickets must be purchased within 24 hours after making reservations. Fares are non-refundable and no itinerary changes may be made after purchase. Seats at this fare are limited and may not be available between cities to which Northwest does not have direct connections or routings. City fuel tax surcharges not included in fare from Boston ($2.50), Chicago ($5.00) and Florida cities ($2.00). Certain blackout dates and other restrictions may apply. For complete offer details, call 1-800-942-AMEX. Current student Cardmembers automatically receive two $99 vouchers in the mail. © 1989 American Express Travel Related Services Company, Inc.

Sam enjoys walks in the park, playing ball with the boys, and casual sex.

And he's only three. He's probably fathering some of the 13.5 million unwanted dogs and cats that must be put to death each year.

You can't stop your pets from acting naturally. But if you love them, you'll have them spayed or neutered.

Talk to your veterinarian. Or contact the MSPCA for more information.

MSPCA on the move
Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals
350 So. Huntington Ave., Boston, MA 02130 (617) 522-7400
(413) 736-2992

AMERICAN EXPRESS REPRESENTATIVE
THE TRAVEL STORE
We make great vacations!
Lowest prices available with great rates FOR Summer Vacation.
Super Packages Available to All Destinations
We Handle All Charters
REMEMBER: There is NEVER a Fee for Our Services!!!
Hours: Mon.-Fri. 9-5, Thurs. 9-6, Sat. 9-12
105 Spring St. 458-5788 Williamstown

La Coccina
MEXICAN RESTAURANTS
With coupon receive $2.00 off our FANTASTIC FAJITA regularly priced at $8.95 Tender chunks of marinated beef, chicken or both. Sautéed with veggies and served piping hot with rice, beans, lettuce, tomatoes and hot tortillas & sour cream
not valid on Saturdays
250 State Rd. • North Adams, MA • 413-654-4757
940 Vermont St. • Westfield, MA • 413-488-0077

Women's lacrosse wins thrilling opener

by Juan Alonzo

Coming off its best season ever last year, the Williams College women's lacrosse team started the 1989 season successfully in Maine Saturday by defeating Bowdoin 13-2. The Ephs then went on to beat Bates on Sunday, 8-7.

Saturday's game against Bowdoin proved especially tough for the women. After a tiring six-hour drive, the Ephwomen faced what coach Christine Mason described as "ready, fast and fit" opponents.

In the game's early going, the squad was sloppy in its attack. Unforced errors and unnecessary turnovers characterized the team's play throughout the first half. Both teams traded scores throughout the game, but Williams always seemed to find itself a point behind.

In the final minutes of the game, the Ephwomen trailed the Polar Bears by a score of 11-12. With 1:20 left, the Ephwomen tied the score at 12. With 20 seconds left in the contest, Williams got an assist off Bowdoin goalkeeper Carin McCann blocked it.

The Polar Bears tried clearing it but pressure from attack Heidi Sandreuter '92 produced the game's most crucial turnover. Sandreuter passed the ball to junior midfielder Mo Flaherty with only six seconds left. With three opponents applying heavy pressure, Flaherty somehow got a shot off. With one second left in the game, the Ephwomen pulled ahead 13-12.

"The game could have gone either way. But we are a very determined team...[the players] know anything can happen. They have that feeling of never giving up, even in the last second," said Coach Mason.

Intrigue in the Williams win over Bowdoin was Flaherty with three goals and two assists, Sandreuter and Amy Kershaw '90 with three goals each, Ben Cooper '91 with three goals and one assist, Ashley Edgar '92 with one goal, and Mary Liff '89 with one assist. Goalkeeper, Tracy Davis '91 came through with key saves in the final minutes of the game and the day with a total of nine saves.

Match against Bates

Sunday's game against Bates turned out to be less exciting but just as rewarding for the Ephwomen. By half-time, Williams commanded a 6-3 lead. Bates came on strong in the second half but its efforts were not enough against the poised Ephwomen.

Nearing the end of the contest, the Bobcats scored to come within one. The score stood at 8-7 in favor of Williams for the rest of the game.
Senior captain Wynn Iohli performed in stellar fashion, turning in key defensive plays and keeping her teammates calm and poised in the final minutes of the game.

"Light came up with the ball, found the open field, and kept the team calm," Coach Mason stated.

In the Bates match, Kershaw led the scoring with four goals and four assists. She was followed by Flaherty with three goals and three assists, Edgar with one point, and Elizabeth Gioia '92 with one assist. Goalie Davis blocked five shots.

The Ephs face Skidmore today and Tufts Saturday at home.

Men's rugby winds up rough day with brawl

by Mark A. Stepias

Last Saturday the Williams Rugby Club made a rather disappointing excursion to M.I.T. Uninspired play by Williams allowed the Cambridge hosts to stay on the attack for the greater part of the first half, scoring a try simply because they had more supporting players around the ball than the Ephs.

The speedy MIT inside backs found they could shut down their Williams counterparts by running up flat in defense. The result was their winning a good amount of ball without enough territorial gains ensuing.

The few times the Eph outside backs saw the ball they used it well, advancing up field before being stopped by the MIT cover defense. Senior wing Bob Goldstein turned one orthodox play, involving quick passes along the line, into a try near the end of the first half.

That score together with one from inside center Phil Jack '90, who chased down a kick which the MIT fullback failed to recover, constituted all the Williams points.

Though MIT scored only two tries as well, they pulled 13 points by two conversions and a penalty.

"We couldn't seem to play with the energy we saw at the end of the fall."

"The motivation and support we're used to providing just wasn't there today. We couldn't seem to play with the same energy we saw at the end of the fall, so I know we're going to have to work hard to get it back," outside center Bryn Baird '89 commented on the loss.

It's look sharp

The killer B game was more encouraging for Williams rugby, though the match ended on a sour note. Fielding a number of newly promoted players, the White Dogs touched down three tries and held a weightier pack at bay in tenacious defense. The opening score came from a 40-meter blind side run by sophomore 8-man Mitt Conlan, who plowed through a handful of defenders during the run. Dan Foote '90, in his first B-side game at stand-off, claimed the second try from a daring Sid Going call by senior scrum-half Mark McDermott at a line out near the MIT try zone.

The new B-side forwards ran on sheer adrenalin. Buff Winterer '91 worked well with veteran hooker John Dillon '89 to provide line-out ball to McDermott while flanker Dave Lerner '90 and sophomore lock Mark Elefante supported the line magnificently. Elefante scored the second try of his career from a broken field run involving both Lerner and senior wing Hass Baker.

All in all, Williams outplayed MIT in the second game. But the frustrated Engineers accepted their loss badly. What had been a hard fought match ended in a hard fought brawl when a disaffected MIT back struck a Williams player after the whistle had gone for an infraction.

Next week Williams hosts UVM in a rematch of the White Dog victory in Burlington last fall.

WUFO (cont)

continued from page 12

quickly enough to stop deadly Tufts long throws followed by very patient play near the end zone. This was despite hard running by John Berger '89. The consistent and talented offense of the E-Men beat the Ephs, yet WUFO still proved their ability to move the frisbee up the field.

The tournament highlighted WUFO's major weakness, the transition from offense to defense, yet it also showed that on offense the Ephs had the talent and experience necessary to move the frisbee around with expertise. With the maturity that will be gained during coming weeks WUFO will likely develop into a team that can qualify for regionals and pose a threat to several area teams who are aiming to qualify for the National Championship in June.

Pack of Lies.

The Williams Record LIVE

ALASKA FIELD RESEARCH
Earn academic credit this summer studying alpine ecology & land management amidst the glaciers and peaks of the Wrangell Mountains.

Wildlands Studies, 3 Mosswood Circle, Cazadero, CA 95421
707-632-5665

STUDENT & YOUTH AIRFARES
SPRING/SUMMER RATES
BOOK THEM NOW! ROUNDTIPS
FROM BOSTON
PARIS from $470
RIO from $760
FRANKFURT from $470
HONG KONG from $799
SYDNEY from $1170
TOKYO from $758
SAN JUAN from $245
FROM NEW YORK
LONDON from $380
MADRID from $470
OSLO from $410
*FARES FROM MOST U.S. CITIES
*DESTINATIONS WORLDWIDE
*EQUALLY LOW INLAND FARES
*MULTI-STOP AROUND THE WORLD FARES AVAILABLE
*EUROPEAN CITIES AVAILABLE
*TOURS-USA, CHINA, EUROPE
*CALL FOR FREE INFORMATION BOOKLET
THE STUDENT TRAVEL NETWORK
1-800-6014 1-576-4623
222 Broadway St. 100 Massachusetts Ave.
Boston, MA 02116 New York, NY 10018
ST/1 STA TRAVEL

Athlete of the Week

This week's recipients are track standout Marc Beitz '91 and swimming star Rob Benson '90. Beitz, running in his first steepchase ever last Saturday at Westfield State, led from start to finish and won the event with a time of 9:31. Beitz had perfect form over the barriers and water pit in posting a time that would have made him second in New England last year. Benson travelled to Bowdoin over spring break for Division III Nationals; he came away with a 4:02.70 first place in the 400 individual medley, making him the national champ. Congrats, Marc and Rob!

Sports Quiz

Win a $15 gift certificate from Goff's -- enter the quiz

- 1) Michigan's Glen Rice set a record this year for points scored in the NCAA tournament. Who held the record previously?
- 2) What yacht club lost the America's Cup in a court ruling two weeks ago, and in what country will the Cup now reside?
- 3) Who is the new head basketball coach at Arizona St.?
- 4) What school won the NCAA Division I hockey championship this year?

Send your answers to Mariam Naficy at SU 1871 by Saturday. In case of a tie, the winner will be chosen in a random drawing. Last week's winner was former Record sports editor Stewart Verdery, who got more correct answers than any other entrants. Congrats, Stu!

Answers to the last quiz: 1) Dean Smith has taken seven teams to the NCAA final four; 2) Larry Brown coached UCLA to their last final four appearance in 1980; 3) Montreal and Calgary were the first NHL teams to clinch playoff births this year; 4) Three Eph track athletes were indoor All-Americans.

Shoe Sale

save up to 50%

on selected

- tennis
- running SHOES
- soccer

GOFF'S SPORTS, INC.
15 Spring Street 458-3605

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

Razzle-Dazzle

BY TOM MIXON/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maestas

- ACROSS
- 1 Ale ingredient
 - 5 Rustic and
 - 9 Rimbaud
 - 10 As red as
 - 15 Dingle
 - 19 N.T. omission
 - 26 Incline
 - 21 Choleic
 - 22 Footnote abbr.
 - 23 Australia
 - 24 Earthen pots
 - 25 Sartre novel
 - 30 Burden
 - 31 Athanasian or Nicene
 - 32 Argot
 - 33 Journey into Fear author
 - 36 Musical upbeats
 - 37 Point Calif. cape
 - 41 Like whooping cranes
 - 42 Tail-dragging nursery
 - 46 Hagedorn's
 - 48 Heldreth's
 - 49 Strauss
 - 46 Experts
 - 48 Hagedorn's
 - 49 Dr. Seuss's
 - 50 Literary
 - 51 Literary
 - 52 Certin
 - 53 Lady at Court
 - 52 Innsbruck thrills 1976
 - 59 Exist
 - 60 Dessert wines
 - 62 Speedily
 - 63 American wildcat
 - 65 Arty party
 - 66 Yawning
 - 67 Positioned lor
 - 68 Checks cogily
 - 99 Jetty
 - 100 Master, in
 - 76 Cousin of Idaho
 - 71 Serenities
 - 74 Like some
 - 75 Bughost best
 - 78 Ha's opposite
 - 79 Flaherty's
 - 80 Literary
 - 81 DX
 - 82 Transmuted
 - 84 Cornelia petal
 - 85 Chapeaux for writer Jean
 - 91 Hawk
 - 92 Ouster; dislodgment
 - 94 Makur vira
 - 95 Scholastic propositions
 - 97 Rock attachment
 - 98 Checks cogily
 - 99 Jetty
 - 100 Master, in
 - 101 Yellowish green
 - 163 Increase
 - 164 Mother was one
 - 108 English actress's family
 - 109 treasures
 - 111 A weather's opposite
 - 112 Eye opener
 - 113 Tabby
 - 114 At the peak
 - 115 Winter Palace resident
 - 116 Agate and pira
 - 117 Eminent
 - 118 Hanging ends
 - 58 Examines minutely
 - 61 Lug of a jug
 - 64 U.S.A. graduate
 - 68 This might be red
 - 67 A larceny size
 - 68 Hiding device
 - 69 Verd princess
 - 70 ... it is of life
 - Pravert 13. 12
 - 71 Workman, e.g.
 - 72 Sierra
 - 73 Transmits
 - 78 Knight's shaft
 - 77 Neutral colors
 - 63 Cause an axle in break
 - 65 Crew's relative
 - 58 Examine minutely
 - 61 Lug of a jug
 - 64 U.S.A. graduate
 - 68 This might be red
 - 67 A larceny size
 - 68 Hiding device
 - 69 Verd princess
 - 70 ... it is of life
 - Pravert 13. 12
 - 71 Workman, e.g.
 - 72 Sierra
 - 73 Transmits
 - 78 Knight's shaft
 - 77 Neutral colors
 - 63 Cause an axle in break
 - 65 Crew's relative

"Blas! ... The elephants are sick again!"

"We're here, Eriel Antartical! ... Bottom of the world!"

Sports

Ephwomen ruggers have mixed success

by Laura B. Whitman

After less than one week of practice, the WWRFC travelled to Albany and Vassar College this weekend for its opening matches. The A-side, consisting of the more experienced players in the club, found victory at Albany 6-4; the B and C-sides, however, had difficulties against the Vassar women, who had been diligently practicing since February.

In the A-side match, the stealing foot of hooker Caitlin Mann '92 coupled with the White scrum's ability to drive hard, gave Williams considerable control of the ball. On the penalties, second rows Rebecca Matteson '90 and Andrea Neumaler '91 gained yardage several times with fake hand-off plays. Surprisingly, they fooled the Albany scrum, who often practice a similar fake.

Down but far from out. Wing-forward Jessica Melcher '91 and outside Ann Arnason '89 were lauded for their tackles. Arnason, who was thrown down to the ground with an audible thump and then had her head set upon, was even cheered by Albany supporters for immediately getting up and tackling another woman.

In the second half, Albany scored by blocking a kick out of Williams' 22-meter line; the try was not converted, leaving the score at WWRFC 0, Albany 4. Scrum-half Kerry Kilander '89 repudiated that action by running forward to tackle those who caught her kicks. In the most dramatic play of the game, wing Gina Coleman '90 caught Albany's ball and broke through three tackles, gaining 20 meters for White. On the following play Coleman again carried the ball, dishing it off to Kilander, who sprinted 15 meters to touch it down in the center of the try-zone. Fullback Katy Carr '91 neatly converted the try, concluding the match at WWRFC 6, Albany 4.

An exhibition "third half" followed the A-game, with less experienced but equally large Albany women entering the pitch. In what could be best described as "passive rugby," spectators were overheard to observe, "Look they're sunbathing."

Lack of practice hindering

Meanwhile at Vassar, the WWRFC learned that less than one week's practice was not enough to effectively challenge the more honed skills of a club that had been in continual practice for two months.

The Killer B's played a scrappy game, as was demonstrated by scrum-half Molly Fochl '91, who saved a loose ball in the try-zone. Although juniors Alice McCarty, Wendy Lipp and Kristin Moonmaw and sophomore fullback Robin Snyder made several impressive plays during the game, Vassar scored five tries, converting only one, ending the match downing the Ephs 22-0.

Acting captain Alexandra Iselin '89 reported, "The B-match had some of the most amazing tackling I've ever seen, and the best support. The Killer B's never gave up, and the C-women came back for more."

Although Vassar scored six tries on Williams in the C-side match, the WWRFC is confident that with more practice it will quickly avenge this initial loss.

Christmas in...April?

Hardy Eph laxwoman Karen Craig '90 chases the ball and a fellow Eph in the snow yesterday during practice. The team beat both Bowdoin (13-2) and Bates (8-7) away last week; it faces Skidmore today and Tufts Saturday at home. (See page 11 for story.)

Isackson

WUFO wins 1, loses 4 at Albany

by Guy Orco

In its first tournament of the spring, held over spring break at SUNY Albany, WUFO compiled a losing record of one win and four losses. The team displayed promising talent, however, especially in its overwhelming 12-1 win against talented rival Wesleyan College.

The Ephs' biggest setback occurred on Saturday, April 1, when president John Bellwoar '89, dislocated his shoulder on a block attempt. He will not be able to play for the rest of the season but will be present on the sidelines as a coach.

Perhaps frustrated by their inability to score, WUFO couldn't seem to turn around on defense quickly enough.

That injury seemed to be a crucial factor in the final four losses that the Ephs suffered in the two-day tournament at SUNY Albany that weekend.

According to team members, it was only during the final game against a strong Columbia University team that WUFO displayed little skill in moving the frisbee up the field. WUFO scored the first point on a turnover only to watch it become the first of only three for the rest of the game. The score rounded out to a 3-15 loss, the loss that ended its participation in the rest of the tourney on Sunday.

Cardinals shot down

WUFO played its first game against Wesleyan in very strong winds that favored the infamous WUFO zone defense. The defense, with very strong play from Erik Sebesta '91, shut Wesleyan down in the first half 8-0. The play became slower as the mud got deeper, but the WUFO zone kept forcing turnovers to keep Wesleyan down to a 12-1 final score. Hal Hermanson '89 was a standout for the Williams offense, putting in many key, quick-handed catches for a scoring percentage that was much larger than Wesleyan's.

The next game against MIT was the one in which Bellwoar dislocated his shoulder while attempting to block a pass. Despite good effort from players Mike van Lent '91, Jay Hartley '90, Neal Lindeman '90, Matt Levin '90 and Sebesta, WUFO could not keep up the pace. The Ephs fell to MIT 6-12. The zone defense was suddenly ineffectual without the solid presence of Bellwoar in the middle and the man-to-man defense seemed to be too much to handle for the Ephs in the deep mud. Even though the game was a loss, some of the handling on offense by the Ephs was top quality, and such play bodes well for the rest of the spring season.

Strong Locomotion

As the day became colder and wetter, WUFO struggled again against a club team, Locomotion, out of Albany. Again there were bright patches of offense, especially by Jim Adams '90 and Marcello DaSilva '89, but there were too many dropped discs to keep up a consistent offense.

It was even at four to four when things went wrong. WUFO dropped a couple of early throws that gave Loco the easy scores against the wind. Forced to play the length of the field against the wind after each such occurrence, WUFO watched the game slip away as the suddenly smooth club team played to their experience level to pull ahead and away to a final score of 6-12.

Donuts and hot chocolate

After a life-saving break from the cold and wind in the Albany gym, punctuated by the miraculous appearance of John

The play became slower as the mud got deeper, but the WUFO zone kept forcing turnovers to keep Wesleyan down.

Nicholson '89 with Dunkin' Donuts hot chocolate and donut-holes, the Williams team went out to face the cold for the last game of that Saturday against the Tufts E-Men.

The Ephmen suffered a defeat again, 8-12, but this time it seemed different. WUFO would continually move the frisbee all the way up to the goal-line only to turn it over in some way. Perhaps frustrated by their inability to score, WUFO couldn't seem to turn around on defense

continued on page 11

Track opens spring season, eyes Eph relays

by Steve Ibrody

Cold weather and a white track with faded line lines greeted the Williams men's and women's track teams at Westfield State on Saturday. The women seemed unaffected by the adverse conditions, as they cruised past Westfield, Trinity, Coast Guard, and Middlebury. The men's team met some stiff competition from Coast Guard and Trinity and finished third, beating Westfield, RPI, and Middlebury.

The meet began with the women's 5000 meters, where Anne Platt '91 added her name to the Williams track record books in yet another event. The stellar Eph sophomore ran 18:06 to win the race and capture the record. Equally impressive was freshman Hillary Cairns, running her first race. She picked up the pace during the second mile, and ran to a second place finish in 18:31. Molly Martin '91 completed a sweep of the event for Williams.

In the men's 5000 meters, Nathaniel McVey-Finney '90 went out with the lead pack, coming past the 2-mile point in 9:59. He surged at that point, running his next mile in 4:49, including a 63-second last lap, to pull away from the field and capture a three-second win in 15:17. Eph Dylan Cooper '91 was third in 15:23, while Dale Johnson '90 was fifth.

Beltz surprises

Marc Beltz '91 competed in the first steeplechase of his career but performed like a veteran, leading the race from start to finish. With perfect form over barriers and long leaps over the water pit, Beltz made the rest of the field look like it needed technique work, as he surged to shake Trinity's Chris Dickerson and won the race in 9:31. The race establishes Beltz as one of the top steeplers in New England.

Beltz made the field look like it needed technique work...

The domination of the women's team was spread through almost all the events run on Saturday. Allison Smith '90 sprinted to success in the 100 and 200 meters. In the 100, she finished in what appeared to be a tie with her Trinity opponent, but despite the lack of a photo, the Trinity runner was given the victory and Smith had to settle for second place. The 200 had an identical finish, but the race was called a tie. Smith's 200 meter time was 27.1.

Dawn Micauley '89 won the high hurdles in 15.5 seconds, while her sister Cherlie '92 captured the 1500 meters, just ahead of teammate Christie Dempsey '89. Ann Dannbauer '90 won the 800 meters with a time of 2:20, while Jen Morris '89 was second in 2:21. Freshmen Andrea Cady and Cindy Mundy took second and third in the 3000 meters. Williams relay teams were also strong. The 4x100 ran to an easy win, while Williams put together two 4x400 meter teams. The "A" team edged out the "B" team, when Dawn Micauley outspurred Cherlie in the final 200 meters of the last leg.

The men's team scored points in a number of events. Joe McGinn '89 won the hammer throw, while another of the Ephs captains, Dave Nadelman '89, was second in the 1500 meters, as he was outkicked by Westfield State's Lance Campbell in the final 100 meters. Nadelman's time for the event was 4:02.

The Ephs will host the Williams relays on Saturday, showcasing some of the region's top competition on the Plinsky track.

Thomas

Eph Dan Calichman '90 fends off an attack by senior teammate Lewis Fisher during practice last week. The lacemen went on to win the first two matches of their season; they crushed SUNY-Albany 17-8 on Wednesday and beat Hamilton 11-10 on Saturday.

Men's lax now 2-0 after victories over NY rivals

by John Romans

The men's lacrosse team began its season last week with a successful 2-0 record with victories over SUNY-Albany and Hamilton College. While Wednesday's match against SUNY-Albany was a decisive 17-8 victory, the Ephmen went into overtime before beating Hamilton in an 11-10 win.

On Saturday, the Ephs came out flying against Hamilton with senior co-captain Tony Fuller winning the face-offs and the Williams offense controlling the ball. By halftime Williams was up 7-4, finishing with a fast break goal lead-off by Fuller connecting with Brent Powell '91, who in turn assisted Bob Santry '90 in a quick goal.

Momentum swings at the half. However, the momentum shifted in the second half with the Continentals coming back strong to take an 8-7 lead over the Ephmen. Slowly, thanks to good defense and three man-up goals, the Williams men were able to regain a 10-9 lead with less than two minutes to go in regulation time.

The Continentals controlled the ball from the face-off but were forced to call a time out with a minute to go due to an outstanding performance by the Eph defensemen, lead by Jeff Stripp '90 and Matt Zolin '91. With 30 seconds left, Hamilton was pushed into calling a second time out. Working the ball around, a Hamilton midfielder swept to his right with six seconds left and fired a shot that beat veteran goalie Rob Lambert '90, causing the game to go into overtime with a tied score of 10-10.

Winning the starting face-off, the Continentals controlled the ball. Tenacious defense, however, kept the Ephmen alive with Dan Newhall '91 forcing a Hamilton turn-over and sending the ball down to the attack. While the Continental goalie was able to recover the ball, a second turn-over enabled sophomore Ian Smith to come down one-on-one with the goalie and score the winning goal.

Men's swimming splashes to 5th in nationals

by Anne Joseph

While many Williams students headed for warmer climates during their spring vacation, seven members of the men's swimming team headed north to Bowdoin for the NCAA Division III Nationals on March 16-18. The Ephs managed to grab fifth place at the meet as well as collect All-American honors in seven events and Honorable Mention All-American honors in nine events. Kenyon College won the competition.

"We've improved a great deal," Coach Samuelson explained. Last year, the Williams team placed ninth and in 1987, the men took 12th place at the Division III Championships.

Samuelson commented. "The first two days, we swam really well, but we slowed down on the third day," he acknowledged.

Benson a national champ. Sophomore Rob Benson's first place in the 400 individual medley gave him the title of national champion in the event. Benson captured the final heat in 4:02.70. Ephs Paul Dehmelt '91 and co-captain Chris Ogilvie '89 placed 10th and 16th respectively, both earning Honorable Mention All-American status.

Greg Jordan '92 earned All-American honors when he finished sixth in the 500 free, breaking the freshman and varsity records at Williams in the process with a time of 4:36.84. Jordan captured eighth place, obtaining All-American in the 200 free and received Honorable Mention

All-American with a 16th place in the 1650 free. Dan Snyder '90 placed 14th in the 1650 free.

To add to his first-place national finish, Benson claimed two individual Honorable Mention All-American awards with his 10th place finish in the 200 individual medley and 11th place finish in the 200 fly.

Chris Cleuzo '90, one of Williams' strongest backstrokers, dominated in the back events. Wrapping up two All-American titles in the meet, he took sixth in the 100 back and seventh in the 200 back.

Evan Davis '89 ended his college swimming career with a Honorable Mention All-American 12th place finish in the 100 breast.

In diving competition Eph Scott Schwager '91 captured an Honorable Men-

continued on page 10

Jeff Butler '91 tutors a Drury High School freshman participating in the tutoring program which Butler and Hillary Johnson '91 helped create. Steinman

Ephs start tutoring service for N. Adams high school students

by Deirdre Pappalardo

Two Williams students have expanded the notion of student helping student by setting up a tutoring program between Drury High School in North Adams and Williams. Twice each week for 45-minute sessions, eight Williams students tutor eight Drury students one-on-one in environmental science, and math.

The program, now in its third week, was created and implemented earlier this semester by Hillary Johnson '91 and Jeff Butler '91. Johnson and Butler said they were interested in helping high school students, but found that there was little such opportunity at Williams.

Butler said that it seemed Williams College students were qualified to tutor. "Yet even if there were a demand for it, there was no link." After speaking to the guidance counselor at Drury, and establishing the program, Johnson and Butler received permission and support for the program from the Dean's office and college council.

Johnson and Butler said that a program bringing together the two schools would be beneficial to both Williams and Drury because of the lack of contact between North Adams and Williams. Mr. Greylock students have access to Williams tutors through the Williamstown Youth Center, but there was little involvement in the North Adams area, according to Butler.

'We wanted to increase involvement in that area....[Tutoring] is a kind of outlet, as Williams can sometimes get stifling.'

"We wanted to increase involvement in that area," he said, explaining the decision to pick Drury. Johnson also added that by choosing North Adams, Williams students can get away from the Williams community. "It's a kind of outlet, as Williams can sometimes get stifling."

The Drury students are freshmen in the college preparatory track. By choosing freshmen, Drury administrators hoped that students would be encouraged early to remain in that track, Johnson said.

Science and math were chosen for their clear-cut, objective subject matter; Williams students, however, try not to limit themselves to one subject. Because the tutoring is one-on-one, the tutors can respond to the needs of the individual student.

The program is small this year, yet plans for increasing the number of students and subjects taught are intended. As a result of Drury's schedule, only a 9:30-10:15 time slot was available, which prevented many interested Williams students from participating. "We hope for a lot more students next year," Butler said, yet both he and Johnson said they were impressed by the enthusiasm and commitment displayed by Williams students.

They also noted the enthusiasm on the part of Drury students. Referring to Williams' positive image at the school, Johnson said, "If one student gets a role model out of this, then it's worth it."

Grace Ct. plans reconsidered

by Dan Skwire

In the wake of numerous complaints by town residents that Williams has been taking over residential houses for use as office space, the college announced last week that it was delaying its plans to turn Chandler House into a Personnel Office and Credit Union.

According to College Vice President and Treasurer Will Reed, the move is essentially a play for time. In order to reconsider residents' concerns and explore the possibility of converting Chandler back to residential housing, Reed said that the college now intends to use Chandler as a Personnel Office this summer, and then to reexamine its plans next fall.

Reed said that although the college wants to return Chandler to residential use if at all possible, neither he nor anyone else is making any promises.

"I don't want to say that it's going to happen, because we may have to come back and say that we couldn't find another place for the Personnel Office."

Chandler House lies on Grace Court, the very center of the disputed

The college intends to return Chandler to residential housing, but they are making no promises.

area. Chandler is the fourth of seven homes on Grace Court to be transformed into a college facility. Rice, Hardy, and Jenness Houses are already being used for offices and student centers.

The official announcement came at a meeting of the Town Planning Board last Thursday evening. Reed emphasized that the decision was made in response to residents' complaints.

"The last couple of weeks, there has been a fair amount of unhappiness on the part of residents," he said. He referred to the current situation on Grace Court as one of "musical houses."

Julius Siskind, who lives in one of only two private homes remaining on Grace Court, said he thought the college was beginning to feel some heat from alumni as well as residents.

Catherine Miller, the other remaining resident, is the widow of former Williams philosophy professor John Miller, who, according to Siskind, has quite a large following among alumni.

"I think that at this point they're not in a position to get alumni unhappy," Siskind said. "Dewey was also an alumnus. It's just a little too hot right now, and they're pulling back. They'd like to lay low for a little while."

College suggests liquor guidelines for parties

by Helen Matthews

In an effort to reduce its liability in alcohol-related negligence cases, Williams has clarified the language of the party policy and compiled a chart of suggested guidelines for hard alcohol use at parties. The college has also discontinued the practice of allowing residence houses and athletic clubs to charge alcohol on college accounts at local liquor stores.

Assistant Dean of the College Andrew Hernandez said he was concerned about the possibility that the college could be found liable in an alcohol-related negligence case and its endowment raided for damage payments because of some ambiguities in the college's party policy. In order to clarify the college's and students' roles and responsibilities in giving parties, lawyers were consulted to review the policy and to suggest possible revisions.

"They fine-tuned the language [of the party policy] and suggested we highlight some lines so that students are aware of it and that will be clear in court," Hernandez said. "It's not a change in policy, it's a clarification of guidelines."

In their report reviewing the college's alcohol policy, the lawyers said, "There is an important distinction made [by the courts] between not actually furnishing alcohol and merely knowing it will be consumed on your premises." They found that it is unlikely that the college could be held liable for making its premises available for parties.

However, they added, "The person who does serve and make available the alcoholic beverages might be liable."

Therefore, the report said: "It is suggested that an additional paragraph make it clear that students, and not Williams College, are the hosts of campus parties at which alcohol is served."

Christine Wormuth '91, co-president of Armstrong House, said, "I understand the liability the college faces and I totally sympathize with that. I can see a student host being held responsible for a party where 10 or 20 people are drinking, but it is impossible to watch over 200 individuals at a big weekend

'It is impossible [for student hosts] to watch over 200 individuals at a big weekend party.'

party like Winter Carnival."

"College remains potentially liable"

Hernandez said that the college is not trying to dump all of the responsibility for parties on students. "Even with the new clarifications, the college remains as potentially liable as the student hosts." He referred to an incident in which the court made it clear that it would determine liability in each alcohol negligence case on a case by case basis.

The chart of suggested guidelines for hard alcohol use at parties was drawn up in response to the concern among some house presidents. "I was literally approached by house presidents who were amazed at the amount of alcohol they were asked to purchase," Hernandez said.

Susie Ilwang '90, president of Prospect House, said, "It's a major concern to me because these parties aren't new. They've been a part of the Williams tradition for a long time and house presidents shouldn't have to go in blind with their only reference for organizing the bar being past bar lists."

The chart of suggested hard alcohol guidelines was compiled from information provided by restaurants, caterers and businesses who regularly serve alcohol to large groups of people. The guidelines take into consideration the expected number of people at a party and the number of hours alcohol will be served, Hernandez said.

"They [the hard alcohol suggestions] can be seen as limits, but I prefer to look at them as guidelines," he added.

Wormuth said, "Under the new guidelines, supposedly Ransom Jenks can say 'You have x number of people coming to the party, so you can only have x amount of hard alcohol.' But hosts could just overestimate the number of people that they expect at the party, so I'm not sure it's effectively curtailing abuse."

The second change in policy originated in the Vice-President's and the Comptroller's office. In a letter to The Spirit Shop, Comptroller of the College Saeed Mughal wrote, "Residence houses and athletic clubs are not allowed to incur any debt whatsoever on behalf of the college for the purchase of alcoholic beverages."

Jewish Center slated for fall 1990

by Dan Skwire

After nearly two years of planning, the blueprints for the new Jewish Center are nearly complete. Organizers hope to put the plans out for bids this June, with groundbreaking scheduled for next fall. It may be completed in time for the High Holy Days in the fall of 1990.

The $1.2 million center will be located on Stinson Court, behind Weston Language Center and across from Perry House. The architect Herbert Newman has done a number of projects for schools including Dartmouth, Yale and Colgate.

The center will provide much-needed extra space for Jewish students and faculty who for years have been meeting in the Kuskin room, located in the basement of Thompson Memorial Chapel. Many people have complained about Kuskin's size and the symbolic problems of its location in the bottom of a church.

"The Jewish Association has been attracting groups which tax the size of the Kuskin room," Professor of English Peter Berek said. Berek chaired the group that planned the project last year.

"On the High Holy Days, we have over 200 people, and they literally spill out the door into the corridor. There is a real need for larger and more attractive facilities for Jewish students."

The function of the new center will be primarily religious. It will contain a sanctuary, a dining room, a kosher kitchen and a Judaica library. The sanctuary will normally have room for about 60 people, but on special occasions, the walls can be raised and there will be room for 300 people. The center will be

continued on page 3

The drums of Dodd

The Boston-based steel band "Panorama" live in concert at Dodd Friday night. Steinman

Williams students receive competitive fellowships.

PAGE 4

Movie review: Major League on the out.

PAGE 5

Track team victories mark first running of Williams Relays.

PAGE 8

Editorial

Public relations crisis?

Those town residents who feel the college is carrying out a sort of manifest destiny by inexorably expanding into residential neighborhoods must have been as shocked as they were pleased last week to hear that Williams has abandoned, at least temporarily, its plans to convert Chandler House on Grace Court into a Personnel Office and Credit Union.

There was, after all, no legal dispute about the proposed rezoning of Chandler. Not even the most zealous of town residents ever suggested that Williams didn't have the right to do what it wanted with Chandler. Why, then, did the college back down?

The answer, according to College Vice President and Treasurer Will Reed, is the school's concern for the plight of town residents. Isn't this a little strange, however? After all, town residents were plenty vocal in their opposition to the student co-ops on Hossey Street and the new Health Center, but the college didn't abandon those projects.

The real reason for Williams' change of heart is more likely the fact that our name has been dragged through the mud several times of late. Last fall, there was a great deal of opposition to the proposed Pine Cobble development, which many people felt would do little more than destroy beautiful natural scenery for the benefit of a few privileged faculty members. More recently, many townspeople have expressed outrage over the college's treatment of Joseph Dewey, the owner of the Williams Bookstore. They feel the college was unfair in prematurely ending its textbook contract with Dewey, who happens to be a 1952 graduate of Williams.

The Grace Court disputes are just the latest development in what is quickly becoming a public relations crisis for the college. Williams College and Williamstown have grown up together for nearly 200 years now, and their relations have been generally peaceful. The college is quickly learning, however, that there are some things that the town simply will not accept.

The situation is a difficult one. The college certainly has legitimate needs for new space. How many students here would be willing to give up the planned multicultural center so that Jenness could become residential again? On the other hand, it is in the best interests of the college to maintain a good relationship with the town.

In light of its recent image problems, the decision to attempt to turn Chandler back into residential space is a wise one. While some residents might want to see all of Grace Court returned to residences, they can at least take solace in the fact that the college has heard their complaints and is not taking them lightly. Perhaps this will be the beginning of a turnaround in town-gown relations.

On the Record..

"It's just a little too hot right now, and they're pulling back. They'd like to lay low for a little while."

--Julius Siskind, a Grace Court resident, on the college's decision to delay its plans to turn Chandler House into a personnel office and credit union.

"I was literally approached by house presidents who were amazed at the amount of alcohol they were asked to purchase."

--Assistant Dean of the College Andrew Hernandez on the reasons for a new chart for hard alcohol use, which lists the amount of alcohol that should be served at events based on the number of people expected to attend. Hernandez said although it could be seen as a limit, he prefers to see it as a guideline.

"We felt it was impossible to go backward from the progress in the first two decades."

--Dr. Reginald Wilson, a Senior Scholar at the American Council on Education, saying that this belief was disproved by ACE reports showing that gains made by blacks in higher education from 1954-74 have been partially lost in the past decade.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible and not more than 500 words. They must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. They must be typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-2289.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor BILL SAVADOVE, Arts Editor
MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors
BILL PHILPOT, Productions Editor

Assistant News Editors
DAN SKWIRE, ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW
GREG HART & JUSTIN SMITH
Assistant Sports Editors
STEVE BRODY, KERR HOUSTON, ANNE JOSEPH
Assistant Layout Editors
ASHESH SHAH, ELISA DUGUNDJI, SARAH OUCHI

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Speaker eyes true racial harmony

by Peter Kilvins

Institutions of higher learning must make fundamental changes in their structures and not just cosmetic changes, according to Dr. Reginald Wilson, a Senior Scholar at the American Council on Education. Wilson presented a lecture entitled "Blacks in Higher Education: Crisis and Challenge" last Tuesday.

"[A truly multicultural campus] is an obtainable but not an easy goal," he said. Wilson added that universities have often proved to be centers of racist thought; he cited examples from the past of intellectuals justifying racism with evidence that certain races and cultures are superior. "The academy must repudiate some of its own most sacred practices and traditions," he said.

Wilson maintained that colleges and universities must lead the way in preparing society for demographic upheaval, and said that such changes in society have caught the U.S. unprepared in the past. "Sadly, [people's] leaders, both nationally and on campus, give them no clear direction," Wilson said.

This leadership is necessary, he added, because the United States is quickly becoming a truly multicultural country whose demographic resembles that of the world as a whole rather than Europe only. "The U.S. is becoming a microcosm of the world we live in," Wilson said.

He cited recent studies which indicate that one-third of the U.S. will be non-white by 2000. In addition, he said that past U.S. immigration laws were blatantly racist, and that current laws limit immigration from third-world countries even when European quotas go unfulfilled.

Moving back-wards

Reports by the ACE on the status of minorities show that previous gains made from 1954-1974 have been partially lost in the decade since, Wilson said. "We felt it was impossible to go backward from the progress in the first two decades," Wilson said. The main symptom of this current crisis is declining black participation in higher education.

Wilson said that the percentage of faculty members who are black fell from 4.7 percent in 1977 to 4.2 percent in 1986. Furthermore, although

Dr. Reginald Wilson speaks about the need for maximizing the education of minorities in his lecture entitled "Blacks in Higher Education: Crisis and Challenge." Thomas 826 black Ph.D.s were awarded in 1986, this figure dropped to 765 in 1987. These averages are far below the typical yearly average of 1300 in the 1970s, and these were the first years since 1973 that the figure was below 1000.

"We are not educating [students] to be decent human beings in a multicultural society."

"The majority [of whites and blacks] live in two different worlds," he said. Whites think that blacks have equal opportunities and get similar health care and salaries as whites. However, only small minorities of blacks think that this equality exists.

Such miseducation, he said, is especially prevalent among college students, referring to recent racist incidents at Smith, the University of Massachusetts, DePaul, and Stanford. Wilson said, "We are not educating [the students] to be decent human beings in a multicultural society."

Students across the country are widely dissatisfied with quality of life on the campus

College Press Service

Just as a high-powered group of national college leaders announced a project in New York April 4 to see if it could measure the quality of student life on campuses nationwide, a group of students took over a building at Morris Brown College in Atlanta to complain about the quality of student life there.

In a tape recording played to students and police gathered outside the building, the protesters at Morris Brown complained officials had done nothing to treat their complaints about bad dorm conditions, course shortages and "substandard" cafeteria food.

"This is not an irrational temper tantrum," freshman Antoine Chancellor told the Associated Press. "We have filled out the papers. We have gone through the process. The process has failed."

Several of the country's most dramatic student protests of recent months -- over political and racial issues at Howard and Penn State universities, for example -- included pleas to officials to cure other quality of life issues like dorm overcrowding and inadequate campus security.

Student anger had nothing to do with officials' decisions to study such issues, said Robert Atwell, president of the American Council on Education, one of the two groups that unveiled the plan for a nationwide look at the quality of campus life.

Instead, the idea came from college presidents who "expressed concern at what they perceive as a decline in the quality of campus life and in the character of relationships among members of the college community," Atwell said.

To prove it, ACE and The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, headed by former U.S. Commissioner of Education and college scholar Ernest Boyer, said they would visit about 20 colleges during the next year, interviewing students, administrators and faculty members about how they feel about their campus lives. They suspect they'll hear a lot of complaints.

"Racism, sexism and more" "Racism, sexism, violence, heightened conflicts between faculty and administrators, poor living conditions in the dormitories" are among the subjects they expect students will cover, Atwell said in the press conference announcing the study.

Students will probably grouse about money, too, predicted Fred Azarite, president of the U.S. Student Association, which represents student body presidents in Washington, when he heard of the effort.

"We hear comments like, 'I can't afford [college]'. It's not worth it anymore,' 'I'm not going to pay them back,'" Azarite said.

"Some students," he added, "are facing the choice of making their loan payment or buying food. The only way to get an education is to get loaned up."

Robert Hochstein of the Carnegie Foundation guessed there'll be other topics brought up too: fraternity excesses, fear of crime, class section shortages and too many courses taught by grad assistants, among others.

"Colleges have gone from 'in loco parentis' [meaning that colleges looked after students literally 'in place of the parent'] to 'loco nothing,'" Hochstein observed in speculating why college life might have come unhinged. "There is a changing student body, alcohol, drugs."

The study results will be presented to the ACE's January, 1990, meeting. After that, however, Hochstein only hoped its results will remain visible. "It will represent a step toward consciousness raising on issues like racism and date rape, as well as creating an awareness of good prelates on some campuses. We hope it will stimulate reform and improvement."

AMEX offers plane tickets, other goodies to lure collegians into the world of credit

College Press Service

American Express, known as a company for business executives and yuppies, unveiled its plan in mid-March to woo college undergraduates.

With bait like cheap airline fares and magazine subscriptions, the huge financial services firm says it will start trying to tempt students at the 1,000 biggest campuses in the country to carry its credit card.

The move is emblematic of a larger trend, various consumer advocates say, of students being able to get credit more easily during the last three years.

And many of the consumer advocates don't think the credit card companies' new invasion of American campuses is a very good idea.

"(Students) are acquiring credit at a time when they are poorly suited to use it wisely," said Mike Heffer of Consumer Action, a San Francisco lobbying group, when told of the new American Express effort.

"Credit cards got me into financial trouble," agreed University of Houston senior Scott Fox agreed. "I charged too much, and didn't have the money to pay for [it]. I am in the process of paying them off now."

Best place to sell credit But the student market is the best place to sell credit, said Celine Gallo of American Express (Amex), adding that undergraduates probably will prove a good source of business for the company in the future.

"It's important to start early with people who will be better earners," she said, noting students are just starting to form brand loyalties. The credit card companies make their money by claiming three-in-seven percent of each purchase made with their cards, and by charging customers interest on the unpaid interest on their bills.

As anyone who's had a brochure slipped into bookstore purchases or seen booths set up at student unions can attest, American Express's ambitious new effort is only the most recent foray onto campuses for credit card companies, which until just a few years ago considered students as risky and probably incapable of repaying loans regularly.

Students "accepted" by AMEX get a $600 credit limit.

Not ready for credit Some students and campus advisers, however, wonder if it's a good thing for students.

Thirty-five percent of the students who asked University of California at

For example, Bank of America, which owns a large part of VISA, began aggressively marketing to students in 1986 when, B of A spokeswoman Susan Chivenger said, they generally became more responsible.

Of course, there was nothing magical that happened in 1986 that suddenly changed students into more responsible credit users, observed University of Florida finance Professor Arnold Heggestad.

The answer to why credit card companies abruptly decided they wanted to start signing up students had more to do with demographics -- there are fewer adults to be wooed these days -- and the economy, he said.

"If the economy is strong," Heggestad noted, "it's a safe bet seniors will get jobs when they graduate."

"And to be futuristic for a moment," he added, "ten years from now the paper society -- checks -- will be gone. The companies that can put their plastic in people's pockets will be the big winners. The college market is more receptive to change, so they may be the best group to grow into."

So Citicorp in New York, which started asking students to carry credit cards in the mid-eighties, has issued about 1.5 million VISA's to students, a company spokesman reported.

By contrast, "only" some 500,000 students carry American Express cards now. To catch up to VISA and MasterCard, "we're posing an integrated marketing program that includes the cards, along with benefits and services tailored to the needs of students," Gallo said.

Students "accepted" by AMEX get a $600 credit limit.

Not ready for credit Some students and campus advisers, however, wonder if it's a good thing for students.

Thirty-five percent of the students who asked University of California at

For example, Bank of America, which owns a large part of VISA, began aggressively marketing to students in 1986 when, B of A spokeswoman Susan Chivenger said, they generally became more responsible.

Of course, there was nothing magical that happened in 1986 that suddenly changed students into more responsible credit users, observed University of Florida finance Professor Arnold Heggestad.

The answer to why credit card companies abruptly decided they wanted to start signing up students had more to do with demographics -- there are fewer adults to be wooed these days -- and the economy, he said.

"If the economy is strong," Heggestad noted, "it's a safe bet seniors will get jobs when they graduate."

"And to be futuristic for a moment," he added, "ten years from now the paper society -- checks -- will be gone. The companies that can put their plastic in people's pockets will be the big winners. The college market is more receptive to change, so they may be the best group to grow into."

So Citicorp in New York, which started asking students to carry credit cards in the mid-eighties, has issued about 1.5 million VISA's to students, a company spokesman reported.

By contrast, "only" some 500,000 students carry American Express cards now. To catch up to VISA and MasterCard, "we're posing an integrated marketing program that includes the cards, along with benefits and services tailored to the needs of students," Gallo said.

Students "accepted" by AMEX get a $600 credit limit.

Not ready for credit Some students and campus advisers, however, wonder if it's a good thing for students.

Thirty-five percent of the students who asked University of California at

For example, Bank of America, which owns a large part of VISA, began aggressively marketing to students in 1986 when, B of A spokeswoman Susan Chivenger said, they generally became more responsible.

Of course, there was nothing magical that happened in 1986 that suddenly changed students into more responsible credit users, observed University of Florida finance Professor Arnold Heggestad.

The answer to why credit card companies abruptly decided they wanted to start signing up students had more to do with demographics -- there are fewer adults to be wooed these days -- and the economy, he said.

"If the economy is strong," Heggestad noted, "it's a safe bet seniors will get jobs when they graduate."

'Only 40 percent of credit card holders nationally pay their monthly bill.'

Los Angeles for extra financial aid from 1986 to 1988 said they needed to repay credit card debts, UCLA counselor John Hoyt said.

Iowa State University financial counselor Ann Swift added that she has seen an increase in the number of students suffering from big credit card debts in recent years, and that some contemplate bankruptcy.

"Only 40 percent of credit card holders nationally pay their monthly bill. The other 60 percent have an average monthly balance of $1,600," Swift said.

Credit card abuse has become so common that the University of Southern California holds a session about students and credit cards at its freshmen orientation. Indiana University students get a written warning about incurring credit card debts when they pick up their financial aid application.

There are victims aplenty. University of Houston senior Michelle Williams said, "I was always in the hole. I cut [the cards] up, and kept paying on them to get my financial situation together."

"Students have a need" The credit card companies, of course, see their efforts differently. "We're extending the notion of financial responsibility," contended Ames's Betsy Ludlow. "Students have needs for a financial instrument just like anyone."

Gallo maintained the Amex cards give students "less opportunity to overspend." Their cardholders are required to pay off their balances each month. "I believe they're good in emergencies," Houston's Fox agreed.

However, American Express has recently begun offering cardholders of a year or more its Optima card, which, like other credit cards, allows people to roll over their debts. It is unclear how many students are getting the new card.

Sandy Lee, a junior at the University of California at Santa Barbara, applied for a card so she could start to build a credit rating. Heffer agreed that the new credit card campaigns can help students get credit while they can. "As soon as they graduate, it's harder to obtain a card even if the person is working," Heffer said.

The Jewish Association presently uses the Kuskin Room in the basement of Thompson Chapel for its meetings and services. But the college is expecting to begin construction on a new Jewish center, between the Weston Language Center and Chadbourne House, this fall. Steinman

Jewish Center will be built next fall

continued from page 1

used for services, dinners, and lectures. It will be completely open to non-Jewish students.

"We wanted a facility that was flexible," said Professor of Chemistry Larry Kaplan, faculty advisor to the Jewish Association. "We wanted to be able to have smaller regular services as well as the room for High Holy Days and cultural activities."

Kaplan said that although he considered the Kuskin Center to be "a little jewel of a place," many prospective students and their parents were not impressed by the small facility. He said he hoped the new center would send a positive message to prospective.

"People will be very impressed."

"By building a new facility specially dedicated as a Jewish Center, the college is making a clear statement that it is concerned about Jewish life on campus. People who look at Williams are going to be very impressed."

Berek also said that he expected the center to have a very positive impact on Williams. "The primary benefit is that it will make it possible for students who wish to worship regularly to do so in a way more fitting to their needs. It will also dramatize to prospective that Williams is a place where Jewish students can be at home."

Jewish Association member Shea Friedland '91 said that the group was very excited about the plans. "There will be room for expansion, and hopefully a lot more students will get involved."

Financing for the center is coming primarily from Jewish alumni, and according to Berek, there has been no trouble in finding donors. He said that over $1 million has already been donated.

Ray Neufeld '91 scrubs the woodwork at the Williamstown Public Library, as part of the Hunger Cleanup project. MassPIRG sponsored the event, at which about 60 Williams students beautified nine locations in the area last Sunday.

FBI, not CIA, now major target of colleges' ban on recruiting

College Press Service

The Federal Bureau of Investigation can no longer recruit at Ohio State University or the University of Michigan law schools, according to a decision by the deans of those schools.

In separate statements Feb. 22, OSU Law Dean Francis Beytaugh and UM

'It was deeply offensive to our own students to assist that organization in hiring.'

Law Dean Lee Bollinger said they would bar the FBI from recruiting because a federal judge ruled last September the agency discriminated against Hispanics. The deans said that their schools have strict anti-discrimination policies.

"It was deeply offensive to our own students to assist that organization in hiring," Bollinger said.

The FBI, in turn, has vehemently denied discriminating against Hispanics. The OSU and UM bans are the most recent incidents in a deterioration in FBI-campus relations across the country.

Other schools, from Temple University in 1979 through the State University of New York at Buffalo in January, 1989, have barred FBI recruiters from campus because the FBI refuses to hire gays, and the schools had policies disapproving of discrimination on the basis of sexual preference.

In May, 1988, the FBI released a report charging Soviet agents had been checking out research and technical books at American campus libraries since 1962 to find "the nation's emerging technology before its components become classified."

To stop them, the agency asked librarians to tell them when "suspicious" people who may have "Eastern European-sounding names" check out certain books. But the American Library Association in general and college librarians specifically refused to cooperate. For instance, last October, the 21 head librarians of the City University of New York system officially condemned the idea.

The whole plan raised enough of a public outcry that the FBI eventually dropped the request.

In addition, FBI-campus relations were strained last year by revelations that the agency had spied on college students belonging to certain political groups. Campus organization claimed the Bureau was returning to the status, when many people said the FBI used "Gestapo-like" tactics to wrack havoc with anti-war college groups.

One Freedom of Information Act suit unearthed files indicating the FBI had

The agency asked librarians to tell them when "suspicious" people who may have "Eastern European-sounding names" check out certain books.

spied on students who belonged to campus chapters of United Campus Against Nuclear War and on members of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador at a dozen state universities across the country over a period of several years.

Beyond the Bubble

Eastern Air Lines sold to Ueberroth's investor group

After nearly three weeks of negotiations, a group of investors led by former baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth agreed last Thursday to purchase Eastern Air Lines for $464 million. The deal may put Eastern, which has been grounded, back into the skies in the near future. As part of the agreement, Eastern employees will receive 30 percent ownership of the company in exchange for wage and benefit concessions. Ueberroth and the Eastern unions have until midnight tonight to agree to the details of the new contract. Ueberroth said that he plans to proceed with the sale of Eastern's Washington-New York-Boston shuttle to Donald Trump for $365 million.

South African President Botha to resign

President Pieter Botha announced last Thursday that he would schedule a general Parliamentary election before early September. Although he did not specifically state that he would retire, Botha made it clear that he does not intend to seek another term. Botha, who suffered a stroke several months ago, had ignored calls from within his own National Party to retire, and only gave a direct answer after a bitter power struggle within the party. Botha told a joint session of Parliament that he intends to dissolve Parliament next month and officially hand over the "seal of the republic" to a new president after the elections. Minister of Education Frederik W. de Klerk is Botha's almost certain successor.

Congress passes Contra aid plan

Congress last Thursday overwhelmingly approved a compromise plan providing $49.7 million of non-military aid for the Nicaraguan Contras. Congress' unified reaction to the aid package gives President Bush the opportunity to form a bipartisan policy on Central America. All but eleven Senators endorsed the Contra aid plan, while in the House 309 Representatives voted for the package. The compromise Contra aid package is an attempt to cease hostilities in the years-old battle between the White House and Congress over aid to the Contras. The plan is also meant to put pressure on Nicaragua's Somoza government to follow through on it promises to hold free elections and allow democratic reform.

Bush was involved in Iran-Contra scandal

Documents presented by the defense during the trial of former Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North showed that then-Vice President George Bush was an active participant at meetings where funding ways to fund the Contras was discussed. Such measures, approved by Ronald Reagan, included enlisting wealthy individuals and foreign nations to provide aid that Congress could not monitor. Such aid could be in violation of the spirit of the Boland Amendment, which cut aid to the Nicaraguan resistance. Bush has repeatedly said that he was "out of the loop" in the discussions. The White House, citing the ongoing trial, refused to comment. None of the testimony, however, has implicated Bush in the plan to use profits from the sales of weapons to Iran to fund the Contras.

Compiled by Greg Hart from the Berkshire Eagle.

The JA's for 1989-90 will be:

Stacey Bond	Josh Becker
Danielle Boyd	Andrew Beveridge
Monica Brand	Jeff Bond
Margaret Brown	Alexander Cohen
Laurie Burnett	Michael Donofrio
Christine Cadigan	Evan Driscoll
Kathryn Carr	Mark Elefante
Brendine Colby	Matthew Eason
Kristine Coombs	Nathaniel Healy
Amanda Crane	James Higgins
Sara Dubow	Marc Klaus
Melissa Fenton	Jeffrey Low
Karen Jensen	Stephen Martin
Lella Jero	Peter McIntire
Kathleen Judge	Steven Moran
Ann Manill	Raymond Neufeld
Audra Maszner	Robert Nordgren
Kathryn Munchmeyer	Kristian Orland
Anne Platt	Christopher Perry
Lee Schroeder	Dennah Powell
Heather Sung	John Thornton
Allison Thompson	Stephen Wallace
Katherine Van Winkle	Andrew Ward
Pamela Volpe	Sean Waterston
Jennifer Wolfman	John Whalen
Susan Yao	Damon Williams
	Greg Woods

Compiled from information from the Dean's Office

Dance Concert showcases a variety of styles

by Caitlin Osborne

The Annual Spring Dance Concert opened with "Lalacha," a choreographic variation by Coordinator of Dance Sandra Bunton on a South African dance created by Zulu school children. This "learn dance" opened with a song performed under the bleachers where the audience sat. The song, as well as the others that followed, was beautifully executed. The dancers' voices brought the simple harmonies to life with a tone unpretentious and strong.

The dance moves were rhythmic and fairly complex. Although the dancers were somewhat out of sync at some times, this did not detract from either the audiences' or the participants' enjoyment of the dance. In fact, perhaps the most impressive part of the performance was the energy the dancers possessed, something not seen in many of the dances. The following two dances constituted the weakest portion of the performance.

"In White" was a commendable effort by three dancers and choreographer Judy Droad to bring classical ballet to the Williams dance program. However, the dancers were obviously returns to the art of pointe work and their pained smiles and loud clomping illustrated the difficulties inherent in pointe work a bit too graphically. Hopefully, the dancers and Droad will continue their efforts. After all, the only thing lacking in the dance was the polish of many more long hours of practice.

"This is it," choreographed and performed by Erica Dankmeyer '91, had the ingredients for a fine jazz piece -- good moves and skillful execution -- yet it fell flat. The style is much more effective with large groups since its interest lies in seeing complex movements performed identically by many people. Performed alone it is merely boring. Dankmeyer herself gave an almost flawless technical performance but lacked the electricity and near abandonment that makes jazz electric.

The show picked up measurably with "Manual Rhapsody," choreographed by

The African dance and music class opened last week's Annual Spring Concert with high energy. Pictured, from left to right, are Alexandra Coudet, Raenetta Buntun, Ned Johnson '92, Anne Joseph '92, and Beth Groff '92.

Ellen Baylor '92. This piece was performed earlier in the year as a "work in progress," and while it was good then, the finished product seen on Thursday was excellent. The dance was a series of variations on one set of hand motions. It varied between sections where individuals danced performed their own lyrical versions, to striking moments where they moved in precise mechanical synchronization. The whole dance was tinged with a sense of madness, evident in the music and movements. Unfortunately, Baylor chose to remove that aspect in the costume, discarding the old faded and wispy dresses in favor of crisp bright sundresses. Overall, the dance was a beautiful piece of art.

The show leveled out with the next three pieces: "The Persistence of Time," "Des Moments de Compassion," and "Fragile," solid endeavors by choreographers Sarah Peterson '91, Melissa Fenton '91 and Julieta-Veronica Lozano '90. Peterson's concept was particularly interesting, a series of examinations of time performed to a medley of music based on that theme. Its high points were a play between Julia Rosenfeld '92 and Fenton concerning the overly swift passage of time and a set of sometimes amusing variations on "Time in a Bottle" by Jim Croce. However, the section did not always flow together and sometimes the significance of the sections was shrouded. The piece might benefit from some reworking, but overall it was well conceived and performed.

Fenton's piece was an impressive effort by a first time choreographer. It involved ten people and seemed to be a story of a couple accompanied by a chorus. The storyline was not really clear, unless one understood French, and the large group made coordination between dancers difficult. Despite these problems, the piece had many choreographic high points such as Fenton's lifting of Emiliano Malden '91.

Lozano's straightforward lyrical jazz rendition of Sling's song was characterized by much beautiful movement and fairly good execution. Unfortunately, she failed to capture the intriguing layers of feeling inherent in the music. Only in limited places did the music and the dance seem to relate, and these were naturally the best parts -- the opening's flowing, bird-like movements.

The performance hit another high point in the next piece, "The Hired Boy," choreographed by Martha Mabie '91. The idea of dancing to a poem is somewhat rare, but this verse by Shel Silverstein was interpreted brilliantly. Mabie successfully avoided mere acting out of the poem literally by, instead, capturing the essence of the feelings contained therein. The dancers danced between the lines with precise and clean timing and an ease which belied the difficulty of the steps, including an especially beautiful performance by Fenton -- a wonderful piece of art.

The second to last piece, choreographed and performed by Mazen was entitled "Water Haku." The connection between the title and haiku in the program and the dance seemed absent. The dance was more a lesson in Tai Kwon Do appreciation than a piece of art. Though well performed, the sequence was less than inspirational and quite repetitive.

Fortunately, this fall was eclipsed by a performance of "The Dance of the Soldier," choreographed by Hilary Appel '91. This piece was performed in part in the January "Works in Progress" and represented Williams at the American Choreographers Dance Festival in February. It was brilliant in January and even better on Thursday night. Appel's choreography is powerful, illustrating the theme of human weakness and manipulation with great force. The dancers' execution, after a slightly shaky start, was flawless, clear evidence of Appel's dedication to perfection. Though the piece is fairly long the intensity never varied and the audience was chilled by the view of life, death, love and war presented. The dancers brought the Annual Spring Concert to a climatic finish.

Waiting for Godot was worth seeing

by Liz Greenman

This past weekend several senior students presented Samuel Beckett's "Waiting for Godot" in the Adams Memorial Theatre Downstage.

The performance was a so-called workshop production, a format that allows actors and sometimes directors to develop their skills by working on a piece outside of a classroom situation. As such, the play was a great success -- the acting was of a consistently high quality throughout. Wayne Fritsch '89, as Estragon, was child-like in his petulance (and in his innocence), yet every bit the despairing adult in his rage and need. Fritsch's slight tendency to whine was the only flaw in his performance, causing him occasionally (and only occasionally) to wander into the territory of the one note actor.

Michael Baratta '89, who played Vladimir, had different problems with which to cope. Some of his more lengthy speeches, those ostensibly directed at Estragon, developed into monologues, losing the "vital interaction" between the two men that both drives the play and provides some of its much sought for meaning. Indeed, this dynamic spoke more to the prison, he carried off the play with verve and aplomb.

Into this more than solid background Molly Luetkemeyer '89 and Laura Richman '89 play the characters of Pozzo and Lucky. Unfortunately, Luetkemeyer's Estragon, was child-like in his petulance, yet every bit the despairing adult in his rage and need.

audience than any other single aspect of the play, and the scene in which Vladimir sings Estragon to sleep with a lullaby is the most powerful moment of the play. Overall, Baratta's lapses were minor, and were consistent with Vladimir's philosophical nature, and except for a bit of excessive slapstick in his "excessive

Pozzo, a character of great potential, came across as heavy handed and one dimensional, and her performance was the weakest of the four. Her first scene seemed to drag on, although being situated in a difficult spot, two-thirds of the way through the first act, probably contributed to the difficulty of the scene.

Luckily, Richmond's presence on the stage provides a fascinating visual distraction, and her performance as Lucky, both her dancing and her "thinking," completely rivaled the show, restoring the actors' energy and the audience's interest.

In fact, because of the workshop nature of the play, holding the audience's interest became a task of paramount importance for the actors, as they received little of the support typically provided by both sets and lights. The minimalist did provide the actors with something interesting with which to work, and they utilized them well, although the staging was erratic, ranging from clumsy to inspired. However, inspired might be the correct term to apply to the shabby yet elaborate costumes, designed by Deborah Brothers (costume designer of the Adams Memorial Theatre). They helped make "Waiting for Godot" a production well worth seeing. It certainly passed the time.

On the wall

Last Saturday, April 15, marked the opening of "Stitching Memories: African-American Story Quilts" at WCMA. The exhibition presents more than thirty quilts created by both folk and schooled artists. The quilts record milestones in personal family and community histories; document political events and social movements; and tell stories from Bible and African-American literature. Pictured is The Mary Bright Commemorative Quilt.

Arts In View

April 18 At 4:15 p.m., the Student Orchestra will give a studio recital in Brooks-Rogers. The Williams Collegium Musicum Vocal Ensemble will also perform.

At 7:30, William R. Sargent, associate curator of Asian export art at the Peabody Museum, will give a lecture entitled "To the Farthest Part of the Rich East: Salem Collections in Asia."

April 21 At 8:00 p.m., the Berkshire Symphony will present its final concert of the year in Chapin Hall. The program will include works by Berlioz, Brahms, and Prokofiev.

Want to shoot jocks? Want to flash your friends?

The Williams Record is looking for photographers. If you know your elbow from your aperture, call Karl at x6661 or x2400.

Many Ephs seize major fellowship opportunities

by Sara Dubow

Seven Williams students and two recent graduates are the recipients of several competitive and prestigious awards including two Watson Fellowships and two Mellon Fellowships.

Daniel McGee '90 has been selected as a National Endowment for the Humanities "Younger Scholar" for 1989. He is one of 91 college students and 66 high school students to win this award, and was chosen from a pool of 724 applicants.

McGee will receive a federal grant of $2,200 for Independent Summer Study, and is planning to work on a project entitled "Embedded Narrative in the Plays of Samuel Beckett."

James Bailey '89 and Kathryn Kent '88 have been awarded Mellon Fellowships in the Humanities. The award provides three years of full support to students who intend to pursue academic careers in the humanities.

Bailey is a double-major in political science and Russian, and plans to pursue graduate study in political philosophy. Kent, an English major and previous winner of a Hutchinson Fellowship for the creative arts, plans to pursue graduate study in English and fine arts.

Watson Fellowships for independent study and travel next year were awarded to Matt Daley '89 and Mari Omland '89. Bob Fisher '89 has been named an alternate for that Fellowship.

A history major, Daley will investigate how the health care system is responding to the new social and political structures of post-Maoist China. He will travel from northern to southern China, comparing the facilities of different areas, and hopes to compare urban with rural health care delivery.

Omland, a history major with an African/Middle Eastern studies concentration, will study the problem of deforestation in sub-Saharan Africa. She will also study the actual and potential contribution of women to the process of reforestation. She will work primarily in Kenya, and possibly in Tanzania, Niger and Senegal as well.

Paul Brainard '89 and Lisa Yuk Kuen Yau '89 were selected to receive Hutchinson Fellowships, which provide $6,000 a year for two years to enable students in the creative arts to develop their talents.

A double-major in music and political science, Brainard has performed with the Jazz and Brass ensembles, the Brass Quintet, and the New Spring Street Stompers, as well as with the

and then plans to pursue graduate study in architecture.

Lansing Fellowships, which provide $1500 for one year of graduate study in Classics, were awarded to classics majors Tom Roche '89 and Michael Zebrak '87. Roche plans to pursue an M.A. or M.A.T. in Latin before embarking on a career in teaching.

Zebrak is currently pursuing a Ph.D. in Italian at Rutgers University, where he is specializing in the history of the Italian language and its development out of Latin. Next year he plans to continue his study at the Pontifical Gregorian University in Rome.

The Center for Environmental Studies announced that nine students submit a detailed plan to decrease their use of toxic chemicals over a period of time.

The act would further bring about the phasing out of particularly dangerous chemicals over a number of years and create a toxic use reduction institute, which would train people to evaluate toxic waste reduction plans and do new research in the area. The institute would also act as a clearing house for information so that companies could learn from one another, Majersik continued.

Citizen enforcement

Finally, the act would allow for citizen enforcement, so that citizens could petition to inspect a plant for health and hygiene standards and ensure that they weren't doing any illegal dumping.

"They could also petition to sue to enforce legislation," Majersik said.

MassPIRG has been lobbying at both the state wide and local levels to bring about the bill's passage. "State wide, we've been lobbying the legislature; we've had lobbyists [in Boston] everyday," Majersik said.

In addition to its local lobbying efforts, the group has also been writing letters to certain members of the legislature, asking for them to testify on the bill's behalf. Last week's drive in the Baxter mallroom resulted in over 200 such letters, according to Majersik.

The bill will be voted on by the Adj. Joint Committee on Natural Resources in Boston at the end of the month. "We know the act will get out of the committee, but it's a question of how watered-down it will be when it gets to the floor," Majersik said. He added that another bill on toxic use reduction, which the Williams group is against, should not make it out of the committee. "The other one is a very weak version of the act that would not have really changed anything."

Work late nights for low pay

Join the Williams Record

All that jazz

The Williams Jazz Ensemble presented its Spring Sizzler Concert last Friday, April 14. The program included traditional swing, Latin, ballads, Be-Bop, and an original chart by Mike Coyne '89. The New Spring Street Stompers also performed.

Linda Shearer named head of Williams Museum of Art

by Mary Moule

President Francis Oakley has appointed Linda Shearer, a curator at The Museum of Modern Art in New York City, as the new director of the Williams College Museum of Art. She will start on July 1, taking over for W. Rod Faulds who was acting director since the resignation last year of former director Thomas Krens.

According to the chair of the selection committee, Professor George Goethals, Shearer was chosen because of her extensive experience and her leadership ability. "We had a strong pool of applicants, and she seemed like the best candidate."

Shearer also worked as a curator at the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum for eleven years, and as executive director of Artists Space, an organization which supports the work of young artists, Goethals said.

Since 1985, she has served as curator of the painting and sculpture department at the Museum of Modern Art as well as heading its Projects program which has been nationally acclaimed for its exhibitions of new art.

Shearer was chosen from among 65 applicants and five finalists, according to Goethals.

"The director must work well with people on the inside, faculty, students, and staff, as well as on the outside by presenting the Museum and its programs," Goethals said. "She'll be an exceptional leader and a good addition to the college community."

Thomas

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

Army National Guard

Americans At Their Best.

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

*In Hawaii: 737-5255; Puerto Rico: 721-4550; Guam: 477-9957; Virgin Islands (St. Croix): 773-6438; New Jersey: 800-452-5794. In Alaska, consult your local phone directory.

© 1985 United States Government as represented by the Secretary of Defense. All rights reserved.

MAIL TO: Army National Guard, P.O. Box 6000, Clifton, NJ 07015

NAME M ☐ F ☐

ADDRESS

CITY/STATE/ZIP

AREA CODE PHONE US CITIZEN ☐ YES ☐ NO

SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBER BIRTH DATE

OCCUPATION

STUDENT ☐ HIGH SCHOOL ☐ COLLEGE ☐

PRIOR MILITARY SERVICE ☐ YES ☐ NO

BRANCH RANK AFM/MOS

ARMY ☐ AIR FORCE ☐ NAVY ☐ MARINE ☐ COAST GUARD ☐

NATIONAL GUARD ☐ ACTIVE DUTY ☐

A1CLIC10049NP

The Williams
Record LIVE

Remember Passover

Thursday, April 20

...with beautiful Hallel
Passover cards for relatives and friends.

McClelland's

Mountain Bike Specialists

Complete Repair
on All Bikes

Water Street, Williamstown
Extended Hours Open 7 Days 458-8445

Women's lacrosse holding heads high after loss to tough Tufts team

continued from page 10

used in a see-saw pattern. Williams went up by as much as two points (at 3-1) but never by more than that.

With five minutes left in the half, the Jumbos tied the score. The teams then exchanged goals. With about a minute left and with the score tied at 4-4, Tufts applied heavy pressure on the Williams goal. Williams, however, refused to yield to the strong attack. The Ephs women forced a turnover. They then made an error in clearing the ball. Tufts intercepted and, catching Williams in transition, scored a quick goal. The score stood at 4-5 until the end of the half.

Williams started the second half with a strong attack. In the first minute of the half junior midfielder Amy Kershaw scored her first of two consecutive goals to tie the game at 5-5. Kershaw's second goal came nine minutes into the half.

The tide turns

Just when it seemed that Williams would shut out Tufts in the second half, the Tufts offense came to life. It scored its sixth and seventh points of the game within 30 seconds of each other to take the lead by one. After five minutes of intense defensive play, Tufts scored two more quick goals to put itself up by three.

The last fifteen minutes of the game, when Tufts scored its four goals, Williams had trouble clearing the ball from the defensive end. It was during these moments that Tufts applied tremendous pressure and often got a turnover.

"If we didn't make good connecting passes at the mid-field, Tufts would get the ball and come right back and score on us," said Coach Mason.

In the final minutes, Edgar, who scored Williams' first point, scored its last. The score stood at 7-9.

Sophomore lacrosseman Bevin Cooper wins the ball from a Tufts opponent during last Saturday's match. The Ephs lost by a close margin, 7-9, to last year's ECAC champs. Cooper herself scored three points in the Ephs' 17-4 defeat of Skidmore last Tuesday. (Thomas)

In the Tufts game Edgar and Kershaw scored with two goals each. Heidi Sandreuter '92 and Mo Flaherty '90 each had one.

Despite the loss, Coach Mason was pleased with the women's play. "We were playing them well. We're pleased to know that we're right up there with them. I thought we had a good game," she said.

According to Coach Mason, Tufts is not the overpowering nemesis it was last year. "I think we're pretty equal. They just won today." She also hopes that the team will be able to meet Tufts again at this year's ECAC tournament and win.

In last Tuesday's match against Skidmore, the operative word for the Ephs women was dominance. Edgar scored an impressive six points, a double hat trick. The topside 17-4 defeat repeated last season's performance against Skidmore.

In the Skidmore game, seven Eph players were able to score. The high scorers were Edgar, who ended the game with six points, and Bevin Cooper '91, who scored three. Flaherty, Sandreuter, Kershaw, Mary Iliff '89, and Laurie Burnett '91 also contributed.

Laxmen cruise past Westfield and Tufts, look for stiffer competition

by John Romans

After posting two decisive victories this past week, the men's lacrosse team is off to one of its best starts in recent years with a record of 4-0. The Ephs blew out Westfield-State last Tuesday (15-3) and then went on to crush Tufts University (18-6) on Saturday.

Westfield came out strong against the Ephs men with steady offensive pressure and an early first quarter goal. Williams struck back however by commanding the ball and scoring a quick goal to tie the game. Soon after Ian Smith '91 assisted sophomore Brent Powell in a carbon copy, starting what would be a long day for Westfield's defense. Within minutes, veteran attackman Bob Sentry '90 assisted Powell to give him a natural hat-trick. The Ephs continued to role through the first two quarters with goals by Ted Rogers '91 and Tim Oliver '90, giving Williams a commanding lead at the half.

The Eph offense remained unstoppable while Powell tallied seven goals and an assist.

The second half continued with the same intensity, with the Eph offense remaining unstoppable and Powell tallying seven goals and one assist. Freshman Andrew Everett made his scoring debut at Williams with an off-speed, over the shoulder goal. Although the game was a blow out, Williams displayed a composed defense and a disciplined offense.

Saturday's game against Tufts was just as eventful for the Ephs men. Although pouring rain and cold weather plagued the entire game, Williams remained unbeatable. The Ephs came out pounding and ended the first quarter with a 5-1 lead over the Jumbos. Yet a shift in momentum brought Tufts back to life with two unanswered goals against Williams and a 6-3 score. However, the momentum was soon crushed when the Eph offense retaliated with multiple goals by Powell and Oliver, putting victory out of reach for the Jumbos.

MINISTRY JOBS now!

We have more job openings in Christian organizations than people to fill them. You may be qualified for one of them. Call toll free today or mail the coupon below.

CALL INTERCISTO TODAY
1-800-426-1342
(206-546-7330 in WA, HI and Canada)

The Career and Human Resource Specialists
10003 Fremont Avenue North
Seattle, Washington 98133

Name
Address
City State Zip

La Cocina
MEXICAN DINING.
ENTERTAINMENT.

With coupon receive
$2.00 off our FANTASTIC FAJITA
regularly priced at $8.95
Tender chunks of marinated beef, chicken or both.
Sautéed with veggies and served piping hot with rice, beans, lettuce, tomatoes and hot tortillas & sour cream
not valid on Saturdays
850 State Rd. • North Adams, MA • 413-654-4757
1400 Hancock St. • Pittsfield, MA • 413-696-4027

Drummond Cleaners - 1989 SUMMER STORAGE SPECIAL -

ARE YOU WONDERING WHERE TO STORE YOUR CLOTHES AND BEDDING OVER THE SUMMER?

DRUMMOND CLEANERS WILL CLEAN AND STORE THEM FOR THE OF HAVING THEM CLEANED, IN OTHER WORDS, YOU GET FREE STORAGE!

FULLY INSURED — NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR INSURANCE.
FILL IN THIS FORM AND BRING IT IN WITH YOUR STORAGE TO BE ELIGIBLE FOR OUR STORAGE LOTTERY

First Prize
$100 Gift Certificate to Le Jardin Restaurant

Second Prize
$50 Gift Certificate to any store on Spring St.

3rd, 4th, & 5th Prize
$25 Gift Certificate to any store on Spring St.

6th thru 10th Prize
$20 in free cleaning

DRAWING WILL BE HELD ON JUNE 15, 1989.
Winners will be notified by mail in June.
Call 458-4321 for free campus pick-up

Please Print Home Address Below:

Name
Street
City, Zip

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.
66 Spring Street
458-4321
Jim Drummond, Williams '58
Owner

STUDENT SUMMER AIR FARES

From New York	Fare
London	$218
Frankfurt	$218
Oso	$269
Madrid	$245
San Jose, C.R.	$175
Tokyo	$340
Auckland	$514

Some restrictions apply. Taxes not included. European fares based on the spot FREE Student Travel Catalog.

CouncilTravel
70 So. Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002
413-256-1261

COLDWELL BANKER REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT BANKING SERVICES

ANALYST POSITION

Immediate employment opportunities are available for candidates who possess exceptional analytical and writing skills and have demonstrated a record of academic distinction, personal achievement, and integrity. Experience with PC-based interactive software is a requirement of the position.

This two year position provides outstanding undergraduates who expect to go on to pursue graduate degrees in business, law, or other fields, an opportunity to develop in-depth expertise in real estate financial transaction analysis, evaluation, and offering material preparation.

The general responsibilities of the Analyst include providing general support to the firm's partners and associates for all activities relating to the origination, processing and placement of large real estate transactions.

For immediate consideration, please submit a resume and cover letter to:

Mr. Thomas B. Townley
Personnel Manager
Coldwell Banker Commercial Group, Inc.
533 South Fremont Avenue
Los Angeles, California 90071-1798

Re: IBS Analyst Recruitment

Track finds victories in rain at first Williams Relays

by Steve Brody

The first running of the Williams Relays was held Saturday at the Planky Track, in its second season of use. While the track itself was in good shape, the weather was a different story. Cold temperatures, a hard, driving rain, and a persistent wind on the backstretch made good marks hard to come by.

In addition, a weak women's field for the meet meant little competition or drama for the Eph women's squad. However, while it served as a showcase for the depth of the women's team, a large men's field tested the other half of the Williams team and entertained those fans who chose to brave the conditions.

The meet started before noon, and competitors in the 10,000 meters did their racing before the rain began. Taking full advantage of the dry track was freshman Hilary Cairns. In her first 10,000, Cairns ran alone, as she left her competition from the starting gun. Despite the absence of anyone to run with, Cairns kept a steady pace and crossed the finish line in 38:20 to set a new school record and come within 40 seconds of qualifying for Nationals. In the men's 10,000, Brian Coan '92 went to the front of the lead pack, but fell back to third after surges by his Norwich and Westfield competitors. He finished there with an excellent time of 33:24.

Women's relays flex muscles

The women's team entered seven relays and came away with a victory in all of them. Good relay handoffs were one of the keys to success in the shorter relays. Kira Shields '91, Alison Smith '90, Sue Northen '89, and Dawn Macauley '89 teamed together for a win in the 4x100 meter relay with a time of 51.9. Kim Bamkollir '91 replaced Northen in the 4x200 where the team set a school record of 1:49.3. Noriko Honda '89 joined Northen, Smith, and Macauley to win the sprint medley. Bamkollir, Smith, Sue Rhodes '92, and Katie Queney '92 won the 4x400 in 4:19. Honda and Macauley teamed with Iris Chong '92 to set a school record in the shuttle hurdle relay. They ran uncontested. Macauley also won the 400 hurdles.

Cold temperatures, a hard, driving rain, and a persistent wind on the backstretch made good marks hard to come by.

Longer relays provided equal success for the Ephs, as the women's distance core turned out in force for the distance medley and the 4x1600 meter relay. By the time these events were held the cold weather seemed to have taken a toll on the spirit and energy of much of the team, and they were forced to be satisfied with victories but not school records. Ann Dannhuier '90, Jen Morris '89, Susan Donna '92, and Anne Platt

'91 won the DMR, while Christie Dempsey '89, Cherie Macauley '92, Molly Martin '92, and Mary Moule '91 won the 4x1600. Morin also won the 5,000 meters in 18:39, while Macauley won the 800 meters. Dannhuier won the 1500 in 4:46.

The 4x1600 was the only relay victory of the day for the men's team. Matt McQueen '89 ran a 4:30 first leg to put the Ephs in second before handing to Nathaniel McVey-Finney '90. McVey-Finney, who had placed second in the steeplechase earlier in the day with a time of 9:37, came up with a ferocious 200 meter kick to give Williams the lead after the second leg. Gil McCabe '89 and Dale Johnson '90 widened the gap, as the Ephs won comfortably in 18:08. The 4x200 meter relay of Dave Week '92, Brad Behr '92, Carey Simon '90, and Jonathan Lindley '92 set a school record of 1:33. Competing individually, Lindley took second in the 100 meters in 11.3 seconds.

In other individual events, senior Joe McGinn threw a personal record 159 to win the hammer throw. Karlyn McNeil '90 won the women's hammer throw at 104'. McNeil also captured the long jump and triple jump. Marc Beliz pulled away from the 5,000 meter field during the second mile and won in 15:24. Freshman Will Warren was third in the high jump with a leap of 6'2".

Little 3 next on slate

While weather in the Berkshires is generally not subject to manipulation, the strength of the meet field can be improved. Comparable women's competition to that seen in the men's races will increase the stature of the Williams Relays in future years, establishing it as one of the top meets in New England. Until then, the Eph track teams must focus on the task at hand. This Saturday the Little Three Championship will be held at Williams. The meet, originally scheduled at Wesleyan but moved due to construction in Middletown, will feature an intense battle between the Williams and Amherst men's teams. The women are expected to win easily once again before their NESAC showdown with Tufts.

Crew

continued from page 10

The Eph oarswomen, as they launched their regular season with victories. This follows their stellar performances at the Augusta Invitational during Spring Break. The Varsity Eight, composed of Sarah Curi 'EX, Megan King '90, Julie Kirklin '91, Joanna Lowell '90, Cara McCandless '90, Megan Ouchterloney '90 (coxswain), Lisa Rood '91, Eleanor Tucher '89, and co-captain Laura Woods '89, completely dominated the race and finished 15 seconds ahead of second-place Connecticut.

Following the varsity eight's example, the Eph JV Eight also took full control of their race from the beginning and breezed to an easy first-place finish six seconds ahead of Connecticut. The Ephs suffered their only loss in the novice-eight race where Connecticut overtook the early Eph lead in the second half and edged the Ephs by about half a boat length open-water margin at the finish line. The Eph novice four, on the other hand, thoroughly drowned the two WPI novice fours with a margin of more than 300 meters of open water.

Season prospects

"Though I'm a little disappointed that the novice eight didn't do well, I'm pleased with the overall team results. We are stronger than last year and the season prospects look good," said Kim Woods, coach for the novice boats.

The rowers took the Little Three races this Saturday, where they expect challenges from fast Wesleyan boats.

M. Tennis

continued from page 10

that his backhand crosscourt shot was the strength of his game, as well as his short-angle crosscourt volley.

Sophomore Jim Welles also defeated Ed Crowley of Tufts in the number five position 7-6, 6-2, and junior Brad Hunt straight-setted Mark Nevik 6-3, 6-3 in the number six singles spot. Williams managed to win the second doubles match too, which pitted senior captain Drew Sawyer and Hunt against John Hertzler and Crowley of Tufts. Sawyer and Hunt came from a set down to prevail, 3-6, 6-4, 6-4.

On the losing side for the Ephs were Sawyer in the third singles spot and junior Steve Buxbaum in the fourth spot. Tufts doubles teams were strong, as their number one and three teams defeated Williams' teams of Evans/Buxbaum and Kim/Bob Halligan respectively.

Action against Middlebury

In Tuesday's match against Middlebury, Evans (#1) and Welles (#5) won their singles matches. Both players fought back from one-set deficits to win in three. The Ephs were able to take all three doubles matches to seal their win, with Evans/Buxbaum at number one, Sawyer/Hunt at number two, and Kim/Welles at number three.

Coch Assaillie praised the play of Evans, who defeated P. Ramder, 4-6, 6-4, 6-3. Ramder is a Middlebury senior who had never previously lost to a Williams player in his college career. Coach Assaillie feels that this 1989 team has the potential to go 9-3 on the year because with freshmen at the number one and two positions.

"The youth at the top is really going to help us," Coach Assaillie explained.

The Williams Record LIVE

Laxmen look sharp

Attackman Andrew Everett '92 drives a Westfield State defenseman toward the net and the Ephs toward a 15-3 victory last Tuesday. Everett scored the first goal of his Williams career during the game.

(Steinman)

Athlete of the Week

This week's athlete of the week award goes to two freshman standouts. Freshman trackster Hilary Cairns, in last Saturday's Williams Relays, won the 10,000 meters in 38:20, setting a new school record and coming within 40 seconds of qualifying for Nationals. This was only the track race Cairns had run; she did it despite a strong headwind and no competition to pace her. In tennis action on Tuesday, freshman Tom Evans, who plays in the number one spot, defeated Middlebury senior P. Ramder. Ramder had previously never lost to an Eph player in his career. Evans also beat David Ober during the match against Tufts on Saturday. Ober is the 25th ranked college player in the nation. Congrats, Hilary and Tom!

Sam enjoys walks in the park, playing ball with the boys, and casual sex.

And he's only three. He's probably fathering some of the 13.5 million unwanted dogs and cats that must be put to death each year.

You can't stop your pets from acting naturally. But if you love them, you'll have them spayed or neutered. Talk to your veterinarian. Or contact the MSPCA for more information.

MSPCA on the move
Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals

350 So. Huntington Ave., Boston, MA 02130 (617) 522-7400 (413) 736-2992

Tramp! Tramp! Tramp!

BY ARNOLD MOSS/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Malachuk

ACROSS	DOWN	ACROSS	DOWN
1 Fragrance	14 Garden pest	60 Jazz pianist	87 Deserves
2 Jasper Johns	15 Prying figure	61 Butler or	88 What a man!
3 Ramble	16 Wimps	62 Merse	89 "Now the hungry lion
4 "— and	17 Simon —	63 FILLING	90 "Shak."
5 "— and	18 Groove	64 STATION:	91 "Shak."
6 "— and	19 Nopal and	65 1914	92 DIVERSION:
7 Lawrence	20 Saguaro	66 Religious deg.	93 1914
8 Bicycle parts	21 What Mauna	67 Terminates	94 1914
9 Dispassionate	22 Lo con do	68 Loves too	95 1914
10 people	23 Undercooked	69 Endly	96 1914
11 Lamb who	24 Palid	70 Statue in	97 1914
12 wrote about a	25 "Once Upon a	71 Statue in	98 1914
13 pig	26 musical	72 Statue in	99 1914
14 Field of study		73 Statue in	100 1914
15 GOOD TIME		74 Statue in	101 1914
16 FELLOW'S		75 Statue in	102 1914
17 SPREE, with		76 Statue in	103 1914
18 "OUT": 1915		77 Statue in	104 1914
19 April 18, 1989,		78 Statue in	105 1914
20 to 20 Down		79 Statue in	106 1914
21 Amonasro's		80 Statue in	107 1914
22 daughter		81 Statue in	108 1914
23 Money:		82 Statue in	109 1914
24 exchange		83 Statue in	110 1914
25 allowances		84 Statue in	111 1914
26 Heart part		85 Statue in	112 1914
27 Drifts		86 Statue in	113 1914
28 Rose Bowl pts.		87 Statue in	114 1914
29 Camel's back-		88 Statue in	115 1914
30 breaker?		89 Statue in	116 1914
31 Writer		90 Statue in	117 1914
32 Boncompis		91 Statue in	118 1914
33 Pie edgings		92 Statue in	119 1914
34 Peregrine		93 Statue in	120 1914
35 Renowned		94 Statue in	121 1914
36 Canadian		95 Statue in	122 1914
37 physician		96 Statue in	123 1914
38 Whinnies		97 Statue in	124 1914

66 French Revolution song
67 Corroded
68 Pool person
69 "When push comes to —"
70 Like — of bricks
71 Phony gem
72 Rural deities
73 — dixit
74 Shades
75 Nuncupative
76 Guitar's fingerboard
77 Poet/vict

83 One of Lyon's rivers
84 Court go.
85 Hodgesville
86 Anne Frank's book
87 Average state
88 Like the legendary Fosse
89 Rural deities
90 — dixit
91 Cretans or Spartans
92 Scullion on screen
93 Writ of execution

98 Two-time Oscar winner
99 May 8, 1945
100 Base for the Black Bears
101 Kind of ring
102 Homer of the Cougars
103 Spin
104 Questions
105 Poet Teasdale
106 At a distance

108 Film maker
109 Excited
110 Actress Cannon
111 U.N. arm
112 Captain of the ark, to Phil
113 — Do I
114 Love You?!"
115 1927 song

Solution on page 6

Sports Quiz

Win a $15 gift certificate from Goff's — enter the quiz.

- 1) The NHL playoffs kicked off with a bang, with the Pittsburgh Penguins and Montreal Canadiens in the spotlight, as they swept their first-round series. Which teams did the two clubs send packing?
- 2) Additional fireworks were provided by the first playoff goal in history to be scored by a goaltender. Who earned this distinction?
- 3) Nolan Ryan made the headlines once again as he fired his way to an eight-inning, one-hit victory. How many no-hitters has the Texas native hurled in his career?
- 4) The Toronto Blue Jays opened their season with snow shovels in hand, and took forward to July when they will move into a new, climate-controlled dome. What is the name of the new facility?

Send your answers to Marjorie Naficy at SU 1871 by Saturday. In case of a tie, the winner will be chosen in a random drawing. Last week's winner was Morgan Midwest JA Will I long, who got more correct answers than any other entrants. Congrats, Will!

Answers to last quiz: 1) Glen Rice broke Bill Bradley's record for points scored in a single NCAA tournament; 2) The San Diego Yacht Club plans to appeal a recent court ruling that sent the America's Cup to New Zealand; 3) Bill Frierick picked up the reins to the Arizona St. basketball program; 4) The Harvard Crimson skated their way to the 1988-9 NCAA Division I hockey crown.

Shoe Sale

save up to 50%

on selected

- tennis
- running SHOES
- soccer

GOFF'S SPORTS, INC.

15 Spring Street 458-3605

Record Dead?

With the Pot gone, who will mind the kettle now?

Farewell Bill.

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

"Listen... this party's a drag. But later on, Floyd, Warren and myself are going over to Farmer Brown's and slaughter some chickens."

"So there he was — this big gorilla just lying there. And Jim here says, 'Do you suppose it's dead or just asleep?'"

ADVERTISE

call

(413) 597-2289

ALASKA FIELD RESEARCH
Earn academic credit this summer studying alpine ecology & land management amidst the glaciers and peaks of the Wrangell Mountains.

Wildland Studies, 3 Mosswood Circle, Cazadero, CA 95421
707-632-5665

West Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081

-We offer-

- 1) Area's largest fine beer & ale selection
- 2) Hundreds of quality wines
- 3) Unique videos as well as latest releases
- 4) Ambassador, Blue Mt. Arts, Fair Side Greeting cards
- 5) Dozens of soft furry creatures from Dakin, Applause, and North American Bears
- 6) Soft drinks, munchies, party supplies
- 7) Great advice on matters large and small
- 8) Courteous, professional service

Three top hits from IBM

This offer is simply irresistible!

If it's value that counts, and it usually does, you can't afford to miss this offer on these IBM Personal System/2® models. Now—at a special campus price—you have your choice of three hit computers with high quality graphics to help you organize your class notes and write and revise papers. Check it out . . . three great computers . . . three fantastic prices! And selected software that's loaded and ready to go. So, come and see us today!

IBM.

Model 30 286

Your Special Price*

$2,399

Model 50 Z

Your Special Price*

$2,799

Model 70 386

Your Special Price*

$4,449

*This offer is limited to qualified students, faculty and staff who order an IBM PS/2 Model 8530-E21, 8550-031 or 8570-E61 on or before June 30, 1989. Prices quoted do not include sales tax, handling and/or processing charges. Check with your school regarding these charges. Orders are subject to availability. IBM may withdraw the promotion at any time without written notice.

IBM Personal System/2 and PS/2 are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation. IBM Micro Channel Architecture is a trademark of IBM Corporation. Microsoft is a registered trademark of the Microsoft Corporation. nCNC Windows Express is a trademark of the nCNC Computer Corporation.

Senior co-captain Nancy Hedeman waits for the ball in the hope of shutting out her Union opponent last Thursday. The Ephs ended up winning 9-8. (Thomas)

Dramatic homer lifts softball, 9-8

by Anne Joseph

Although Dartmouth, who disbanded its team, failed to show up for the 1989 Williams season opener, the women's softball team overcame its disappointment and scraped by its next opponent on Thursday. The Ephs defeated Union on a three-run homer in the bottom of the seventh inning 9-8. The double-header against Skidmore on Saturday was rained out in the third inning.

With last season's 9-2 victory over Union still fresh in their minds, the young Eph squad played consistently despite the bitter cold. The biggest play came in the seventh inning with Williams down 8-6 and Tanya Nunez '92 and Laurie Hartsoe '91 on base due to walks. Freshman Holly Hedeman hit a ball into the right outfield which just kept rolling, allowing Williams to get the victory and awarding Hedeman the "Tootsie Pop Athlete of the Week" award.

"I was happy with the way we played

The Ephs made 14 of their 18 outs due to fly balls or pop-ups. "We need to put the ball on the ground and more things will happen. It's little things. Overall, I'm happy," Caputi stated.

Holly Hedeman hit a ball into right-field which just kept rolling.

and how we responded to crucial situations," said Coach David Caputi, who noted two good plays by Nunez on third base and seven chances by shortstop Julie Carroll '91. According to Caputi, pitcher Cathy Handlich '91 did well although the weather made it hard to get a grip on the ball. Handlich often struck out players when there were runners on third base.

The fifth inning epitomized the problem of fly balls for the Ephs, as the first three batters had their hits caught. The Williams women, however, also used the fly balls to gain steals in the sixth inning. At the top of the sixth with Union at bat, the Ephs caught the first ball and struck two others out on base; Union couldn't get around the field. When Williams went to bat, the Ephs

Uninspired A's fall, B's prevail, as men's rugby faces UVM at home

by Mark Stepiak

Like a wet match, the Williams Rugby Club failed on Saturday to spark the fiery game they know they are capable of playing. A solid yet beatable side from UVM had their backs up against the wall during the entire first half, but the Ephmen could not seem to touch down any tries. The visiting Mountain Boys escaped with a 9-3 victory under their belts. Williams' lone score came from a daring 30 meter drop kick by scrum half Dan Foote '90 midway through the half.

During the second half, it seemed Williams was perpetually on the verge of coming together for some bullish play. The scrums were controlled by the experienced White Dog forwards, who also provided a good share of line out ball, yet the line suffered from the same futility which prevented good running last week. In the end, a drop kick and two penalties by UVM gave the visitors a 9-3 edge. Once again, Williams had conceded a game while keeping the try tally, a telling statistic, even.

B side even score

On the brighter side of a cold, damp day, the killer B's earned a convincing 20-0 victory with a textbook combination of quick and secure possession by the pack and daring, imaginative running by the backs. Led by captain Kevin Cook '90, the forwards gave UVM a clinic in rucking, consistently driving the Mountain Boys back.

Once the ball reached the backs, centers Jim Higgins '91 and Jim Kaufman '92 conspired to break the gain line supported by their wingers, wily senior Tom Burke and speedy Tom Morgan '91, who scored the second try after junior scrum half Rob Phay's snipe around the blind side of a five meter ruck. To further confuse the UVM defense, fullback Bruce Young '90 ghosted his way into the line a number of times.

By the second half the B's controlled the rhythm of the game. Linking up with the forwards in broken play, they let the froth bubble with two tries coming from a superb pickup by Kaufman and a searing comeback by junior flanker Dave Lerner.

The C and D sides finished off the day with another edition of the traditional black and white classic, butting heads with each other and in the process exhibiting fine play for the awed parents massed on the sideline.

Williams plays at home next week in the first annual John Donovan '80 memorial game. Proceeds from the Commissioner's Cup tournament will be donated to the Berkshire Alliance for the Mentally Ill.

Women's lacrosse falls to last season's ECAC champion Tufts

by Juan Alonzo

The look on the faces of the lacrosse Ephwomen at the end of Saturday's game against the Tufts Jumbos was one of satisfaction. Yes, they felt the usual disappointment that comes after a very close loss. Despite a 7-9 defeat, the women's lacrosse team felt they had a lot to be proud of. They had played a tough game against last year's ECAC champions.

Last season, the women played two matches against Tufts, once during the regular season and once at the finals of the ECAC tournament. The team lost both times by 6-13 and 4-11, respectively.

This year, Coach Chris Mason expected Tufts to be equally as tough. This season's Tufts team is basically the same as last year's. Tufts lost only one senior. The Ephs, on the other hand, lost nine of last year's players, seven of them starters. Facing an experienced, championship-caliber team, coach Mason expected a serious challenge. She also anticipated an exceptional performance from her team.

The Ephwomen certainly performed exceptionally. Freshman midfielder Ashley Edgar opened the game with a goal in the first 35 seconds of the half. Tufts, however, quickly recovered and scored its first goal only a minute later.

The scoring for the first half contin-

continued on page 7

Tennis squeaks past Middlebury and Tufts

by Carolyn Kuo

The men's tennis team opened its season this week with two hard-fought wins, both by the close score of 5-4. On Saturday, the Ephs were victorious over Tufts, while on Tuesday they defeated Middlebury.

The match against Tufts was the home opener for Williams. After five grueling hours, the Ephmen came out on top. This was an especially satisfying win since pre-season speculation, according to Williams coach Paul Assalante, touted Tufts as the probable winner of the NESAC championships.

Freshman sensation and number one player Tom Evans dominated his Tufts opponent, David Ober, to the tune of 6-1, 6-2.

"That's a hell of a win," remarked Coach Assalante. Ober had come into the match ranked 25th in the nation and fifth in the East.

Evans frustrated his opponent with powerful groundstrokes and occasional volleys. Ober was also overwhelmed by Evans' smashes and passing shots. Evans was able to skillfully draw his opponent to the net and then whip passing shots by him. In fact, the match ended when Evans had Ober at the net and then passed him with a strong forehand which pointed the far corner.

Number two player, freshman Howie Kim, also defeated his Tufts opponent, Steve Marsella, in straight sets, 6-4, 6-0. In the first set, Kim had some difficulty with Marsella's constant serve-and-volley game. However, in the second set, he stood further back to counteract the attacking, and eventually Marsella gave up and stayed at the baseline, never to win another game in the match.

Evans frustrated his opponent with powerful groundstrokes and occasional volleys.

"I didn't have enough confidence [coming in to the match] because of my Middlebury match [which he lost], but when we started to warm up, I felt grooved and ready," Kim said. Kim felt

continued on page 8

Crew rows to victory in races at Worcester

by James Lee

The Williams crew teams raced to victories by comfortable margins on Saturday at Worcester against Connecticut College and WPI. The Eph oarsmen swept four out of the five races and the Ephwomen dominated three out of the four in rough weather conditions with strong head winds.

Rebounding from its tight loss to Dartmouth the weekend before, the men's varsity eight displayed the prowess that led to an unbeaten season record last year. The Ephs finished a full 12 seconds ahead of second-place Connecticut. Taking the lead of one boat length from the start with a powerful 42 strokes per minute rating, the Eph eight settled to a 34 rating and kept themselves safely ahead of any challenge throughout the whole 2000-meter race.

In the same race, the Eph JV eight, however, had to settle for a close third-place finish behind Connecticut as Connecticut gained on the initial Eph lead after the 1000-meter half-way mark.

In the novice races, Eph oarsmen cruised to overwhelming victories as both the first and the second novice eights silenced their competitors by margins of more than 30 seconds. The only Eph loss occurred in the varsity heavy-weight four where the Ephs met with a stiff challenge from a well-trained Connecticut heavy-weight four.

"I am pleased with the results today. It was extremely encouraging that they showed a lot more control and poise today than they did at Dartmouth, but we haven't fully performed at our best yet," said head coach Peter Wells.

The Eph eight kept themselves safely ahead of any challenge throughout the whole race.

Oarswomen: a similar story
The story was basically the same for
continued on page 8

Swimming in the rain

Nathaniel McVey-Finney '90 has no cold feet about jumping into the water hurdle during last Saturday's Williams Relays steeplechase. McVey-Finney placed second in the race with a time of 9:37. (Thomas)

Housing prices in Williamstown have risen substantially in recent years, making it difficult for young and low-income people to locate in the area. Although this house is for sale, it is not likely to remain so for long.

Williamstown news

Part-time residents keep housing prices high

by Mary Moulé
Housing prices in Williamstown have risen steadily in recent years, and although they have now begun to level off, they are still high enough to create problems for low-income buyers.

The high demand for area housing has kept prices up, according to real estate manager Margo Meyer of the A.L. Perry Agency in Williamstown. "It's a desirable second-home community, with Williams alumni and people from the academic world who are interested in the cultural attractions of the area," she said.

Meyer said that although the demand for housing in Williamstown has generally increased, the rising prices have caused locals to think twice before buying a new home. She said many people were more inclined to add on to the homes they had rather than face the expense of buying.

"Young people, those who have grown up in the town and are coming back, can't afford to buy here," Barker said. "There is very little affordable housing available for them."

Betty Ann Labombard of the Williamstown Housing Authority said that affordable housing is a serious problem even for those who qualify for low-income housing programs.

"The rising prices have eliminated some apartments from our program,"

'Young people, those who have grown up in the town and are coming back, can't afford to buy here.'

she said. "We're tied to a rental limit, and many units no longer apply."

Low-income housing needed
The Housing Authority operates under two programs, one state and one federal. It subsidizes rents for people and families with low incomes. Currently, however, many certificate-holders are unable to find units that fit under the price limitation, Labombard said.

"I'd like to see a certain percentage of units designated as low-income," Labombard said. "We're hoping to build some affordable housing with low-income rental units included, perhaps with aid from the town."

"We're concerned and we're trying to be helpful," Anita Barker, chair of the Williamstown Board of Selectmen, said.

"There's a glut of houses now in the mid-price range, and willing sellers will simply have to take less. I don't think they'll get the prices they want," she said.

The one benefit of these high prices is that it demonstrates a higher general income in the area, and thus more taxes for the town. "For people who already own homes, the high equity is nice," Barker said. "It's also good for the town in that the tax base is up." She added, however, that many residents were displaced at having to pay the higher taxes brought about by their increased home equity.

Meanwhile, some prospective residents are coming to the conclusion that they simply cannot afford to live in Williamstown, Meyer and Labombard said.

Tuition jumps $1666 for 1989-90; still lower than at other top schools

by Rajesh Swaminathan and Greg Hart

Tuition at Williams will increase by $1666 next year, according to an all-campus mailing from President Francis Oakley. The letter also said that the college would continue to meet the demonstrated financial aid needs of all students, present and incoming.

"What we have been very careful to do is that to make sure a financial aid student should absorb no part of the increase," Provost Gordon Winston said.

Several factors are behind the latest tuition increase, Winston explained. He cited increases in library and personnel costs as well as inflation as causes of the increase. In addition, the usual need for a larger faculty and staff contributed to higher costs.

"The total size of faculty has increased quite modestly; we also need an additional person in Financial Aid due to the sheer workload involved in sorting through congressional laws and staff. All this contributes to total cost [increases] as well."

Winston added that as salaries increase in professions that compete with academic jobs, the remuneration in the academic market must necessarily rise to keep pace with the other pay rises; otherwise, academia loses its competitiveness in the job market.

"The basic fact of higher education is that the salaries paid to faculty and administration are driven up by the outside market. We have no control over salaries paid to these top-flight professionals; we are price-takers," Winston said.

In reference to the "additional support services" mentioned in Oakley's letter, Winston said the new Multicultural Center would also need a considerable amount of money.

"The Multicultural Center is the quintessence of the diversity of the college and the direction of the center will need additional personnel," Winston said.

However, other concerns, such as salary disbursed to the Health Educator, did not play as large a role in the increase, he added.

"If you think you've got problems..." Winston emphasized the fact that the increased tuition was approximately $1000 below most other expensive institutions and that it was about $300 to $450 below tuition increases at institutions Williams has traditionally competed with.

Student reaction to the increase was mixed. John Conte '92, who currently receives financial aid from the college, said, "I don't think it's going to affect me. My needs are going to be the same."

However, others, like John Coequest '92, were not prepared to be so patient. "It would really suck if I had to pay more. As long as they do it to 'spread the wealth', it's O.K. But if people like me, who can barely afford this school already, have to pay another $1600, it would really suck," Coequest said.

The tuition increase was the main item on the agenda of the Board of Trustees. Despite the rise in tuition, there will not be any drastic changes in Williams' next yearly budget, according to College Vice President and Treasurer Will Reed.

Reed, the trustees' secretary, said, "There will be no major changes in next year's budget. There aren't any new programs and we aren't dropping any programs; the only changes are incremental ones," Reed said.

'We have no control over salaries paid to these top-flight professionals.'

Could free laser printing be a thing of the past?

by Justin Smith

"We're on the threshold of receiving serious scrutiny on the free printing issue," Director of Academic Computing Dennis Aebersold said at the College Council meeting last Thursday. Aebersold attended the meeting in part to warn council representatives that students' irresponsible use of the laser printers in Jesup may force the college to charge students per page for use of the machines.

"People are abusing the no-copy rule, and a lot of drafts are being done on laser printers. Basically, the expenses are adding up," Aebersold said. According to Aebersold, students who run off many copies of resumes while no one is looking aggravate the problem. The provision of free laser printing cost the College $20,000.00 last year.

"Most schools charge. We don't. It's nice for the students not to have to go through that hassle," he said. "If everyone was responsible we wouldn't have to do anything," Aebersold said he hoped the College would not have to begin charging students for the service.

Aebersold said that abuse of computer facilities is not uncommon, and mentioned that the Macintosh computers in the basement of Baxter take an inordinate amount of punishment. "We're making way too many repairs, and a lot of them are because of malicious mischief," Aebersold said.

Some abuse may not be caused by students. "We have no way of knowing for sure," Aebersold said.

Aebersold also announced that the trustees have approved a plan to expand the college's BROADBAND network system. According to Aebersold, the college will spend $235,000 dollars wiring all non-dorm buildings in the Science Quad with fiber-optic cables.

"This will allow them to connect to the national network. Basically, the purpose is to provide us with more and better communication between faculty and students," Aebersold said. The system will allow students to send assignments directly from Jesup to faculty offices. "The faculty can pick them up at their desk."

"The project will start this summer and may go as long as next summer before it is done," he said.

A show of pride

These students were some of close to 200 people who attended the Gay Pride rally on Chapin steps last Friday. The rally was the culmination of Gay Pride Week. (See story on page 3)

Town Williams for money.

PAGE 4

Movie review: New York Stories.

PAGE 6

Williams Softball crushes R.P.I. and Smith.

PAGE 10

The Williams Record

Tuition, Hopkins Mall and You

Anyone who has wandered through the corridors of the newly completed Hopkins Mall (nee Hall) has reason to be angry about the 9.6 percent increase in tuition for 1989-90. The lights, mirrors and general Trumpian garishness of a structure that Art History professors have called "adequate" in their kinder and gentler moments, should raise serious questions about the administration's ability to spend money in a rational and cost-conscious manner.

To wit, Professor Gordon Winston, provost of the college, has said that the school needs to increase revenues to keep up with costs that are rising faster than inflation. Increases in the price level did not cause the school to spend $9.3 million on the Hopkins Mall addition, nor did it cause the school to spend thousands on the post-modern amphitheater/barbecue grill outside of Gladden House.

The important point here is that an important reason tuition has been rising faster than inflation is the uncontrolled spending on unnecessary projects. The mere fact that college costs are rising so quickly should induce the school to do that much more about trying to control them. Certainly, multimillion dollar expenditures on questionable architecture is not a good way to be cost-efficient. The administration needs to go out of its way to make it clear that it is trying to control the astronomical price of a Williams education.

Students come here to receive a top-quality education, which Williams certainly provides. It is also painfully clear, however, that the demand for that education, as Professor Winston would put it, is very inelastic. People will still demand the product despite price increases. Maybe it is time the school stopped taking advantage of the high value students place on an Eph degree and only spend money on those things which are needed for the maintenance and improvement of the quality of a Williams education. It is only these actions which will keep the costs of going here at a reasonable level.

On the Record..

"It would really suck if I had to pay more. As long as they do it to 'spread the wealth,' it's okay. But if people like me, who can barely afford this school already, have to pay another $1600, it would really suck."

--John Coequeyt '92 on the 1989-90 tuition increase.

"The Multicultural Center is the quintessence of the diversity of the college, and the direction of the center will need additional personnel."

--Provost Gordon Winston defending one of the reasons given for the increase.

"Over history, no disempowered, marginalized, or oppressed group has ever been handed dignity, humanity, worth, and rights by their oppressors."

--Visiting Assistant Professor of History Scott Swanson, at the rally for Gay Pride Week last Friday, on the necessity of raising the consciousness of others.

"Our dignity is constantly being challenged, even here at Bucolic Williams."

--Chris Nealon '89, at the same rally, on the harassment of homosexuals.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible and not more than 500 words. They must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. They must be typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-2289.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor
BILL SAVADOVE, Arts Editor JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors
ASHESH SHAH, Productions Editor

Assistant News Editors
DAN SKWIRE, ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW
GREG HART & JUSTIN SMITH
Assistant Sports Editors
KERR HOUSTON, ANNE JOSEPH, JUAN ALONZO
Assistant Layout Editors
ELISA DUGUNDJI & SARAH OUCHI

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Letters

Drew's behavior on radio show inappropriate

To the Editor:

We are writing to comment on the disturbing behavior of Professor John Drew on the "American Inspiration" on Sunday, April 16. Needless to say, we had a number of problems with Mr. Drew's conduct; however, there are a few in particular which we found most insulting.

It seems that Mr. Drew has been strongly influenced in the art of debating and moderating by Morton Downey, Jr. Apparently he thinks that a moderator's job is to present the issue to be discussed, take a side on said issue, and then bully and insult any and all persons who do not agree with him, especially his guests.

Mr. Drew's self-description of moderator, we found, was at best inaccurate, at worst a complete misappropriation of the word. His behavior was completely unbecoming and inappropriate for any forum, especially that of a college radio station. Among other things, Mr. Drew showed a total lack of respect for the women on his show, including Tara Hurley, the one woman present whose views he considered worth listening to.

He talked over them, interrupting and rewording what they were saying before they finished a thought. Occasionally he would address a question to them, but even then he refused to listen to the answer.

Indeed, he rarely let anyone except himself speak. Most of the time, the only voice heard was that of Drew -- not Karen Boston, not Tara Hurley, not Annabel Shelnberg, not even John Berger or Russ Day -- all of whom were also participants in the discussion. Mr. Drew also found time to be insulting to the few callers he deigned to address.

The issue itself was never really discussed. Mr. Drew introduced the topic of abortion and then immediately began a series of name-calling and insults, using the topic as a forum for his own views on a number of unrelated issues. In that vein, Mr. Drew also seemed to think that WCFM is an appropriate place to vent his anger at what he views as discrimination on the part of the college by its refusal to reappoint him. While we do not wish to denigrate Mr. Drew's feelings on that subject, we do think his discussion of them have absolutely no place on a radio show concerning the issue of abortion.

Finally, we'd like to make one side comment on Mr. Drew's views concerning the sexual activity of women. Mr. Drew is certainly naive if he believes that every time a woman enters into a sexual relationship with a man it is willingly. Even Mr. Drew cannot be completely ignorant of the rape, and especially date and acquaintance rape, in this country.

We are not saying that every heterosexual encounter is a rape of a woman -- that would be a misrepresentation of our position. However, considering that one out of three women will be raped in her lifetime and that over 60 percent of the rapes in the United States are date rapes (in Berkshire county that number is higher -- over 90 percent), Mr. Drew would be wise to think twice before making such over-generalized statements in public.

Lrika Elvander '89
Laura Clark '89
Victoria Smith '89
Peter Ruggiero '89
Bohany Spaulding '89
Jennifer Fox '89

Exxon should be punished for Alaskan oil spill

By Robert Weisberg '91
The giant oil spill in Prince William Sound, Alaska, last month is a tale of human error, corporate stupidity, government incompetence and natural catastrophe. It's an old story, which has been seen before at Three Mile Island, Bhopal, Chernobyl and other places.

And, as in the past, the greatest government response taken in response to such a tragedy has been to create stricter rules and regulations to prevent another catastrophe.

Such actions usually accomplish their purpose: nuclear power has been run into the ground because few power plants live up to the new safety guidelines, chemical production is safer than before and the Soviet Union is attempting to upgrade its atomic energy regulations.

But will such measures prevent another Exxon Valdez accident? Other than making sure super-tanker captains are not habitual drunkards, many people say, what can be done?

One obvious answer, proposed by environmental groups, is to restrict oil drilling, or at least further exploration, in Alaska. In particular, the debate as it now stands is not over what to do about Exxon, but what to do about the Arctic National Wilderness Refuge, a huge region on the North Slope which may hold the last giant oil fields on American soil.

However, it is oil exploration really the pertinent issue? After all, the damage done to Prince William Sound was not a result of looking for oil; the culprits were Joseph Hazelwood, for creating the disaster, and Exxon, for hiring Hazelwood, who couldn't even hold a driver's license.

Of course, if there had been no oil coming out of Alaska in the first place, this accident would never have happened. But that is unrealistic. The Alaskan Pipeline has not been the environmental catastrophe many people said it would be, and there is no person that opening up the Arctic Refuge to exploration, under regulated conditions, will be either.

Also, the promise of that much oil to ease our dependence upon foreign energy cannot be easily dismissed.

What must be done here is to ensure that the oil companies take safety regulations seriously. The best way to accomplish that is to go after the parties responsible for the Prince William Sound disaster: Hazelwood and Exxon. Hazelwood has been indicted in criminal court, but Exxon has been barely touched. Other than acknowledging that Exxon's cleanup measures have been less than adequate, the government has done almost nothing to punish the oil giant for its duplicity.

Exxon was already willing to pay the costs of the cleanup and the environmental damage; this could cost them up to $1 billion, all told. A lot of money, to be sure, but Exxon can certainly manage it. What's really surprising is that the government will allow Exxon to drill in the Arctic Refuge with oil getting more expensive, Exxon could make up its losses in a matter of years.

If the government really wanted to punish Exxon, and send a clear message to other companies, it would go after Exxon's profit base. It should ban Exxon from drilling in Alaska, or at the very least the P-3, for 10 years. Assuming the government should levy a $1 billion fine on the company. Punitive costs like this will ensure that companies are meticulous in abiding by safety regulations.

For those who think these measures are too harsh, consider this: all it took was one drunken man to despoil an area larger than Rhode Island. True, punishing Exxon will not bring the dead birds and sea otters back, but it will give all oil companies something to think about.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

Other companies take over Exxon's drilling sites, which they should be allowed to do, Exxon's employees will not suffer, but the company will. In addition, more stringent action examining their plans; they may be the only way to do so for the oil industry, without jeopardizing our future energy sources.

College could join fight against apartheid by boycotting Coke

By Peter J. Walker '90

By now we are all familiar with the system by which the white minority rules South Africa. Armed with their legally enshrined apartheid, the Afrikaner government has profited from the oppression of 24 million blacks who live in conditions amounting to little more than slavery.

Based simply on the color of their skin, almost three quarters of South Africa can not vote in national elections, can not live in certain areas, can not travel freely, can not hold certain jobs, and often can not even live with their own family.

The Group Areas Act and the Population Registration Act has enabled the government to forcibly relocate millions of black South Africans since the 1950s. Almost half of the black population, forced to live on remote "bantustans" or "homelands" face an unemployment rate of an estimated 25 to 30 percent. The result of this poverty and oppression is a 50 percent infant mortality rate on the bantustans, while 78 percent of the people are chronically malnourished.

With all this injustice, we must ask ourselves, "What is it that I could do in order to change this situation?"

Unfortunately, the South African government is not content to oppress only their own citizens. All of southern Africa has fallen prey to Afrikaner-sponsored oppression. South Africa has occupied Namibia since World War II, ruling the country as their own, extending their apartheid system, and benefiting from Namibia's rich reserves of minerals. Though this occupation is due to end soon, South African soldiers have broken conditions of a recent treaty, and occupy their time with random violence directed against Namibian civilians.

For years South African-supported guerrilla armies have fought in Angola and Mozambique, carrying out their policy of destabilization of the black governments surrounding them. In a recent State Department report, Robert Gersony concluded that in the last two years at least 100,000 Mozambican civilians have been murdered by the South African-backed MNR guerrilla army.

Pretoria's extension of the Internal Security Act on 10 June 1988, have further decreased freedom in an already highly strict police state, and has resulted in thousands more detentions -- often indefinite, and without formal charges. And, during the last national elections, a dangerous move to the far right could be seen in the success of the Conservative Party. All this seems to indicate South Africa's resolute commitment to the system of apartheid.

To a black South African, socialized to view his condition as something of his own making, resistance to this system may never be conceptualized. It may seem far too difficult to reject the small opportunity offered to him by the white society, and he accepts it in the interest of survival. Nevertheless, many South Africans do choose to resist. The consequences, however, are quite serious: a person may be detained, arrested, or may simply disappear.

In certain cases the government may "ban" a person, forcing them into the sphere of the nonperson. Photographs, quotations, and the writing of the banned person become illegal. Furthermore, that person is confined to a particular magistrate's district, must report twice daily to the police station, and is subject to constant surveillance. Under no circumstances may a banned person share a room with more than one person.

With all this injustice, I think we must ask ourselves, "What is it that I could do, in order to change this situation?" Simple answers do exist. We could attempt to raise awareness among our friends. We could raise a material aid drive to send to South Africa. While these answers are quite good, I cannot believe that these acts will affect much change. We could write letters to the South African President and Ambassador. But appealing to the Afrikaner conscience seems to be of little use; the whites

During every meal, most of my friends drink Coca-Cola, a seemingly harmless act. They do not realize that this American company contributes to the sustenance of apartheid.

Coke has 69 percent of the soft drink market in South Africa with annual sales exceeding $200,000,000. Under South African corporate tax laws, Coke must pay 40 percent of their profits to the apartheid regime. This money is used to maintain the costly mechanisms of apartheid. Their large contribution to the system of apartheid has prompted a coalition of anti-apartheid groups to sponsor a boycott of all Coca-Cola products. I am now calling on Williams College to participate in this boycott.

Individual students, aware of Coca-Cola's involvement in South Africa, must show their disapproval by abstaining from purchasing their products on Spring Street. Speaking to merchants, explaining the reasons for our boycott, may prompt them to stop selling the product. Certainly, Food Service should cancel their large contract with Coca-Cola. By making it just a bit less profitable for the Coca-Cola Corporation to remain in South Africa, the boycott aims to force Coke to withdraw all ties to the country, and thus weaken the apartheid system.

We must see how the system of apartheid works, and attempt to undercut its support. Obviously the whites need economic activity to support their lifestyle, the

News

Pride, dignity, identity, community: Gay Pride Week '89 hits Williams

by Sara Dubow

It is the twentieth anniversary of a significant day in the history of the gay community. On June 28, 1969, the Stonewall riots broke out in New York City, and its patrons were habitually harassed by the area police. Two decades ago, they fought against the police in a spontaneous act of pride, identity, dignity, and community.

Pride, identity, dignity and community were the themes of Gay Pride Week, sponsored by the Williams Bisexual, Gay, and Lesbian Union. The week included the distribution of stickers that read "Action = Life," a poetry reading, a movie, a letter writing campaign in Buxier Hall, and culminated in a rally held on Chapin steps on Friday. Close to 200 people attended the rally where speakers addressed questions of gay pride and gay identity at Williams and beyond.

"We must not fight just one oppression, but all oppression," Mari Omland '89 said. Assistant Professor of Political Science Wendy Brown agreed. "We are stigmatized and despised for our desire, and we must struggle against all despisal. We all have differences to learn about and to negotiate, and while we do not always have reason to trust each other, we must learn how."

"Our dignity is constantly being challenged, even here at Bucolic Williams," Chris Nealon '89 said, after telling of a friend who received an obscene message on his answering machine. Visiting Assistant Professor of History Scott Swanson addressed the necessity of raising the consciousness of others. "Over history, no disempowered, marginalized or oppressed group has ever been handed dignity, humanity, worth and rights by their oppressors."

"It's only in affirming the humanity of all that we can live freely," he said. "Love and respect your person, your integrity, and your worth."

Problems faced by gays, lesbians, and bisexuals are not identical, according to members of the BGLU. "I think men recognize that they will lose certain implicit privileges if they come out," Nealon said, but he also agreed with Eliza Kent '89 and Elizabeth Baez '90 who suggested that it was probably more difficult for a woman to come out than for a man.

"It's hard to get people to legitimize you if you are bisexual, because they want to label you and bisexuality defies labels," Bridget Heard '89 said. "It can be an intensely scary and painful experience to come out, speakers said, but it can also be tremendously empowering and exhilarating. "Your fears of losing friends and family may be real, but your friends love you more than you think they do and your parents love you too," Swanson said.

"Please come out!" Nealon spoke of the power of coming out that comes from not lying, from having a new sense of dignity and a new group of friends. "Please come out. You're so much more than your fear and your sexuality. Rattle your chains, take hold of your identity and come out."

"For the first time at Williams, a lesbian J.A. is being open," Baez '89 said. "A woman labeled as a role model is coming out. It's nerve-racking, but empowering."

"For those who are struggling with the problems of being gay, I would say be generous with yourselves," Swanson said. "You're not alone."

Speaking of a different kind of sexual fear and identity, Chaplain to the College Carol Pepper said that she had been physically and sexually abused as a child. "I look up to the BGLU because they have come further on this problem [of sexual identity] than I have. They are the most mature, integrated, fully human people I know. They are capable of real intimacy."

"Sometimes I think there are two alternate realities," Kent said. "The straight universe and the gay universe, existing side by side. There is no easy prescription to remedy the split between straight reality and gay reality, but we live in one world and we must change it."

"Our dignity is constantly being challenged, even here at Bucolic Williams."

"Our dignity is constantly being challenged, even here at Bucolic Williams."

"Our dignity is constantly being challenged, even here at Bucolic Williams."

"Our dignity is constantly being challenged, even here at Bucolic Williams."

"Our dignity is constantly being challenged, even here at Bucolic Williams."

"Our dignity is constantly being challenged, even here at Bucolic Williams."

"Our dignity is constantly being challenged, even here at Bucolic Williams."

"Our dignity is constantly being challenged, even here at Bucolic Williams."

The newest style

Ben Soriano '91 was one of many students to cross-dress last Friday. The Non-Violence and Social Change class asked students to break traditional gender classifications by dressing as the opposite sex. Though the switch occurred during Gay Pride Week, the Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Union did not organize the call to cross-dress.

Steinman

The last waltz

On Friday, April 21, the Berkshire Symphony Orchestra gave their final concert of the year. The program featured Berlioz's Roman Carnival Overture, Brahms's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, and Prokofiev's Concerto No. 1 in D Major for Violin and Orchestra with soloist Ellen Payne. Payne, a concert violinist, has performed as soloist and recitalist with the Julliard Orchestra, the Aspen Symphony, the Cosmopolitan Symphony, and the Cleveland Philharmonic Orchestra. She has been chosen by Life Magazine to be featured in an article on the career development of a young musician.

Movie Review

NY Stories is great on the outside, awful on the inside

by Robert Weisberg

What's great on the outside and awful on the inside? If you said chicken Kiev, guess again. The answer is New York Stories, a movie composed of three short films by some of the industry's most famous artists.

Martin Scorsese, Francis Ford Coppola and Woody Allen each directed one segment of the film, and while only Allen receives screenwriting credit for his segment, each part of New York Stories reflects the personal visions each man has of the Naked City.

"Life Lessons," by Scorsese, is the first segment, which is fortunate, because it's also the best of the three. While it spends its time in the New York City art scene, as the name would indicate, "Life Lessons" has more to do with love, hate and obsession than with art. It's really a passion play with New York as its locale.

Part of what makes this little film so good are the extraordinary performances by the leads, Nick Nolte and Rosanna Arquette. Nolte is a middle-aged modern artist, cramming to finish some paintings before a big show. With a scraggly beard and paint-smeared clothes, he looks like an artworld Grizzly Adams.

Nolte has quietly become one of the most prolific actors in cinema, and his role in "Life Lessons" shows why. For a forty-five minute piece, he displays a remarkable range of emotions, from a maddening euphoria while he paints to heart-wrenching sadness after an unbelievably cruel twist of love by Arquette. Yet underlying all of his moods is passion: for his art, for Arquette, for love itself.

Almost as noticeable as art in "Life Lessons" is the music that Nolte paints to. His taste ranges from "Waltz of the Flowers" to opera, but it's always the blues. While his painting is somewhat indecipherable, you get the feeling he's channeling the music into the art. As he turns up the music, his painting becomes faster, more frenzied, until he's practically attacking the canvas. It's quite believable.

Arquette's portrayal is similar to her acting in another Scorsese film. After Hours. She's not so weird in "Life Lessons," but has a definite flakiness that makes her extremely unstable. And as she and Nolte alternate between she using him and he using her, the audience has trouble making up its mind about who to loathe more. After the final scene, final verdicts on Nolte's character are almost impossible.

'At first, Zoe's antics aren't offensive, but after a while you just want to punch her in the mouth.'

The second piece, "Life Without Zoe," is pure drivel. Coppola's segment is the basic New York City children's fairy tale: poor little rich girl living in a posh hotel schemes to spend more time with her globe-trotting parents.

This type of story is not particularly stupid. But Coppola has thrown in just too many ridiculous plot twists to keep it intelligent and interesting. A lost jewel, a super-rich Arab boy who Zoe befriends, a billion-dollar kiddie costume party and a bum who gets the gift of chocolate combine to make the story muddled, yet also very simplistic.

Perhaps Coppola should have read Sal's "The Storyteller," when very good things happen to very good people, it's very boring. At first, Zoe's antics aren't offensive, but after a while, you just want to punch her in the mouth.

Still, "Life Without Zoe" has one advantage. It gives you a chance to get some popcorn, stretch your legs and use the bathroom before the final segment, Woody Allen's "Oedipus Wrecks," starts.

The phrase "Woody Allen comedy film" gets everybody very excited, and while "Oedipus Wrecks" is funny, it's also somewhat disappointing and contrived. Maybe the standards that everyone expects from Allen are too high, so when an OK Allen film, which would be a career high for almost anyone else in movies, comes along, there's a small sense of letdown.

The piece itself is basically a long Jewish mother joke, with Allen as the middle-aged lawyer whose tyrannical whirlwind of a mom disapproves of his engagement to Gentile (as opposed to Jewish, though she's that, too) Mia Farrow. I won't reveal the absolutely bizarre plot twist, which, despite its uniqueness in the annals of film gets snide after a while.

Most Allen comedy is generally pretty sloppy and rather vaudevillian. "Sleeper" and "Take the Money and Run," for instance, were both technically imperfect and low-budget, but these contributed to their likability. They were good natured films.

But "Oedipus Wrecks" is very structured, almost clinical. With the exception of the major twists, it's also predictable. The jokes are good, but that's really all; the story is not deep by any means. Though some platitudes about Allen's relationship with his mother are possible, who really cares?

At least "Oedipus Wrecks" gives the film a funny ending, so you will leave New York Stories feeling pretty good. Hopefully, it will help everybody forget "Life Without Zoe" (I didn't, but I had a review to write). "Life Lessons," the best piece, will stay with you a while, as it should.

New York Stories is playing at Imagines from April 28 to May 4.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinemas I, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179

The Dream Team	7:00	9:15
Major League	7:00	9:15
Disorganized Crime	7:05	9:15

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612

Red Sorghum	April 25-27	7:00	9:00
New York Stories	April 28-May 4	7:00	9:00

North Adams Cinema
Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873

Disorganized Crime	7:00	9:15
Say Anything	7:00	9:15
Pet Sematary	7:00	9:15
Speed Zone	7:00
Red Scorpion		9:15

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639

Dangerous Liaisons, The Dream Team, She's Out of Control, Say Anything, Red Scorpion, Major League: Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30.

New York Stories, Rain Man: 6:45 & 9:15

Pet Sematary, Speed Zone, Cyborg, Disorganized Crime: Sun-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:15 & 9:30.

Berkshire Mall Cinema
Rte 8, Lanesborough, 499-2558

Major League	12:55	3:25	6:55	9:25
Pet Sematary	12:50	3:20	6:50	9:20
She's Out of Control	12:40	3:10	6:40	9:10
Speed Zone	1:10	3:40	7:10	9:40
Red Scorpion	1:20	3:50	7:20	9:50
The Dream Team	12:45	3:15	6:45	9:15
Disorganized Crime	1:15	3:45	7:15	9:45
Dangerous Liaisons			6:30	9:00
Rain Man			6:30	9:00

Subject to change after Thursday

Witness

The exhibit, "Black Photographers Bear Witness: 100 Years of Social Protest," will be on view at WCMA until October 28. The exhibit is a historical overview of the role of black photographers in the struggle for civil rights in America. Pictured is "Voice," which was taken by Monica Steel in 1965.

GATSBY'S

BLOOMING OF THE PERMANENT

Up to 50% off assorted sneakers

Spring Street, Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-5407
Main Street, Lee, Mass. 25 Railroad St., Great Barrington, Mass.

COME TO RHODE ISLAND, COME TO BROWN THIS SUMMER!
For a Summer Course catalog, call or write:
Brown University Summer Studies • Box 1-102 • Providence, RI 02912 • (401) 863-7000

Mountain Bike Specialists

Complete Repair on All Bikes

the Mountain Goat
Went Street, Williamstown
Extended Hours Open 7 Days 458-6465

London $189
Frankfurt 219
Oslo 269
Madrid 245
San Jose, C.R. 175
Tokyo 340
Auckland 514

Some restrictions apply. Taxes not included. Eurail passes issued on the spot. FREE Student Travel Catalog.

Council Travel
79 So Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002
413-256-1261

After stunning comebacks, baseball falls to Cardinals

continued from page 12

in a forest beyond right field, as they galloped to a 4-0 lead. After the teams traded single tallies, R.P.I. greeted Eph reliever Mark DeRussy '91 with two more runs, widening the gap to 7-1.

However, the Ephs seemed to sprinkle a magic powder on their bats in the seventh inning, as they suddenly erupted for seven runs to take their first lead of the game. The rally began with Chris Perry '91 drawing a walk and trotting to second on a wild pitch. One out later, sophomore Mike Hyde singled, and freshman Laurin Laderouie followed with a walk to load the bases for Shean, who stroked a two-run single.

Jeremy Austin '92 kept the rally alive with an RBI single, and Scott Kennedy '89 rescored the bases with his single. Whalen, enjoying an early-season rampage, doubled to narrow the margin to 7-5, and junior Todd Stricker eventually tied the game on a sacrifice fly. The Engineers escaped the lining minutes later, but not before a Perry double had led to an 8-7 Eph advantage. The lead held up as Austin came on in the bottom of the inning, and pitched three scoreless frames to earn his first collegiate win.

A disappointing Florida trip featured more cases of sunburn than victories.

After the home opener with Dartmouth was postponed because of wet grounds, the Ephs hit the road once more, this time bound for Hartford and a contest with Trinity. Once more, the Ephs demonstrated an ability to quickly wipe out considerable margins, as they dug their way out of an 8-4 hole to chalk up a wild 14-9 win.

Scott Kennedy had given the Ephmen an early lead with a three-run, first-inning blast, but Trinity roughed up Conway in their half of the opening frame to even the score, and then added four in the fourth to storm their way to a 7-4 lead. However, Pentz took the mound in the fourth and quickly restored some order, limiting the Hanitams to one run in the seventh.

Meanwhile, the Ephs seemed to be searching for a socket for their electric bats, and, in the eighth, they found what they were looking for, as they slugged ten singles and eked out two walks against Trinity hurlers Dan Federman and Rocky DeMalo. Laderouie singled twice in the decisive frame, driving four runs across the plate, and Stricker's base hit with the bases jammed knocked in the tying and winning runs.

Trinity, which fell to 5-2 with the loss, added a run in the ninth, but could do little more against Austin, who finished the game and protected the two-game Eph winning streak.

A pleasant home opener

After a game with North Adams State and a doubleheader with Tufts were rescheduled due to another round of poor weather, the Ephmen finally managed to fit in their home opener, a Wednesday contest with SUNY Albany that was played under sunny, 50-degree skies. The game turned out to be no contest, as an outmanned Albany State squad committed four errors, despite several unbelievable twisting, sprawling catches that drew applause from the forty fans on hand.

Williams struck quickly, scoring five runs in the second, and then peddled their lead with a run in the third, and four runs in the fourth, three of which came on a Kennedy home run that wound up in late two of the outdoor track, and two in the fifth. Albany could muster only one run against Eph starter Barbera, who raised his record to 3-0 with a masterful five-inning performance.

The 1-7 Great Danes cut the lead to a more respectable 12-6 with five runs off Austin. Once more, Briggs brought on Conway to close, indicating to the young right-handed player that the ninth inning is his to pitch.

Wesleyan ends the streak

On Saturday, however, the Ephmen saw their modest, three-game winning streak come to a decisive end, as the 11-4 Wesleyan Cardinals came to town and proceeded to shut down the Williams offense behind the powerful six-hit pitching of John Hurley.

With a chilly breeze and light snowfall keeping the bleachers virtually empty, the Cards posted a run across the plate in the first inning, and then added a run in the second on a Olenk Frankel home run. Wesleyan doubled their lead in the top of the sixth, with a pair of runs off Whalen at first base, and some of our kids are playing unfamiliar positions. We're going to make mistakes, but I think that we're going to win more than we lose this year.

The team will have a chance to take a step toward proving Briggs correct as they travel to Amherst for a doubleheader today and then return home for a makeup contest with Tufts.

The Ephmen struggled to light their half of the scoreboard.

ninth inning for the Ephmen, allowing only a single and a couple of easy ground balls, but Hurley snuffed out a mild Eph rally in the ninth without allowing a run.

Although Williams fell to 5-8 with the loss to Wesleyan, they have little time to slump their shoulders, as they play the final fourteen contests of their season in the next eighteen days. Coach Briggs looked forward eagerly to the stretch, although he admitted that the Ephs are not a seasoned ball club yet.

"We're a young team," Briggs said, "and we're still learning. We have a freshman infield, with the exception of Whalen at first base, and some of our kids are playing unfamiliar positions. We're going to make mistakes, but I think that we're going to win more than we lose this year."

Your college degree has already started to pay off.

College graduates get pre-approved credit and $400 cash back on any of these new Ford cars and trucks.

Your New England Ford Dealers think you should be rewarded for those countless essays and pulling more all-nighters than you care to remember. That's why we've introduced a hassle-free way for college grads to buy a new Ford car or truck.

We'll give you pre-approved credit and $400 cash back to be used as a downpayment on one of the new Ford cars or trucks featured below. Other purchase incentives may also be available. But you must take delivery by Dec. 31.

To qualify, you must earn a bachelor's degree from a four-year college, or an advanced degree from an accredited institution, between Oct. 1, 1988 and Jan. 1, 1990.

Ford's Graduate Assistance Program. Proof positive of the value of an education.

See your New England Ford Dealer for details. For more information, call this toll-free number: 1-800-321-1536.

TMI Student Travel offers discount international airfares • Major airlines, not charters • personalized trip planning • group discounts • 617-367-3311

ALASKA FIELD RESEARCH
Earn academic credit this summer studying alpine ecology & land management amidst the glaciers and peaks of the Wrangell Mountains.

Wildlands Studies, 3 Mosswood Circle, Cazadero, CA 95421
707-632-5665

High Style
by: Pauline Guntlow

Wild and wonderful colors are showing up in today's clothes — and in lights to wear with them. Strong contrasts are fashionable now.

Bare dress for a special occasion? Don't forget to smooth your skin, especially where it will show. Scrub with a granular cleanser and massage with a loofah sponge.

The interview haircut needn't be severely short, but should be carefully styled.

Latex nail patches not only strengthen the nail, they add some fabulous decoration. Wide assortment of patterns, colors and clear tones are available.

Consider changing hair color! Do it the natural way, with subtle streaking. Makes drab hair glow!

Put your hair in the hands of our expert colorists at:

Village Coiffs
4 Southworth St.
Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-9518
Now Open Every Weekday Evening

McClelland's
Office Products

introduces

FAX SERVICE

Sending and Receiving

(413-458-9426)

Stop by during normal business hours

McClelland's
STATIONERY AND OFFICE PRODUCTS
458-4920 38 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass 01267

WUFO runs into stiff tournament competition

by Guy Beadie

Despite a promising but losing performance against the University of Vermont last week, WUFO just couldn't seem to get things together this weekend at the SUNY Purchase tournament. Dropped passes and erratic play typified the day as the Williams team proceeded to lose games to Lehigh University, Tufts University, and the University of Pennsylvania.

The Ephs did some good playing, though, as they came back from a 1-7 deficit to tie Lehigh at 10 with an impressive show of guts. They were too isolated, however, to form a structure strong enough to withstand the quality teams that WUFO played.

Great play against UVM

The team's performance two weeks ago indicated that Williams looked to be a strong contender for the Purchase Cup. Moreover, the next game against the University of Vermont gave the Ephs a defeat which still showed the high level of play that could be reached by the Williams players.

See-saw play dominated the first half of what was easily the best game that WUFO has played this spring. Each team worked hard on both moving the frisbee and running on grueling man-to-man defense. Especially notable on defense was Erik Sebesta '91, who somehow managed to shut down Williams' attack.

WUFO President Joe Eschrick '88 for the first half. After a number of points by both teams, it was UVM who got the last point before half to put the lead at 6-8, the first time that Vermont's finest had been in the lead by more than one point.

The second half, despite a quick Eph point, started out dangerously for WUFO as UVM went ahead with a quick three points in a row to make it 7-11. At this point in the game, however, Jay H. Hartley '90 walked onto the field and the whole team settled down. Hartley and Jim Adams '90, with a very quick, deft series of passes and cuts, provided some fast offense that resulted in a couple of points to make it 9-11.

See-saw play dominated the first half of the game.

Perhaps shaken by the sudden turnaround in play by the Ephs, UVM began to make mistakes that were capitalized on by a revived Williams team as it started shutting down the Lehigh offense with help from the intimidating play of Hermanson, who seemed to come down with every long pass that Lehigh attempted. WUFO scored five points in a row before a suddenly struggling Lehigh team could end the first half 8-6.

The second half settled down to some well-played Ultimate by both teams. Lehigh slowly adjusted to the zone that WUFO was playing, but behind some solid playing by Matt Levin '90, Sebesta, and Adams WUFO continued to outplay Lehigh to tie the game at 10 each. WUFO then started dropping more discs than that would normally have been caught. Lehigh, not a green team, took advantage of those mistakes and pulled ahead to win the shortened game 10-13 as a time cap was imposed to allow other games to be played.

The 1-7 lead that Lehigh took seemed almost effortless.

High winds mark Tufts loss

The wind had been building all day, but by the time the Tufts game began it had grown to extremely strong levels. It was a factor in every pass and every cut

(the path taken by a player to get open for a pass). Despite the weather, some quality playing was seen.

Though Williams fell behind 2-4, there was one spectacular point involving Sebesta, Adams, and Hermanson; they worked it beautifully through the Tufts zone defense for the score. WUFO rode on the play of those three and Alex Gregory '89 to tie the game at five, but it was Tufts that earned the next three by forcing turnovers and working it up the field with deadly long throws to take the first half 5-8. From there it continued, with Tufts completing enough long throws to provide a counterpoint to their good short passing game to keep ahead of the Ephs and take the game 10-15.

After the two tough losses to Lehigh and Tufts, UPenn showed WUFO to the door in a way that left no doubt about who was the better team. The 4-15 loss taught WUFO that it has much to work on before they can leave a mark in the upcoming Regional Tourney.

Women ruggers rough up Bantams; A-side falls in weekend tournament

by Laura Whitman

This weekend while the women's rugby A-side went to Wesleyan for a tournament, the B- and C-sides traveled to Trinity College, home of the Art Deco Mickey D's. Before the match, the Killer B's were inspired by trainer Alexandra Iselin '89, who told them that she "didn't get up at seven o'clock in the morning of [her] senior spring to tape ankles."

Trinity A-side kicked off against the B's. The sides were fairly matched, although the scrums were marked by inconsistent play on Williams' part. The line had several nice runs, most notably by Jackie Graves '90, despite her bloody wounds. Also noteworthy was the play of the Williams hooker, Pam Lotke '90, who laid an egg in a maul.

The match ended at 3-0, with Williams triumphant. The only score of the game was a penalty kick by Colleen

Also noteworthy was the play of Pam Lotke '90, who laid an egg in a maul.

Boland '92.

The next match pitted a rookie squad of C-side players against Trinity's

B-side. The first score of the game was a try by Amy Beliveau '91, who tried to convert her own try. Marisa Lucy '91, scored on a run from Williams' 22 all the way down the field, bringing the score to 8-0 at the half.

Trinity's demoralization was complete when a boy ran 15 yards backwards to touch the ball down in her own try zone out of fear of Timmons and a Great Dane. After the game, the team retired to the post-game festivities, where Iselin "shot the boot."

The A-side won one game and lost the other; they had to return to Williams without playing in either the consolation match or the championships.

white maul brought the ball to the try zone, where it was rushed over by Rebecca Timin '90 and touched down by Amanda Gallagher '90. Amy Beliveau scored again and nearly converted the try, but it bounced off the goalpost.

Trinity's demoralization was complete when a boy ran 15 yards backwards to touch the ball down in her own try zone out of fear of Timmons and a Great Dane. After the game, the team retired to the post-game festivities, where Iselin "shot the boot."

The A-side won one game and lost the other; they had to return to Williams without playing in either the consolation match or the championships.

Men's rugby

continued from page 11

had a great match. His covering and running were rewarded in the closing minutes of the game when he took a pass from charging sophomore lock Mark Elefante and participated in the try of the season.

When sophomore fly-half Jim Higgins fielded a deep kick, he and his side had one thought in their minds: attack. Higgins ran round the left side of the field as the Berkshire cover defense closed in on him. Freshman center Jim Kaufman was on hand to take Higgins' pass and sprint up the touchline. With Berkshire in his face, Kaufman dished to Vasi, who cleverly flipped the ball over his shoulder to Higgins, still in pursuit. Looking left, the traffic was too heavy, but on his right Higgins spied tighthead Sepe Pete Sepe '89 barreling downfield. Sepe exploited a yawning hole in the Berkshire defense after the Higgins connection, punctuating his 25-meter flight with a tomahawk touchdown.

"I knew as soon as I got the ball that I was going to score," Sepe reported. Hopefully, that attitude will work its way to the A team before next week.

The team faces the University of Massachusetts away next week.

ADVERTISE

call

(413) 597-2289

Drummond Cleaners

- 1989 SUMMER STORAGE SPECIAL -

ARE YOU WONDERING WHERE TO STORE YOUR CLOTHES AND BEDDING OVER THE SUMMER?

DRUMMOND CLEANERS WILL CLEAN AND STORE THEM FOR THE OF HAVING THEM CLEANED, IN OTHER WORDS, YOU GET FREE STORAGE!

FULLY INSURED — NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR INSURANCE.

FILL IN THIS FORM AND BRING IT IN WITH YOUR STORAGE TO BE ELIGIBLE FOR OUR STORAGE LOTTERY

First Prize

$100 Gift Certificate to Le Jardin Restaurant

Second Prize

$50 Gift Certificate to any store on Spring St.

3rd, 4th, & 5th Prize

$25 Gift Certificate to any store on Spring St.

6th thru 10th Prize

$20 in free cleaning

DRAWING WILL BE HELD ON JUNE 15, 1989.

Winners will be notified by mail in June.

Call 458-4321 for free campus pick-up

Please Print Home Address Below:

Name _____

Street _____

City, Zip _____

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.
66 Spring Street
458-4321

Jim Drummond, Williams '58
Owner

Spring Weekend Buffet presented by Williams College Dining Service

- Rondele and crackers
- Chicken Breast Chasseur
- Seafood Newberg
- Vegetable Manicotti w/ light cream sauce
- Watermelon Basket w/ fresh fruit
- Cold Pasta Salad
- Marinated Fresh Vegetable Salad
- Bread Board
- Mini Italian Pastries
- Dark Chocolate Mousse

All Dining Halls
Saturday, April 29, 1989

Three top hits from IBM

This offer is simply irresistible!

If it's value that counts, and it usually does, you can't afford to miss this offer on these IBM Personal System/2® models. Now—at a special campus price—you have your choice of three hit computers with high quality graphics to help you organize your class notes and write and revise papers. Check it out . . . three great computers . . . three fantastic prices! And selected software that's loaded and ready to go. So, come and see us today!

Model 30 286

Your Special Price*

$2,399

Model 50 Z

Your Special Price*

$2,799

Model 70 386

Your Special Price*

$4,449

*This offer is limited to qualified students, faculty and staff who order an IBM PS/2 Model 8530-E21, 8550-031 or 8570-E61 on or before June 30, 1989. Prices quoted do not include sales tax, handling and/or processing charges. Check with your school regarding these charges. Orders are subject to availability. IBM may withdraw the promotion at any time without written notice.

IBM Personal System/2 and PS/2 are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation. IBM Micro Channel Architecture is a trademark of IBM Corporation. Microsoft is a registered trademark of the Microsoft Corporation. hDC Windows Express is a trademark of the hDC Computer Corporation.

4-1 men's tennis posts road victory against Lord Jeffs

by Carolyn Koo

The past week was a progressive one for the men's tennis team. It started out the week with a 6-3 loss to Colgate on Tuesday, continued with an easy 7-2 win over Clark on Thursday, and completed the week with a 6-3 victory over Amherst on Saturday.

The Amherst win puts Williams up 1-0 in Little Three play. The Ephs' top three players, Tom Evans '92, Howie Kim '92, and Jim Welles '91, all lost their matches. Winning singles matches for Williams were co-captain Drew Sawyer '89 at number four, Steve Burbaum '90 at number five, and Brad Hunt '90 at number six. They all managed to win in straight sets.

Kim lost 6-4, 6-7, 7-5 to Amherst's Doug Hall. Kim felt that he could have defeated Hall, but could not specifically point out what went wrong.

"I'm not going to make any excuses. He [Hall] played well, but I don't think I played up to par either. I don't know what it was. It was just really weird," commented Kim. The Ephs swept the three doubles matches as well, fighting fiercely for all three. The number one team of Hunt and Sawyer came back from 6-2 down in the first set tie breaker to win the set 7-6, and took the second set 7-5. Evans and Burbaum at number two elinched their Amherst match after losing the first set 6-1, while Welles and co-captain Rob Halligan '89 at number three won a third set tie breaker to take their match.

"Our doubles wins are probably what won it for us," remarked Kim.

Match against Clark Williams did not expect Clark to be a challenge and ably decimated its opponents, allowing them to win only the number one and number two doubles matches.

The Ephs took all six singles matches, with Evans, Kim, Welles, Sawyer, Burbaum, and Randy Schriver '89 in the line-up. Burbaum had a relatively easy time winning his first match of the season 6-0, 6-0. Evans came back to win his match in three sets, after losing the first set 6-1. "Tom [Evans] showed his maturity as a player in this match," Coach Paul Assiante commented.

On Tuesday, the Ephs lost their first match of the year to the Red Raiders of Colgate.

In this home defeat, only Hunt was able to win his singles match at number six, 6-3, 6-4. The other two Eph matches were won by the number two and number three doubles teams of Sawyer/Hunt and Welles/Halligan.

Assiante was disappointed by the performances of his number one and two players, Evans and Kim. Both lost in close three-set matches to beatable players. Evans came back from 4-1 down in the first set to win it 7-5. His comeback was due to an improved first serve percentage, solid groundstrokes, putaway volleys, and well-executed lobs, which all combined to frustrate his Colgate opponent. In the next two sets though, Evans was caught off-balance and out of position too often by his opponent to effectively counter his attacking. He let the Colgate player back into the match and lost 5-7, 6-3, 7-6.

The team's record now stands at 4-1. Its next match is on Tuesday at Trinity.

Hot pitching carries softball to 3 wins

by Anne Joseph

With the strong pitching and some good work at bat on away fields, the women's softball team gained a victory over R.P.I. on Tuesday and two wins over Smith in a double-header on Saturday. The Ephs women nearly shut out R.P.I. 8-1 and crushed Smith in the first game 13-0 and pulled out a 4-2 win in the second game.

Freshman power Tanya Nunez dominated the game against the Engineers on Tuesday. Nunez struck out 11 batters and walked two. She allowed only three hits.

"Tanya did a great job pitching," Coach David Caputi stated. Caputi also expressed enthusiasm about the improvement in hitting. Scrapping by Union last week while hitting fly balls, the Ephs improved their game with an increase in ground hits and a decline in outs due to caught fly balls and pop-ups.

On Tuesday, the Ephs lost their first match of the year to the Red Raiders of Colgate.

In this home defeat, only Hunt was able to win his singles match at number six, 6-3, 6-4. The other two Eph matches were won by the number two and number three doubles teams of Sawyer/Hunt and Welles/Halligan.

Assiante was disappointed by the performances of his number one and two players, Evans and Kim. Both lost in close three-set matches to beatable players. Evans came back from 4-1 down in the first set to win it 7-5. His comeback was due to an improved first serve percentage, solid groundstrokes, putaway volleys, and well-executed lobs, which all combined to frustrate his Colgate opponent. In the next two sets though, Evans was caught off-balance and out of position too often by his opponent to effectively counter his attacking. He let the Colgate player back into the match and lost 5-7, 6-3, 7-6.

The team's record now stands at 4-1. Its next match is on Tuesday at Trinity.

"We hit the ball much better, I'm happier. The hitting was well spread out," Caputi continued. Holly Hedeman '92 had three singles and drove in three runs. One of her hits was with the bases loaded and scored her sister and co-captain Nancy Hedeman.

Nancy Hedeman managed to get two hits, a double and a single, which pulled in two runs for the Ephs. "Holly and Nancy were the two stand-outs in hitting," Caputi commented. He also pointed out consistent performance and clean hitting by Laurie Hartsoe '91.

In the field, the Ephs made some nice plays according to Caputi. However, the Williams team, although, it was not a shutout, the Ephs played a consistent and exciting game. Nunez pitched the second game and allowed only six hits.

The second game proved to be a unifying experience for the Williams team. Although, it was not a shutout, the Ephs played a consistent and exciting game. Nunez pitched the second game and allowed only six hits.

The score was 0-0 going into the sixth inning. "Although it was the second game, we felt like we were still up 13-0," women lost a possible shut-out in the bottom of the last inning when R.P.I. managed to score their sole run.

The Engineers ruined the whitewash with a single, a stolen base and an RBI base hit. The Ephs scored one run played against the University of Maine, University of Lowell and the Tufts teams in the tournament.

In Division III competition, the Ephs took fifth place.

Facing two tough courses, one with par 72 and one with par 70, co-captain Tim Frechette '89 shot

76-76. Jeff Alexander '92 hit 88-73, Sean Seguin '91 received achieved 84-84, La Porte '91 finished with 81-78. Senior Jeff Heuer managed to come back from two double bogeys on the back nine with an eagle on the par-five 15th hole, finishing the round with a 73.

Beating from Colgate On Saturday, the Ephs played at Colgate, where they suffered a loss to their hosts and believed victory over Ithaca. "It was ugly. It was horrendous," said a team member of the match.

The over-ate greens resulted in putting problems, and the snow flurries and 30-40 mph winds contributed to the combined tally of each team's 5 best rounds. Colgate 405, Williams 448, and Ithaca 467. Colgate's Kelly Mills, who shot a 75 on the par 72 course was the medalist.

In spite of the momentary lapse, the team seems to be rebounding. Coach Rick Pohle said the team will surprise people this season. "I'm happy with the results of the tournament at Cape Cod, they did very well. We're very anxious to play," he stated.

ugly. It was horrendous," said a team member of the match.

The over-ate greens resulted in putting problems, and the snow flurries and 30-40 mph winds contributed to the combined tally of each team's 5 best rounds. Colgate 405, Williams 448, and Ithaca 467. Colgate's Kelly Mills, who shot a 75 on the par 72 course was the medalist.

In spite of the momentary lapse, the team seems to be rebounding. Coach Rick Pohle said the team will surprise people this season. "I'm happy with the results of the tournament at Cape Cod, they did very well. We're very anxious to play," he stated.

ugly. It was horrendous," said a team member of the match.

The over-ate greens resulted in putting problems, and the snow flurries and 30-40 mph winds contributed to the combined tally of each team's 5 best rounds. Colgate 405, Williams 448, and Ithaca 467. Colgate's Kelly Mills, who shot a 75 on the par 72 course was the medalist.

In spite of the momentary lapse, the team seems to be rebounding. Coach Rick Pohle said the team will surprise people this season. "I'm happy with the results of the tournament at Cape Cod, they did very well. We're very anxious to play," he stated.

ugly. It was horrendous," said a team member of the match.

The over-ate greens resulted in putting problems, and the snow flurries and 30-40 mph winds contributed to the combined tally of each team's 5 best rounds. Colgate 405, Williams 448, and Ithaca 467. Colgate's Kelly Mills, who shot a 75 on the par 72 course was the medalist.

In spite of the momentary lapse, the team seems to be rebounding. Coach Rick Pohle said the team will surprise people this season. "I'm happy with the results of the tournament at Cape Cod, they did very well. We're very anxious to play," he stated.

MINISTRY JOBS
now!
CALL INTEREST TODAY
1-800-426-1342
Interstate
(206-546-7330 in WA, HI and Canada)

RICHARD D. SIMPSON G. VINCENT COUSSEAU
the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 415-458-4800

Hobson's Choice
Fine Food and Good Spirits
We have new menus!
How does Fried Clams or Noodles Alfredo or a Cheeseburger Club Sandwich Sound for lunch?
How does Steak and Scallops or Veal Cacciatore or Seafood Fettucini sound for dinner?
They're all here in our new menus!
159 Water St., Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-9101
serving continuously from 11:30 am 'til 9 p.m. on weekdays and 10 p.m. Fri. and Sat. Closed Sun.

Athlete of the Week

This week's recipient is Bob Santny '90 of the men's lacrosse team. In last Saturday's 15-4 win over Trinity, Santny scored the 100th point of his Williams career. According to Coach Renzie Lamb, Santny has averaged three or four points per game, comparable to 20 points per basketball game. In addition, he has been the leading Eph scorer for two seasons. Congrats, Bob!

Sports Quiz

Win a $15 gift certificate from Goff's - enter the quiz

- 1) Our rival Amherst is at least somewhat unique in that its nickname (the Lord Jeff) is a two-word phrase. Name two other schools that can claim the same distinction.
- 2) Only three players have won NCAA basketball titles and NBA championship rings in consecutive years. Name them.
- 3) The Pittsburgh Pirates looked to fill a hole at shortstop by trading for Seattle Mariner Rey Quinones. Which promising young pitcher did the Pirates send to the Kingdome?
- 4) What Williams squash player and IM soccer captain extraordinaire was named second team All-America in squash this year?

Send your answers to Mariam Nafley at SU 1871 by Saturday. In case of a tie, the winner will be chosen in a random drawing. Last week's winner was Morgan West freshman Scott Ringgold. Congrats, Scott! Answers to last quiz: 1) The Penguins were the N.Y. Rangers and the Canadiens downed the Hartford Whalers in the opening round of the NHL playoffs; 2) Philadelphia Flyer Ron Hextall became the first goalie to score a goal in the NHL playoffs; 3) Nolan Ryan has fired five no-hitters in his career; 4) The Skydome is the name of the new Toronto Blue Jays domed stadium.

(Thomas)

Captain Bob Goldstein '89, on an open-field run, plunges forward into an immovable object during last Saturday's A-side game of the first annual John Donovan '80 Memorial Rugby Tournament. The Ephs lost 14-7 against visiting teams North Adams and Berkshire Men's Club, but helped raise over $300 for the Berkshire Alliance for the Mentally Ill.

Men's rugby hosts Memorial Tournery

by Mark A. Stepien

The first annual John Donovan '80 Memorial Rugby Tournament, held last weekend at home, went off without a hitch. Visiting teams North Adams and Berkshire Men's Club participated in a day of fine rugby as they joined forces with their Eph hosts to help raise over three hundred dollars for the Berkshire Alliance for the Mentally Ill.

Williams' C and C sides matched North Adams well. Though the screaming pack pushed their opponents back at will in scrumage, they could not mount a sustained attack. They held North Adams to one penalty kick before responding with their own from fullback Colin Holley '91.

In the second match of the day, the Williams boys found themselves far, far away from the score they desperately needed to answer North Adams' 9-3 lead. A late tackle from a kick set the stage for a Williams attack inside the 22. Scrum half Rob Phay '90 ordered his forwards to hammer away at the defense with prop runs after a series of penalties. In the Ephs' last possible chance to score, sophomore flanker Roderich Rich snatched the bobbled ball from North Adams for a try. Unable to convert it, team future had to settle for a 9-7 loss.

Scrum Captain and lock extraordinaire Sherwood Smith '89 summed up the A-side's third consecutive loss (the Berkshire Men's Club tallied 18 points to the Ephs 7): "I really think we are playing better each week, but most everyone on the side is waiting for some breakthrough to happen before really throwing themselves into the fray. When we finally remember what it feels like to make something happen ourselves instead of waiting for someone else to make the key move, we will win our games."

The A game reads like a recap of the last two weeks. Scored upon early in the first half, Williams responded with a breakthrough by junior fullback Chap Petersen, which resulted in a try for Captain Bob Goldstein '89. Great forward play came tonight as the backs could rarely elude their opponents, and when they did, the necessary support was not close enough to keep the movement going.

On the opposite wing, Sal Vasi '91

B match a tryfest

Though the A-side game was a disappointment, spectators for the Killer B-Berkshire B match enjoyed a tryfest. That many types of rugby we have come to expect from the 11's left Berkshire groping to keep up with the ball. Hoss Baker wowed the sidelines with a surprise pass to his supporting loose forwards who managed to move Williams well inside the 22 early in the game. His generosity was rewarded when flanker Dave Outcault '90 turned the favor setting up the Hosser for the first of his two tries of the day. On the opposite wing, Sal Vasi '91

continued on page 8

Shoe Sale

save up to 50%

on selected

- tennis
- running SHOES
- soccer

GOFF'S SPORTS, INC.
15 Spring Street 458-3605

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Name Game

BY WILSON MCBETH/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Malachuk

- ACROSS
- 1 Salami
 - 2 Kind of flint
 - 3 Provoked
 - 4 Ledge
 - 5 Poshan natives
 - 6 Sound-shield screens
 - 7 Parents
 - 8 Pear's light?
 - 9 Supplication
 - 10 Diminutive suffix
 - 11 "There runs by Merrow Down"
 - 12 Kipling
 - 13 Begs
 - 14 Educational org.
 - 15 Musical adaptation: Abbr.
 - 16 Don Adams TV role
 - 17 Colonial Dutch landowner
 - 18 Ming for
 - 19 Pope who was lionized?
 - 20 Actress Seberg's slack's
 - 21 Inland sea
 - 22 Yin's partner
 - 23 These are often counted
 - 24 Feeling, e.g.
 - 25 Sallies
 - 26 Mentally infirm
 - 27 Excreta
 - 28 Strays
 - 29 Majors on
 - 30 Olibanum for
 - 31 Rubens' medium
 - 32 Kind of flint
 - 33 Tumuli
 - 34 Wreaths
 - 35 African fox
 - 36 Chari
 - 37 Speech sound
 - 38 Well-groomed
 - 39 Chinese city on the Wei
 - 40 Hold for Ozzie?
 - 41 Himalayan mountains
 - 42 Optical network
 - 43 Bergoni, for one
 - 44 Shri song
 - 45 Pertaining to the fabled
 - 46 Harry's spouse
 - 47 Kind of electricity
 - 48 Soprano Frances, 1883-1952
 - 49 Musical embellishment for 93 Down?
 - 50 Evening, in
 - 51 Pope who was lionized?
 - 52 Celebrated or celebrity
 - 53 Buys back
 - 54 Writer Hobson
 - 55 City near Chicago
 - 56 Auto race
 - 57 Pinet for a canine?
 - 58 Bored
 - 59 Spouses of British countesses
 - 60 Dulcet Telly
 - 61 Dye's partner
 - 62 Hirt and Pacino
 - 63 Michelangelo masterpiece
 - 64 Fence picket
 - 65 Wallace's transmitting device?
 - 66 Obuse
 - 67 TV network north of the U.S.A.
 - 68 Afflict
 - 69 Aggregates
 - 70 Young pheasant
 - 71 Lorain's lake
 - 72 Harkie
 - 73 Einstein's rock coat?
 - 74 City ESE of Napoli
 - 75 Snow leopard
 - 76 Electrical unit of capacitance
 - 77 Excavations
 - 78 Places for caspates
 - 79 Out of
 - 80 Take care
 - 81 Mexican shawl
 - 82 Vice principal
 - 83 Smeat
 - 84 Sullen book
 - 85 Tablets
 - 86 Yield, as land
 - 87 Writter Hobson
 - 88 City near Chicago
 - 89 Auto race
 - 90 Pinet for a canine?
 - 91 Bored
 - 92 Spouses of British countesses
 - 93 Dulcet Telly
 - 94 Dye's partner
 - 95 Hirt and Pacino
 - 96 Certain evergreen trees
 - 97 Be silent, to
 - 98 Short guitar
 - 99 Dens
 - 100 Workers' job actions
 - 101 Lock of a type
 - 102 Zaragaza's river
 - 103 Cato's 151
 - 104 Regret
 - 105 Household spirit

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

Track posts Little 3 win despite snow, cold

by Josh Levenberg

Despite horrid weather conditions, including below freezing temperatures, violent winds, and snow storms, the Williams men's and women's track teams won the Little Three Championship on Saturday. The Tony Plinsky Track, which has been the site of the Little Three championship for the last two years, was host to some incredible running. The track, incidentally, was also the landing site for a Wesleyan home-run ball which was rocketed from the nearby baseball field.

The Ephwomen, who Coach Peter Farwell called "just completely overpowering," scored 99 points in a routing of second place Wesleyan (43 points) and third place Amherst (35 points). The men's team scored 90 points, enough to beat both Wesleyan (62 points) and Amherst (47 points). Amherst, who had been strong in the past, proved to be more a lamb than a lion.

In the women's field events, which were held before the snow actually began to fall, freshman Shelly Torgerson won the hammer throw with a toss of 72'2". Senior Sue Northen jumped 4.53 meters against a strong wind to win the long jump. Peyton Jefferson '90 jumped 4'10" to win the high jump for the women.

Women runners brave wind
As the day got colder and the track events began, the Williams women were still on top. In the long distance events, the runners were forced to run half of each lap against the wind. Often times, this meant that runners were pelted with snow and sleet. The women of the 400 meter relay team, which included Northen, Kim Shields '91, Alison Smith '90, and co-captain Dawn MacAuley '89, braved the conditions to win their race with a time of 52.1 seconds.

Elisa Dugundji '91 pulled off an upset with her victory in the 1500 meters with a time of 5:02. MacAuley fought the cold wind to claim two meet records with her victories in the 100 and 400 meter hurdles with times of 15.2 seconds and 1:04, respectively. Williams swept the 400 meter hurdles with co-captain Noriko Honda '89 finishing second and Katherine Queneey '92 finishing third.

Dawn MacAuley ran to her fourth victory when she anchored the 1600 meter relay. She received the baton from her younger sister, Cherie MacAuley '92, who won the 800 meters in 2:23. The other members of the 1600 meter relay were co-captain Jen Morris '89 and Kim Bamdollar '91.

The men dominate

In the men's field events, co-captain Joe McGinn '89 captured his third consecutive Little Three Title in the hammer throw. His throw was measured at 151'1". Daniel Hackett '91 won both the javelin and the triple jump. Hackett threw the javelin 44.72 meters against the wind and jumped 41'7". Wilson Warren '92 also fought the wind to win the high jump. His winning jump was Geoff Igharo '90, with an injured hamstring, manages a triple jump of 41'4", second place overall in last weekend's Little Three championship track meet. Both the men's and the women's teams took the Little Three titles.

marked at 6'0".

In Saturday's track events the Williams men fought off challenges by Wesleyan throughout the meet and came on strong towards the end. Carey Simon '90 won the 400 meters by holding on to his lead throughout and finishing in 50 seconds.

The star of the men's meet was freshman Jonathan Lindley. Lindley won the 100 meter dash with a time of 10.9 seconds. Tenmate Larry Smith

'92 was right behind him. In the 200 meters, Smith and Lindley met again and Smith came out a neck ahead of Lindley. A time of 22.5 was recorded for both runners. Later, Lindley ran in the 1600 meter relay to help Williams win that event also. Other team members in the relay were Carey Simon '90, Dave Week '92, and Brad Behr '92, who helped earn a winning time of 3:26.

Coach Peter Farwell said he was amazed at the caliber of running he saw, considering the weather conditions of the meet.

Perhaps Hackett summed up the feelings of the track team concerning the frigid conditions: "The weather dampened the victory a bit. It was a hard day for the athletes. Just to get it over with was a feat unto itself."

The track teams will be heading to Hamilton this Saturday where the NESAC finals will be held beginning at 10:00 a.m.

Crew wins Little 3

by James Lee

After cancelling Little Three races on Saturday because of rough weather conditions, Williams crew teams traveled to Amherst on Sunday and brought home the crown from the rescheduled Championship. Both men's varsity eight and JV eight crushed archrival Wesleyan and completely distanced themselves from third-place Amherst. Women's varsity eight and first novice eight also won, silencing a weak Amherst by a margin of more than 20 seconds in races which Wesleyan forfeited.

The highlight of the day was the men's JV eight race in which the Ephs completely dominated the Cardinals from the beginning until they sailed home a full six seconds ahead. "It was the best first 1000 meters I've ever seen them rowing," head coach Peter Wells said.

The men's varsity eight race was a brutal duel between Williams and Wesleyan; the Ephs finished 1.6 seconds ahead of the Cardinals. It started on a positive note for the Ephoarsmen as they established their lead after the first 90 seconds with a rating settled at 36 strokes per minute. They extended the lead from 3-4 seats (about a boat length) at the 1000-meter midway point as the Cardinals failed to effectively maintain their settled rating of 35.

Changed course of events

After the half-way point, the race, however, took on a new course of events as the Wesleyan coxswain decided to veer off the track and directed her boat to the right, near the shore of the river. This move, in addition to her unfamiliarity with the course, made it difficult for Kate Iverson '90, the Eph coxswain, to effectively judge the distances between the boats and between the boats to the finish line.

The race became a struggle down to the wire during the last minute or so as the distance between the boats widened up to almost 100 yards apart and Wesleyan gained almost 3-4 seats after Iverson called the Eph final sprint prematurely. Despite firing after the premature call, the Eph oarsmen, however, stuck tenaciously to their lead and finished victoriously.

Women's lax crushes Smith, bursts forth to 5-1 record

by Juan Alonzo

"Be patient, but when you see a fast break, take it. You have to stay tough...you can't let up," said Coach Chris Mason to her lacrosse players midway through their game against Smith last Saturday. The Ephwomen followed Mason's advice and did not relent during the game; due to their intensity, the women captured a 16-4 victory.

In the first half, Williams scored ten points to Smith's three. According to Mason, crisp passing and unyielding defense characterized play during the first half. On the offensive end, most of the Ephwomen's points came after good connecting passes from the midfielders. Maureen Flaherty '90 scored all six of her points during this half.

On the defensive end, the first half saw hard checking by junior defender Beth McNulty and timely interceptions by freshmen midfielder Elizabeth Gioia. The aggressive playing forced turnovers at midfield before Smith could advance the ball to the goal end. When the ball did advance to the Williams' goal, goalkeeper Tracy Davis '91 came through with exceptional saves.

By the end of the first half, Williams commanded a 10-3 lead.

Scoring widespread

Ashley Edgar '92 scored the first point of the second half on a pass from Flaherty. Goals by Amy Kershaw '90 and Mary Liff '89 followed Edgar's. Smith's only second-half goal came midway through the period. The last three Williams points of the game were scored by Danielle Boyd '91, Bevin Cooper '91, and Gioia. In all, six different Williams players contributed goals in the second half.

In the game, Flaherty ended with six goals, Cooper with three, and Edgar with two. Gioia, Liff, Boyd, Kershaw, and Sophomore Laurie Burnett each scored one.

Senior captain Wynn Hohlt felt that the team played consistently well throughout the game.

"It was good because we kept the intensity up," reflected Hohlt. "It was a lot cleaner than it's looked in the past few games, which made a big difference."

Flaherty said she felt that it was a game in which the women came together as a team.

In last Tuesday's away game against Mt. Holyoke, the women started off slowly, but went on to win the match 13-7. "The Holyoke game started off sloppy. [But] we pulled things together when it mattered," Mason commented.

Midway through the season, Williams is now 5-1. If the team continues to do well, it will achieve a spot in the ECAC tournament. Next week Williams faces Trinity, a team that is always a serious challenge.

"I feel very good. We're playing very well. Because decisions for the ECAC tournament are going to be made on May 1, the next two games are very important," said Mason.

Men's lax streaks to 6-0 mark behind Santry's 100th point

by John Romans

The Williams lacemen continued their hot streak this past week by defeating Union College (13-11) and Trinity (15-4), advancing the Ephmen's record to 6-0. The last time the men's lacrosse team won their first six games was in 1958, when the Ephs went 8-0. The coach then was Jim Ostendorf, who is now working on his 31st season as head coach of the Amherst football team.

The game last Wednesday against Union was the toughest yet for the Ephmen. Union had previously beaten Middlebury and was having a strong season. The game was also at night and on turf, giving Union a home field advantage.

The opening minutes of the game had even pressure from both teams and a lot of ball movement. Williams was the first to score with a fast break goal from senior co-captain Doug Gilbert to Bob Santry '90. While the game remained close, the Ephs were able to inch up their lead with a 4-2 score. However, Union's home crowd was not ready to accept defeat and rallied them back to take a 6-5 lead over Williams. This was to be the only time the Eph trailed as they finished up the first half with an 8-6 lead.

The third quarter was characterized by solid Union defense. They were able, eventually, to stop the Eph attack and tie the game up 9-9. Now, ever, Williams demonstrated its superior endurance as it outscored Union 4-2 in the fourth quarter. Goalie Rob Lambert '90 had his best game of the season with 22 saves for the day. Other defensive stars were junior Jeff Stripp, who contained Union's top attackman, Matt Zolin '91, and Dan Newhall '91. Freshman Bodhi Amos and Steve Linsen '90 were key players in the transition game, vital for a Williams victory.

Saturday's game against Trinity was another blow out for the lacemen. The Ephs scored three times within the first three-and-a-half minutes and never looked back. By the end of the first quarter, Williams was up 5-0 with Inn Smith '91 gaining four assists and a goal and senior co-captain

Tony Fuller winning the majority of the face-offs. Santry was also able to score his 100th goal as an Ephman.

Beginning the second half with an 8-1 lead, the Ephs continued to thrash the Trinity Bantams. In the third quarter Santry, while being swarmed by three Bantam defensemen, was able to find Gilbert breaking to the net with an over-the-shoulder assist for a quick goal. While the Eph offense had the game well under control, the Williams defense held Trinity to only 19 shots for the day. Once again Lambert had a great game, stopping eight out of ten shots.

The Ephs are now concentrating on this Thursday's game against Springfield, who are ranked first in New England Division III and 15th in the nation.

by Kerr Houston

Perhaps the most forbidding and consistently frustrating opponent for the 1989 Williams baseball team thus far has been the weather. With two games cancelled and two postponed due to wet grounds and gray skies, the squad has only been able to complete four games after a disappointing Florida trip that featured more cases of sunburn than victories.

Despite the inclement weather, the team has rebounded nicely from the grapefruit circuit meltdown, posting three consecutive victories before a 6-1 loss to Wesleyan on Saturday left the team's record at 5-8.

Sunshine in Florida

The 1989 campaign began pleasantly for the young Ephs, who drove down to Florida in hopes of finding some combinations that might offset the loss of five starters from last year's 15-14 squad. Thus, Coach James Briggs experimented extensively with his lineup, juggling both the pitching staff and the infield as he searched for the makings of a successful unit.

However, consistently poor team batting performances and a slate of very respectable opponents offset several brilliant individual efforts. Mike Barbera '89 earned both wins in the Sunshine State, a 12-3 triumph over Bridge-water State and a 9-2 drubbing of Hillsdale College, while at the same time posting an enviable 2.65 ERA.

Senior tri-captain Chris Conway and sophomore Chris Pentz also demonstrated lively arms, although neither could muscle their way into the win column. Offensively, first baseman John Whalen '91 picked up where he left off last year, as he led the squad with a .375 batting average and seven RBIs. Shortstop Scott Shean '91 also swung a hot bat, as he rounded out the tour with a .333 average, and Chris Donato '89 shed his hockey uniform to don catcher's gear and hit .364.

Sophomore control artist Chris Pentz gazes intently toward the plate as he prepares to paint the corners in a 6-1 loss to Wesleyan. The baseball team, which now stands at 5-8, travels to Amherst for a doubleheader this afternoon.

However, despite these positive signs, Coach Briggs and his troops returned to the Purple Valley rather dejected after defeats at the hands of 1988 Division III national champion Florida

A reversal of fortunes
The team hoped to reverse the trend as they opened a rather challenging

Southern, and, more significantly, to conference foes Colby and Trinity and rival Amherst, who had also driven south in hopes of sunshine and competition.

continued on page 7

Eph nine return from land of sun, oranges

And Another Thing...

Housing Committee President Dane Dudley '89 makes a point at the last College Council meeting. Despite Dudley's forceful interjection, the meeting proceeded without incident.

Condoms and much, much more

Safe sex kits will be mailed shortly

by Mary Moule
A safe sex kit, designed to increase student awareness and responsibility concerning sexually transmitted diseases, may soon be arriving in S.U. boxes, according to Kirsten Hudson '91, coordinator of the project.

The kits will contain condoms, lubricant, gloves, a dental dam and three pages of instructions. They will probably be sent to students during the last week of classes, depending on funding and timing, Hudson said.

The idea originated with Hudson, and she is doing most of the work to put it out. She said that she developed the plan because she was concerned with the ignorance of students on campus.

"I became graphically aware that there are a lot of people practicing sex here without using anything."

Several campus groups have contributed financially to the project, including the Black Student Union,

Vista, the Feminist Alliance and the Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Union. Hudson also tried to enlist support from the College Council and various administrative offices, but has met with mixed results.

According to Hudson, the Council originally said they would support the ally unaware or unconcerned about sexually transmitted diseases on campus and that incidences of diseases usually go undiagnosed and untreated. "Safe sex is something that needs to be practiced and practiced properly."

She added that many students either don't feel that they need to use

ing oral sex, instructions on the use of lubricants and prophylactics, and information about common STDs.

Hudson said that the information would be more detailed than that found in the Williams Guide to Health and Sex, and would also be more accessible. "This is quick and to the point," she said.

More than just condoms

"People think that safe sex is limited to using a condom. They think that anal or vaginal sex is the only problem." This, Hudson said, is the purpose of enclosing dental dams and instructions for using them, she added. Currently, dental dams are not available in Williamstown, but Hudson said they are useful in slowing the spread of STDs other than AIDS.

Hudson said that she expects student reaction to be mostly positive.

continued on page 4

Wright appeal for tenure reversal denied

by Justin Smith

The Committee on Academic Policy reaffirmed its decision to deny tenure to Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright. Wright, who appealed to the CAP for a reversal of their January decision, learned of the Committee's final verdict Saturday morning by telephone.

Though Wright spoke freely of the decision, repeated attempts to get CAP members to comment on the ruling were unsuccessful.

Wright said, "My reaction is basically what you just heard: shock, silence, dismay." She added that she was prepared for the decision but not prepared for the way she was informed. "I was taken by surprise. I thought they would do it in a more humane or less humane way, by informing me either personally or by letter," she said.

She also said that she is considering a final appeal to the Faculty Steering Committee, in which case a review panel of five faculty members, both tenured and non-tenured, would be convened. "I'm trying to think what to do now," she said. Although she acknowledged that the decision can only be challenged on technical, procedural grounds, she said that such an appeal may be warranted in this case. "I think there was at least one violation in the procedure."

Wright said that she is concerned that the administration's refusal to discuss the matter with students in order to, as they say, protect her privacy is inadvertently calling her competence into question. "Creating a mystery serves the institution more than the individual whose privacy is at issue. If [privacy] is all that's at issue, then they shouldn't mind at all if I say I'm not interested in privacy," Wright said.

In addition, she said she is weighing the idea of making some of the various documents associated with her tenure case public so that students and faculty might be able to learn more about the case. "It would be informative to the students," Wright said.

"I don't want to be remembered as the professor who made a stink about tenure," Wright said. "I would very much prefer a much wider discussion."

Palestinian leader speaks on intifada

Edward W. Said, author of The Question of Palestine, Orientalism and Covering Islam, is Professor of English at Columbia University and a member of the Palestine National Council. The Council is the parliament-in-exile of the recently-declared nation of Palestine. Said spoke to the Record last week about the intifada, the Palestinian uprising, and about the hopes for a settlement concerning the occupied territories of West Bank and Gaza.

Record interview conducted by Christopher Lawrence, a senior at the John Dewey Academy, Great Barrington, Massachusetts.

RECORD: The intifada has brought the Palestinian question into the forefront of today's headlines. The stone-throwers and merchants have aroused wide-spread support. These tactics have been more effective than either diplomacy and terrorism. What is your sense of how this situation has evolved?

SAID: Well, I don't think diplomacy ever worked. I think all the things that contributed in some way to the Palestinian struggle, historically for forty years, have contributed to the intifada. I think most people who are observing it or participating in it or feel themselves part of the Palestinian national movement, feel that there is a continuous series of challenges that we face. The intifada is the latest expression of Palestinian resistance. But it's not discontinuous.

I'll give you an example. In the year prior to the so-called beginning of the intifada, December 1987, the Israeli authorities reported almost 3000 acts of protest, so it's been going on all along. One of the particular features of this, of course, is that it is a mass protest; it's the whole population. And that is directly related to the extent and the coverage of the Israeli occupation. In other words, the Israeli occupation was an attempt to deal with the entire Palestinian nation, not just a few individuals. So that everyone felt either himself or herself was affected by the occupation. As a result of that, because of the extent of the interference for example, in daily life of the Israelis. So everybody was affected.

Edward W. Said photo courtesy of Columbia University

There was also sense that Palestinians at that particular juncture everywhere felt themselves to be abandoned. The [support from the] Arab

continued on page 6

Johnetta B. Cole

Lawrence J. Graver Professor of English

photos courtesy of the news office

Cole named as commencement speaker

by Sara Dubow

Johnetta B. Cole, the president of Spelman College and a noted anthropologist, educator and author, and Lawrence Graver, the John Hawley Roberts Professor of English at Williams, will be the two main speakers during Williams' Commencement weekend.

Cole will speak at the college's 200th Commencement on Sunday June 4, and Graver will speak at the Baccalaureate Service on Saturday, June 3.

Before becoming the first black female president of Spelman, the nation's first college for black women, in 1987, Cole served as a professor of anthropology at Hunter College and a member of the graduate faculty of the City University of New York. There, she also directed the Latin American and Caribbean Studies Program. She also spent 13 years at the University of Massachusetts, serving as associate provost for undergraduate education and as a professor of anthropology and of Afro-American studies. Cole has spent two winter study terms at Williams, teaching courses entitled "The Cuban Alternative" and "U.S. Black Women."

Cole received her B.A. at Oberlin College in 1957 and a Ph.D. at Northwestern University in 1967. Her specialties are cultural anthropology, Afro-American studies and women's studies. Her recent books include "All American Women: Lines that Divide, Ties that Bind" (1986), and "Anthropology for the Nineties," published last year.

In addition, she is president of the International Women's Anthropology Conference and a member of the Council on Foreign Relations. She is the first

continued on page 4

20 new profs coming to Williams

by Soojin Kim

Williams has hired 20 new faculty members for 1989-90. According to Dean of the Faculty John Reichert, the college faced stiffer competition from other colleges in the hiring process.

"All colleges are finding it increasingly difficult to hire good people because the demand for teachers across the country is growing, but the supply of new Ph.D.'s is not and might even be dwindling," Reichert said.

"Some of the new faculty we hired [for 1989-90] have had several years' teaching experience elsewhere, and some have had several years' post-doctoral research experience. A good half are coming straight out of graduate school," he said.

"In the next 20 years, as many professors who are currently teaching retire, colleges will have to worry about where their new faculties will come from," Reichert added.

According to Reichert, Williams faced the stiffest competition for professors of economics and of biology.

A list of new professors and the departments for which they were hired include John T. Bonner, James T.

Carlton and Daniel V. Lynch in biology; Stuart A. Clarke, George Crane, James E. Mahon, Mark Reinhardt and Alex W. Willingham in political science; Helga Druzes in German; Cassandra T. Eagle in chemistry; David B. Edwards in anthropology; Thomas Garrity and Robert Mizner in mathematics; Kaye G. Husbands and Diane J. Macunovich in economics; William R. Kangas in physical education; Regina Kunzel, Christopher M. Waters and Joel Wolfe in history; Jacob Meskin in religion; Shawn J. Rosenheim in English; Rachel Rue in philosophy; and Betty Zimmerberg in psychology.

Mixed reaction greets panel claiming to explore the myth of tenure.

PAGE 4

Drama review: Spring's Awakening examines sex.

PAGE 5

Macauley named M.V.P. at NESCAC track meet, with four first place finishes.

PAGE 11

Colloquium sheds some light on the tenure process

by Deirdre Pappalardo

"You have a chance to explore the myth," the Phi Beta Kappa flyer encouraged. "How do professors receive a life-long invitation to Billville?"

Last Wednesday at Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall, the Phi Beta Kappa society sponsored a faculty-student panel that discussed various aspects of the tenure process at Williams. The discussion did not result in any major changes in how tenure decisions are reached, although the College Council's recommendations concerning Student Course Survey forms were adopted.

Professor of Mathematics Victor Hill, Professor of History Pat Tracy, Professor of Political Science Michael MacDonald, Professor of English and Dean of the Faculty John Reichert, and seniors Trace Blankenship, Karen Costenbader, and Evan Davis explained and commented on the controversial tenure process.

The panel began with Dean Reichert's explanation of the tenure decision at Williams. "[The tenure decision is] among the most important decisions at the college," Reichert said. He explained that an assistant professor receives two contracts before a tenure decision is made. An initial three-year contract is followed by a four-year contract, if the assistant professor receives re-appointment. In the sixth year, the professor is then evaluated for tenure.

Decisions are made by the Committee on Appointments and Promotions, which is composed of the President of the College, the Dean of Faculty, the Provost, and three full-time professors. One professor from each of the three divisions is elected annually by the faculty to serve on the CAP.

Reichert listed three specific categories by which the CAP judges each assistant professor, including interest in and quality of teaching of undergraduates, contribution to scholarship, and participation in the college community. "Exceptional strength in both teaching and scholarship is vital," Reichert said.

Evaluation is gathered from Student Course Surveys, department interviews with present students and alumni, faculty progress reports, and in some departments, class-visits from tenured faculty. Evaluations from experts in the assistant professor's specific field are also used.

Those denied tenure may ask for reconsideration. If the decision is not reversed, the professor can petition the chair of the Faculty Steering Committee. A review of the decision by faculty members, both tenured and non-tenured, then occurs. Reichert noted that in the last ten years thirteen appeals were made but only two reversals were granted.

Blankenship presented the recommendations of this year's Faculty Council. Blankenship proposed that a memorandum be sent to students in April and September reminding them of the process and the need to participate.

The council also requested changes in the SCS format which included additional questions and the reinstatement of the so-called blue sheets, which would be printed on white paper for recycling purposes. These evaluation forms are an opportunity for students to correspond directly with the professor.

All proposed changes to the SCS were accepted by the Vice-Provost, and will be added for this spring's evaluations. The Council also urged students to send letters to the administration.

If they had particular feelings about a professor.

"In our findings and recommendations to the College, information was our chief concern. We wanted folks to be aware of their role in the process and how to maximize their effectiveness in that role, as well as seeing how the process works. We as students have got to be on top of things enough to get involved before the CAP's decisions get made," Blankenship said after the meeting.

Both Reichert's explanation of the tenure process and Blankenship's recommendations were accompanied by a provocative series of questions and comments among the members of the panel and audience.

Questions as to the comparative influence of the evaluation of scholarship and of teaching, as well as student input, brought many comments and concerns from the students present.

"Students are the ones who know who the good professors are," Davis said. Costenbader added that the role of scholarship may have too much influence in evaluating science professors.

Reichert responded by saying that teaching is a foremost concern, and that issues such as grant money are not in themselves a factor.

"The quality of the work that is turned out and the professor's ability to keep up to date with the subject are, however, crucial factors," Reichert said.

"The quality of teaching and scholarship must be valued together," Tracy said.

Liz McKown '89 addressed the issue of a professor's being at the wrong place at the wrong time, when external factors, unrelated to the professor's performance, influence a decision that is being made.

Reichert said that tenure decisions are influenced by external factors, such as the number and ages of tenured professors already in the department, and the overall demands and interests of students and the college.

While indicating that such factors do play a strong role in the decision, Reichert added that the process is intended to assess the individual person who is up for tenure.

"We're not in fear of having to put a freeze on the decisions granted. We don't want to have over-crowded and stagnant departments," Reichert said.

MacDonald brought up the controversial problems of subjectivity and confidentiality. While MacDonald accepted the notion that candidates should have the right to know everything, he added that assistant professors are often unable to understand or review the procedure. "They don't really know what's going on," MacDonald said.

Reactions after the panel were mixed.

"I'm disappointed that it wasn't more controversial," Davis said. Marcelo daSilva '89 voiced his discontent, saying that tensions within the faculty were not addressed.

"It was informative, and explored an issue that we all should know more about," Marc Klaus '91 said.

Lisa West '89 and McKown, both Phi Beta Kappa members who helped organize the event, explained that the topic was chosen because of its effect on everyone's lives. West and McKown said that they hoped that such a discussion will increase general knowledge and participation.

"If the college wants to shed a benevolent image, it's got to be more communicative about how the process works and how we can be involved," Blankenship concluded.

Cole, Graver to speak at commencement

continued from page 1

Black woman to serve on the board of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, and the Downtown Atlanta Rotary.

As far as publishing is concerned, Cole is also an advisor and contributing editor to The Black Scholar and a member of the editorial board of Anthropology and Humanism Quarterly.

Cole's honors and awards include the 1986 Elizabeth Boyer Award from the Women's Education Action League and the Woman of the Decade Award from the Women's Leadership Institute of Avila College.

Williams will award her an honorary Doctor of Letters degree at Com-mentence.

Graver's Baccalaureate address is entitled "Steady Work." A member of the Williams faculty since 1964, Graver specializes in 19th and 20th century English and American literature. He has published books on Conrad and Samuel Beckett, as well as many essays and reviews of contemporary literature for publications including "The New York Times Book Review," "The New Republic," and "Saturday Review."

Graver is a 1954 graduate of the City College of New York and he received his Ph.D. from the University of California at Berkeley in 1961. He taught at the University of California at Los Angeles for three years before coming to Williams.

While at Williams, Graver has twice served as chair of the English department and has also twice been elected to terms on the Committee on Appointments and Promotions. He has also served as chair of the Committee on Educational Policy and co-chair of the Winter Study Program Review. He has received fellowships from the American Council of Learned Societies and the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Compiled from a May 3, 1989 Williams College Press Release from the Office of Public Information.

Dental dams on their way to boxes

continued from page 1

"I'm sure there will be some negative responses, but mostly I expect a lot of no reaction. I don't think that would matter. The most important thing is for them to see it and think about it," she added.

When Hudson presented her idea to the College Council, one of their concerns was that some students might be offended. Hudson suggested that a provision might be made for such people to request that kits not be sent to their boxes.

"I don't think that's the best way to do it, however, because that's a lot of hassle for them to go through," She said that she hoped that people who do not want the kit can simply dump it in a designated area without having to deal with it. "They'll know what it is, because information will be sent out beforehand," she said. "They don't have to open it; they don't have to look at it."

Hudson said that she hoped that Peer Health or another organization might take it over next year and that more than just condoms should be made available to students.

"It doesn't necessarily have to be sent to S.U. boxes every year," she said, "but it should happen in freshman entries. If you're going to give out free condoms, you should make the things to go with it more available as well. It should be in more places too, not just at the Infirmary and Peer Health."

SPIRIT SHOP

280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown

458-3704

"Free Delivery"

Busch $11.99/cs. + dep.
Miller $13.49/cs. + dep.
Becks $9.99/12 pk. + dep.
Rolling Rock $13.49/cs. + dep.
Labatts $15.99/cs. + dep.
Moosehead $16.99/cs. + dep.
Molson $16.99/cs. + dep.

Monday - Saturday 9am to 11 pm

Wedekind's Spring's Awakening explores sexual repression

by Caitlin Osborne

The subject? Sex. The latest production by Williams College Theatre, Spring's Awakening, consisted not so much of a linear plot, but of a series of examinations of homosexuality, teenage pregnancy, abortion, masturbation and adolescence—all placed in the context of the sexual repression of late nineteenth century Germany.

The actors dealt with these issues well. Michael Barrata '89 played the principal role of Melchior Gabor, the fourteen year-old protagonist, with a mixture of naivete and maturity. His relationships with the other characters were quite realistic. But his real strength lay in his reflective soliloquies, in which he was allowed the space to act without having to deal with his contemporaries.

Most of the actors, Barrata included, handled the language of the play quite well. Only in the longer

The play examines teenage pregnancy, abortion, masturbation and adolescence.

monologues did the actors sometimes lose their train of thought and the concentration of the audience. Mary Kipp '89, as Wendla Bergmann, Melchior's naive lover, had a more difficult time with her lines, often delivering them in a speechy, vacant manner. However, Kipp's part did have some shining moments: her dialogue with her two girlfriends, Martha and Thea (played by Nicole Ferrel '92 and Southy Walton '89) when they discuss the kinds of children they want to have. The irony of this conversation becomes apparent later in memorable scene when Wendla denies her pregnancy saying, "It's not possible, Mama, I'm not married." Wendla's mother was played by Katie Firth '92, one of the strongest members of the cast. Her explanation to Wendla of the way babies are made was particularly well done: she exhibited a mixture of true love for her child as well as the prudishness fitting for the time. The other mother in the cast, Mrs. Gabor (played by Shirley Kagan '89)

A group of schoolboys mourn the death of their classmate in the funeral scene of Spring's Awakening. Pictured, from left to right, are Kevin Conn '90, Erik Fredericksen '92, Altan Isaac '91, Fausto Espinosa '89, and Stuart Gutman '90.

while strong, was not as consistently believable as Firth's performance. Her relationship to her son seemed genuine, but the believability filtered in her character because the character, as written, was difficult to interact with.

The leads in the play were rounded out with the character of Moritz Stiefel, Melchior's suicidal friend (played by Douglas Hunt '89). Hunt handled the relationship to her husband (played by Sidney Russell Werkman '89). Part of the fault may have lain with Werkman's part well, although he tended to whine too much in his reflections. He related well to the other characters, especially his friend Thea—a performance masterfully by Molly Luckenkemper '89. Other high points were provided by Wayne Fritche's '89 cartoon-like Speedy, and by an impressive performance by Birgit Huppuch '91, who, in her few lines as Reverend Paunch, gave a true example of fine acting.

The issues themselves were brought to life skillfully by directors Laura Richman '89 and Caroline Boyden '89. The scene which poignantly explored homosexuality provided the best and most credible love scene in the entire show, doing credit both to the actors, Stuart Gutman '90 and Fausto Espinosa '89, as well as the directors' subtlety and sensitivity. These rather dark issues were lightened and highlighted by the caricatured authority figures. A particularly hilarious staff meeting of the professors at Melchior's school, where they discuss not the death of one student and the imminent dismissal of another. The atmosphere of the room serves as a powerful condemnation of the values and attitudes of the men. The introduction of Melchior into the scene provides a stunning contrast—emphasized by the costumeing—and makes the audience aware of the disparities between human and social realities.

The play makes its point.

In the end, these realities are the issue at stake. Despite a disappointing end to the play, it makes its point. The play is about sex, but more importantly, it is about the ways society and the individuals trapped in that society deal with sex.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinemas I, II, III

Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179

Pet Sematary 7:00 9:15
The Dream Team 7:00 9:15
Major League 7:00 9:15

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612

New York Stories May 2-May 4 7:00 9:00
The Dreamer May 2-May 4 7:00 9:00
Jackie May 5-May 11 9:00

North Adams Cinema
Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873

K-9 7:00 9:15
Say Anything 7:00 9:15
Pet Sematary 7:00 9:15
Speed Zone 7:00 9:15
Horror Show 7:00 9:15

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639

K-9, The Dream Team, She's Out of Control, Say Anything, Criminal Law, Major League: Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30

New York Stories, Rain Man: 6:45 & 9:15

Pet Sematary, Speed Zone, Horror Show, Lower Bay: Sun-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:15 & 9:30.

Berkshire Mall Cinema
Rte 8, Lenox, 499-2558

Major League 12:55 6:55 9:25
Pet Sematary 12:50 6:50 9:20
She's Out of Control 12:40 6:40 9:10
K-9 1:00 7:00 9:30
Lower Bay 1:10 7:10 9:40
The Horror Show 1:20 7:20 9:50
Criminal 12:45 6:45 9:15
Rain Man 12:30 6:30 9:00
Speed Zone 6:45 9:15
The Dream Team 1:15 7:15
Disorganized Crime 1:15 7:15
See You In The Morning 9:45

Subject to change after Thursday

Arts in View

May 2 At 8:00 p.m., cellists from Williamstown, Bennington, Vermont and Albany, New York will present a Cello-Brat at the Bernhard Music Center. Douglas Moore and others will perform music by Mozart, Debussy, Sousa and Joplin.

At 8:00 p.m., Cap and Bells will present "Whatever," an original play by Rob Handel '90, in Currier Ballroom.

May 3 At 8:00 p.m., Ruth Hill, oral historian and coordinator of the Black Women Oral History Project, will lecture on "Women Whom We Looked Up To: Stories From the Black Women Oral History Project" in Lawrence Hall, room 231.

At 8:00 p.m., Cap and Bells will repeat "Whatever" in Currier Ballroom.

May 4 At 4:00 p.m., Bill O'Brien '89 and Matt Tarses '90, winners of the Benjamin Wainwright Award for best student fiction, will give a fiction reading in Currier Ballroom.

At 8:00 p.m., The Williams Collegium Musicum, a music ensemble directed by Professor Jennifer Bloxam, will give their Spring Concert in Brooks Rogers. The program will feature vocal and instrumental music by Renaissance and Baroque composers of the Low Countries.

At 8:00 p.m., Williams College Theatre will present a repeat performance of "Spring's Awakening" at the Adams Memorial Theatre, MainStage.

Beyond the Bubble

Japanese prime minister resigns

Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita announced that he would resign in order "to take responsibility for the spread of political distrust" which has resulted from the exposure of bribery and influence-peddling in his government. Takeshita said that he will resign following the Parliament's approval of the national budget which has been deadlocked since early March but expected to move this week. Although no politicians have yet been charged, more than a dozen businessmen and bureaucrats have been arrested and three cabinet officers have resigned. The search for a successor will be difficult since many of the heirs apparent are implicated in the scandal. Japanese news sources have reported that Takeshita has approached the 75-year-old former Foreign Minister Masuyoshi Ito, who is outside the circles of power and scandal, as a possible successor. However, Ito suffers from diabetes and has said that as of now he does not want the job.

Supreme Court hears arguments in abortion case

The Supreme Court heard arguments on an abortion case which could result in the overturning of the 1973 landmark decision, Roe v. Wade, and restrict or withdraw altogether the constitutional right to an abortion. A reversal of the Roe decision is sought by the Bush administration and the state of Missouri in this case. The case, Webster v. Reproductive Health Services, involves a 1986 Missouri law which restricts the use of public money and sites for abortions and abortion counseling. Four of the nine justices have been consistent supporters of Roe, but it is unclear as to how Sandra O'Connor and Anthony Kennedy, Reagan appointees, will decide. A summer decision is likely.

Lucille Ball dies at 77

Lucille Ball, the red-headed comedienne best known for her "Lucy Ricardo" role in the 1950s television comedy, "I Love Lucy," died of a ruptured abdominal artery. Ball began her career in the 1920s as a showgirl before moving on to film and finally to television comedy. She had been recovering from heart surgery at the Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles. She was 77.

Five-year contraceptive receives FDA backing

An advisory committee of the Food and Drug Administration voted unanimously to recommend the approval of Norplant, a contraceptive which protects women from pregnancy for five years. Norplant, which comes in six silicone rubber capsules, is implanted under the skin and slowly releases a constant, low dose of hormones which inhibit ovulation. The contraceptive is, according to the committee, both highly effective and as safe, if not safer, than regular birth control pills. It has been tested on more than 55,000 women in 44 countries and its major side effect is its tendency to cause irregular menstrual bleeding. Final FDA approval could come in the next few weeks. If approved, Norplant could become available within six months.

compiled by Sallie Han from The Berkshire Eagle, The Boston Globe and The New York Times.

Go abroad, young ones, group says in report

College Press Service

As Williams sophomores begin to get their junior-year study abroad plans in order, a group of college officials wants to double the number of U.S. students who study overseas.

Cost has been a prohibitive factor in the past, according to officials. "There's a common belief that study-abroad programs will cost more," Robert Woodbury of the Council on International Educational Exchange said. "In fact, many programs do not involve extra costs," he said.

CIEE recently announced a new effort to get more students overseas. The United States' competitive future depends on getting students to study abroad, CIEE said in the statement describing its objectives. Its efforts were sparked by a December council estimate that fewer than five percent of U.S. students, about 50,000 total, study abroad each year. In contrast, some 350,000 students from foreign countries attend American colleges and universities.

The report warned that failure to expand study-abroad opportunities would hurt our prestige in the world community. It said, "We will irreversibly diminish the world status of the United States."

"If you look at the attitude of colleges here, international study has never been a very high part-of-the curriculum," Woodbury said. "It's just a 'good thing to do' rather than a part of the mainstream."

Buildings and Grounds has declared that all student housing is safe from radon contamination. The buildings were tested for exposure this winter. File Photo.

Radon level safe in student housing

by Greg Hart

All student housing and almost all faculty housing at Williams College has been declared safe from radon exposure. Buildings and Grounds tested all student residence areas for the presence of radon over winter vacation, and checked all faculty housing just after the first of January.

Test vials, containing air samples from all of the student and faculty housing buildings, were sent to the Radon Project in Pittsburgh for analysis. An air sample with a content of under four picocuries per liter indicates that the residence is in the safe zone and remedial efforts are not deemed necessary. Approximately 90% of the buildings tested were returned to Williams with results of less than four picocuries per liter, signifying that they were safe from radon contamination. All student residences had readings in the safe zone.

The remaining 10% of the buildings tested were returned with inconclusive results, according to the lab report. The college believes this is because of a mail delay in sending the air samples to the testing company.

"Once too much time elapses between sampling the air in a building and testing [the air sample] for radon at the lab, the reading becomes less accurate," Director of Housing Thomas McEvoy said.

All of the air samples with inconclusive results were taken from faculty residences, and the college offered to repeat those sites. "Since 90% of the other [test vials] were returned with negative results, we feel comfortable that the other 10% were also negative. However, we did offer faculty residents with 'inconclusive' results [the chance] to have their houses retested and are now doing retesting in three faculty houses. It takes about two weeks to get the final results. We should be getting the samples back from the lab Wednesday," McEvoy said.

GO

ON THE TOWN

DEPOSIT HERE

MAKE HISTORY

IDENTIFY YOURSELF

SHOP BY PHONE

SHORT ON CASH

GET AWAY

A NEW BEGINNING

Get a BayBank Credit Card Today!

Graduate from college and embark on a new career

Take a vacation. Charge airline tickets, car rentals, meals, restaurants, even souvenirs, on your BayBank Credit Card

Use to any convenient Press 'N' VISA or CREDIT location to maintain credit while on vacation

Students—it's time to give yourself credit with a BayBank Visa® or MasterCard®.

If you are at least 18 years old, you may apply for a BayBank Visa or MasterCard and receive a line of credit up to $1,000.

Mail the coupon today or call the BayBank Credit Card Customer Service Center at 1-800-221-3393 to request a Student Credit Card Application.

☐ I'd like to take advantage of BayBank's special offer for students. Please send me a Student Credit Card Application.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____

COUNTRY _____

Send Coupon to: BayBank
P.O. Box 627, Waltham, MA 02254

BayBank

Nobody does it better.™

Equal Opportunity Lender

Member FDIC

Three top hits from IBM

This offer is simply irresistible!

If it's value that counts, and it usually does, you can't afford to miss this offer on these IBM Personal System/2[®] models. Now—at a special campus price—you have your choice of three hit computers with high quality graphics to help you organize your class notes and write and revise papers. Check it out . . . three great computers . . . three fantastic prices! And selected software that's loaded and ready to go. So, come and see us today!

IBM

Model 30 286

Your Special Price*

$2,399

Model 50 Z

Your Special Price*

$2,799

Model 70 386

Your Special Price*

$4,449

*This offer is limited to qualified students, faculty and staff who order an IBM PS/2 Model 8530-E21, 8550-031 or 8570-E61 on or before June 30, 1989. Prices quoted do not include sales tax, handling and/or processing charges. Check with your school regarding these charges. Orders are subject to availability. IBM may withdraw the promotion at any time without written notice.

IBM Personal System/2 and PS/2 are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation. IBM Micro Channel Architecture is a trademark of IBM Corporation. Microsoft is a registered trademark of the Microsoft Corporation. hDC Windows Express is a trademark of the hDC Computer Corporation.

News

Morgan plays soap bubble opera

by Dan Skwire

The man in the front of the room was wearing corduroys and a T-shirt. In his hand he held a red plastic bottle in the shape of a bear. Whispering tenderly to it, he gave it a squeeze and exhaled softly. A flurry of soap bubbles filled the air.

His face breaking into a grin, the man looked up at his audience of students and prospective.

"For the next half hour," he said, "put aside all your fears and worries about math, and welcome to the Soap Bubble Geometry Contest. This is the best kind of test, because it's one where you don't have to know anything—it's a guessing contest."

The man was Frank Morgan, chairman of the Williams Mathematics Department. Morgan has devoted a great deal of effort to making mathematics appear less frightening to people who are unfamiliar with it.

"Everybody likes math when they understand it," he said in an interview. "It's being impressed with a feeling of inadequacy that no one likes, but that's something that a mathematician just has to face. We are always trying to understand something that we don't understand."

Morgan himself has been working to understand mathematics for some time now. A 1974 graduate of MIT, he earned a Ph.D. from Princeton in 1977, and taught at MIT, Rice and Stanford before coming to Williams in 1987. He has published dozens of articles and written a book called Geometric Measure Theory: A Beginner's Guide.

Morgan said he was attracted to Williams in part because of its solitude, a welcome change from the hectic years he had spent in Boston. More importantly, however, he said he was very impressed by the quality of the math program at Williams.

"It's certainly one of the best of the small liberal arts schools. Very few places have a balanced approach to teaching and research, but Williams is committed to that balance. To give the best education, there has to be mathematics going on, not just talking."

Soap and stuff

Morgan's areas of research are geometry and minimal surfaces in general dimensions. A one-dimensional example would be finding the shortest distance between sets of points. He likes to experiment with soap films because they provide a convenient model of minimal surfaces. "Soap film likes to be small," he said.

The Soap Bubble Geometry Contest, which Morgan has run for several years now, consists of a series of questions for people to answer based on their intuition, not their knowledge. Morgan then reveals the correct answers and provides simple demonstrations of the results.

One question, for example, asked whether two soap films could ever cross through one another. The answer, as he shortly revealed, was no. The films may make a hole at their intersection, but they will never cross straight through.

"Do you believe that?" he asked the audience. "Well, you shouldn't believe it. That's the right reaction to any mathematical statement—unbelievable. So I think we should check it out."

Morgan then whipped up a batch of soap film with his own special recipe, one bucket of cold water and one bottle of Liquid Joy dishwashing detergent. Dipping some wire frames into the mixture, he showed that two films did indeed form a hole where they intersected.

The contest was won by Kinloch Nelson, a prospective Williams student who answered four of the seven questions correctly. Morgan said that five correct is the highest score anyone has ever gotten.

A number of students at Williams have conducted research on topics related to soap bubbles and minimal surfaces. Last summer, eight students worked under Morgan's supervision to generalize the minimum length problems and produce several theorems on the structure of solutions to variational problems.

It's not just fun and games

Morgan said that the work was especially significant because it was in a field that mathematicians were examining at the same time, though in higher dimensions.

He added that the program was remarkable because of its size. A total of 15 students participated in mathematical research last summer, all of whom attended Williams.

"Over the years, such programs have gone in and out of vogue," Morgan said. "Ours may be unique. I don't know of any other program that just uses its own students. Other schools can't believe that a small college can support a program of this size."

Williams students, however, are not Morgan's only proteges. Matt Skinner, a local eighth-grader, has assisted him in numerous presentations and will be traveling with him in the near future to give a talk at the Greenwich Country Day School. Skinner, Morgan said, is an expert at producing extra-large bubbles over a foot in diameter.

In addition, Morgan has received mail from even younger students working with bubbles. One 12-year-old wrote him asking for some advice on a project she was entering in a science fair. Morgan said he is careful to answer all such letters because he believes in encouraging mathematical curiosity at every level.

Meanwhile, the Soap Bubble Contest has ended and the lucky prospective has walked away with his prize—a brand new "Science at Williams" T-shirt. Here, perhaps, is a future mathematician, or at the very least, someone who will never look at a soap-bubble the same way again.

Want to shoot jocks?
Want to flash your friends?

The Williams Record is looking for photographers. If you know your elbow from your aperture, call Karl at x6661 or x2400.

Typing Service by published writer. Limited editing available. Typed or handwritten MS. Word processing disk storage. From $1.50/page. Tel. 458-2614

West Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081

-We offer-

- 1) Area's largest fine beer & ale selection
- 2) Hundreds of quality wines
- 3) Unique videos as well as latest releases
- 4) Ambassador, Blue Mt. Arts, Far Side Greeting cards
- 5) Dozens of soft furry creatures from Dakin, Applause, and North American Bears
- 6) Soft drinks, munchies, party supplies
- 7) Great advice on matters large and small
- 8) Courteous, professional service

Your Belly's Deli

100 Pleasant St. Bennington, Vt.
(802) 442-3853

salads • bagels • quiche • soups
beer and wine anytime
★ Your Belly's Delight ★

turkey, ham, roast beef, lettuce, tomatoes, Swiss cheese and Russian dressing plus a variety of other gourmet sandwiches

Check our daily specials
Open every day, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

The Delquirl Factory
updates open at 6 p.m.

Study in Italy this Summer

TRINITY COLLEGE
ROME
CAMPUS
Hartford, CT
06106

Roman Art & Civilization
Renaissance & Baroque Art of Rome
Comparative Literature:
Images of Rome & Roman Life

JUNE 3-JULY 14

Write also for details on Fall and Spring Programs

Mountain Bike Specialists

Complete Repair
on All Bikes

Water Street, Williamstown
Extended Hours Open 7 Days 638-8466

Sam enjoys walks in the park, playing ball
with the boys,
and casual sex.

And he's only three. He's probably fathering some of the 13.5 million unwanted dogs and cats that must be put to death each year.

You can't stop your pets from acting naturally. But if you love them, you'll have them spayed or neutered.

Talk to your veterinarian. Or contact the MSPCA for more information.

MSPCA on the move
for animals
350 So. Huntington Ave.
Boston, MA 02130 (617) 522-7400
(413) 736-2992

Crewmen cruise to victory

by James Lee

Cruising the waters of Lake Oneota in Pettibond on Saturday, the Eph crews achieved fine results in perfect weather conditions. The Eph oarswomen performed well against powerhouse U. Mass., coming in a close second in the varsity eight race and winning the novice eight race. The men's crew swept the day, winning four out of the five races held.

For the Eph women's varsity eight, a tough race against U. Mass., the top-ranked Northeast Division II crew team, was made tougher as one of its oarswomen, Cara McCandless '90, was absent from the race. The Ephs, however, started the race on a positive note as they led U. Mass. during the first 250 meters. U. Mass. began to surge ahead when the Eph rowing became unsteady and gained a lead of about six seats by the time it reached the 1000 meter half-way mark. The race ended with Williams coming in about a boat length behind U. Mass. and Tufts and Mercyhurst College finishing in a distant third and fourth.

JV and Novice
In the novice eight race, Williams dominated the waters the whole time, winning by a margin of 10 seconds ahead of second-place Tufts. "This is very encouraging -- the Tufts novice is the winner of last year's Dad Vail Regatta," Coach Chris Cruz said. The Eph oarswomen also performed well in the JV eight race, as they succeeded in staying with the powerful U. Mass. crew during the first 500 meters. In the novice four,

The Ephmen's races on Saturday were the kind that crew teams enjoy.

Williams came in less than a second behind second-place U. Mass. and first-place Lowell. "I am pleased with the efforts made today. U. Mass. is a large team and to be close to them in the varsity and beat them in the novice eight is very encouraging," Cruz said.

The oarsmen sweep
The Ephmen's races on Saturday were the kind that crew teams enjoy. On flat waters with no wind at all, they silenced the visitors by comfortable margins in the varsity and freshman four races and won after stellar rowing in the two novice eight races. The highlight of the day was the novice lightweight eight race in which the Eph boat, which had swamped under water in last week's Little Three, made an impressive comeback with a first place four seconds ahead of Tufts. The oarsmen also staged a strong showing in the novice heavyweight eight, where they reversed their loss to Wesleyan last weekend by sailing in ahead of a strong U. Mass. boat that had beaten the Cardinals.

For the Eph varsity eight and JV eight, which raced to first and third respectively in the same race, the challenge came not from U. Mass., which finished fifth, but from second-place Mercyhurst, a small college in Pennsylvania. Mercyhurst finished the race 10 seconds behind the varsity eight after giving the Eph boat a hard time during the first 250 meters. Following Mercyhurst closely during the same initial 250 meters, the Eph JV crew reached the finish line five seconds behind.

"I think we did very well under the circumstances that were there," Coach Peter Wells said. The crew teams face Trinity this Saturday on Lake Wampanoag, Connecticut.

Eph baseball hits dry spell, stands at 7-13

by Kerr Houston
away games compiled from Berkshire Eagle reports

After seeing a significant portion of their home schedule canceled or postponed due to rain, the Williams baseball team hit the road last week and immediately ran into a drought, as they dropped four straight games, three on the road, before sweeping a Saturday doubleheader from Bates to end the week at 7-13.

The Eph slide had begun with a 6-1 April 22 loss to Wesleyan and it only got worse the next day, when the Williams nine traveled south to Middletown for a doubleheader with the Cardinals. Senior co-captain Mike Barbera was on the mound in the opener for the Ephmen, and he turned in perhaps the best pitching performance the squad has seen this year, surrendering only one earned run. However, five Williams errors led to six unearned runs, and Wesleyan, behind hurler Paul Gallo, jumped to a 7-0 lead. The Ephmen kept the scoreboard operator awake, as they committed five more errors, and Wesleyan seized a 5-0 first-inning advantage. The Ephs touched Cardinal pitcher Jim Lukowski for a run in the second and four in the third, but Wesleyan countered with two runs in their half of the second as they walked to a 9-6 triumph and eliminated any Eph hopes of an outright Little 3 victory.

The Ephmen apparently kept their iron gloves on for the nightcap, as they committed five more errors, and Wesleyan seized a 5-0 first-inning advantage. The Ephs touched Cardinal pitcher Jim Lukowski for a run in the second and four in the third, but Wesleyan countered with two runs in their half of the second as they walked to a 9-6 triumph and eliminated any Eph hopes of an outright Little 3 victory.

No Little Three title
Two days later, the team saw any chance of a tie for the title erased, as a powerful Amherst unit dismantled the Ephs 10-0. Amherst starter Scott Pudlo fired a four-hitter and struck out eleven over eight innings to send Williams to its first shutout loss of the year. Once again, however, the Ephs seemed to have forgotten their gloves, as they booted four balls and handed the Lord Jeffs six unearned runs. Freshman standout Jeremy Austin was the unhappy victim of the poor fielding, which led to the team's fourth straight loss and dropped the Ephs to 5-11.

The men in caps returned home for their next contest, however, and their spirits were high as they hit the field under sunny skies to take on a solid Tufts squad. The Jumbos wasted no time in grabbing a lead, however, as they crossed the plate twice in the second, both on a single to center that was judged by sophomore Mike Hyde.

The teams traded offensive threats over the next several frames. The Ephs then regained the lead on the sixth on an error, a Scott Shear '91 infield single, and four consecutive walks. This was before sophomore Chris Perry ticked a roller off his foot that was apparently a foul ball, but that was ruled fair by the field umpire and was promptly turned into a controversial double play by the Tufts third baseman.

The Jumbos flexed their offensive muscles in the top of the seventh, scoring two runs off Mark DeKusy.

In the win column once more
The trip to Maine was not a complete waste of time, however, as the Ephs enjoyed their Saturday afternoon with a sweep of Bates. Although, the team found itself on the short end of a 6-1 deficit midway through the opener, a 3-run blast by John Whalen '91 and a five-RBI, two triple day by Austin, one of the brighter spots in a somewhat gloomy season, opened the floodgates for the Ephs, who eventually stroked their way to a 14-8 victory and took advantage of a poor Bates battery to swipe nine bases. Schwartz picked up the win to even his record at 1-1, as he hurled 2-2/3 innings of shutout ball in relief of Barbera, who had been tagged for eight runs in the first four frames.

The second game was rather a typical of the season thus far, as it marked the first northern contest in which Eph pitchers were able to hold their opponents to fewer than six runs. Freshman Scott Jackson was the man of the hour, as he threw six innings and picked up the victory, as the Ephmen eked out a 4-3 win to lift their record to 7-13. Sophomore Mike Hyde scored all four of the Eph runs, as he singled twice and reached on an error and a fielder's choice and stole five bases to put himself in scoring position, and freshman Laurin Laderoute ripped a pair of hits and drove in two runs to lead the Ephmen to victory.

The Ephmen will attempt to extend their new streak with a contest Thursday at Middlebury and a Saturday home doubleheader against the heralded Lord Jeffs.

The men's lacrosse team lost their first game in the season against top-ranked Springfield College in a 12-14 clincher last Wednesday. The Ephs bounced back Saturday, however, with a decisive 9-4 victory over Wesleyan, advancing their record to 7-1.

The Springfield Chiefs came out strong, scoring two quick goals within the first two minutes. Late in the quarter, the Chiefs scored again, making it a 3-0 game. The Ephmen were unable to penetrate Springfield's defense and remained scoreless in the first quarter.

The strong Eph defense was back in form and limited the Cardinals to only 15 shots. "Goalie Rob Lambert and defenseman Jeff Stripp worked a double team play that left the Wesleyan offense in confusion all day," defensive midfielder Hassan Murphy '90 commented.

The Cardinals attempted to reduce the Ephs' 2-2 lead in the fourth quarter by shutting down Williams' offense and scoring two goals late in the game. Nevertheless, the strong overall performance by the Ephmen was too great for Wesleyan as Williams went on to win 9-4.

decrease the Chiefs' lead by three. But with 19 seconds left, Springfield scored again to end the quarter with a 11-7 lead.

The Ephs opened the fourth quarter with another goal by Powell. Less than a minute later, however, the Chiefs scored again to make the

The men's lacrosse team lost their first game in the season against top-ranked Springfield College in a 12-14 clincher last Wednesday. The Ephs bounced back Saturday, however, with a decisive 9-4 victory over Wesleyan, advancing their record to 7-1.

The Springfield Chiefs came out strong, scoring two quick goals within the first two minutes. Late in the quarter, the Chiefs scored again, making it a 3-0 game. The Ephmen were unable to penetrate Springfield's defense and remained scoreless in the first quarter.

The strong Eph defense was back in form and limited the Cardinals to only 15 shots. "Goalie Rob Lambert and defenseman Jeff Stripp worked a double team play that left the Wesleyan offense in confusion all day," defensive midfielder Hassan Murphy '90 commented.

The Cardinals attempted to reduce the Ephs' 2-2 lead in the fourth quarter by shutting down Williams' offense and scoring two goals late in the game. Nevertheless, the strong overall performance by the Ephmen was too great for Wesleyan as Williams went on to win 9-4.

decrease the Chiefs' lead by three. But with 19 seconds left, Springfield scored again to end the quarter with a 11-7 lead.

The Ephs opened the fourth quarter with another goal by Powell. Less than a minute later, however, the Chiefs scored again to make the

The men's lacrosse team lost their first game in the season against top-ranked Springfield College in a 12-14 clincher last Wednesday. The Ephs bounced back Saturday, however, with a decisive 9-4 victory over Wesleyan, advancing their record to 7-1.

The Springfield Chiefs came out strong, scoring two quick goals within the first two minutes. Late in the quarter, the Chiefs scored again, making it a 3-0 game. The Ephmen were unable to penetrate Springfield's defense and remained scoreless in the first quarter.

The strong Eph defense was back in form and limited the Cardinals to only 15 shots. "Goalie Rob Lambert and defenseman Jeff Stripp worked a double team play that left the Wesleyan offense in confusion all day," defensive midfielder Hassan Murphy '90 commented.

The Cardinals attempted to reduce the Ephs' 2-2 lead in the fourth quarter by shutting down Williams' offense and scoring two goals late in the game. Nevertheless, the strong overall performance by the Ephmen was too great for Wesleyan as Williams went on to win 9-4.

decrease the Chiefs' lead by three. But with 19 seconds left, Springfield scored again to end the quarter with a 11-7 lead.

The Ephs opened the fourth quarter with another goal by Powell. Less than a minute later, however, the Chiefs scored again to make the Midfielder Tim Oliver '90 fights for a groundball late in the fourth quarter of Wednesday's match against Springfield. The Ephs went on to score three more goals but lost anyway 12-14.

Men's lax drops first to Springfield

by John Romans

The men's lacrosse team lost their first game in the season against top-ranked Springfield College in a 12-14 clincher last Wednesday. The Ephs bounced back Saturday, however, with a decisive 9-4 victory over Wesleyan, advancing their record to 7-1.

The Springfield Chiefs came out strong, scoring two quick goals within the first two minutes. Late in the quarter, the Chiefs scored again, making it a 3-0 game. The Ephmen were unable to penetrate Springfield's defense and remained scoreless in the first quarter.

The strong Eph defense was back in form and limited the Cardinals to only 15 shots. "Goalie Rob Lambert and defenseman Jeff Stripp worked a double team play that left the Wesleyan offense in confusion all day," defensive midfielder Hassan Murphy '90 commented.

The Cardinals attempted to reduce the Ephs' 2-2 lead in the fourth quarter by shutting down Williams' offense and scoring two goals late in the game. Nevertheless, the strong overall performance by the Ephmen was too great for Wesleyan as Williams went on to win 9-4.

decrease the Chiefs' lead by three. But with 19 seconds left, Springfield scored again to end the quarter with a 11-7 lead.

The Ephs opened the fourth quarter with another goal by Powell. Less than a minute later, however, the Chiefs scored again to make the

The men's lacrosse team lost their first game in the season against top-ranked Springfield College in a 12-14 clincher last Wednesday. The Ephs bounced back Saturday, however, with a decisive 9-4 victory over Wesleyan, advancing their record to 7-1.

The Springfield Chiefs came out strong, scoring two quick goals within the first two minutes. Late in the quarter, the Chiefs scored again, making it a 3-0 game. The Ephmen were unable to penetrate Springfield's defense and remained scoreless in the first quarter.

The Ephmen clamped down on the Chiefs with tough defense.

The men's lacrosse team lost their first game in the season against top-ranked Springfield College in a 12-14 clincher last Wednesday. The Ephs bounced back Saturday, however, with a decisive 9-4 victory over Wesleyan, advancing their record to 7-1.

The Springfield Chiefs came out strong, scoring two quick goals within the first two minutes. Late in the quarter, the Chiefs scored again, making it a 3-0 game. The Ephmen were unable to penetrate Springfield's defense and remained scoreless in the first quarter.

The strong Eph defense was back in form and limited the Cardinals to only 15 shots. "Goalie Rob Lambert and defenseman Jeff Stripp worked a double team play that left the Wesleyan offense in confusion all day," defensive midfielder Hassan Murphy '90 commented.

The Cardinals attempted to reduce the Ephs' 2-2 lead in the fourth quarter by shutting down Williams' offense and scoring two goals late in the game. Nevertheless, the strong overall performance by the Ephmen was too great for Wesleyan as Williams went on to win 9-4.

decrease the Chiefs' lead by three. But with 19 seconds left, Springfield scored again to end the quarter with a 11-7 lead.

The Ephs opened the fourth quarter with another goal by Powell. Less than a minute later, however, the Chiefs scored again to make the

The men's lacrosse team lost their first game in the season against top-ranked Springfield College in a 12-14 clincher last Wednesday. The Ephs bounced back Saturday, however, with a decisive 9-4 victory over Wesleyan, advancing their record to 7-1.

The Springfield Chiefs came out strong, scoring two quick goals within the first two minutes. Late in the quarter, the Chiefs scored again, making it a 3-0 game. The Ephmen were unable to penetrate Springfield's defense and remained scoreless in the first quarter.

When you want more than just a greeting card!

Send a Shoebox®
Mother's Day is Sunday, May 14.

Send your GREETINGS
(A Shoebox Division of Hallmark)

McClelland's

TENNIS ANYONE?

-Latest Widebody Frames
-Demonstration Rackets
in all Models
-Professional Restringing

GOFF'S SPORTS, INC.
15 Spring Street 458-3605

THE FAR SIDE
By GARY LARSON

"Deer Henry: Where were you? We waited and waited but finally decided that..."

"Deer Henry: Where were you? We waited and waited but finally decided that..."

"Deer Henry: Where were you? We waited and waited but finally decided that..."

Show-How Session

BY JIM PAGE/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

ACROSS
1 Isten bernice
5 Part of NASA
9 "Cent
14 Bal-sheet
17 Jai
18 Gomorrah
20 Attention
21 Pusturn into 22 March along
23 Conjecture
25 Change n bulb
27 Certain taxes
29 Ford
30 Tait's ta-ta
31 U.S.S.R. area
32 Stormy
33 Nathan, to David
DOWN
1 Petrarch's beloved
2 Wimbledon
3 Hippo
4 Reptile becomes
5 Baccano's
6 Usher's best
7 Hopla
8 Charlatan of 9 Dazed, miler
10 Battered
11 Twiches

66 "Robust"
67 Santa becomes 68 Frelix with 69 To -- to
70 Gaud's high
71 Depend (on)
72 Ade's
73 Crab, lobster
74 "Chir de lune"
75 "Streamers"
76 Playwright
77 Casked-wine
78 Suffix from
79 Arahun prince
80 "Shak"
81 Safecracker
82 Actress humpus
83 Blotter firs
84 River duck
85 South
86 Marie
87 Alarum down
88 Fastidious
89 Slung
90 Willy Loman's
91 Work units
92 Rock singer
93 "High"
94 Hardened
95 Fiedtall's
96 Greasy et al.
97 Miquel throng
98 Wind dir.
99 German navy
100 V.P. 1928-41
101 Mar becomes 102 Warrren

101 Eliel's son
102 Monogram of 103 Gurfeld's
104 Pilani
105 Doughnut
106 Shaped rolls
107 Pushers
108 Targets
109 Prepare a
110 diamond
111 Only resins
112 Fendish
113 Cocktail
114 becomes a
115 crosswain
116 Lure animal
117 "Wishing will
118 Lure animal
119 Lure animal
120 Lure animal
121 Lure animal
122 Lure animal
123 Lure animal
124 Lure animal
125 Lure animal
126 Lure animal
127 Lure animal
128 Lure animal
129 Lure animal
130 Lure animal
131 Lure animal
132 Lure animal
133 Lure animal
134 Lure animal
135 Lure animal
136 Lure animal
137 Lure animal
138 Lure animal
139 Lure animal
140 Lure animal
141 Lure animal
142 Lure animal
143 Lure animal
144 Lure animal
145 Lure animal
146 Lure animal
147 Lure animal
148 Lure animal
149 Lure animal
150 Lure animal
151 Lure animal
152 Lure animal
153 Lure animal
154 Lure animal
155 Lure animal
156 Lure animal
157 Lure animal
158 Lure animal
159 Lure animal
160 Lure animal
161 Lure animal
162 Lure animal
163 Lure animal
164 Lure animal
165 Lure animal
166 Lure animal
167 Lure animal
168 Lure animal
169 Lure animal
170 Lure animal
171 Lure animal
172 Lure animal
173 Lure animal
174 Lure animal
175 Lure animal
176 Lure animal
177 Lure animal
178 Lure animal
179 Lure animal
180 Lure animal
181 Lure animal
182 Lure animal
183 Lure animal
184 Lure animal
185 Lure animal
186 Lure animal
187 Lure animal
188 Lure animal
189 Lure animal
190 Lure animal
191 Lure animal
192 Lure animal
193 Lure animal
194 Lure animal
195 Lure animal
196 Lure animal
197 Lure animal
198 Lure animal
199 Lure animal
200 Lure animal

82 Swiss river
83 Alarum
84 Trec -- toe
85 Roman army
86 Lure animal
87 Lure animal
88 Lure animal
89 Lure animal
90 Lure animal
91 Lure animal
92 Lure animal
93 Lure animal
94 Lure animal
95 Lure animal
96 Lure animal
97 Lure animal
98 Lure animal
99 Lure animal
100 Lure animal
101 Lure animal
102 Lure animal
103 Lure animal
104 Lure animal
105 Lure animal
106 Lure animal
107 Lure animal
108 Lure animal
109 Lure animal
110 Lure animal
111 Lure animal
112 Lure animal
113 Lure animal
114 Lure animal
115 Lure animal
116 Lure animal
117 Lure animal
118 Lure animal
119 Lure animal
120 Lure animal
121 Lure animal
122 Lure animal
123 Lure animal
124 Lure animal
125 Lure animal
126 Lure animal
127 Lure animal
128 Lure animal
129 Lure animal
130 Lure animal
131 Lure animal
132 Lure animal
133 Lure animal
134 Lure animal
135 Lure animal
136 Lure animal
137 Lure animal
138 Lure animal
139 Lure animal
140 Lure animal
141 Lure animal
142 Lure animal
143 Lure animal
144 Lure animal
145 Lure animal
146 Lure animal
147 Lure animal
148 Lure animal
149 Lure animal
150 Lure animal
151 Lure animal
152 Lure animal
153 Lure animal
154 Lure animal
155 Lure animal
156 Lure animal
157 Lure animal
158 Lure animal
159 Lure animal
160 Lure animal
161 Lure animal
162 Lure animal
163 Lure animal
164 Lure animal
165 Lure animal
166 Lure animal
167 Lure animal
168 Lure animal
169 Lure animal
170 Lure animal
171 Lure animal
172 Lure animal
173 Lure animal
174 Lure animal
175 Lure animal
176 Lure animal
177 Lure animal
178 Lure animal
179 Lure animal
180 Lure animal
181 Lure animal
182 Lure animal
183 Lure animal
184 Lure animal
185 Lure animal
186 Lure animal
187 Lure animal
188 Lure animal
189 Lure animal
190 Lure animal
191 Lure animal
192 Lure animal
193 Lure animal
194 Lure animal
195 Lure animal
196 Lure animal
197 Lure animal
198 Lure animal
199 Lure animal
200 Lure animal

102 Ancient
103 Lure animal
104 Lure animal
105 Lure animal
106 Lure animal
107 Lure animal
108 Lure animal
109 Lure animal
110 Lure animal
111 Lure animal
112 Lure animal
113 Lure animal
114 Lure animal
115 Lure animal
116 Lure animal
117 Lure animal
118 Lure animal
119 Lure animal
120 Lure animal
121 Lure animal
122 Lure animal
123 Lure animal
124 Lure animal
125 Lure animal
126 Lure animal
127 Lure animal
128 Lure animal
129 Lure animal
130 Lure animal
131 Lure animal
132 Lure animal
133 Lure animal
134 Lure animal
135 Lure animal
136 Lure animal
137 Lure animal
138 Lure animal
139 Lure animal
140 Lure animal
141 Lure animal
142 Lure animal
143 Lure animal
144 Lure animal
145 Lure animal
146 Lure animal
147 Lure animal
148 Lure animal
149 Lure animal
150 Lure animal
151 Lure animal
152 Lure animal
153 Lure animal
154 Lure animal
155 Lure animal
156 Lure animal
157 Lure animal
158 Lure animal
159 Lure animal
160 Lure animal
161 Lure animal
162 Lure animal
163 Lure animal
164 Lure animal
165 Lure animal
166 Lure animal
167 Lure animal
168 Lure animal
169 Lure animal
170 Lure animal
171 Lure animal
172 Lure animal
173 Lure animal
174 Lure animal
175 Lure animal
176 Lure animal
177 Lure animal
178 Lure animal
179 Lure animal
180 Lure animal
181 Lure animal
182 Lure animal
183 Lure animal
184 Lure animal
185 Lure animal
186 Lure animal
187 Lure animal
188 Lure animal
189 Lure animal
190 Lure animal
191 Lure animal
192 Lure animal
193 Lure animal
194 Lure animal
195 Lure animal
196 Lure animal
197 Lure animal
198 Lure animal
199 Lure animal
200 Lure animal

102 Ancient
103 Lure animal
104 Lure animal
105 Lure animal
106 Lure animal
107 Lure animal
108 Lure animal
109 Lure animal
110 Lure animal
111 Lure animal
112 Lure animal
113 Lure animal
114 Lure animal
115 Lure animal
116 Lure animal
117 Lure animal
118 Lure animal
119 Lure animal
120 Lure animal
121 Lure animal
122 Lure animal
123 Lure animal
124 Lure animal
125 Lure animal
126 Lure animal
127 Lure animal
128 Lure animal
129 Lure animal
130 Lure animal
131 Lure animal
132 Lure animal
133 Lure animal
134 Lure animal
135 Lure animal
136 Lure animal
137 Lure animal
138 Lure animal
139 Lure animal
140 Lure animal
141 Lure animal
142 Lure animal
143 Lure animal
144 Lure animal
145 Lure animal
146 Lure animal
147 Lure animal
148 Lure animal
149 Lure animal
150 Lure animal
151 Lure animal
152 Lure animal
153 Lure animal
154 Lure animal
155 Lure animal
156 Lure animal
157 Lure animal
158 Lure animal
159 Lure animal
160 Lure animal
161 Lure animal
162 Lure animal
163 Lure animal
164 Lure animal
165 Lure animal
166 Lure animal
167 Lure animal
168 Lure animal
169 Lure animal
170 Lure animal
171 Lure animal
172 Lure animal
173 Lure animal
174 Lure animal
175 Lure animal
176 Lure animal
177 Lure animal
178 Lure animal
179 Lure animal
180 Lure animal
181 Lure animal
182 Lure animal
183 Lure animal
184 Lure animal
185 Lure animal
186 Lure animal
187 Lure animal
188 Lure animal
189 Lure animal
190 Lure animal
191 Lure animal
192 Lure animal
193 Lure animal
194 Lure animal
195 Lure animal
196 Lure animal
197 Lure animal
198 Lure animal
199 Lure animal
200 Lure animal

102 Ancient
103 Lure animal
104 Lure animal
105 Lure animal
106 Lure animal
107 Lure animal
108 Lure animal
109 Lure animal
110 Lure animal
111 Lure animal
112 Lure animal
113 Lure animal
114 Lure animal
115 Lure animal
116 Lure animal
117 Lure animal
118 Lure animal
119 Lure animal
120 Lure animal
121 Lure animal
122 Lure animal
123 Lure animal
124 Lure animal
125 Lure animal
126 Lure animal
127 Lure animal
128 Lure animal
129 Lure animal
130 Lure animal
131 Lure animal
132 Lure animal
133 Lure animal
134 Lure animal
135 Lure animal
136 Lure animal
137 Lure animal
138 Lure animal
139 Lure animal
140 Lure animal
141 Lure animal
142 Lure animal
143 Lure animal
144 Lure animal
145 Lure animal
146 Lure animal
147 Lure animal
148 Lure animal
149 Lure animal
150 Lure animal
151 Lure animal
152 Lure animal
153 Lure animal
154 Lure animal
155 Lure animal
156 Lure animal
157 Lure animal
158 Lure animal
159 Lure animal
160 Lure animal
161 Lure animal
162 Lure animal
163 Lure animal
164 Lure animal
165 Lure animal
166 Lure animal
167 Lure animal
168 Lure animal
169 Lure animal
170 Lure animal
171 Lure animal
172 Lure animal
173 Lure animal
174 Lure animal
175 Lure animal
176 Lure animal
177 Lure animal
178 Lure animal
179 Lure animal
180 Lure animal
181 Lure animal
182 Lure animal
183 Lure animal
184 Lure animal
185 Lure animal
186 Lure animal
187 Lure animal
188 Lure animal
189 Lure animal
190 Lure animal
191 Lure animal
192 Lure animal
193 Lure animal
194 Lure animal
195 Lure animal
196 Lure animal
197 Lure animal
198 Lure animal
199 Lure animal
200 Lure animal

Make someone feel good with flowers

We feature 8 greenhouses with a variety of flowering plants and home-grown roses for all occasions.

Don't forget Mother's Day, May 14.

We can send your order anywhere.

Mount Williams Greenhouses
NEAR WILLIAMSTOWN LINE
1090 STATE ROAD NORTH ADAMS
663-8665
Open daily 9-5

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Furnishings
TheLibrary
70 Spring Street
Williamsstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

Mother's Day Gifts
from $2.00 - $52.00
Scarves, belts, small leather goods and other surprises

We mail and ship UPS

Women tracksters best in NESCAC

by Josh Levenberg

The Williams women's track team won the NESCAC meet for the first time ever on Saturday by defeating 11 other teams, while the men's team settled for second after being edged out by Trinity.

Senior women's co-captain Dawn Macauley '89 was named M.V.P. of the women's meet as a result of her four first place finishes and third place finish in the high jump.

Dawn set the stage for this week's stellar performance by claiming four firsts in the Little Three Meet last week. As she had last week, she won the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 15.87 seconds and the 400-meter hurdles with a time of 61.5 seconds.

Her time in the 400-meter hurdles was a personal best and is the fastest she has run since competing in Nationals last year. Dawn also ran a leg for the 400-meter relay squad, which easily won with a time of 51.2 seconds.

The other members of the undefeated relay team included Kira Shields '91, Alison Smith '90 and Sue Northern '89. Dawn also anchored the 1600 meter relay, which finished with a time of 4:04.8, just a second shy of the team record.

The Ephs women also galloped to victory in the 800-meter relay, which consisted of Christine Dempsey '89 and sophomores Anne Plati, Mary Moule, and Eliza Dugundji. The Williams women won all of the relays at NESCAC, completing a seasonal sweep of every relay. The women's team has completely dominated every meet they have participated in since the outdoor season began, trotting to an undefeated mark.

Plati raced to two first-place finishes on Saturday. She ran to victory in the 5000-meter race by finishing in a speedy 18:23 minutes. She also won the 800 meters by edging out teammate Cherie Macauley '92 at the finish line. Plati's time was 2:20.1 minutes, and Macauley finished in 2:20.8 minutes. Ann Dannhauer '90, in an exhibit of endurance and long strides, ran to victories in both the 1500-meter and 3000-meter events.

In the 1500 meters, Dannhauer finished in 4:42 minutes, just 1.5 seconds shy of the national qualifying time. She will have another chance to qualify in the upcoming meets. In the 3000 meters, Dannhauer raced to victory in only 10:25 minutes.

Also worthy of mention was a third-place finish in the 100-meter hurdles by Kira Shields '91 in 16.55 seconds.

Nadelman upsets Evans
The men's team, coming off an easy Little Three victory last week, suffered a bitter defeat on Saturday.

Trinity proved to be stronger than the tamed Lord Jeffs and wing-clipped Cardinals of last week. Geoff Igharo '90, who suffered from a pulled hamstring, came out strong on Saturday to win the triple jump with a leap of 13.75 meters.

Dave Nadelman '89, who has also been plagued by injuries, edged out Amherst guru Dave Evans (who dominated Little Three action last week) in the 800 meters with an incredible kick in the final lap to finish in 1:54.77. Nadelman cleverly gave Evans "a taste of his own medicine."

Members of the women's team will be traveling to Colby next week, May 6, for Women's Division I New England.

Coach Peter Farwell was clated with Saturday's results. "Left and right, Williams was dominating this meet. Even the non-scoring heats were performing up to their greatest potential," Farwell said.

The men's team will be hosting Division III New England here at the Tony Plank track next week, May 6, at 11:00 a.m.

man sticking to him like glue. Nadelman made his winning move in the final seconds.

In the steeplechase, Nate McVey-Finney '90 went on to win after teammate Marc Beltz '91 dropped out due to a reinjured leg. McVey-Finney's wet feet crossed the finish line in 9:28. Long-haired long distance runner Dylan Cooper '91 raced to an enduring second-place finish in the 10,000 meters at 32:41 minutes. Freshman standout Larry Smith scored two second-place finishes on Saturday. Smith's times were very close to the winner of both races, who was named NESCAC men's M.V.P. His time in the 200 meters was 22.47 seconds and in the 400 meters, 49.15 seconds.

Two of the men's relay teams scored second place in their events. The 400-meter relay of Igharo, Smith, Steve Moran '91 and Jonathan Lindley '92 ran their race in 43.4 seconds. The 1600-meter relay of Brad Behr '92, Dave Weck '92, Carey Simon '90 and Jonathan Lindley '92 finished in 3:24.5. Other Ephs worth noting included Will Warren '92 who scored third place for his high jump of 6'2" and Jonathan Lindley '92, who scored third in the 100-meter dash with a time of 11.30 seconds.

Coach Peter Farwell was clated with Saturday's results. "Left and right, Williams was dominating this meet. Even the non-scoring heats were performing up to their greatest potential," Farwell said.

The men's team will be hosting Division III New England here at the Tony Plank track next week, May 6, at 11:00 a.m.

Members of the women's team will be traveling to Colby next week, May 6, for Women's Division I New England.

Coach Peter Farwell was clated with Saturday's results. "Left and right, Williams was dominating this meet. Even the non-scoring heats were performing up to their greatest potential," Farwell said.

The men's team will be hosting Division III New England here at the Tony Plank track next week, May 6, at 11:00 a.m.

Members of the women's team will be traveling to Colby next week, May 6, for Women's Division I New England.

Jeff Hauer '89 chips a shot onto the green in last Saturday's 7-man match against Trinity, Holy Cross, and Union. The Ephs triumphed; standout performers included captain Tim Frechette '89 (medalist), Mike La Porte '91 (second overall), and Sean Seguin '91 (third overall). (Taylor)

Racquetters squeeze by Bantams

by Carolyn Koo

Despite four close three-set matches and the absence of its number two player, the Williams tennis team managed to defeat the Trinity Bantams 6-3 on Tuesday. The Ephs record now stands at 5-1.

Regular number two player Howie Kim '92 was missing from the line-up due to a stomach injury. "Without Howie, we were weakened down," commented coach Paul Assalante. However, Jim Welles '91 ably filled in for Kim and defeated Peter Barlow of Trinity in two close sets, 7-5, 7-6.

Four of the nine matches played went to the limit of three sets, with Williams and Trinity splitting the results. For the Ephs, Brad Hunt '90 played at fourth singles and lost the first set to his Trinity opponent Jorge Rodriguez 6-1, but easily took the last two to win the match. In addition, Hunt teamed with co-captain Drew Sawyer '89 to win the first doubles in three, after giving up the second set 6-4.

Hunt changes tactics to win
Assalante praised Hunt's play, especially in his singles match. After easily dropping the first set, Assalante convinced Hunt to change his whole playing style and tactics.

"Brad usually likes to take the ball early and attack, but against Rodriguez, he had a more careful game style. It took a lot of effort on Brad's part," Assalante remarked. Also victorious for the Ephs in singles play were Tom Evans '92 at number one and Steve Buxbaum '90 at number six. Evans and Buxbaum teamed to win number two doubles as well. All three matches were easy straight-sets.

Last weekend the Ephs were at the NESCAC Championships, held at Amherst. Evans was seeded number five in the first flight, while Hunt was seeded number four in the third flight. Hunt and Sawyer are also number one in doubles. Assalante projected a finish in the top three for the Ephs.

The team's next match is today at home against SUNY Albany.

Softball team drops two to Trinity

by Anne Joseph

The women's softball team hit the road again this week to play Mt. Holyoke and a doubleheader against Trinity. The Ephs rolled over Mt. Holyoke 7-1 on Tuesday but then fell to Trinity 10-5 and 9-2 on Saturday, chalking up their first two losses.

The Williams women played consistently both at the plate and in the field against Mt. Holyoke. Pitcher

Cathy Handlich '91 allowed four singles and three walks and hit two batters, but fanned eight Mt. Holyoke batters.

"We played well. We had timely hitting. I felt [the game] would be another test and we responded well," Coach David Caputi stated. The Ephs turned in a consistent performance at the plate, and took advantage of Mt. Holyoke's mistakes.

Co-captain Missy Crouchley '89 had three bunt singles, while co-captain Nancy Hedeman '89 added a powerful double. Eph Laurie Hartsoe '91 gathered two singles as well, driving in two runs. Freshman Tanya Nunez also made key hits for the Ephs, starting off the third inning with a triple and bringing home another run to raise the score to 4-0.

The Williams women struck continued on page 10

Women ruggers take 2 of 3 after successful tea party

by Laura B. Whitman

Spring Weekend marked both the high and low points of the season for the WWRFC. On Saturday, the C-side rugby players once again dominated the pitch and found victory over Radcliffe. The Killer B's also emerged on top of Crimson.

The A-side, meanwhile, triumphed but racked up more injuries than points in an unusually aggressive match against the University of Vermont.

After one of its most successful tea parties in recent years, the WWRFC A-side forgot their manners the next day on the pitch. According to the Williams players, the UVM A's displayed unsportsmanlike play, causing a response which was ugly and uncharacteristic of both Williams and women's college rugby Harvard would only accept a match with the Williams A's or else, they said, they would drive back to Cambridge.

as a whole. UVM scored once in the first half; the try was not converted, ending the game at 4-0.

Radcliffe tricked by Ephs
The next match was delayed because the Radcliffe A-side refused to play the Williams B's, maintaining that such a contest would be below their skill level. Radcliffe would only accept a match with the A's or else, they said, the team would turn around and drive back to Cambridge. Not flustered by this demand, the White captains led to the Crimson, saying that first the Radcliffe B-side would play against the Williams "B's" (actually the Williams C-side) and then the "A-side" match

Lauren Boeschotenstein scrambles to escape the grasp of a UVM rugger during last Saturday's A-side match. The Ephs women enjoyed mixed success; the A-side lost but the B- and C- sides turned in solid victories over Harvard.

(actually against the Williams B's) would take place. The B-match began first due to the fact that Radcliffe could not rally its entire A-side, half of which had gotten lost on the drive.

In order to distinguish itself from the Killer B's, White C-side adopted the name "Sneaky B's" for the match. The "Future of the WWRFC" was on fire from the kickoff, establishing itself over Radcliffe's 50-meter line and never retreating. Moments into the game, after an excellent run by Yung Moon '91, Rookie Martha Luey '91 broke away from her attackers to sprint 45 meters, scoring a try and setting the standard of speed and skill that was upheld throughout the contest.

Scrumdowns low and forceful
The White scrum also performed well, giving a consistent, solid push. The Sneaky B's scrumdowns were so low and forceful in comparison to Radcliffe's scrum that sideline spectator Professor Whitney Stoddard said he had difficulty believing that this was the WWRFC's least experienced side.

In the second half, sophomore rookie Amy Bellevue and fullback Claire Manwell '89 outshone their teammates with exemplary kicking. Bellevue also made a breakthrough try from 20 meters out, while Manwell racked up another three points with a successful penalty kick. Completing the scoring was the WWRFC's "omnipresent" omnipresent" Cathy Paper '89, who ran the ball in for her first try in her rugby career.

Paper was escorted off the pitch on the shoulders of the victorious C-side, concluding the match at 15-0.

Unlike previous weeks, the White Dogs refused to admit defeat.

Lipp '89 and lock Alice McCarty '90 both managed to make quick, decisive tackles.

Lunging forward on a penalty-suicide play, scrumhalf Kerry Kilander '89 touched down the only try of the game.

Overall, the "A-side" match was marked by especially aggressive tackling and an unusually large number of injuries. Although sending home inspired by any rugby play in my life," Morgan said. "When Will scored from that prop run I said to myself, 'Hey, we can beat these guys.'"

LaFave had loosed the cork, and the pack let go with the froth. Maintaining both possession and the field

Men's rugby team falls in a close match against UMASS

by Mark A. Steple

After a slow start this spring, the Williams Rugby Club proved this past weekend at University of Massachusetts/Amherst that it is capable of high-quality rugby. In the A-side game, UMASS narrowly defeated the Ephs, 28-24, marking a second-half comeback thwarted by the clock.

Williams started off with a dynamic try from sophomore wing Tom Morgan after a breakthrough run by fullback Chap Petersen '90. Petersen converted the try. Morgan's touch-line dash seemed in danger of being swamped by the UMASS backs, whose powerful running and looping overloads resulted in three tries.

After the kickoff of the second half, a UMASS fullback made a run to score as the Williams defense let down for a moment. But unlike previous weeks, the White Dogs refused to admit defeat.

Quick taps from penalties and free kicks by lock Tom Bottern '89 and prop Will LaFave '90 kept the defense backpedalling and insured solid possession. Bottern and captain Sherwood Smith '89 together handled the ball well and demonstrated scrummaging technique which confounded the Mass forwards.

During tea by LaFave
At one point, LaFave dared to charge the entire UMASS forward pack, which had amassed a few meters away on the try line. With a full head of steam, LaFave shrugged the initial tackles and punched a hole for himself for the touchdown.

For winger Morgan, among others, LaFave turned the tide of desire in Williams' favor. "I've never been more inspired by any rugby play in my life," Morgan said. "When Will scored from that prop run I said to myself, 'Hey, we can beat these guys.'" position won by the backs required intensely, and the next try exemplified the Williams desire to win. Alby Gallun '89 took the ball over the line after a torrid rolling maul to put Williams back in the hunt. A try by the bulliah Bob Goldstein '89, which punctuated running and dodging with a powerful dive, put the Dogs within one score of victory.

LaFave had loosed the cork, and the pack let go with the froth. Maintaining both possession and the field

Though the A-side players put in its most intense game of the season, the B-side ruggers failed to find the magic which has carried them for the last three weeks. A score from the try machine, John Baker '89, and a conversion from glory-half Dan Foote '90 edged out the lone UMASS try.

Despite the win, though, play was sloppy. More work will be needed to avenge last season's loss to Amherst, whom Williams plays in the Little Three journey at Wesleyan next week.

C-side match at Albany
In the final game of the day, the younger players played hard rugby. Flanker Richard Simon '91 produced the lone try by chasing a kick into the try zone. Sophomore winners Bill Smutlyn and Tim Bailey both contained their opposites and ran well with the ball but did not quite have the support necessary to keep the ball in play.

The C-side went to Albany Law School for what turned out to be a full day of rugby. Captain Buff Winterer '91 reported that Albany asked for four halves of play. In the first half, Williams lost by a try and conversion to a penalty, but by the third half the makeshift back line began to take their chances and find space to run. With a fed lineup ball by Ian Gallagher '92, the line moved the ball to sophomore wing Rod Bramasco who ran with a fury that belied his size.

Eager to run as hard as he tackles, Bramasco helped achieve the field position which fullback Colin Holley '91, turned into points from penalty kicks. Holley booted over two kicks to Albany's one in the second game for the win.

One year after the takeover.

Jenness will become Multicultural Center

by Mary Moule

Jenness House, the current location of the Dean's Office, has been selected as the site of the new multicultural center, according to Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards. Edwards said that the center, which is scheduled to open next fall, is designed to fulfill two main purposes.

"One, to provide support to minority and foreign student groups, and two, to help educate the community on multicultural issues."

Other buildings considered as locations for the center included Dropper House, Chandler House and the Denison Gatehouse. According to Vice-President and Treasurer of the College William Reed, however, Jenness was chosen because of its ideal size and location.

"We wanted a big enough space for a variety of activities and it needed to be easy to get to," Reed said.

Edwards said that very few changes will be made to the building. One wall will be knocked down to construct a large classroom, and a small parking lot will be constructed near the Chemistry building.

The new center will include such facilities as a resource library, a study room, a kitchen, an office for the director of the center and offices for ASIA, the Black Student Union, Vista and the International Club. Although the BSU and Vista already have places to meet in Rice House and Hardy House, ASIA does not even have an office of its own.

"We hope that the center will provide [student groups] an opportunity to interact with each other and work with the director, who should be a really important research person," Edwards said.

The college is currently in the process of searching for a director for the center. The director's job will include helping the student groups coordinate and schedule events and making suggestions for planning and funding such activities. The center will get some funding of its own, and may also help student groups coordinate the use of their money, according to Edwards.

"We want people to use the resources and study center and to drop in and read

Jenness House, the site of the C.A.R.E. takeover last year, has been chosen as the site of the multicultural center. Despite the concerns of some town residents that too many residential buildings are being turned into office space, the center will open in students next fall. This photo was taken during the takeover. Ward articles and talk to student groups," she said. She added, however, that the center would also need to have more formal structure. "It's not just a hang-out place. We see a more educational and enrichment focus with scheduled social events."

Local residents concerned

Although the administration has said that Jenness was the most practical choice for the center because of its location, local residents have expressed some concern. Nearby neighbors on Grace Court, where the building is located, have voiced their disapproval over student use of an area which they feel should be returned to residential housing.

Mrs. John W. Miller, who occupies the house next door to Jenness, said that she is disappointed that she will not have any new neighbors moving in to the house. Her husband was a Williams professor for 35 years, and she has lived in her home for 50 years. "I expected to live here in peace and quiet for a few more years," she said.

"Mr. Chandler [then the President of the College] and Mr. Reed told me that after the gym was built, Jenness would go back to residential housing," she said. "I didn't object then [to the use of the house for faculty offices], but I object now."

Reed confirmed that he had spoken to Miller about Jenness House several years ago. "I had told Mrs. Miller that I hoped and had every expectation that it would return to faculty housing."

"We didn't have all that many options, and Jenness was the most practical," Reed said. "My job is to do the best that I can with our available resources." The decision of where to locate the center was made by Edwards, Reed and President of the College Francis Oakley.

Residents and students have co-existed relatively peacefully on Grace Court for some time with student use of Rice and Hardy Houses. "There have not been any unusual problems," Reed said. "Just periodic complaints about loud noises when Rice House has parties. From my perspective they've worked well together."

But residents still feel that plans to return Jenness to faculty housing should have been followed through. "I want neighbors, and students are not neighbors," Miller said. "I'm an old lady, and I'm in good health now, but someday I might need help. Students don't live here and they're not here in the summer or during vacations."

I just want consideration

"I have no prejudice against Williams College," she added. "I've lived her for over half of my life, and I want it to succeed and thrive. I don't know that I'd expect them to have our interests at heart, but I just want some common consideration."

Reed said that he was personally concerned with Miller's complaints. He added that she was not the only irate resident, and that he realized college policies were often troubling to townspeople.

"She longs for a residential area with children playing," he said. "I can appreciate that. When I had to tell her [about the change in plans] she was very upset."

"We've done so much in the last few years -- much of it controversial. The development of Pine Cobble, the new gym on Spring Street and the renovation of Hopkins Hall have inconvenienced citizens. There's always tension in any college community, especially on the boundaries."

As a result of this tension, the college has made some efforts to keep the local community happy. In one recent compromise, they changed their plans to make Chandler House, also on Grace Court, into a personnel office. "We backed off at considerable inconvenience to help community relations," Reed said.

Although residents such as Miller are unhappy with the location of the multicultural center, administrators are pleased with the plan.

"I hope it will help us all in our understanding of each other," Reed said. "The composition of the campus is changing with more students of all nationalities and ethnic backgrounds making it a more dynamic place. I'm excited about the potential program of the center."

No freshman surplus seen

by Soojin Kim

The class of 1993 will matriculate at least 25 students from the waiting list, as compared to zero for the class of 1992, according to Philip Smith, Director of Admissions.

Although the Candidate's Reply Date was May 1, the Admissions office was still waiting on Thursday to hear from 150 out of the 1080 students admitted.

"The mail is a little slow and this year students seem to be going right down to the wire," Smith said.

He speculated that some financial concern might also explain the delay on the part of students.

As of Thursday, however, 450 students had joined the class of 1993. 510 is the average class size. Of the 450, 48 percent are women and 22 percent are minority students. Although three percent more minority students were admitted this year, the percentage of minority matriculants was slightly lower.

The geographical breakdown is similar to that of the class of 1992. Last year, 53 percent came from more than 300 miles away. The 300 mile radius encompasses all of New England, New York, New Jersey and some of Pennsylvania (from Buffalo, New York to Baltimore, Maryland).

The Admissions Office reduced the number of students admitted from 1210 last year to 1080 in order to avoid a major housing problem, according to Smith.

"We were deliberately cautious. We didn't want to over-accept," Smith said. He also pointed out that although the pool of applicants to Williams was down this year, a decline experienced by colleges across the country, the quality, in terms of grades and test scores, of applicants was slightly higher.

Pro-choice group starts letter campaign to Court

by Sara Dubow

The Supreme Court is presently deliberating on what is popularly known as the "Missouri case." If Webster v. Reproductive Health Services is decided in favor of the plaintiff, the Supreme Court may declare that life begins at conception. The right to have an abortion, established by the 1973 Supreme Court case Roe v. Wade, would no longer be guaranteed and each state would have to make a decision.

While the case is being decided in Washington, D.C., about thirty Williams students have organized to influence the outcome. "This is such a crucial time for the whole issue of abortion," Karen Duggan '91 said. Duggan and Louise Price '91 started the Williams Pro-Choice Organization.

The group sent out an all-campus mailing and had a table in Baxter Hall for people to write letters in support of pro-choice to Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, who is considered the key vote if the other justices are split. As of Friday, 414 letters had been written.

"It's really coming down to the wire," Dorin Sanders-Depue '90, another member of the group, said. "I think there is a big silent majority here [at Williams] who are basically undecided, but are leaning to pro-choice. Those are the people we are trying to reach."

"I think that pro-choice is the majority opinion on campus, but there was really no way for people to get together to show their support," Duggan agreed. "With WAAD [Williams Against Abortion on Demand], there was especially a need for the opposition voice to be heard."

continued on page 5

The building which houses Images Cinema was sold on March 17 for $390,000, and the future of the theater is still in doubt. Actor Christopher Reeve, however, a staunch supporter of Images, has said that he expects it to stay in business. Steinman

Images bought, may not remain as theater

by Rajesh Swaminathan

The Walden Building on Spring Street, where the Images Cinema theater has been located, was sold to William, Thomas and James Elder of ELMAC Corporation on March 17, 1989 for $390,000. The Elders have not yet decided what they will do with the building.

"As of yet, no definite plans have been made. We're working with the current manager and we're hoping for something that will make everybody happy," James Elder said.

Winthrop Wassenaar, the former co-owner of the Walden building, said in an earlier interview that the building has been on the market for years. The former operator of Images, George Mansour, had said that he wasn't going to renew his lease.

"I've been running Images for 13 years but I didn't really have a choice," Mansour said. "The former owner would not give me a lease since he wanted to sell the whole building unencumbered [without any built-in clauses such as preserving Images]. The building has been sold to a new owner, the people who own McClelland's stationery store. My understanding is that they wish to use a part of the space for their own store. There is talk of a smaller theater at the back, but that's still in its nebulous planning stage," Mansour said.

Thomas Elder said that neither he nor any of his co-owners had any definite plans regarding programming or the

continued on page 5

Freshman runs for town Selectman

by Peter Kilvans

If Brian Coan '92 has his way, the summer foliage won't be the only thing green in Williamstown. Coan, who is running for the Williamstown Board of Selectmen, said his agenda for office is similar to that of the European Green Party, i.e., a broad environmentalist platform.

Coan said he opposes the Pine Cobble Development and a state plan to widen Route 2; he supports a town youth center, an expansion of Williamstown's recycling ability and more education on world issues. Coan said, "I'm trying to run on a platform that's saying a lot of things."

His permanent address is in the Netherlands, but the only requirement for the Selectman position is to be a registered voter of Williamstown. He mentioned that the incumbents often run unopposed although this year there are a total of four people running for the two seats that are up for election.

Coan said that although he ran for some college positions, "Running for town office would be the most effective. . . Since I'm going to be in Williamstown for almost four years, it's almost my duty to be interested and to get involved." He first looked into town government last fall. He said, "I called [to find out] how the town government runs. . . I asked about selectmen. I just turned 18 in March and so I registered [as a voter] and decided to run."

I think of me as a towns person

"I got a hundred copies or so of my posters, sent them to newspapers [and put them up]. . . and there was interest." He explained, "I'm not trying to appeal as a college candidate, but I'm trying to

continued on page 5

Brian Coan '92 is a write-in candidate for town selectman in today's local elections. Coan is running on a platform that stresses local awareness of environmental issues. Thomas

Honorary degree recipients announced

PAGE 4

Record Insider examines MassMoCA

Wassenaar receives first Fulbright Fellowship for Academic Administrators

PAGE 5

Letters

Allow open debate

To the Editor:

Why were the "Wanted: Daniel Ortega" posters ripped from the campus walls? Tuesday afternoon before class, one of my classmates said down beside me and happily stated that she was removing the posters wherever she saw them. She is an intelligent and rational being, with a coherent system of liberal values. I had only the highest respect for her. She could not comprehend my shock. She considers her behavior and that of two assisting friends to be that of a right: a right to remove public statements that offend her ideologically. My appeals to the First Amendment and an academic code of free speech and debate bewildered her.

I had briefly seen the posters. I had had no chance to examine them and form an opinion.

I bitterly resent her attempts to deny me that chance. Why do people rip BGLI posters down? Why did a daily advisor scribe garble a Williams Against Abortion advertisement? Why did Fitch-Carrier cheer earlier this semester when one house member shouted "shut up!" at another? Why does everyone continually attempt to silence what they don't agree with?

Respond, Complain-Protest. But give the other side a chance to speak.

Chris Aylott '91

Anti-abortion piece did not address complex problems

To the Editor:

In his letter of May 2, Paul Passaro '89 urged those of us who marched for women's equality and women's lives (such as worthy causes) to "examine the moral and intellectual validity of our present position" on abortion. Having done so, we feel ready to respond. In particular, we would like to point to what we see as two critical failures in Passaro's argument.

Passaro bases his attack on the right to choose abortion on his contention that biological life begins at conception. He provides evidence which, he believes, proves conclusively that to dispute this claim is to argue with a settled scientific fact. Of course, no one disputes Passaro's understanding of the reproductive process, as far as it goes. But the question of when an entity accrues a status warranting state protection is not a scientific question; rather, it is a political and, perhaps, moral one. We cannot arbitrarily focus on one moment in the continuous process of human reproduction and say that we have located the point at which human life becomes valuable. Instead, we must recognize that our decision to proscribe certain actions occurs within a social context, and is based on our collective desire to realize a certain set of values.

"The question, then, is not 'When does human life begin?' but 'When should the state intervene to protect a particular entity?' The second question cannot be answered without a consideration of the compelling interest in protecting and promoting the autonomy of women. That is why the issue shifts from a question of human life to a question of human freedom. And that is why we call ourselves pro-choice.

Not only does Passaro obscure the political nature of the abortion issue, he also obscures its political implications. Passaro talks about abortion as if it oc-

Wright tenure decision sends bad message to junior faculty

To the Editor:

So Lisa Wright's appeal for tenure reversal has been denied, and at a time when all colleges are finding it increasingly difficult to hire good people because the demand for teachers across the country is growing, to quote from John Reichert in the Record, "The students have been very vocal—no one else."

In protesting the denial of tenure to Professor Wright, so I have no illusions that a lone voice from the ranks of the faculty will make much of a difference. However, I do want to add the view that this particular decision has sent a very bad message to the rest of the junior faculty.

The college, along with other academic institutions around the country, bases its tenure decision upon three criteria: teaching performance, publications, and service to the community. One is expected to be at least competent (even outstanding) in each of them. However, to excel in all three fields, given the amount of hours in any one day, is by most reckonings a herculean task.

By stressing research as well as teaching, the college likes to think it is merely aligning itself more closely with university accepted academic practices. Yet find it very difficult to believe that there is any universally accepted set of norms which would deny that Lisa Wright is a truly struck by how very safe the issue of abortion is for some men, able to see it at all alone in their offices, studies, libraries, pondering that difficult and abstract question of when human life begins; imagining, as they ponder, what it would have been like had they been like that; projecting their own little, unique, autonomous selves back into the womb, assuming that they are now every bit of what they were then, only bigger; wondering what makes a woman so immature, selfish, negligent, irresponsible and irrational as to terminate her pregnancy for what, they think, must be reasons of convenience: relief that they escaped, but troubled that other unborn, innocent utterly dependent, defenseless little creatures like themselves aren't so fortunate.

"That difficult and abstract question of when human life begins: What about the networks of nurturing relationships into which these fetal men and women were born—networks and relationships of care, nourishment, and comfort which fostered their growth, and shaped their state of being, something women enter into by nature, instinct, or destiny, but an historically specific set of social practices, conditioned by relations of power, including, of course, class, race, and gender. As a student of history, Mr. Passaro, you are surely aware that social practices such as mothering change from one historical epoch to another and differ across cultures.

"Modern biology teaches..." (Passaro, p.3)

Although individual members of the medical and scientific community may maintain that human life begins at conception, such claims, according to the National Academy of Science, are not scientifically rooted, but remain a matter of personal, moral, and religious belief. In a resolution passed on April 28, 1981, during its 118th Annual Meeting, in response to Section 1 of U.S. Senate Bill S. 158 (the Human Life Statute) which found that "present day scientific evidence indicated a significant

Williams soaking middle class

The following letter was sent to President Francis Oakley and the editors of the Record:

Dear Mr. Oakley:

The nine percent increase in tuition, particularly coming after the increase last year, is outrageous. I work in a highly labor intensive profession, and I am also very vulnerable to rapidly escalating insurance costs, employee fringe benefits, and, I might add, the rising cost of higher education for my children. But my fees cannot be increased to the extent you are able to raise yours. If my fees increased nine percent each year, you and your colleagues would be at the head of the pack leading the protest.

The problem with Williams College is that there is no incentive to hold costs down, as long as there are parents like me who can foot the bill. Your policy is to soak the middle class for as much as they can bear and set up a campus welfare state in which the college appears to champion education on a need-blind basis, which is in reality at my expense, not yours.

I would like you to do what the middle class has to do when expenses rise. Curb your appetite, improve your management, and reduce your expenses. Why don't you and your faculty consider paying your fair share for those students in need of financial aid? If your concerns for their welfare is as genuine as expressed in your letter of April 17th.

There is a limit to how far we can be squeezed without generating long lasting resentment to Williams College.

Stuart A. Levy, M.D.

Said interview unnecessarily provocative

To the Editor:

I found your interview with Professor Edward Said's one-sided view of the "Palestinian question." It was an interview by someone who is neither a Williams undergraduate nor visiting or working at Williams; further, it was on a topic that is too important to relegate to a single next-to-the-late issue space if it is to be discussed at all. Coincidentally, the same day's New York Times—in which its continuing coverage has provided many sides of the story over the months and years—carries a front page article in which it is pointed out that PLO spokesmen of many factions continue to make statements in which Israel's very existence is threatened. The leader of one of the three major PLO components is quoted as saying, "The PLO organizations in which we participate have never made any decision to halt armed struggle against the enemy.... Arafat's remarks represent his own opinions, not PLO policy."

I feel strongly that it is too soon to Coequyt criticizes Record's policy decisions

To the Editor:

This letter is written concerning the appearance of two pieces in the Record: "Tuition jumps $1,666..." (April 25) and "Tuition increases..." (May 2).

In the first article, "Tuition jumps," the quotation in question was unrepresentative of my view. All that I wanted to say was that such a large increase in tuition should be accompanied by an increase in financial aid. I did not wish for my personal feelings or financial position to be quoted. It is interesting to note that the only other person quoted happens to be my roommate.

In the second article, to the editor, "Tuition increases," I feel that the Record should not have printed an unsigned letter, especially when it is a personal attack. If the person who wrote the article to the Record had bothered to ask me how I felt about the tuition increase, he/

she would have been surprised to find out that I am not on financial aid and did not in any way represent the person that he/she was attacking.

I question the policy of the Record in publishing unsigned letters of this nature, and believe that they should at least make sure that the article is accurate if they are going to do so.

John Coequyt '92

Israel and PLO: Look at facts, not propaganda

by Josh Becker '91
with Ken Leiter '90

I must applaud the Williams Record for its timely decision to delve into the intricacies of international relations. I was quite disappointed, however, to find an exposition of the views of Palestinian National Council member Edward Said presented without any counterbalancing opinion. Since the Record has opened this can of worms, I feel compelled to address some of the issues that Mr. Said brought up, and others that he ignored.

Said represents himself within the United States as a Palestinian moderate. To this capacity he has been able to present the Palestinian cause so that it might be acceptable to an American audience. To do so, however, he has needed to distort past history and current reality.

In order to understand the Arab-Israeli conflict and the Palestinian struggle, it is important to be aware of some significant events in the region's history. In making his arguments, Said does not hesitate to take advantage of the fact that many Americans are not familiar with the struggles' origins.

In 1948 the Zionist accepted the U.N. General Assembly's resolution establishing a Jewish state in ten percent of the area originally allotted to a Jewish homeland by the mandate of the League of Nations. A state called "Palestine" was to be established concurrently. Surrounding Arab countries, however, refused to accept any Jewish state, and attacked the new Jewish state upon its declaration of independence, killing fully one percent of its population.

In three subsequent wars Arab states attacked Israel, desiring its destruction; each time, however, the attacking countries lost land instead. This is the way Israel found itself presiding over an unwanted occupation.

Israel administers over one million Arabs because, excepting Egypt, no Arab nation has been willing to negotiate with Israel to the Palestinian problem.

When Egypt was willing to negotiate with Israel, Israel relinquished the Sinai Peninsula which was 91 percent of all the land it had gained in the defensive war of 1967. By returning this land, Israel gave up oil wells it had developed, air and naval bases, and vast mineral wealth. The total cost of the withdrawal has been estimated at 20 million dollars, but Israel withdrew in the interest of peace, because in answer Said they had someone to negotiate with.

Before Israel is going to withdraw from the rest of the land it gained in the 1967 war it needs someone to negotiate with. Yasir Arafat, who in January on the Arab-language Radio Monte Carlo warned, "Any Palestinian leader who proposes an end to the intifada exposes himself to the bullets of his own people endangers his life. The PLO will know how to deal with him," is not such a person.

In fact, when Said, in one of his most incredible sleight-of-hand, described the rioters as engaging in "relative violence," or "relative non-violence," he has left out one of the most important aspects of the intifada—inimidation. In August, the United National Leadership of the uprising called for confrontation of the enemy by "pursuing the enemy's collaborators, those who have not tendered their resignations, those who have promoted the enemy's product, and those who propagate tendentious rumors." (Near East Report, 1/16).

In September of last year a leaflet distributed on the West Bank said, "The United National Leadership of the uprising, the PLO, emphasizes the following: Directing and intensifying blows to dissenters from the will of our people in the appointed village and city council committees, custom offices..." (NER, 1/16).

Arafat himself demonstrated this intimidation when he said in a New Year's Day speech, "Whoever thinks of stopping the intifada before it achieves its goals, I will give him ten bullets in the chest."

It was no coincidence that Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij, who had just proposed a halt in the uprising, immediately withdrew his proposal after this clear threat.

In fact, on the same day that the Record printed Said's glorification of the uprising, the New York Times reported that six Palestinians accused of collaborating with Israel had been killed by fellow Arabs in the last weeks. Israel's defense ministry says that since the beginning of the uprising there have been 960 attacks by Arabs against other Arabs in the territories, and 33 local residents have been murdered.

While Said was telling a student at John Dewey Academy, "we want a two-state solution," his superiors were telling Arabs something different.

For instance, on January 13 in the Arab-language newspaper al-Sharq al-Awsat, the Chairman of the PNC said, "The battle is between two cultures—an Arab-Muslim and a Zionist-aggressive settlement. Our presence in Palestine depends on terminating the other culture..." (NER, 4/10).

In January, a leaflet issued by the "United Command" said, "The unity of the uprising will lead to the establishment of the independent Palestinian state and to the liberation of the whole of the Palestinian land from the [Jordan] river to the Mediterranean..." (NER, 4/10).

While the need for a Palestinian state may be legitimate considering the present circumstances, the attempt to destroy Israel is not. Unfortunately, leaders of the PLO keep telling Arab students that the two goals are all linked.

Parok Kaddouh, the designated PLO foreign minister, recently said in a statement verified by the U.S. Government, "we pursue a policy of stages in our political struggle." The policy of stages has been explained in PLO statements since the mid-1970s as establishing a Palestinian state as a first step toward capturing all of Palestine, according to the New York Times (5/2/89).

Ahmad Yafar, Arafat's top deputy, later said, "The Palestinian struggle has become a stage in our prolonged struggle for the liberation of Palestine and the establishment of a democratic state on all of its territory."

Referring to this and to "25 or 30 other statements of recent vintage," as compared to the more-publicized conciliatory statements by Arafat, Senator Warren Rudman said in a Senate hearing on April 13, "It seems...that they say one thing in Arabic and something else in English as if no one in the world could translate the two."

Said refers to Israel's "endless occupation," once again ignoring history. As A.M. Rosenthal pointed out in the New York Times, "It was the Arab countries that seized Gaza and the West Bank, which were to be part of the Palestinian state under the 1947 U.N. partition plan, and occupied them for 20 years—not in peace but with constant harassment and attack against Israel."

While lamenting that the PLO has no territory of its own, Said ignores the fact that the PLO was actually founded three years before the "occupation" in 1964 by Egypt and Syria to conduct terrorist acts against Israel. It is dedicated not to liberating the territories, but to the destruction of Israel. (The PLO charter still calls for the destruction of Israel regardless of what Arafat is now saying.)

Said says in the interview that the PLO has represented the Palestinian national movement over the last 20 years. Does he realize that over the last 20 years the PLO has kidnapped and murdered civilians, has sometimes used force to liberate sacred shrines and towns, and has with Israel? Over that same period the PLO has armed and trained terrorist killers from more than 20 countries.

In the Record interview, Said answers a question regarding how the intifada could "continue" to raise the cost of oppression for the Israelis by stating that as a result of the uprising "it's [now] difficult for me to imagine the Israelis killing all Palestinians or even moving them all out, they can't do that. Logically it can't be done." As this presentation of Israelis as ruthless oppressors is present throughout the interview, I wonder if it ever occurred to Said that Israel might not want to kill all Palestinians. Israel does not hate the Arabs, nor does it wish to dominate them; Israel wants peace.

Even after Arafat's famed declaration recognizing Israel in December, Yafar said in February, "We have not recognized Israel. We will do so when they recognize us." (New York Times, 5/2/89) The present situation in the West Bank and the Gaza strip is unacceptable, however. Until there is a party that accepts Israel and is willing to enter into direct negotiations, there will be no peaceful settlement.

We should not just throw up our hands and say, 'Banning it presents problems; we'd better leave it legal.'

Recognizing the pragmatic problems with overturning Roe v. Wade raises a central question: Should abortion remain legal in order to avoid the practical difficulties which outlawing it would produce? Are our laws dictated by practical or by ethical and moral considerations? I would hope that the answer is that our laws are based on moral principles, not merely on practicality. However, I have to say that at this instant I do not think that we can ban abortion, because the necessary structures and attitudes are not in place in our society to handle it.

Just because I do not think we can ban abortion at this instant, however, does not mean I think it should never be banned. On the contrary, I think that it is imperative that abortion should be ended as soon as possible. In order to make this possible, then, we must turn our energies toward seeking solutions to these practical problems—ways to provide more responsibility for children on fathers as well as mothers, sexual education which emphasizes far more the responsibility involved in sexual activity, improved adoption procedures, social programs to assist young and poor parents to care for their children while not permitting them to neglect their responsibility. American society must take parenthood and raising families more seriously.

We cannot allow the present difficulties to make us throw up our hands in despair and say, "Because banning it presents so many problems, we'd better just leave abortion legal." Simply because bringing about change is difficult is no reason not to seek to bring about it. We need to question our basic moral positions without being bound by what is practical.

Debate on abortion issue continues at Williams

Scientific "facts" do not resolve question of abortion

by Valerie Hartouni '90
Visiting Assistant Professor of Political Science

I am truly struck by how very safe the issue of abortion is for some men, able to see it at all alone in their offices, studies, libraries, pondering that difficult and abstract question of when human life begins; imagining, as they ponder, what it would have been like had they been like that; projecting their own little, unique, autonomous selves back into the womb, assuming that they are now every bit of what they were then, only bigger; wondering what makes a woman so immature, selfish, negligent, irresponsible and irrational as to terminate her pregnancy for what, they think, must be reasons of convenience: relief that they escaped, but troubled that other unborn, innocent utterly dependent, defenseless little creatures like themselves aren't so fortunate.

"That difficult and abstract question of when human life begins: What about the networks of nurturing relationships into which these fetal men and women were born—networks and relationships of care, nourishment, and comfort which fostered their growth, and shaped their state of being, something women enter into by nature, instinct, or destiny, but an historically specific set of social practices, conditioned by relations of power, including, of course, class, race, and gender. As a student of history, Mr. Passaro, you are surely aware that social practices such as mothering change from one historical epoch to another and differ across cultures.

"Modern biology teaches..." (Passaro, p.3)

Although individual members of the medical and scientific community may maintain that human life begins at conception, such claims, according to the National Academy of Science, are not scientifically rooted, but remain a matter of personal, moral, and religious belief. In a resolution passed on April 28, 1981, during its 118th Annual Meeting, in response to Section 1 of U.S. Senate Bill S. 158 (the Human Life Statute) which found that "present day scientific evidence indicated a significant likelihood that human life begins at conception," this prestigious body maintained that "identifying 'human life' and defining 'person' entailed questions to which science [could] provide no answer." The resolution continued, "The proposal...has no basis within our scientific understanding. Defining the time at which the developing embryo becomes a 'person' must remain a matter of moral and religious values."

Appeals to scientific "facts" in the debate about abortion are simply specious: facts do not carry with them self-evident interpretations. Indeed, the debate is not about "facts" but about what significance or meaning to attach to particular facts. For example, it is a generally agreed upon "fact" that with conception, species identity is established; by the fourth week of gestation, a heartbeat is discernible; by the sixth week, the central nervous system is developed; by the eighth week, the fetus has assumed a recognizably human physical form. However, what these "facts" mean, among them is significant in a moral as opposed to scientific sense is not obvious; again, they do not carry with them self-evident interpretations. Which "facts" are marshaled in the dispute or are to be singled out as relevant depends upon antecedently held views and values that support the singling out of particular facts as "relevant" or certain data as "evidence." Put another way, we do not simply pull back the curtain on some set of pre-given truths—would that it were so simple. Determining what it takes and means to be human is not a matter of discovery, but a difficult moral and political matter of decision.

Pro-choice: "The term functions as a smoke screen by which we [who is this 'we'] can all avoid dealing with the 'negotiation of the developing child.'" (Passaro, p.7)

Forcing women to bear children they do not want is "compulsory motherhood." Forcing women to bear children conceived as a result of incest and rape is an obscenity, I suspect, Mr. Passaro, that were you raped, you would suffer considerable trauma and experience a deep sense of violation. I suspect that you would count it a blessing that you did not also have to deal with a possible pregnancy. I suspect that were your mother or sister or girlfriend raped, you

continued on page 4

Practical problems should not obscure moral concerns

by Catherine Hirschfeld '90

In anticipation that many people will criticize Paul Passaro's piece on abortion in last week's Record for being "a man trying to tell women what to do," I would like to present a woman's opinion that abortion is unethical and should not be considered a woman's right. I would like to go further than Mr. Passaro did, however, and distinguish two aspects of the abortion question.

It seems to me that two issues must be considered in debating whether or not abortion should be legal: the moral and the pragmatic questions.

The moral question seems to have two general approaches: is abortion the taking of human life, and is it the mother's right to abort a fetus on the basis of a "right to control her body?"

In response to the first, I hold that abortion is the taking of life, whatever the stage of development of the fetus. At any time during pregnancy, regardless of the viability of the fetus outside the womb at that time, if left to develop naturally, within a fairly brief span of time it will be a viable human being, unless miscarriage occurs. Therefore, saying that abortion is not the taking of human life if performed early enough seems to me a feeble argument. After all, babies are still dependent on others to care for all of their needs long after birth, and yet we consider them human individuals. Autonomy from the mother therefore does not seem an appropriate condition for defining human life.

What about the rights of a woman to control her own body? It does not seem to me that the right to control my body gives me the right to have an abortion. I would argue that when a woman becomes voluntarily sexually active, she, along with her partner, must assume the responsibility for the possible consequences, one of which is conception. The responsibility which accompanies conception is the duty and obligation to care for the child (or else) subsequently. The second responsibility belongs to both parents, but biology, for better or for worse, places the first responsibility squarely on the mother. If a woman feels that fulfilling these responsibilities is out of the question, she should not be sexually involved, or at the very least she should use birth control, recognizing that it is not perfectly reliable and that she may ultimately become pregnant. It seems to me that those who argue that it is a woman's right to do as she wishes with her body candidates for adoption because they are born diseased or addicted to drugs? (Consider this to be a much more pressing problem than that of deaths of women due to poorly conducted illegal abortions. Certainly I do not take the attitude that women who want to have abortions deserve to die, but one cannot forget that the number of unborn children are being killed by legal abortion is far greater than the number of women who would die as a result of botched illegal abortions.)

I would hope that if abortion were outlawed and birth control simultaneously made widely available in such a way that the number of children conceived whose mothers felt unable to or refused to care for them would drop substantially. In particular, ignore the responsibility which comes with the right.

Some may say that the mother's rights are greater than those of the unborn child, and therefore the mother is justified in aborting a fetus on the basis of the pregnancy would cause her great inconvenience or if she cannot foresee a way to care for the child. I would ask on what basis the rights of the mother are declared to be greater than those of the unborn child. In addition, if the child is given up for adoption, making the stakes nine months of the mother's life versus the child's entire life, is not the second more significant than the first? Certainly I would find giving up a child for adoption very difficult, but having an abortion would be no less psychologically and emotionally traumatic.

To me, then, the moral aspect of the abortion issue seems clear. As a purely abstract moral question, then, I would wholeheartedly support banning abortion. However, we live in a world that has practical as well as abstract ethical aspects, and ending abortion would produce tremendous practical difficulties. How will appropriate responsibility for care of children be placed on the father as well as the mother? How will we care for the unwanted children who will be born, given that birth control will not be practiced widely enough to completely eliminate unwanted pregnancies? In particular, what will be done for the children whose mothers do not wish to or cannot care for them and who are unlikely who are unlikely active, she, along with her partner, must assume the responsibility for the possible consequences, one of which is conception. The responsibility which accompanies conception is the duty and obligation to care for the child (or else) subsequently. The second responsibility belongs to both parents, but biology, for better or for worse, places the first responsibility squarely on the mother. If a woman feels that fulfilling these responsibilities is out of the question, she should not be sexually involved, or at the very least she should use birth control, recognizing that it is not perfectly reliable and that she may ultimately become pregnant. It seems to me that those who argue that it is a woman's right to do as she wishes with her body arguing that it is a woman's right to control her body ignores the responsibility that comes with the right.

What about the rights of a woman to control her own body? It does not seem to me that the right to control my body gives me the right to have an abortion. I would argue that when a woman becomes voluntarily sexually active, she, along with her partner, must assume the responsibility for the possible consequences, one of which is conception. The responsibility which accompanies conception is the duty and obligation to care for the child (or else) subsequently. The second responsibility belongs to both parents, but biology, for better or for worse, places the first responsibility squarely on the mother. If a woman feels that fulfilling these responsibilities is out of the question, she should not be sexually involved, or at the very least she should use birth control, recognizing that it is not perfectly reliable and that she may ultimately become pregnant. It seems to me that those who argue that it is a woman's right to do as she wishes with her body candidates for adoption because they are born diseased or addicted to drugs? (Consider this to be a much more pressing problem than that of deaths of women due to poorly conducted illegal abortions. Certainly I do not take the attitude that women who want to have abortions deserve to die, but one cannot forget that the number of unborn children are being killed by legal abortion is far greater than the number of women who would die as a result of botched illegal abortions.)

I would hope that if abortion were outlawed and birth control simultaneously made widely available in such a way that the number of children conceived whose mothers felt unable to or refused to care for them would drop substantially. In particular,

On the Record..

"People claim the faculty are so liberal here; if they are, they should get out and show it."

--Brian Coan '92 congratulating Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew for his community involvement. Coan is currently running for Williamstown selectman.

"I have no prejudice against Williams College. I've lived here for half my life, and I want it to succeed and thrive. I don't know that I'd expect them to have our interests at heart, but I just want some common consideration."

--Mrs. John W. Miller, who lives next door to Jenness House and opposes its use as a multicultural center.

"She longs for a residential area with children playing. I appreciate that."

--College Treasurer Will Reed saying he is personally concerned with the complaints of Miller and other town residents.

"It would be a cinematic tragedy if this lone pillar of excellence and good taste were to disappear forever."

--Philip J. Power '92 on the possibility of Images closing.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible and not more than 500 words. They must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. They must be typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-2289.

This issue marks the end of Volume 102 of the Williams Record. We will resume publication next fall, on Tuesday, September 12, 1989. In addition, we will produce a special Commencement issue for the graduating class of 1989 on Sunday, June 4.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor
BILL SAVADOV, Arts Editor JAY STEINMAN & KATH THOMAS, Photography Editors
ASHESHI SITHI, Productions Editor

Assistant News Editors
DAN SKWIRE, ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW
GREG HART & JUSTIN SMITH
Assistant Sports Editors
KERR HOUTSON, ANNE JOSEPH, JUAN ALONZO
Assistant Productions Editors
ELISA DUGUNDJI, SARAH OUCHI & GEOFF OXNAN

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Animal experimentation: P.A.W. responds to the Observer

by Linda Puth '91 and Scott Higgins '92

As members of Williams' newly formed animal rights group, we would like to defend our personal and group positions in response to Peter Crawford's article in last week's The Williams Observer.

Linda Puth '91 is the founder and former chair of Williams Students Against Animal Exploitation, a committee of the Purple Drums. We recently derived from the larger organization to form a separate group, currently led by co-chairs Adam Reinhardt '92 and Scott Higgins '92. We felt the need to change our name to People for Animal Welfare to illustrate our belief that animal rights and animal welfare are synonymous and cannot be separated.

The group concentrates almost entirely upon the issue of the use of animals in consumer testing, as Crawford states. While we have not sparked fervent debate over either of these issues, we do hope to play an active role in spreading information concerning consumer testing to the college community. An example of one such relatively unknown experimental procedure is the Draize test, commonly used to test consumer products (e.g. cosmetics, household cleaners, and shampoos). This test records the effects of substances on rabbits' eyes, the irritancy potentials of which are then extrapolated to human reactions. Anesthetic is not used. Apart from its costs and cruelty, such experimentation is problematic when one considers the differences between human and other species' biological systems. Less expensive and more reliable alternatives, such as cell- and organ-culture tests, do exist, but are rarely implemented because of consumer ignorance and lobbying pressure from animal suppliers.

Although condemning the use of consumer testing is the extent to which our group takes a position, we both wish to personally respond to the further issues raised in Mr. Crawford's article. In reference to the role of animals in classroom laboratories, we believe that it is essential to beware of desensitizing students towards the value of life. In addition, we encourage the use of other methods such as models, texts, or films for students who do not wish to kill or dissect an animal.

Professor Snolmon of the Psychology

Department, a source in Mr. Crawford's article, dismisses the use of computer models as an alternative method for testing. In doing so, he seems to place too much faith in the accuracy of animal experimentation. Again, the difference in biological systems between species can lead to misleading data, sometimes with tragic results, such as the birth defects caused by drug Thalidomide, which was approved as safe after extensive testing in animals.

Continuing his argument, Dr. Solomon states, "for each animal killed in research, 100 are terminated to animal shelters and an additional 1000 in the wild." In order to illustrate the small role that research plays in the total number of deaths of animals. However, this does not take into account the suffering to which many test animals are subjected, or the fact that animals are often kept alive in order to perform repeated trials. His statistic is analogous to arguing that because political executions comprise only a small percentage of human deaths, a group should not target them for public concern.

According to Mr. Crawford, Dr. Solomon claims that "animals have profited neously as much as humans from experimentation." However, according to Trans-Species Unlimited, a national animal rights organization, an estimated 100 million animals died in experimentation during 1980. Can the death of millions of animals every year be justified by the benefits of a few vaccinations and medications? While these staggering numbers further our opposition to the use of animals in research, they do not mandate our "wholesale rejection" of the benefits Dr. Solomon maintains.

Mr. Crawford continues his article by exaggerating some members of our group as belonging to an "extremist faction." While this member (in reality, only one, co-chair Adam Reinhardt, exists) does follow stricter guidelines, some false assumptions follow which do not apply to him personally. First of all, Adam does not have his beliefs on the premise that "human life is equivalent to animal life," but instead, that "animals deserve the same respect as any living thing."

Second, with regards to "speciesism," Mr. Crawford never contracted Adam, in order to discover his true beliefs, but rather, describes an amorphous "faction" whose dishonesty, hatred of human society, and charges of speciesism in others he must insinuate. For example, he makes the melodramatic accusation that "To charge others with 'speciesism' is less to express concern for animals than to voice a hatred and contempt for man himself and the industrialized, progressive society which he has built." Furthermore, without ever asking Adam for his views, Mr. Crawford dismisses him saying that he "confin[es] nothing to intelligent debate."

Using his own speciesism as a basis for argument, Mr. Crawford claims that "hard-liners would do well to concede that humans are, indeed, the most important species." Such an argument is equivalent to maintaining that because we are American, the United States is the most important country. What are the qualifications of this hierarchy which he constructs? Can such a qualitative importance be placed on one species when all species are interdependent?

In his concluding statements, Mr. Crawford attempts to impose his own set of beliefs and morals on the reader. For example, he insists that "Whether or not we admit it, we all value the lives of humans above those of animals and realize that we simply cannot speak of animals on equal terms." Both of us value the lives of humans and other species very highly, and although we do not speak of them on equal terms, we do speak of them on unequal terms, instead finding it completely unnecessary to rank them.

Overall, we are disappointed with and offended by the journalistic techniques displayed in Mr. Crawford's article. Some of his most outstanding flaws include: his failure to inform Linda that he would present a copy of her interview to a professor for criticism, assumptions of an individual's standpoint without any actual or attempted communication with that individual, assigning personal values as a societal standard, and misinformation about the purposes and goals of our group.

Except where noted, these views have been solely our own. P.A.W. is only concerned with the use of animals in the realm of consumer testing. If you would like more information or have any questions, feel free to contact either of us.

Abortion: woman's control of her life at stake

continued from page 3

conceded feel a deep sense of outrage. I also suspect that you would not force or insist that the state force your mother, your sister, or your girlfriend to bring a resulting pregnancy to term. Think about the concrete reality, the material conditions, of your mother's life, your sister's life, your girlfriend's life. Consider the life of the woman who was brutally beaten and repeatedly raped by a group of young men in Central Park last week: do you honestly suppose that you have something to tell this woman about "human dignity," or about the life she might find herself carrying? Bringing an unwanted pregnancy to term is not the functional equivalent of a nocturnal emission (it happens, it's over, end of sperm, end of story). Bringing an unwanted pregnancy to term is simply an annoyance or inconvenience "comparable to, say, standing in a long line at the supermarket." (Willis)

The issue here is whether and under what conditions women are to have children. "As long as women live, society is defined as primary childrearing, control over the terms and means of pregnancy and childbirth will remain a necessary condition for their participation in all spheres of social life." (CARASA) Why is this non-eculate men claiming commitment to the "preservation and betterment of human life" dismiss as immaterial or immature women's need to control their lives and bodies, including the terms and conditions of reproduction? What is it about such control that suddenly has them campaigning for fetuses they would not think twice about were abortion illegal?

I would like to encourage Mr. Passaro and those concerned with the well-being of life during gestation to begin addressing this issue in somewhat less abstract, myopic terms. Forget about increasing state surveillance and control of women and "the men who get [them] pregnant." Forget about Planned Parenthood (at least until you are able to engage in a somewhat more nuanced, historically accurate, reading of its founding). What about aggressiveness in California, and the exposure of pregnant firefighters to pesticides known to cause severe birth defects and spontaneous abortions of wanted pregnancies? What about exposure to harmful mutagens and teratogenic agents in the workplace which threaten the reproductive health not only of women but of men as well? Why not engage in political action against Firestone, Goodyear, DuPont, General Motors, and Allied Chemicals to name just a few corporations who, by their own admission, expose their employees to a whole range of reproductive hazards and deal with it, not by providing a safe and healthy work environment, but by female-exclusionary "protection" policies. If talking on corporate greed seems too overwhelming a task or a tad uninspiring, Mr. Passaro, why not direct your passion and energies toward making male birth control a national medical priority, its use a matter of public regulation and enforcement? One hundred percent effective and safe male birth control would not only solve the problem of abortion; it would also be a humane and decent alternative to compulsory fatherhood.

News

Dr. Johnetta B. Cole

Paul H. Nitzze

Dr. John A. Davis

Anne Hawley

Norman E. Hugo

Five will receive honorary degrees at 200th Commencement

News Staff

In addition to over 500 seniors who will receive degrees at Williams 200th Commencement, five distinguished individuals will be awarded honorary degrees at the ceremony on Sunday, June 4.

Johnetta Cole, the president of Spelman College, who is delivering the Commencement address, will be given a Doctor of Letters degree.

John A. Davis, Sr., a graduate of the Williams class of 1933 and Professor of Political Science, Emeritus, at the City College of New York, will receive Doctor of Laws Degree. Davis worked for the federal government on job discrimination issues, and is a founding member of the Black Academy of Arts and Letters and the American Society of African Culture. In addition, he has served on the State Department's Advisory Committee on Africa and its Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. He headed New York State's Commission Against Discrimination from 1957-61 and in 1953 directed non-legal research for the NAACP's brief in the Supreme Court's landmark Brown vs. Topeka case. Davis was also a Williams trustee from 1972-77.

Anne Hawley, executive director of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities will be given a degree of Doctor of Humane Letters. She has overseen a ten-fold growth in the council's funding and has spearheaded many new arts programs and services in the state. In the early 1970s, she developed a consortium of museums and performing arts groups, the Cultural Education Collaborative, which brings together schools and cultural institutions and artists. She received the 1987 MassArt Award from the Massachusetts College of Art, and a Lyman Ziegler award from the Massachusetts Typographers Foundation for outstanding service to the state.

Arms negotiator to be honored Paul H. Nitzze, chief arms control advisor during the Reagan Administration, will receive Doctor of Laws degree. He was Secretary of the Navy from 1963-67, and Deputy Secretary of Defense for two years after that. From 1969-74, he was a member of the U.S. delegation to the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks. For Reagan's first term, Nitzze headed the delegation to the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Negotiations with the Soviet Union, held in Geneva. In Reagan's second term, Nitzze served as Special Advisor to the President and to the Secretary of State on Arms Control Matters. Nitzze has been involved with the government since 1941, and he was chief of the Metals and Minerals Branch of the Board of Economic Warfare during World War II. He was awarded the Medal of Merit by President Truman, and the Presidential Medal of Freedom by Reagan in 1985. Also, Norman E. Hugo, Williams class of 1955, will be given Doctor of Science Degree. Hugo has done extensive research in the field of reconstructive surgery, and has been head of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery at Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center since 1982. Much of his work has involved the repairing of skin damaged by cancer, burns and other disease and injuries. During the Vietnam War he served for two years in the U.S. Army as assistant chief of plastic surgery at Walter Reed Army Hospital. Last year he was president of the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery, the largest organization of certified plastic surgeons in the world. Hugo has served on many other boards and councils active in the field.

College will give money to town for water project

by Soojin Kim

Williams College will contribute funds to a proposed $3.5 million Williamstown water improvement project, according to college Vice President and Treasurer William Reed.

Reed said he will not know the specific dollar amount of the college's contribution to the project until he sees what impact the new water rates, proposed for vote at town meeting on May 23, will have on the college's water bill.

"The college tries to help the town with projects that directly benefit the college," Reed said.

However, Anita Barker, chair of the Williamstown Board of Selectmen, said that she thinks the college's contribution is anything but definite. "He hasn't said 'yes' and he hasn't said 'no' to our request for aid in needed capital projects. I understand from his letter to Town Manager Steve Ledoux that contribution to the water improvement project will depend on the new water rates," she said.

The town is facing a budget crunch due to a cut of $400,000 in its annual operating budget for fiscal year 1990.

According to Town Assessor William Barkin, a contribution would bring the college closer to paying its fair share of the town's tax burden. "While revenue from property taxes account for 50 percent of the town's operating budget, Williams College, as a non-profit organization, is the owner of a great deal of property that is tax-exempt -- property that would otherwise yield tax money to be used for capital expenditures, like the water improvement project," Barkin said.

Educational facilities, including all student housing, which constitute the college proper, are tax-exempt. "The college doesn't pay its share for some of the services it uses. For instance, the college is exempt from the fire district tax, which, although separate from the property tax, is also based on property value," Barkin said.

Reed said that he and the Elders, with whom he has worked closely regarding Images, will look to the Williamstown

continued on page 6

continued on page 5

Wassenaar wins Fulbright, first in his position to do so

by Ellen Drought

Winthrop Wassenaar, director of the physical plant at Williams, has received a Fulbright Fellowship for Academic Administration. He is the first director of physical plant to receive such an award.

Wassenaar will spend at least three months in the spring of 1990 at the University of Warwick in Coventry, England under the terms of the fellowship. His work will concern analysis in the areas of energy conservation, computerization of the physical plant, and planning and construction procedures.

Because the Warwick and Williams campuses are similar in terms of size, number of buildings and square feet, and the age of many of the buildings, Wassenaar expects the exchange of information and ideas to benefit both institutions.

Wassenaar has already worked extensively with English contractors and architects. When Williams purchased four buildings for its Williams-Oliver Program in 1984, Wassenaar oversaw the planning and renovation needed to adapt the buildings and grounds for that program.

At the present time, Wassenaar is spending an administrative leave from Williams as a volunteer physical plant consultant at Appalachian and historically black colleges throughout the southeast.

Winthrop Wassenaar, Director of the Physical Plant

Wassenaar received a B.S. degree in civil engineering in 1959 and a M.S. degree in 1960, both from W.P.I. He taught engineering mechanics at Wentworth Institute in Boston for three years before joining Williams in 1964 as assistant director of physical plant. He was named director in January 1983.

Compiled from an April 27, 1989 press release from the Office of Public Information.

School aids water project

continued from page 4

this month calls for separate, tiered rates for residential, industrial, commercial and institutional uses in place of the present flat rate. If the proposal passes, water users will be charged according to the size of water pipe used. According to Richard Peterson, Superintendent of Water and Sewers, the meter service charge would be $30.24 quarterly for dorms, up from the current flat fee of three dollars, in addition to $1.65, up from $1.40, for every 750 gallons of water.

The proposals also seek to raise rental fees on private fire hydrants, many of which are located on the Williams College campus.

The water improvement project is required by the Environmental Protection Agency's Clean Water Act water quality standards.

According to Peterson, Williamstown had the option to install filtration devices at a cost of roughly $5.5 million in order to eliminate organisms indigenous to the surface water supplies. Instead, the town chose the more cost-effective approach of drilling more wells and storing water in a 2.75 million gallon storage tank.

Aid-for-service bill won't make it through Congress

Williams said he was personally "leery" of linking student aid to national service, but that if bill co-sponsors Senator Sam Nunn (D-Ga.) and Representative David McCurdy (D-Ok.) amended the measure it would be reconsidered later.

"Funding for student aid never should be sacrificed on the altar of national service," Spelman College President Johnetta Cole at hearings before Williams' subcommittee. Cole, by the way, will be the main speaker at Williams College's 200th commencement this June.

Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) promised to propose a different measure that would let students do volunteer work to earn "education vouchers" they could use to pay for college.

The U.S. Secretary of Energy James Watkins told another Senate panel April 21 that President George Bush will soon make a proposal to create a Youth Entering Service. Watkins said he didn't know the details of how the service might work, only that students would not be financially compensated for joining it.

"There is a temptation to explain away gender differences in test performance by simply dismissing test instruments as biased," College Board President Donald Stewart said.

Stewart, whose group sponsors the Scholastic Aptitude Test and other standardized admissions exams written by the Educational Testing Service, said he would like to see more thoughtful reactions given to the testing process, and that this new research might provide incentive for that.

In February, a New York court ruled women were not getting their fair share of Empire Scholarships -- which the state awards to students with high SAT scores -- because the SATs seemed biased against women.

FairTest, a Cambridge, Massachusetts based group critical of the standardized tests, maintains women's SAT scores don't accurately predict how well they perform in college.

continued from page 1

"The gender gap" between men's and women's scores on standardized tests has been narrowing, the College Board reported April 24.

Verbal test scores are closer, as men continue to do better and women do worse than they used to, according to researchers Gita Wilder and Kristin Powell. Women's averages on the math section are rising and the men's scores are remaining high, the researchers discovered.

continued on page 6

News

No drugs or no dollars

Fed. grant recipients will be asked to just say no

by Sallie Han

Where drugs and dollars are concerned, the federal government will pluck battle even in the Berkshire. The war on drugs has moved on campus.

Under the new Drug-Free Workplace Act, students and faculty receiving federal grants will be required to certify that they are drug-free before they are eligible for any money.

The Drug-Free Workplace Act requires that Williams College, as a recipient of federal grants and contracts, take action prescribed by law toward a drug-free workplace. This affects faculty, staff and students receiving money from the federal government.

"If one is a Pell Grant recipient, you now have to sign a statement which says something to the effect that you are not involved with drugs in any way, shape, or form -- and that is law effective now," Director of Financial Aid Phil Wick said.

The Education Department announced that department investigators would be making spot checks to enforce the Pell Grant provision. The specifics of this enforcement campaign, according to their announcement, are not yet available, but the Education Department has no plans for drug testing. Instead they said that they plan to rely on tips from the public.

In compliance with the law, which went into effect March 18 of this year, the college has published a statement on the establishment of a Drug-Free Workplace. It was released to faculty and staff on May 1. Assistant to the President Nancy McIntire said that another separate statement will probably be issued to student Pell Grant recipients.

One of the law's requirements is that "individuals receiving federal grants or contracts including student recipients of Pell Grants are required to certify to the funding agency before receiving any awards that they are drug-free."

All grants affected

All grants received from the federal government, regardless of the amount involved, are covered by the law. All grants and contracts received or renewed after March 18 are subject to the Drug-Free Workplace Act. Williams College received $850,000 in federal grants and contracts in 1988-9. These grants include funds from the National Endowment for Humanities and the National Endowment for the Arts. Seventeen people were in charge of those grants.

"I'm not sure of the total number of people involved, because on those projects you have hired research assistants and lab technicians. It would be difficult to say exactly how many," Winston said. "A chunk of that sum is in the sciences.

But part of that is in the social sciences, and a substantial amount goes into something like the Museum," Winston said.

"For next year [the law] affects only students who receive Pell Grants," Wick said.

The Drug-Free Workplace Act, he said, does not apply to other forms of federal financial aid.

During the academic year 1988-89, 201 students, out of a total of 734 students receiving financial aid, received Pell Grants. The Pell Grant gives a maximum $2300 in financial aid to students.

The sum amounts to $277,000 in Pell Grants at Williams College.

Additional information from "The Chronicle of Higher Education" and a National Association of College and University Business Officers special action report.

Freshman campaigns for local office

continued from page 1

appeal as a town candidate. I want them to think of me as a townsman."

Coan originally became interested in local issues and the local government last fall with the Pine Cobble issue. He said, "I really struck me that something so absurd was being done, especially something so unnecessary."

"They say they need more faculty housing to lure better faculty here. The school should attract faculty on [the school's] academic merit and not because of better housing."

The quoting of Emerson and Thoreau in the school's prospectus also draws Coan's ire. He said, "If the school wanted to live up to the principles in the prospectus, it would make it [Pine Cobble] a preserve. It's not as if it's the last resort or something."

He acknowledged that the town cannot directly halt Williams' plans. But, he added, "The town should be doing a lot more to stop it." He said that he feels that the town could use moral pressure on the school. Coan said he feels that the town needs to carry out an idea to start a local youth center. He said, "The town really needs to build a youth center since there's nothing for [kids] to do on the weekends." He said, "It would be kind of a weekend hangout, something where local bands could have equipment and perform... so there'd be somewhere for kids in the town to go to or for them to plan something at." Coan also suggested that the town could use the old

"Since I'm going to be in Williamstown for almost four years, it's almost my duty to get involved."

municipal garage. He said, "You probably wouldn't have to build anything."

In addition, Coan said that the town should involve itself more with world and national issues such as disarmament, nuclear power, and Apartheid. "The town could really take a more global view -- like banning Coca-Cola. Coan is against Coca-Cola because it sells formula to bottlers in South Africa. Furthermore, Coan is against a state plan to build Route 2 and also to install a traffic light on Main Street. Coan said that the townspeople are against it too because it would destroy the town's character. "It's something that's really not necessary. It's development for development's sake."

Coan has been running a write-in campaign because he did not register soon enough to get his name on the actual ballot. To make his name well known, he has been putting up posters throughout the town advertising his views.

Drew has been helpful

"[Professor] John Drew saw me when I was handing out posters in faculty mailboxes, and he was very supportive. He liked the idea [of Coan's candidacy] a lot." While Drew has been helpful, Coan criticized general faculty apathy. "For all my disagreements with Professor Drew on issues, he's the only one who's actually done anything [to get directly involved]... he ran for state office." He continued, "People claim the faculty are so liberal here; if they are, they should get out and show it."

Coan also said that he feels that his candidacy is a first step to more important things. He said, "Looking more ahead, I think it's important to have some sort of a third party in the country. If 50 percent of the people don't vote, clearly there's a lot of apathy." He added, "A couple of people have said they were never interested before, but now, they're going to go out and vote for me. It shows more choice."

Students write letters to Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, considered the swing vote in the Court's reconsideration of the Roe vs. Wade abortion case. The recently-formed Williams Pro-Choice Organization set up the table. Isackson

Pro-choice students fight Roe vs. Wade rollback

continued from page 1

According to Duggan, the group does not hold much hope for swaying the Supreme Court's decision. She said that the Court had already held a non-binding vote and were now writing opinions. A final decision will probably be reached sometime this summer.

Mass. Legislature may be next

"I don't think Roe v. Wade will be overturned, but if abortion is restricted, it will especially affect poor women. Our next move would be to go in the Massachusetts State Legislature to prevent or limit any restrictions. It's important for legislators to know that their constituents are pro-choice."

"A lot of people assume that a pro-choice group is supporting abortion as contraception, and we're definitely not," Alice Maurice '90 said.

"We don't support abortions as a form of birth control," Ellie Carson '91 agreed. "We are supporting the individual's right to choose."

Recognizing the limits of what they can do, the group is putting a high premium on raising awareness of Williams students, according to Sanders-Depeue. "The more information people have, the more intellectual a decision they can make. That is the point of the movement -- people being able to make informed decisions about their bodies."

Students start van to aid elderly in getting to cultural events

by Helen Matthews

Josh Becker '91 is the student coordinator of a new van service that will transport elderly town residents to event in the Williams College campus.

On the evening of Friday, April 21, a van driven by a Williams College student transported 16 elderly residents from the Williamstown area to the Berkshire Symphony. The success of this event led to the creation of a program that will provide transportation for older people to cultural events on and around Williams College campus.

"We had eighteen people participate and, in my experience, that's a terrific response especially for the first time," Lynn Hood, executive director of the Williamstown Council on Aging, said. "It started because I became aware that many older people don't drive. Many who do drive, drive only in the day. On the weekend and in the evening, there is no public transportation. Our community is so rich in cultural events that our elderly people's lives, yet in many instances the elderly cannot participate," Hood, who originated the idea, said.

Clint Tavell, an elderly man who took advantage of the new service said, "I'm a concert-goer anyway. I'm no stranger to Chapin Hall. I enjoyed the convenience of the van dropping you right off at the door."

"A lot of us don't drive at night and I enjoyed being picked up. I thought the concert was great," Ramona Fleming said.

The college agreed to let the elderly people attend the concert for free. "Many of them [the elderly] live on Social Security and that's it. At five dollars per event, the cost can be prohibitive," Hood said.

"Her goal is to get the same discount for the elderly people as the Williams students get, which is usually free," Josh Hecker '91, the College Council organizer of the service, said.

continued on page 6

continued on page 5

Beyond
the Bubble

Rafsanjani advocates destruction of Western life and property

During a prayer service in Tehran last Friday, Speaker of the Iranian parliament Hajj Ali Akbar Rafsanjani urged Palestinians to kill Westerners wherever they find them, attack American interests world-wide, and hijack airplanes in order to obtain concessions from Israel. Referring to the deaths of 400 Palestinians over the last 17 months during uprisings in the Israeli occupied territories, Rafsanjani said, "If in retaliation for every Palestinian martyred in Palestine they kill and execute, not inside Palestine, five Americans or Britons or Frenchmen," the Israelis would "not continue to do these wrongs." He also advocated blowing up American factories overseas.

Hush and Kohl discuss future of short-range nuclear forces

President George Bush and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl spoke for twenty minutes by telephone Friday in an attempt to settle a dispute over short-range nuclear missiles in Europe. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization has been shaken in recent weeks by a split between West Germany, advocating immediate negotiation, and Britain and the U.S., who want to maintain a harder line. The two allies want to modernize NATO's short-range nuclear forces in West Germany before negotiating for reductions. U.S. officials fear that premature elimination of the weapons would result in destabilization and insist that the short range weapons are necessary to counteract the Warsaw pact advantage in conventional forces. "It does not appear that a basis for an agreement is there but we'll continue to discuss it and see," said Martin Fitzwater, the White House spokesman. Hush had been waiting for Kohl's phone call for over a week.

Unemployment rate jumped three-tenths in April

The latest government economic data indicates a significant slowdown in economic growth during April. The unemployment rate climbed three-tenths of a point between March and April from 4.9 percent to 5.2 percent, and job growth slackened considerably. Despite the figures, economic analysts do not foresee a recession in 1989. The bond market rallied last week in anticipation that interest rates will fall as the Federal Reserve acts to bolster the economy by easing monetary growth restrictions.

North found guilty on three of 12 counts

Former Lt. Col. Oliver North, on trial as the principal defendant in the Iran-Contra scandal, was convicted Thursday on three relatively minor charges, including destroying documents. While North was acquitted of lying to Congress, he still may see some jail time in the future. Jury members, interviewed after the trial, said they were reluctant to find North guilty on more of the charges because they felt he was only following orders, and that the plan wasn't primarily his idea. North said that he plans to appeal the verdict.

Bush Administration criticizes educational system

The Bush Administration announced Wednesday that the performance of the nation's schools is "merely average" and "stagnant." Despite overall lackluster performance, Education Secretary Lauro F. Cavazos noted that test scores for minority students continue to show improvement as black and hispanic students begin to close the high school "graduation gap." State education officials claim the report is statistically misleading and designed to reduce calls for increased federal spending on education.

Compiled by Justin Smith from the Berkshire Eagle and the New York Times

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinemas I, II, III Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
Pet Sematary	7:00	9:15
Say Anything	7:00	9:15
She's Out of Control	7:05	9:15
Images Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
The Dressmaker	May 4-May 11	7:00
Jackie	May 4-May 11	9:00
Women On The Verge	May 12-May 18	7:00
Of A Nervous Breakdown	May 12-May 18	9:00
Parens

North Adams Cinema Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Listen To Me	7:00	9:15
K-9	7:00	9:15
Pet Sematary	7:00	9:15
She's Out of Control	7:00	9:15

Pittsfield Cinema Center Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
K-9, The Dream Team, She's Out of Control, Listen To Me, Winter People, Major League	Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30, Rain Man: 6:45 & 9:15
New York Stories: 6:45
Criminal Law and Horror Show: Sun-Thurs 9:15, Fri-Sat 9:30
Pet Sematary, Say Anything, Lower Boy: Sun-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:15 & 9:30

Berkshire Mail Cinema Rte 8, Lanesborough, 499-2558
Major League	12:50	3:20	6:50 9:20
Pet Sematary	12:55	3:25	6:55 9:25
She's Out of Control	12:50	3:20	6:50 9:20
K-9	1:05	3:35	7:05 9:35
Lowerboy	1:05	3:30	7:00
The Horror Show			9:30
Criminal Law			9:15
Rain Man			9:10
The Dream Team	12:40	3:10	6:40
Winter People	1:00	3:30	7:00 9:30
Listen To Me	1:10	3:40	7:00 9:40
The Adventures of Baron Munchausen	12:45	3:45	6:55 9:40

Subject to change after Thursday

RICHARD D. SIMPSON

O. VINCENT COUSSOLE

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267 (413) 458-4808

School vanpools elderly

continued from page 4

The idea was first brought before the College Council and a proposal was drawn up to meet the elderly people's needs. Becker is the student coordinator for the project. "The idea was to do a few things this year to generate interest and to get the program going, then move into a full fledged service next year," Becker said.

In Other
Ivory Towers

Penn paced on Ivy probation

At their annual conference in Cambridge, Massachusetts, the presidents of the eight Ivy League universities voted to place the University of Pennsylvania on probation. If the administration does not bring the School of Arts and Sciences up to what the officials termed "Ivy standards," the University could face expulsion from the Ivy League. U.Penn President Sheldon Hackney abstained from the vote and expressed shock at the move, which he termed "unnecessary" and "out of the blue." Calling the University's liberal arts program "substandard," Harvard University President Derek Bok said, "If we let Penn stay [in the Ivy League] with the program they have now, we might as well admit Penn State too."

More problems at Penn

Williams is not the only college experiencing some tension with its surrounding community. Residents of Philadelphia living near the University express an attitude of both respect and resentment toward the school. Some community members cite the advantages of an academic and cultural center in West Philadelphia, while others only see empty beer cans in the street and a lack of parking space during the school year. "Students can be really obnoxious sometimes," resident Jim Hern said. "They puke on our front lawn and blast their stereos at night. And while the school's in session, parking is a big problem." The University's expansion has made remaining in the neighborhood increasingly difficult, resident Sonya Thompson added.

More, more Dartmouth Review...

In an effort to overturn the dismissal of their racial discrimination suit, former Dartmouth Review staffers appealed a federal court's decision, but U.S. District Judge Shane Devine would have nothing to do with it. Devine dismissed the lawsuit, saying that students could not classify their case under the racial discrimination statutes they cited, even if the students showed they were being treated unfairly because of their conservative politics. Disagreeing with the ruling, the students' lawyer argued that "they can still seek protection from civil rights statutes even though they're white."

Compiled by Sara Dubow from college newspapers.

CLARKSBURG BREAD CO.

PRODUCTS BAKED FRESH FROM SCRATCH DAILY

Office • Tea • Juice • Soft Drinks

OPEN EVERY DAY (413) 458-2251

laCocina
MEXICAN RESTAURANTS

With coupon receive $2.00 off any FANTASTIC $13.95 regularly priced at $5.95 Tender chunks of marinated beef, chicken or pork. Sautéed with veggies and served piping hot with rice, beans, lettuce, tomatoes and hot tortillas & sour cream not valid on Saturdays

800 State Rd., North Adams, MA • (413) 454-4757
1600 Worcester St., Westfield, MA • (413) 458-4097

Women place second, men fourth at Div. III New England track meet

by Josh Levenberg

The Eph track team split up and went different ways last weekend; the men's team hosted Division III New England, while the women were divided into two groups, one which traveled to Division III New England, and one which traveled to Division III New England.

The men fared well against tough competition on Saturday as they fought to a fourth place finish in a field of 25 teams at New England. For the first time in the entire outdoor season the athletes and fans alike enjoyed sunny skies and beautiful weather. A

A Mardi Gras atmosphere was evident: the teams donned colorful uniforms and many sported unusual hairstyles.

Mardi Gras atmosphere was evident as the teams donned their own colorful uniforms and many runners sported unusual hairstyles. The events, which began with the decathlon on Thursday, provided plenty of entertainment as well as some nationally-qualifying times.

In the decathlon, Williams entered two competitors, Dan Hackett '91 and Dave Week '92. Hackett fought the elements and the other athletes to finish fifth in the competition with 5282 points over the two-day period. Part of the competition was forced into Towne Fieldhouse because of the weather.

In other events, Eph hammer thrower Joe McGinn '89, who has been plagued with a knee injury, claimed 12th place with a 47.35 meter throw. McGinn, though, has not yet qualified for nationals, in which he placed fifth last year. Another Eph who just missed qualifying for nationals was Marc Helitz '91, who easily won the steeplechase in 9:10. Marc was running six seconds under national time last week when he dropped out of the race because of an injury. Marc has since recovered and his regained health was in evidence on Saturday, when he showed no sign of fatigue or mercy as he sprinted ahead of the pack and stayed there throughout the race.

Numbers and results

Geoff Igharo '90, still plagued by a pulled hamstring, took second in the triple jump with a leap of 13.94 meters. Gil McCabe '89 ran the 10,000 meters in time of 33:10 to claim seventh place in that event. Carey Simon '90 will have another chance to make nationals next week after coming close in the 400 meters with a time of 50.2 seconds for a sixth place finish. In the 1500 meter race Eph Dale Johnson '90 got trapped in the back of the pack early on and fought his way past three other runners to finish ninth in 4:00.

Freshman speed demon Jonathan Lindley scored a second place finish in the 100-meter dash, clocked at 11.1 seconds. The other freshman who performed well was Larry Smith, who took third in the 200 with a time of 22.44 seconds. A third freshman, Wil Warren, also scored on Saturday, as he stormed to a tie for fourth place with a high jump measured at 1.88 meters.

Coach Peter Farwell, the host of the meet, was pleased with the team's results. He had hoped that the Ephs would finish in the top five. Perhaps the only problem occurred when Farwell was accused that they had mistakenly been given women's medals. Farwell also reassured those who didn't qualify for nationals, pointing out that they would have one more chance this coming weekend, when the Ephs head to Dartmouth for the Division I championships.

Women split into two groups

The women's track team, meanwhile, divided into two groups this weekend. One group traveled to Colby for Division I New England while the other group competed in Division III New England at W.P.I.

At Colby, co-captain Dawn Macauley '89 once again put in a great performance, finishing 5th in the 100 hurdles with a time of 15.2 seconds, and 2nd in the 400 hurdles in 6:22 seconds. Freshman standout Hilary Cairns surprised the 10,000 field, winning the race by over one and a half minutes and qualifying for Division III Nationals. Other fine performances were put in by Ann Dannbauer '90 who took 5th in the 1500 with a time of 4:47, Anne Platt '91 finishing 6th in the 800 in 2:19.7, and a 4th place finish by the two mile relay team of Dannbauer, Platt, Cherie Macauley '92, and co-captain Jen Morris '89.

The thirteen women who went to Division III ran away with a surprise 2nd place victory. Kim Shields '91 had an outstanding day, finishing 1st in the 100 hurdles and 2nd in the 400 hurdles, and was a member of the 3rd place 4x100 relay team of Alison Smith '90, Sue Northern '89, and co-captain Noriko Honda '89. Smith also had a great day, placing third in the 400 with a time of 61.6 seconds and 3rd in the 4x400 relay with teammates Kim Barndollar '91, Zoe Rhodes '92, and Nicole Jefferson '90. Jefferson jumped to a 1st place finish, clearing 5'2" in the high jump, and Barndollar placed 5th in the 400.

Northern bounded to 3rd place in the triple jump while Honda soared over the hurdles to finish 4th in the 100 hurdles and 5th in the 400 lows.

Coach Farwell was accosted by MIT runners who complained that they had mistakenly been given women's medals.

Once again the distance women looked strong, finishing 1st in the 4x500 relay which consisted of Andrea Cady '92, Katie Queneey '92, Mary Moule '91, and anchor Lori Eliza Dugundji '91. Dugundji and Queneey also ran to 3rd and 5th place finishes respectively in the 800 with times of 2:22 and 2:23. Cady came in 2nd in the 3000 meter race. The team hopes to finish strong this Saturday and Sunday at the ECAC meet at W.P.I., the final race of the season.

WUFO team qualifies for regionals

continued from page 10

of Jarman. The tone of the afternoon was certainly upbeat but was tempered by the specter of injury. Rauch suffered a knee injury Saturday afternoon and was prevented from further play. Injuries sustained earlier in the year also benched John Bellweather '89 and Azrie Eisenstein '91.

Sunday's play started with an easygoing game to work off brunch and any party residue. WUFO was again foiled as the Craftsies were able to capitalize on the reunited offense-defense combination of Chris Jones '88 and Escherick.

WUFO faces the Vets

The second game of the day was a new and hopefully long-lasting tradition.

WoWUFO fielded a team to independently face the Crafts Vets. The women's indomitable spirit saw them through to a victory after a long-fought battle that eventually caused the Craftsies to suggest that the next point would win the game.

Rising to the occasion, the women relied on sharp passing and precision cuts to win the point and the respect of the older men. Both Susan Sullivan '89 and Rachel Seales '89 demonstrated immense improvement that they had made over the course of the season. Coupled with the experienced expertise of seniors Samh Bort, Jenny Payne, Harriet Longfield, and Ann Carson, the women proved that "every pass counts." Although these players will be gone next year, inspired play from younger members, Louise Price '91, Monica Brand '91, Amy Huston '92, Beth Hoberer '92, and Joyce Wong '92 reassured everyone that WoWUFO will continue to be a force on the women's circuit.

The men's A-side and some of the more experienced women players then took on the Vets in the final game of the day. The Craftsies certainly had the MVP of the afternoon, Jose C. Uervo '80, on their side in the final match. Many of the men players were completely shut down by this potent force. WUFO's spirit was high, but craftiness prevailed. No one lost sight of the fact, though, that in the end, everyone was a winner of greater skill, appreciation for the game, and better friendships.

Men's tennis nabs Little 3

continued from page 10

(#1). Buxbaum/Hallagan (#2), and Evans/Welles (#3), easily won their matches in straight sets.

Coach Assalante was happy with his team's win. "We're playing with more confidence and maturity now. To be honest, I thought the match would be closer because Albany played well against Colgate, which was the only team we lost to," he said.

Ephs third at NESAC

In addition, the Ephs traveled to Amherst last weekend to compete in the NESAC tournament. Led by doubles champions Sawyer and Hunt, the team placed third behind Tufts and Amherst.

Previously, the Ephs had beaten both those teams in the regular season, by scores of 5-4 and 6-3 respectively.

Sawyer and Hunt were the number one seeds in the first flight and won the championship, 6-7 (5-7), 6-4, 7-5, over Mark Harris and Rod Prudencio of Middlebury. Through their Wesleyan match on Saturday, Sawyer/Hunt sustained a perfect record of 12-0.

Another highlight of the tournament was Hunt's run to the final of the third flight, in which he was seeded second. In the final, Hunt lost to Connecticut College's Eric Hintz, 6-2, 6-1.

"I did well to get to the final, but he killed me," Hunt commented.

In addition, Evans reached the quarters of the first flight, only to lose to David Ober of Tufts, a player whom Evans had beaten earlier 6-1, 6-2. Kim, however, managed to win the consolation round of the first flight.

Union and M.I.T. next for Williams

Today the Ephs play against Union at home. Williams does not anticipate a great challenge from Union. However, the M.I.T. match on Saturday in Cambridge is expected to be a challenge. M.I.T. is currently ranked third in the East, right behind Williams.

"The M.I.T. coach has already said that we're their biggest match," Hallagan said. "It's going to be tough because they're very good on paper and they consistently send players to the Nationals."

Women's lax defeats Amherst

continued from page 10

minute later, Amherst scored its second goal to surge ahead. It was the only time that Amherst led in the game.

After several minutes of steadfast defensive play, Williams drove hard and fast down the field. Standing directly behind the goal, Cooper passed quickly to Sandreuter who stood directly in front of the goal. The sharp, quick pass enabled Sandreuter to tie the game at two.

Kershaw caught the Amherst defense completely off guard when she scored the third Williams point. On a pass from Burnett, Kershaw, who had her back turned to the goal, quickly turned around and scooped the ball in, leaving the Amherst defense dumbfounded.

The teams then went on to exchange goals and by the end of the half, the score stood in favor of Williams at 5-4.

Williams continued to dominate the game in the second half. The only time the women saw their ball in, leaving the Amherst defense threatened was about midway through the half.

Williams had scored its ninth point about twelve minutes into the half to take the lead 9-5. The Jeffs then seemed to come to life, scoring three points within six minutes and shutting out the Williams offense for ten minutes.

Just then, the Eph women put in a final effort and scored twice more to go up by a comfortable three points with only one minute left in the game. Williams went on to win the Little Three championship, 11-8.

In the Eph victory, Edgar tallied four points while Flaherty Kershaw, and Sandreuter scored two. Mary Huff '89 contributed one.

In other action, Williams played Middlebury last Tuesday and defeated the Panthers 9-7.

SPIRIT SHOP

280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown 458-3704

"Free Delivery"

Busch $11.99/cs. + dep.

Miller $13.49/cs. + dep.

Becks $ 9.99/12 pk. + dep.

Rolling Rock $13.49/cs. + dep.

Labatts $15.99/cs + dep.

Moosehead $16.99/cs + dep.

Molson $16.99/cs + dep.

Monday - Saturday 9am to 11 pm

Your Belly's Deli

100 Pleasant St. Bennington, VT (802) 442-3653

salads • bagels • quiche • soups
beer and wine anytime
★ Your Belly's Delight ★

turkey, ham, roast beef, lettuce, tomatoes, swiss cheese and Russian dressing plus a variety of other gourmet sandwiches

Check our daily specials

Open every day 11 a.m. - 9 p.m.

The Daquiri Factory

updates open at 8 p.m.

GIVE SMOKING A KICK IN THE BUTT.

Wildlands Studies, 3 Mosswood Circle, Cazenovia, CA 95421 707-632-5665

GRADUATES!

A KEEPSAKE CLAY WILLIAMS MOUSE FOR

- GRADUATION CAKES
- HANG IN YOUR CAR
- HOLIDAY ORNAMENT

OTHER LOGO ITEMS COUNTRY EDIBLES + LOCALLY MADE CRAFTS

YE OLDE COUNTRY SHOPPE
895 COLD SPRING RD WILLIAMSTOWN
ACROSS FROM 1896 458-7834

AMERICAN EXPRESS REPRESENTATIVE

THE TRAVEL STORE
We make great vacations!

Let us help you plan your European vacation. We take care of passport pictures, Eurail passes and more.

REMEMBER: There is NEVER a fee for our services!!!

Hours: Mon.-Fri. 9-5, Thurs. 9-8, Sat. 9-12
105 Spring St. 458-3786 Williamstown

PIP PRINTING

Camera Ready Resumes $10 for $17.70

Offset Printed in just a few hours!

We do all types of printing
53 Main St.
North Adams, MA 663-3414

If It Doesn't Fit

Ship It.

Heading home for vacation? We will get your things there safer and faster and all in one piece! We will even pack boxes for you! Shipping boxes and packing supplies as well as storage available. Pick up service needed? Call or drop off at:

The Spirit Shop
280 Cole Avenue
458-3704

Shipping via U.P.S. and Emery etc.
Shipping boxes for sale. Stop by Baxter May 15th 10 AM-2PM.

Heading home for vacation? We will get your things there safer and faster and all in one piece! We will even pack boxes for you! Shipping boxes and packing supplies as well as storage available. Pick up service needed? Call or drop off at:

THE CLIP SHOP

THE HAIR SALON FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

- Hair Salon
- Perms
- Cuts
- Color
- Cellophane
- Conditioning
- Relaxers
- Highlighting
- Make-up
- Facials
- Skin care
- Manicure
- Pedicures
- Nail Tips
- Waxing
- Ear Piercing

Call for an appointment or just walk in

Gift Certificates
Special Student Discounts

We're

Sebastian Artistic Center

The salons that make the difference between at and extraordinary

48 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9187 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9578 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

Drummond Cleaners
- 1989 SUMMER STORAGE SPECIAL -

ARE YOU WONDERING WHERE TO STORE YOUR CLOTHES AND BEDDING OVER THE SUMMER?

DRUMMOND CLEANERS WILL CLEAN AND STORE THEM FOR THE OF HAVING THEM CLEANED, IN OTHER WORDS, YOU GET FREE STORAGE!

FULLY INSURED - NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR INSURANCE.

FILL IN THIS FORM AND BRING IT IN WITH YOUR STORAGE TO BE ELIGIBLE FOR OUR STORAGE LOTTERY

First Prize
$100 Gift Certificate to Le Jardin Restaurant

Second Prize
$50 Gift Certificate to any store on Spring St.

3rd, 4th, & 5th Prize
$25 Gift Certificate to any store on Spring St.

6th thru 10th Prize
$20 in free cleaning

DRAWING WILL BE HELD ON JUNE 15, 1989.

Winners will be notified by mail in June.

Call 458-4321 for free campus pick-up

Please Print Home Address Below:

Name

Street

City, Zip

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

66 Spring Street

458-4321

Jim Drummond, Williams '58
Owner

Eph baseball bats turn to lead, team drops four of five

An Eph stretches to reach first as the Lord Jeff first baseman watches a wild throw sail by. The Ephs now stand at 18-17 after dropping a doubleheader to Amherst. (Taylor)

by Kerr Houston
With only two contests remaining in their 1989 campaign, the Williams baseball team is starting to search for positive signs in what has been a disappointing season. However, such signs have been few and far between for Coach James Briggs and his nine, who dropped a doubleheader to a strong Amherst squad at home on Sunday to fall to 18-17. The team's last full week of play began last Monday, as the Ephs climbed onto the bus for a trip to powerful A.C., who entered the game with a glowing 25-9 record. Although Lauren Laderoute '92 and Scott Shean '91 opened the first with consecutive singles, and eventually worked their way around to score, the Eph lead was quickly erased, as A.C. tagged Williams starter Mark DeRussy '91 for three runs in their half of the first. The teams grappled indecisively for several innings, trading runs, until A.C. flexed their offensive muscles. They scored once in the sixth and then strung together four walks and a pair of singles in the eighth to bring the final score to 12-5.

Mohawks scalp Ephmen
Two days later, a strong North Adams State team sauntered into Williamstown, and proceeded to dance its way to a 19-5 rout. The game was never in question, as the Mohawks jumped out to a 5-0 lead against Bill Schwartz '90, and then locked the outcome with a marathon 13-run fifth. Although the Ephmen fell to 7-15 with the lopsided loss, Laderoute continued to swing a hot bat, as he stayed in a 10-for-23 groove with two hits on the day. Another bright spot in the gloomy afternoon included the play of the Eph bench, who inherited an 18-3 legacy in the sixth, and proceeded to whittle the gap by one, while shutting down the obviously potent Mohawk offense. Backup catcher Jeff DeTeso '92 and fellow freshmen subs Ben Scirica and Paul Reidy each saw action, and each responded pleasantly in bating out a hit. The Eph pitching snapped back into form the next day, as Jeremy Austin '92 spun a masterful six-hit shutout at Mid-debury. The game was a scoreless duel until the sixth, when a walk to John Whalen '91 and consecutive base raps by Chris Perry '91, Brian Harwell '90, and co-captain Chris Donato '89 led to three Eph runs. Harwell and Donato also scored in the eighth, extending Austin's lead to what eventually proved to be the final margin. For his part, Austin, enjoying a phenomenal freshman year, struck out four Panthers while walking none, and faced only thirty-two batters.

Lord Jeffs come to town
It was with smiles on their faces and nothing to lose, then, that the Ephs took the field on Sunday for a doubleheader with Amherst. The pair of contests, North Adams State sauntered into Williamstown and danced its way to a 19-5 rout.

originally scheduled for Saturday but rolled back because of wet grounds, represented a matter of pride for the Ephmen, who had dropped their first four Little 3 contests of the year. The opener featured an incredible two-way pitching performance, as co-captain Chris Conway '89 and his Amherst counterpart posted goose egg after goose egg on the scoreboard. Conway was aided by a spectacular second-inning catch by centerfielder Mike Hyde '91, who held on to the ball for the out while he tumbled over the makeshift centerfield fence. The game remained a scoreless battle until the seventh, when Amherst finally pushed a run across the plate. However, the Ephmen quickly responded, as Scott Kennedy '89 reached third and Donato stood on first with one out and Hyde in the batter's box. Despite vigorous entreaties from the sidelines, coach Briggs resisted the urge to try a squeeze, and instead had Hyde swing away. Hyde, however, struck out, and a subsequent Laderoute grounder ended the game and left the Ephs clenching nothing but thoughts of what could have been.

Lord Jeffs brandish brooms
The teams were not through, however, as co-captain Mike Barbera '89 began to warm up for the nightcap. Amherst went down quickly in the first, but, after a second-inning tally, the Lord Jeffs nurtured their small lead with two more runs in the third on consecutive singles and a triple that soared over the head of rightfielder Scott Kennedy. Meanwhile, the Ephmen were fighting their own battle at the plate, as they saw themselves no-hit through four innings.

Sophomore righty Chris Pentz came on in the fifth to relieve Barbera, who had surrendered ten hits through four innings, but had miraculously surrendered only four runs. Pentz allowed one run to score on a stolen base in a first-and-third situation, but soon re-bound, shutting down the Lord Jeff offense in the sixth. Meanwhile, Laderoute broke up the no-hitter with a fifth-inning rope to center, and the Ephmen finally scored in the sixth, when they threw a single and four walks into a cauldron and came up with two runs. However, the one-out, bases-loaded rally quickly dissolved into little more than a whimper, as Shean fanned and Todd Strieter '90 bounced out to third.

The Lord Jeffs hoisted the game out of reach in the final frame, as they added a final tally on a double that was apparently misjudged by Kennedy, and a roller to Perry, who hastily fired the ball wildly to home in a vain attempt to catch the runner. A possible Eph rally in the bottom half of the inning, created by consecutive walks to Austin and Whalen, led to nothing as Kennedy grounded into a double play and Conway whiffed to end the game.

Despite the disappointing loss, the Ephmen still have two games remaining, and would love to see some fans on hand for Tuesday's home game with Union, or Thursday's contest at North Adams State.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. I'm also getting another $5,000 for tuition and books, thanks to the New GI Bill.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

*In Hawaii: 737-5255; Puerto Rico: 721-4550; Guam: 477-9857; Virgin Islands (St. John): 773-6438; New Jersey: 800-452-5794. In Alaska, contact your local phone directory. © 1985 United States Government as represented by the Secretary of Defense. All rights reserved.

MAIL TO: Army National Guard, P.O. Box 6000, Clifton, NJ 07015

NAME ☐ M ☐ F

ADDRESS

CITY/STATE/ZIP

AREA CODE PHONE US CITIZEN ☐ YES ☐ NO

SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBER BIRTH DATE

OCCUPATION

STUDENT ☐ HIGH SCHOOL ☐ COLLEGE ☐ PRIOR MILITARY SERVICE ☐ YES ☐ NO

BRANCH RANK AFM/MOS

ARMY
National Guard
A1CLJC10049NP

West Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081

We offer:

- 1) Area's largest fine beer & ale selection
- 2) Hundreds of quality wines
- 3) Unique videos as well as latest releases
- 4) Ambassador, Blue Mt. Arts, Far Side Greeting cards
- 5) Dozens of soft furry creatures from Dakin, Applause, and North American Bears
- 6) Soft drinks, munchies, party supplies
- 7) Great advice on matters large and small
- 8) Courteous, professional service

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects

SUELLEN RAIFF
21 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

TheLibrary

Avoid Disappointment!

Place your orders early to assure delivery for Mother's Day (especially out of town orders)

Stop in to see our many gift ideas

Mount Williams Greenhouses
NEAR WILLIAMSTOWN LINE
101 STATE ROAD - NORTH ADAMS
01061

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
101 STATE ROAD - NORTH ADAMS
01061

Beautiful cards - beautiful wishes!

Tell Mom you love her by sending the very best. Send her a Hallmark card.

Mother's Day is Sunday, May 14.

McClendall's

The Williams max defensive swarms the Amherst Lord Jeffs for a loose ground ball in last Saturday's game. Williams went on to defeat Amherst 13-7 and win the Little Three title. (Thomas)

Men's lax team takes Little 3 title

by John Romans

The men's lacrosse team continued their successful season with three more victories last week to advance the Eph's record to 10-1. The last time the men's lacrosse team had 10 wins in a season was in 1973, when the team won the ECAC Division II title.

The Ephmen clipped off the week Saturday with a huge 13-7 win over the rival Amherst Lord Jeffs, giving the Ephs the Little Three title. The two teams battled back and forth for the lead in the first two quarters. Attackman Bob Santry '90 scored the first goal off a great assist from Brent Powell '91. Soon after, Amherst scored two goals to take a 2-1 lead over the Ephs. Williams fought back, however, to tie the game up 2-2 with a goal from Rob Lake '91. Then, within a minute period, freshman Andrew Everett and Ian Smith '91 both scored to bring the game to 4-2. Amherst then bounced back late in the quarter to finish up the half with the Ephmen up by only one goal.

The game remained close in the third quarter as the score progressed to 7-6

Williams. Both teams played strong defense as fouls were killed and excellent goal tending was displayed. Late in the quarter, the Ephs lit up with goals by Tim Oliver '90 and Santry to make the score 9-6.

The fourth quarter was all Williams. Oliver scored 50 seconds into the quarter, forcing Amherst to call a time out. Nothing seemed to work for Amherst; Williams went on to score three more goals compared to Amherst's one.

All around, the Ephs played a great game. Santry broke out of a scoring drought with four goals against the Lord Jeffs while junior goalie Rob Lake shined, making 20 saves for the day.

Other games this week

The Ephmen began their three game sweep last week by defeating Middlebury 11-8 last Wednesday. Twenty-two seconds into the game the Middlebury Panthers scored, showing that they were ready to defend their ten game winning streak over the Ephmen. This was to be the only time the Panthers would lead the lead however, as senior co-captain Doug Gilbert, Powell, and Oliver each scored to end the first quarter with a Williams 3-2 lead.

The Panthers opened the second quarter with a quick goal to tie up the game 3-3. Within a few minutes, however, Smith and Powell both scored to take a 5-3 Ephmen lead. Tough man-down defense and another goal by Smith ended the first half with the Ephmen ahead 6-3.

The Williams Ephs took full control of the game in the second half by exploding ahead to take a 9-3 lead. Junior defenseman Jeff Santry earned his first assist by successfully clearing the ball up field and hitting Lake for a quick goal. Middlebury, however, came on strong in the fourth quarter with three straight goals to make the score 9-6. Santry stopped the Panther's drive with a crank shot from the wing. While Middlebury went on to score two more goals in the quarter, the Ephmen were simply too tough to beat.

The lacmen then went on to take a decisive 9-3 victory over the Bowdoin Polar Bears in the ECAC Division III semi-finals.

The first half of the game, while low scoring, manifested controlled ball movement on strong defense by both teams. The first quarter was highlighted by Gilbert assisting junior midfielder Dan Calichman for his first goal of the season.

Williams put the game away in the third quarter by scoring three unanswered goals within six minutes. Bowdoin was finally able to score a second goal late in the quarter. But Williams responded with a goal in the first minutes of the quarter to take a 7-2 Ephmen lead.

The Williams defense played nearly perfectly throughout the game. Defensive midfielders Steve Linen '90, Brian Tappich '92, and Bobbi Amos '92 shut down the Polar Bear's transition game, allowing Bowdoin to clear the ball only 19 of 30 attempts. Likewise, Stripp, Matt Zolin '91, and Dan Newhall '91 did an excellent job in stopping Bowdoin's attack, who have averaged almost 7 goals a game this season.

Athlete of the Week

This week's recipient is the men's crew varsity eight: Kate Iverson '90, Jeff Kip '89, Seth Burns '89, Todd Owens '90, Mike Mader '90, David Katz '89, Andy Haddock '89, John Kennel '91, and Mark Cullen '90. They are now undefeated for two consecutive years in the Dad Vail league; last season was crew's first as a varsity team and they were the college's only undefeated team during the spring. The team is now ranked fourth nationally in Division II. Congrats, guys!

Sports Quiz

Win a $15 gift certificate from Goff's - enter the quiz

Win a $15 gift certificate from Goff's - enter the quiz

- 1) Who is the NFL's all-time leading scorer?
 - 2) Who is the all-time leading NHL scorer (in total points)?
 - 3) Who is the all-time leading NBA scorer?
 - 4) Who is the major-league career leader in runs scored?
- Send your answers to Mariam Naficy at SU 1871 by Saturday. In case of a tie, the winner will be chosen in a random drawing. Last week's winner was Joanna Lowell. Congratulations, Joanna!

Answers to the last quiz: 1) Squash is the only sport besides sailing to employ a telltale; 2) Minneapolis, which will serve as the home of the Minnesota Timberwolves in the fall, is currently the only city besides Pittsburgh to sport NFL, NHL, and major league franchises but no NBA team; 3) The Frank Seike trophy is awarded annually to the NHL's best defensive forward; 4) Wesleyan took second in this year's Little 3 track meet; 5) Kerr Houston turned in a mammoth 8800-character piece this spring.

Summer Ski Storage

May thru September -- $18.00
Each additional month -- $ 4.00

Includes Skis, Boots and Poles.
Ski tune-ups are available.

GOFF'S SPORTS, INC.

15 Spring Street 458-3605

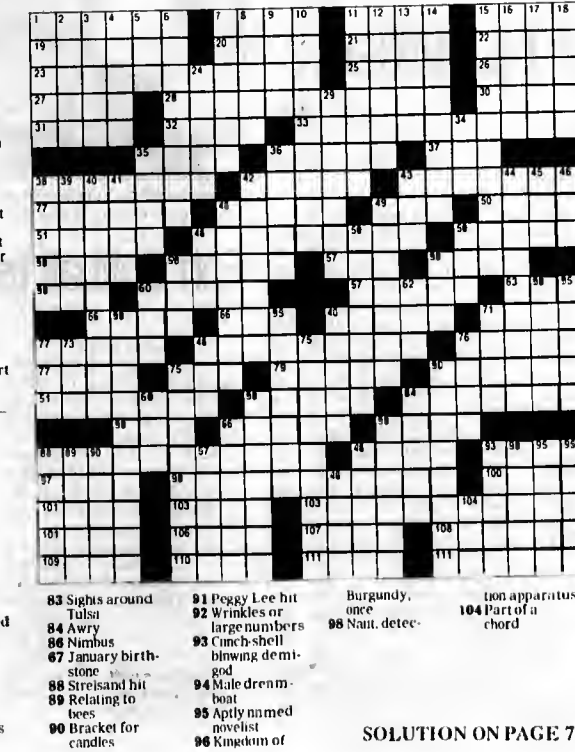

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

O, No!

BY DONALD V. LEE II/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

- ACROSS
- 1 Arethusa, e.g.
 - 7 Calif. white oak
 - 11 Complete defeat
 - 15 Carp-family member
 - 19 Gone up
 - 20 In — (bogged down)
 - 21 Rung
 - 22 Insect stage
 - 23 Without trouble or difficulty
 - 25 Puccini heroine
 - 26 Inturned on
 - 27 Glance — askance
 - 28 Anglo-Saxon dialect
 - 30 Ala. commodity
 - 31 Irregularly notched
 - 32 Seis tree
 - 33 Plumbism
 - 35 Uttered
 - 36 Variegated chalcid
 - 37 Dohlin's fare
 - 38 Foster's "De —"
 - 42 English draft horse
 - 43 Kind of table
 - 47 Arabian gazelles
 - 48 Fen
 - 49 Overwhelm
 - 50 Plant angle
 - 51 Suppose
 - 52 Inborn
 - 54 Actor Timothy or Joseph
 - 55 Precious, in o way
 - 58 Sapience
 - 57 Uses an exit
 - 58 Paravane
 - 59 Flung about
 - 60 Overall fabric
 - 61 One of the Seven Wonders
 - 63 Eulalies Hirt liquor
 - 68 Shoppers' considerations
 - 68 Tomcat
 - 70 Hirsute
 - 71 Cabaret
 - 72 Heisman, e.g.
 - 74 Tantrums
 - 76 Algonquian spirit
 - 77 Huge land mass
 - 78 Crowd response
 - 79 Cringes with fear
 - 80 Michelangelo, to Lorenzo
 - 81 Greflier or choratory
 - 83 Opposite of 12
 - 84 Intersection
 - 85 Cartel
 - 86 Gauntlets
 - 87 Glyph
 - 88 Maypop
 - 92 European liqueur
 - 93 "G.W.T.W." locale
 - 97 Period
 - 98 Ruined photographs
 - 100 Rank between family and class
 - 101 Type of bean or horse
 - 102 Devil's delight
 - 103 Absolute
 - 105 Tating output
 - 106 Actress-singer Carter
 - 107 Bogus
 - 108 Midway
 - 109 January, in thira
 - 110 You are, in Mexico
 - 111 Jack-o'Robert
 - 112 Sight, touch and taste

- DOWN
- 1 Sibyl
 - 2 Tree
 - 3 Urticaria
 - 4 French river or department
 - 5 "Indolence": Keats
 - 6 Belonging to a relative by marriage
 - 7 Declaimed violently
 - 8 Stocks
 - 9 Oner
 - 10 Linguistics expert
 - 11 Booked
 - 12 Alfresco
 - 13 Shoe part
 - 14 Cervantes or
 - 15 Melancholy
 - 16 Nicolai of Cremona
 - 17 Swiss district
 - 18 Seasonal beverage
 - 24 Ahiradig
 - 25 Chicago embrace?
 - 34 Condescend
 - 35 Runner or
 - 36 Al —, Cairn newspaper
 - 38 Plant of the parsley family
 - 39 Neighborhood
 - 40 Of minute proportions
 - 41 Indian tea
 - 42 Largest of the Tremuli
 - 43 Raggedy Ann or Andy
 - 44 Kidnapper, e.g.
 - 45 Aspire
 - 46 Type of gold or paradise
 - 48 Roman Catholic title
 - 49 They go in one era and out the other
 - 52 Numismatic unit
 - 53 Amends
 - 54 Tires, axes
 - 56 Is indicated
 - 58 Reactionary
 - 60 Weak-minded, in thive
 - 62 Gog implements
 - 64 Siberian forests
 - 65 Classified
 - 67 Marksman
 - 69 Like some lenses
 - 70 Owls
 - 71 Former monetary units of Riga
 - 72 Poi base
 - 73 Abie's beloved
 - 74 Box chaser
 - 75 Makeup applicator
 - 76 Type of code
 - 78 Assemble
 - 80 Legal clauses
 - 82 — gratia
 - 83 Signs around Tulsa
 - 84 Arvay
 - 86 Nimbus
 - 87 January birthstone
 - 88 Streisand hit
 - 89 Relating to bees
 - 90 Bracket for candles
 - 91 Peggy Lee hit
 - 92 Wrinkles or large numbers
 - 93 Cincch-shell blowing demistone
 - 94 Male drem boat
 - 95 Apply named novelist
 - 96 Kingdom of
 - 98 Naut. detec.
 - 104 Part of a chord

SOLUTION ON PAGE 7

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

"Arnold! The bird! The bird! ... You get back up there and get the bird!"

Army National Guard

Americans At Their Best.

Men's tennis team up to 7 - 1

by Carolyn Koo

At the beginning of last week, the Volvo/TTC rankings cited Williams as the number two Division III college tennis team in the East, behind top-ranked Brandeis. The team solidified its ranking this past week with 8-1 victories over both S.U.N.Y. Albany on Tuesday and Wesleyan on Saturday, in the process raising its record to 7-1.

With the Wesleyan win, the Ephs captured the Little Three title, the squad's third under Coach Paul Assaiante. They took the title in convincing fashion behind both strong doubles and singles play. Coach Assaiante noted that the singles matches were solid and the doubles spectacular.

"[Co-captain Rob] Hallagan '89] and [Steve] Buxbaum '90] especially were just unbelievable," Assaiante remarked. Hallagan and Buxbaum could do no wrong in their match and easily crushed their opponents, 6-1, 6-1.

In singles play, Tom Evans '92 (#1), Howie Kim '92 (#2), Jim Welles '91 (#3), Drew Sawyer '89 (#4), and Buxbaum (#6) all won their matches in straight sets. Evans played well today against Kishor Malavade '92 of Wesleyan, after playing sluggishly in his last few matches.

"I was a lot more relaxed today. I switched to a mid-size racket, and my serve and volleys were much better," Evans said. Sawyer also distinguished himself, winning the last three games of his 6-3, 7-5 match with the loss of only one point.

"Beating Wesleyan today was great," Hallagan commented. "Basically this season we've done everything we

In singles play last Saturday, freshman standout Howie Kim smashes a forehand on his way to a straight-set victory over his Wesleyan opponent. The Ephs downed the Cardinals 8-1 and won the Little Three title. As of last week, they were ranked second in Division III New England. (Taylor) wanted, except for Colgate [the team's only loss]."

Decimation of Albany Against Albany, Williams again allowed its opponent only one win. Every singles player but one was victorious. Evans at number one, Brad Hunt '90 at number five, and Buxbaum at number six all won in straight sets, while Kim at number two and Sawyer at number four went to three-setters. Kim dropped the second set of his match to force a third, while Sawyer lost the first set and came back in the last two to win.

In doubles, the teams of Hunt/Sawyer

continued on page 7

Women's lacrosse ECAC runner-up, Little 3 champ

by Juan Alonzo

Last weekend the women's lacrosse team traveled to Tufts, the host of this year's ECAC championship. On Saturday, the Ephs women faced Middlebury in the semi-finals of the tournament and defeated the Panthers 11-10. The women then met Tufts, last year's ECAC champions, on Sunday. In a match that was closer than the final score indicates, Williams fell 5-13. The Ephs' record now stands at 9-3.

The Ephs were pitted against Middlebury for the second time in less than a week. The team faced the Panthers last Tuesday in regular season play and for the second time, Williams came out ahead of the Panthers to advance to the ECAC finals.

Coach Chris Mason said she felt that although the Panthers were a strong team and kept the score close, Williams had firm control of the match.

Against Middlebury, freshman Ashley Edgar and sophomore Bevin Cooper performed exceptionally well, each turning in a hat trick. Maureen Flaherty '90 contributed two points while Amy Kershaw '90, Laurie Burnett '91, and Heidi Sandreuter '92 each scored once.

Second in ECAC

The Ephs then went on to the finals on Sunday against Tufts, a team that has gone undefeated for two years. Tufts has also been the ECAC champion for the last four years.

The Jumbos came in fighting, scoring the initial points of the final game. Williams answered with its own attacks and by the half, the game was still within reach for the Ephs at 4-7.

In the second half, Williams scored only one more point. The lack of scoring was not due to a weak offensive effort on the part of the Ephs. It was due rather to a tremendous performance by All-America Tufts goalie Bergstein. Both teams' coaches felt that she played the game of her career.

"We felt that the game actually went back and forth," Coach Mason said. "We actually outshot them but they have an All-America goal keeper. We had thirty shots and only scored five. [The Tufts goalie] was the key for them."

In the tournament finale, Edgar, Burnett, Flaherty, Kershaw, and freshman Elizabeth Gioia each contributed one point to the Williams effort.

This is the second straight year that the women's lacrosse team came in second in the ECAC championship. Coach Mason said that she feels that the team is very competitive and, although a first place is what it would ultimately like to achieve, the squad is proud of the fact that it is second best in New England.

Little Three Champs

Thursday afternoon the women met Amherst at Cole Field to determine the Little Three champion. After riding

continued on page 7

Poised for Dad Vails

Crew on top at Warmaug

by James Lee

The Williams crew teams dominated the waters of Lake Warmaug, Connecticut on Saturday, winning both the women's and men's varsity eight races. Four colleges, Trinity, Ithaca, Union and Marist, participated in the last races of the Ephs' highly successful season. The Eph crews look poised for strong performances in the Dad Vail Regatta, the end of the season national small-college crew championship to be held in Philadelphia this weekend.

The Eph oarswomen had an excellent day of races on Saturday, silencing challenges from Trinity in both the varsity and JV eight races. The highlight of the day was the varsity eight race between the Ephs and the Bantams. The Ephs, who beat the Bantams by less than a second in the same race last year, established a slight lead of two seats right off the start. They succeeded in extending that lead to about six seats by the end of the first 250 meters. The rest of the race was a tight duel between the two boats until the final sprint, in which Williams widened up the margin to emerge a boat length ahead in the end.

For the Ephwomen JV eight, a stellar race put them in second place four seconds ahead of third place Trinity. The Bantams posed a strong challenge to the Ephs during the first 750 meters of this race. The Ephs, however, succeeded in catching up soon afterwards and moved ahead to finish three seconds behind a strong Ithaca varsity lightweight eight. In the novice eight race, however, the Eph oarswomen had to be satisfied with a second place finish after a strong first place finish by Trinity. They, on the other hand, sailed to an overwhelming victory with a margin of 12 seconds over second-place Marist in the novice four race.

"This was the best season we have had in recent years. To come in third out of ten teams at the Augusta Invitational and to lose only to U. Mass. during the season is outstanding. Losing only two seniors [co-captains Elizabeth Marraek and Laura Woods] for the varsity and one for JV [Eleanor Tucher], and having strong freshman rowers coming up, next year promises to be a very strong season as well," Coach Chris Cruz said.

Ephmen row exceptionally Saturday was a peak day for the Eph freshmen's boats as exceptional rowing presented them with first-place finishes in both the first and second novice eight races.

"The first novice eight had the most technically perfect race I have ever seen them rowing," assistant coach Doug Thiemann said. Both freshmen boats got off to a head start over the Bantams in their respective races, and their powerful flutters in the middle enabled them to reach the finish line more than six seconds before their rivals.

The day didn't go so well for the Ephmen's varsity eight. Though they controlled and won the race by more than ten seconds over second place Trinity, Coach Peter Wells had the rowers row the first 500 meters again after the race was over.

"Our first 1000 meters was terrible. The second half was better," Jeff Kip '89 said. In an uneven match-up between Eph varsity lightweight four and Trinity varsity heavyweight four, the Ephs came in second after the Bantams as expected.

"We are confident that we have the ability to put a great race together," Thiemann said, looking forward to the Dad Vail challenge this weekend.

WUFO regional qualifier

by Guy Beadie and Aaric Eisenstein
WUFO showed their essence in last weekend's Seaton tournament: the team placed second to qualify for this weekend's Regionals.

Against U. Mass, the game started off with the WUFO defense a step behind. U. Mass jumped to a 7-2 lead. WUFO then rallied, as two defensive blocks by Matt Levin '90 led to scores. The Ephs' better handling of the frisbee and strong zone-defense created a number of scoring opportunities. Overcoming an imposing deficit, WUFO outscored their opponents 13-5 to win 15-12. "I don't think I've ever played a more intense game," Bryan Cameron '90 said.

In the next game, a switch to a shorter field in worse condition led to a switch in momentum. Hampshire played with a much different style—eschewing precision handling in favor of long hucks, often as soon as they got the disc. The shorter WUFO team just wasn't able to deny their taller opponents. Two notable exceptions to this rule tempered the 13-8 loss.

The first came when Hal Hermanson '89 proved that he wasn't ready for his last season to end. The frisbee was floating low and close to the sideline. Both Hermanson and Cameron were sprinting all out to make the catch. At the last possible second, both dove. In mid-air the sideline heard a nonchalant "I got it." The catch was his and so was the eventual score.

Guy Beadie '90 later showed that Greg Louganis has nothing on him when it comes to twisting dives. An errant pass was clutched back to WUFO's possession when Beadie disregarded his own bodily integrity and three fundamental laws of physics to make the catch and then hit John Adams '92 for the score in one fluid motion.

A grim situation didn't look like it was going to get any better when WUFO then played against the University of Hampshire eschewed precision handling in favor of long hucks, often as soon as they got the disc.

Vermont. The Ephs were able to slowly force the disc down the field a number of times, but were simply unable to make the final push across the endline. WUFO scored only four times.

Late in the day WUFO was matched against Moo Die from Dartmouth. Both teams were tired by this point. The Ephs' spirits rallied in the deciding game to win 13-5. Freshman Baird Jarman demonstrated great feel for the disc as he and Jim Adams '90 ran away from the Moo defense.

Crafty Vets Tourney

Last weekend saw the ninth annual Crafty Vets tournament at the Gravelly Swamp. The Men's and Women's Ultimate Frisbee Organizations played against alumni that graduated as long as 12 years ago. While the two-day festival was filled with hard-played frisbee, the spirit was certainly "mellow."

Saturday afternoon was spent taking advantage of the sunshine. The first game pitted current WUFO players against the Vets. The initial point in the contest came from a dazzling dish by Kevin Reardon '92. WUFO then leapt to a 5-0 lead while the Vets tried to find the legs they had left here at graduation. The Vets, inspired by the play of such world class players as Robert Rauch '85 and Phil Adams '83 came back in a steady surge to win 11-9.

The second game of the day was a more relaxed mix with both WUFO and Vets playing together on the same teams. Everyone was reminded that up and coming players will be making a significant contribution in the future. Of special note was the diving defensive block

continued on page 7

Golf team third in NESAC behind Amherst & Tufts, eyes Little 3 match

by W. Christine Choi

Last Sunday and Monday, golf teams from nine colleges flocked to the Taconic Golf Links for the New England Small College Athletic Conference (NESAC) Golf Championships. The final tallies were based on the best 4 of 5 scores of each day, and, with a combined total of 631, Amherst took first place. The Tufts Jumbos came in second at 649 and Williams placed third with a 650. Overall low medalist was Amherst's Doug Clapp, whose outstanding low scores of 75-74 were matched by none. Sunday provided the epitome of perfect golf weather, and, in spite of Monday's foreboding overcast skies, the players finished the par-71 course before showers moved in. However, the excruciatingly challenging pin placements prevented the Ephmen from playing up to their potential. Said Carter Brothers, '90, "Those were the toughest pin placements I have ever seen at the Taconic. We were putting off of walls and inside of cliffs. It was mentally and physically exhausting."

Although the course was playing well, the team suffered due to its own problems. This resulted in unexpected high scores (in the 80's) and doubts about whether the team has overcome the inconsistency that had plagued them last year. Of the Ephmen who competed in the championships, Jeff Heuer '89 shot an 80 on the first day, and, on the next, sophomores Sean Seguin and Mike La Porte both finished with sparkling 78's.

Chance for Redemption

Because of their loss to archrivals Amherst and Tufts, the Ephs had been itching to get back on the fairway this past Saturday for the Little Threes. The team anticipated easily defeating Wesleyan and giving Amherst a run for their money.

Due to flooding of the course, however, the Little Three Championship was not held on Saturday. It is now tentatively rescheduled for next Saturday. So be prepared; heads (and balls) are gonna roll on the perfectly manicured expanse of the Taconic this weekend.

Megan Jacobson '91 takes a swipe at the ball in softball action at Cole Field last Sunday. The Ephs defeated Wesleyan in a doubleheader, 8-0 and 16-7. Williams' record now stands at 8-2. (Isackson)

Eph softball team trounces Mohawks 11-1

by Anne Joseph

While the Eph baseball players fell this week to North Adams State, the softball squad dominated the Mohawks on Wednesday in a home game stopped in the bottom of the sixth due to the ten-run rule, 11-1. On Sunday, the Ephs swept over Wesleyan in a double header at home, 8-0 and 16-7. The strong hitting and improved field play helped the Ephs bring their record to 8-2.

In the North Adams game, Williams pitcher Cathy Handlich '91 struck out two batters while allowing three hits and two walks. The pitching frustrated the North Adams team, which could only scrape up one run in the top of the second inning. Mohawk Tonya Barbeau '90 started the sixth inning with a triple but soon found herself stranded at third with no hits to get her home.

While the Mohawks could manage a meager three hits, the Ephs pounded out 14 hits, including two home runs. Holly Hedeman '92 chalked up two hits in her three times at bat with a home run to empty the bases in the bottom of the second inning. Fellow freshman Tanya Nunez added a home run to her other two hits in the bottom of the sixth. Nunez's two-run homer put the Ephs up 10 on the Mohawks and ended the game.

The Ephs' hitting, mixed with six errors committed by North Adams State, allowed catcher Audra Mazdzer '91 to extend one of her two singles into a run when Mohawk centerfielder Barbeau committed a three-base error. Co-captain Nancy Hedeman '89 also chalked up an RBI double and Julie Carroll '91 gathered one run with two hits and a walk.

The Ephs dominated the first game in the double-header, but lost concentration in the second game before pulling out the win. Nunez pitched a five-hitter first game and struck out six Wesleyan batters. Senior co-captain Missy Crouchley led the Williams nine-hit offense with two hits, two runs, and two stolen bases. Nunez and Nancy Hedeman also contributed doubles.

The second game let Wesleyan gather five runs from messy field play but Williams soon took the offensive. Nunez grabbed five hits, including two doubles and a triple and Nancy Hedeman pulled in a solo home run.

Due to an insufficient number of games played, the Ephs did not receive an invitation to the NIAC tournament. The women hitters play their final game today away against North Adams.

THE RECORD

INSIDER

Vol. 1, No. 5

May 9, 1989

Mass MoCA: Redesigning North Adams

THE RECORD

INSIDER

Vol. 1, No. 5

May 9, 1989

Mass MoCA:

Redesigning North Adams

THE RECORD INSIDER

VOLUME 1, NUMBER 5

CONTENTS ARTICLES

- 3/ The transformation from a factory to a museum
- 5/ Thomas Krens and the culture business
- 6/ The possible gentrification of North Adams
- 7/ MassMoCA's economic impact
- 12/ Attracting more tourists to the Berkshires
- 14/ Sprague toxic waste may delay MassMoCA
- 15/ Williams extends a hand to North Adams
- 16/ Timeline: MoCA chronology

CENTERFOLD

- 8-9/ MassMoCA hopes to display never-before-seen, world-famous contemporary art. David Penney, a Williams graduate student in the history of art and a MassMoCA intern, analyzes the three main collections under consideration for MassMoCA.

INTERVIEWS

- 4/ Thomas Krens discusses his brainchild
- 13/ John Ramsey: The mayor of North Adams responds to criticism about MassMoCA

OPINION

- 10/ The Insider editorial advocates economic diversification for North Adams.
- 11/ North Adams residents speak out on MassMoCA and the chances for economic revitalization.

Cover photo: Francesco Clemente, The Fourteen Stations, No. III, 1981/82, encaustic on canvas, from the Saatchi collection.

Copyright Insider, The Williams Record. No part may be reproduced in whole or in part without the express consent of the editors. All rights reserved. The Insider is published by The Williams Record, Baxter Hall, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267, the second issue of each month.
Editorial: (413) 597-2400
Business: (413) 597-2289

2 / The Insider May 9, 1989

What is MassMoCA?

The Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art, or MassMoCA, will be the largest contemporary art museum in the world. If all goes according to plan, the museum will open in fall of 1992.

MassMoCA will be located in a former mill in North Adams, Williamstown's poorer industrial neighbor. Heading east on Route 2, the former Sprague Electric complex -- a group of 28 sprawling buildings -- is visible from the overpass on the left just before the Artery Arcade, home of Zayre's Department Store.

The museum is the brainchild of Thomas Krens -- Williams adjunct professor, former director of the Williams College Museum of Art, and current director of the Guggenheim Museum. From the beginning, colleges resources, although not financial in nature, have been involved in the project. One could even argue that MassMoCA would not be possible without WCMA and the Clark Art Institute, which the new museum is supposed to complement.

The state of Massachusetts has already contributed $35 million towards the projected $72 million cash cost of the museum. Four prestigious architectural firms are currently collaborating on the planning. Architects and consultants will complete a feasibility study by July.

The buildings are owned and administered by the MassMoCA Cultural Development Commission, a group of nine men and women including the mayor of North Adams and Williams President Francis Oakley.

The excitement over the museum is twofold. The art world recognizes the potential ability of the museum to display large, never-before-seen works of art. North Adams and the Berkshires focus on the economic potential of the museum.

Economic considerations are currently generating the greatest controversy over the museum. MoCA planners say tourist dollars will revitalize the economy. Critics say the museum will raise real estate prices and increase the cost of living.

MassMoCA is not just a museum. The museum complex will include restaurants, a hotel and retail shops. It is expected to generate over 600 jobs by attracting other businesses to the area.

MassMoCA is not just a museum. It is the unpredictable element in the economic future of North Adams.

ANN MANTIL, BILL SAVADOVE, Editors
BRIENNE COLBY, Production

JUSTIN SMITH, DAN SKWIRE, ELLEN DROUGHT, SARA DUBOW, Assistant Editors
JENNIFER MARIGLIANO, LISA KAESTNER, Production Assistants
STEVEN SCOVILLE, Graphics
JAY STEINMAN, KARL THOMAS, JOEL ISAACSON, Photography

Contributing to THE INSIDER: FRANK
Thanks to Wendy Severinghaus and Robert Freeman

A commercial complex

Factory renovation will cost $72 million

by Sallie Han and Ellen Dougherty
The doors are scheduled to close again in 1992 at the old Sprague Electric plant in North Adams. When they do, the site should be prepared to hold not a mill but a museum, in a city the MassMoCA complex.

What started out as a plan for the largest museum of contemporary art in the world has evolved into a cultural and commercial complex expected to provide a boost for the North Adams economy. In addition to the Museum of Contemporary Art, the MoCA complex will also include a warehouse and office space, shops, restaurants and a hotel.

The plan occupies 13.5 acres and has about 780,000 square feet of building space. An estimated 100,000 square feet is reserved for originally estimated.

"We need an endowment of $15-20 million which brings [the cost] up to $95 million," Thompson said.

Private fundraising

Fundraising for the endowment will begin in the fall, according to Thompson. C.W. Shaver, a New York consulting firm, is conducting interviews in the area and throughout the United States and Europe to determine interest in private funding of the project.

The first phase of renovations will be funded with the state's $35 million. What Thompson called "add-on options," which would include extra gallery space and additional renovations, could be pursued at a later date, although a specific timetable has not been established yet.

would be from 200 to 500 people here. We didn't want to overly saturate the overnight lodging here." He said that the complex may include smaller conference centers, however.

The study architects and master planners of the project are Frank Gehry of Frank O. Gehry & Associates, Robert Venturi of Venturi, Rauch & Scott Brown, Inc., Bruner/Cott & Associates, Inc. and Skidmore, Owings & Merrill. Their plan was chosen out of 23 submissions.

Leaving site as is

"They're going to be interfering as little as possible [with the buildings]," Jennifer Trainer, the director of development and public relations at MassMoCA, said. "They find the site, the buildings, to be just beautiful."

spaces, like what you see at the Clark Art Institute. Some of it will be kept as almost warehouse space."

"Part of the idea behind the museum is it being a sort of warehouse of art," she said. "A lot of the art was created in lofts or in this kind of industrial environment, and this would be returning it to its natural setting."

Curly said that a big clean-up would definitely be required. Electricity, lighting and mechanical systems, partitions and elevators will have to be installed. The architects also have to deal with the structural problems of entrances and internal spaces.

Finding your way around

"We're working out a relationship from gallery to gallery so that a trip through will not be confusing but direct and clear," Curly said.

The scene on the left is an artist's rendition of what MoCA will look like after renovations are complete (graphic courtesy of MassMoCA). On the right is what this view looks like now (Picman).

for MassMoCA was. This includes exhibition, performance, lecture and office space. Another 320,000 square feet will be developed for commercial use.

$72 million price tag

Actual construction is expected to take approximately two years and cost $72 million. According to Director of the Executive Planning Group Joseph Thompson, the initial cash cost of the museum will be $35 million. The commercial space in the buildings not occupied by the museum itself will run around $20 million.

The bidding process to determine which construction firm will be contracted has not begun, and the promised $35 million from the state not yet received. Both are contingent on the state's approval of MassMoCA's feasibility study and master plan, which Thompson said will be completed in mid to late summer.

This feasibility study projects that MassMoCA will cost $2.7 million a year to run, and operating expenses are expected to reach $3.2 million annually by 1995.

Directors of the project are now concerned with establishing an endowment fund to meet these operating costs, which are higher than

Thompson said it was possible that the commercial component of the MoCA complex may be deferred until after the museum itself opens, but no plans have been finalized.

"There is a strong argument for [opening the museum and the commercial section at the same time], so that the buildings work together better from the very beginning." The construction schedule will be determined on the basis of the feasibility study and the initial success of MoCA fundraising efforts.

Commercial space

The commercial space will be renovated by private developers at an estimated cost of $15 million. Thompson said that the feasibility study is assuming that the complex will include a hotel with 80 to 90 rooms, a cafeteria-style restaurant, a luxury dining restaurant and mixed-use retail stores selling items like books, handmade jewelry, interior furnishings.

Plans had originally included a convention center, which was expected to attract people to MassMoCA during the off-season. However, Thompson said that the idea was scrapped due to logistics.

"Where do people spend the night? There

"We're leaving the outside alone, fixing up the buildings where necessary, waterproofing so the rain won't come through," said Tom Curly, Senior Urban Designer at Skidmore, Owings & Merrill, the organizing firm. He said that the architectural team is working with a great deal of enthusiasm and care to maintain the overall architectural character of the buildings.

Something special

However, he added that the planners want the MassMoCA complex to be somehow special. "We're going in and we don't want it to look like we weren't there. We're trying to do something new, something different with what's already there."

He said that among the ideas being considered were having some large-scale public sculpture and perhaps an additional art building.

"There will be several different levels of renovations," Trainer said. "Some of the gallery space will be [traditional museum-type galleries: strict, temperature-controlled

"Visitors should be able to pass through what they want to see and bypass what they're not interested in."

"Inside the buildings we're looking for opportunities to create some special spaces," he said. This might include putting up or knocking down walls and taking out floors to open up tall spaces. Curly added that the architects are working as much as possible within the confines of the structures as they presently exist.

"We're looking at different options for commercial buildings," Curly said. "They need to clearly be on the circulation path of visitors passing by." He said that the shops and restaurants would be accessible to museum visitors and to people just walking down the street.

"We're looking at retail and services which would benefit from being closer to the town. The town would also benefit from the new businesses. We're hoping that [the new businesses] will make up part of the fabric of the museum and of Marshall Street."

MassMoCA mastermind

Thomas Krens is the creator of MassMoCA and the director of the Guggenheim Foundation. He was director of the Williams College Museum of Art from 1981 to 1988.

Record Interview by Bill Savadove

RECORD: What do you see as the educational benefits of MassMoCA? Specifically, what sort of programs are planned for the North Adams community, as opposed to area colleges?

KRENS: I think you can answer that question by putting it in perspective. The project's a very big project, very complicated. It's as if you decided to create a college and then want to know right away what the courses are that the college is going to teach.

Maybe that's not a perfect analogy, but I think the issue is this: I feel that MassMoCA represents a potentially enormous educational opportunity because I think that the people that are involved in it should have that perspective. As a modern museum, it should enter its formative phase with the idea of trying to be responsive to a variety of audiences. Those audiences include the locality of North Adams.

As far as the structure of programs... It doesn't make sense for us to spell out what the programmatic implications of a community outreach program are until we're pretty sure that the project is actually going to work from an operating standpoint. We cannot be specific about the community educational programs because it's premature to do that.

We are, for example, working with RPI in designing a technological component to this program. Part of that component will be to provide potentially large amounts of didactic and background information that would be accessible to people in the community without much preparation.

RECORD: It still seems something of an anomaly that MassMoCA is going to be in North Adams. Why there?

KRENS: Most enterprises are a function of opportunity. You can ask the question, "Why Williams College in Williamstown?" and the answer is "Well, Ephraim Williams happened to take a bullet in the head after leaving a will that left his estate for the creation of a free school."

My point is that the people who thought about it were here. They recognized that what existed in Williamstown was an extraordinary art resource that was not duplicable in many places outside large cities. Look what's here; two museums, an art conservation lab that's one of the best of its kind in the country, a world-class library, the background and educational support that the library gets from universities as well as the Clark and the college, the Getty...

Beyond that, North Adams had a high rate of unemployment when we made the appeal to the state for funding, and the Sprague complex was abandoned and not in use and close to downtown. We thought that MassMoCA could be this catalyst between what was going on downtown and this big factory complex.

So all of these things together were responsible. If we tried to get the money today, forget it, because the economic climate in Massachusetts doesn't support it. In 1986, it did. We saw that, we tried to put the pieces of the puzzle together, and so far we've been largely successful.

RECORD: Do you see the museum as a permanent catalyst in shifting the North Adams economy from production to tourism? Is MassMoCA the best means of revitalizing the North Adams economy?

KRENS: Well, who knows? If you're looking at it from the standpoint of a worker in North Adams, and you can bring an electronic assembly plant in here that pays 15 to 20 dollars an hour, then do it. What I'm saying is that at some level you have to be resourceful, and I look around and I don't see anything else... And it's not like the MassMoCA project is a large conglomerate trying to take over and reshape the region. In many ways it's actually a small operation, despite all the hype about it being a amount of square feet.

RECORD: In the summer the museum would draw people from Tanglewood and the theater here, and the other museums. What's going to happen in the winter in terms of attracting tourists?

KRENS: We would do what makes the most sense. Early October through most of October is one of the biggest tourist seasons around here. The tourist season picks up again after spring vacation. So basically you're talking the first of April to the 30th of October, which means essentially November, December, January, February and March are the 5 months of the year [with few tourists.]

The question is could this, for example, be developed and promoted as a convention center complex, so you could draw two or three organization conventions to use the infrastructure of hotels in MassMoCA or related to MassMoCA, and meeting rooms and exhibition spaces and what is changing about the Berkshire is that it is becoming a tourist area.

'It's not like we're building a rocket manufacturing center that's going to be looking to North Adams for technological expertise.'

* Another thing worth noting is that there has been a lot of economic theory lately framed as an amenities argument. That is, it's not necessarily proximity to harbors and rivers and railways and highways that create a favorable climate for locating a manufacturing operation in a particular place. Rather, it is the schools, the cultural benefits, etc.

Now, is there a hard and fast equation that says that a museum is going to bring companies here? No. But are we interested in nurturing that? Absolutely...

So you ask me, "Is that the best way?"

where those conventions could take place? I'm not saying that's the answer, but it's an answer like that and maybe five answers like that brought together would make sense.

RECORD: Some real estate people have said that people have already begun to speculate on some of the property, and that prices could be starting to go up. Do you think that other economic benefits of the museum would outweigh the possibility that real estate and the cost of living may go up?

KRENS: I don't know that much about the relationship between real estate and the unemployment rate in North Adams... I think that it's a valid question to raise, and I think by raising it, those concerns have to be protected, that there should be people concerned about taking steps. How do you deal with something like that? Do you deal with something like that by trying to exercise some government control or abandoning the project -- I don't know....

Thomas Krens (Kuykendall)

I'm not an expert in the field, I can only give you an opinion, an observation, that it's one of the choices the community has to make. If we felt there was a strong community opposition to it, I don't think the project would exist.

RECORD: If there is a shift more towards a service oriented economy, is the current infrastructure in North Adams ready to handle that?

KRENS: Your questions might be better addressed to an economist that studies local and regional economies. I can't answer that question with any specific informed perspective, but I have an observation as to whether or not the city in effect is prepared for it. My feeling is to a certain degree, yes.

The part they're not prepared for they'll probably adjust to prepare for, because it would be in their interests to do that. If MassMoCA is successful, what does that mean? Will there be a need for more hotel rooms? Undoubtedly yes. How long will it take to see those hotel rooms realized? Two years. Who will invest in those hotel rooms? Probably outsiders. Who will build those hotel rooms? Probably local people. Who will work in those hotel and service establishments? Probably the local people.

Those aren't given; maybe the investment money will come from the inside. We're not proposing a momentous change

continued on page 14

Krens deals in the culture business

by Bill Savodre

Thomas Krens is in the culture business. He has said this in interviews and, for him, it is not a pejorative statement. Culture is a big business, and business is good.

But before the Guggenheim Foundation, before the planned MassMoCA franchise in North Adams, there was the Williams College Museum of Art -- a small college museum that Krens ushered into the national scene.

"Tom brought a lot of his own chutzpah and business school acumen to museums. He was not first and foremost a scholar of art. He was interested in this national phenomenon of museums," said Acting WCMA Director Rod Faulds.

"He totally transformed WCMA. He professionalized it," said Director of the Brooklyn Museum of Art Robert Buck '61. Krens served as a consultant to the Brooklyn Museum while he was obtaining his masters degree in public and private management from Yale University.

During his tenure as director of WCMA from 1980 to 1988, Krens (who graduated Williams in 1969 with a degree in political economy) professionalized the museum by increasing technology and staff size, and by bringing in professional curators.

WCMA renovation

Under his direction two major additions were made to the museum: a four-story structure including galleries, classrooms and office space in 1983, and two new galleries in 1986. Both additions were designed by renowned architect Charles Moore.

Krens also set a precedent of more frequent exhibitions at WCMA. He succeeded in shifting the emphasis of these exhibitions -- to contemporary art.

"There was no sudden apparition. It was a gradual building," Buck said of the shift to contemporary art. "There was already beginning involvement with leading American contemporaries...through the artists-in-residence program that Krens initiated."

Krens wanted WCMA to complement the 15th to 19th century collections of the Clark Art Institute, according to Buck.

Faulds said that increasing professionalism is a national trend. "Regardless of personality, it's a phenomenon that has occurred in the last 10 to 20 years. What has happened here is not unique."

"Though Williams is exceptional, the tone is similar across the nation," a Newsweek On Campus article read. "Once a hangdog fringe, housed in creaking buildings, the art museum is becoming a central feature of the American campus."

A forceful personality

But the WCMA transformation cannot be attributed primarily to a national phenomenon. Many involved give the credit to Krens' charisma and drive.

"I think it was almost totally a function of Mr. Krens' personality and energy," said Vice President and Treasurer of the College Will Reed.

No matter what the cause, increasing professionalism has meant a change in the way college museums serve departments. Access to the collection is more limited and exhibitions change more often, so that the changes Krens made were not universally welcomed.

Chairman of the Art Department Edward

Epping said, "The museum did some wonderful things in terms of student involvement [in the past]. There was this kind of intimacy about the place that was wonderful." However, Epping added, he does not want the museum to return to the way it was before Krens took over.

Not the Met

"A college museum should be serving the courses and the community. We're not the Metropolitan," Professor of Art History, Emeritus, Whitney Stoddard said. "You can have a big show every once in a while, but you don't have to have a big blockbuster continually."

"I think art is something that you don't market. If that is the emphasis, the quality of the object you're exhibiting gets lost in the PR. If you're basically concerned with numbers, what you're exhibiting could be anything. There are no quality decisions made."

A similar concern about Krens' management style in the "culture business" was made by critic Hilton Kramer (see accompanying sidebar).

Krens' colleagues, however, come to his defense: "He knows about the art market," Faulds said. "He could talk about art on a cost per square foot basis. But he can see and appreciate art aside from its market value. His excitement, in the pure sense, about MassMoCA is about the art."

Buck said that Krens merely balances an appreciation of art with a museum director's eye for economic reality. "He emphasizes technical analysis and practical solutions. His claim, which is hardly original, is somewhat like Japanese industry: They seek solutions

Ken Johnson, Art in America

"By all accounts, Krens is a man of considerable brilliance. For confirmation one need only look at the way he developed the Williams College Museum of Art from a sleepy little study collection into a big, active college museum whose Charles Moore-designed expansion has garnered national attention and attendance figures close to that of the Clark."

Deborah Weiss, The New York Times Sunday Magazine

"Krens is an entrepreneur whose business is museums. He talks about business as a commodity and museums as an industry, and he intends to dominate that industry. The Guggenheim is his power base; the museum in North Adams his means to expand that base."

Hilton Kramer, The New York Observer

"It is a bit of a shock to see how little time it takes for an art museum, even a museum of large resources and established reputation, to be turned around and sent down the slippery slope to irreversible mercenaryness. One would not have thought that a great cultural institution could be so decisively trashed so quickly, and with so little resistance from those officially charged with governing its destiny -- namely, its board of trustees. Yet New York is now witnessing precisely this grim scenario in the wreck that is being made of the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum under its new director, Thomas Krens. Virtually overnight this once formidable institution has been reduced to an object of ridicule and contempt, and for the moment seems to be little more than an appendage to the worst elements of the international bourse in fake reputations."

based on statistical analyses... It would hardly be right to accuse him of being insensitive to the art."

People who worked with Krens while he was at WCMA paint a dual picture of a workaholic with a savvy business sense.

"He was a master juggler -- he had 20 or 30 projects going at one time," Faulds said. "I felt he encouraged too many projects. He had a philosophy that one should throw many balls in the air in order to have three or four of them land nicely."

"Tom has the ability to sustain the large picture," Epping said. "He is able to develop a scope of things that most people would never think about. He'll say, 'I've got this idea' and he's willing to tell people. We'll say, 'damn fool' but he's willing to take the risk."

Multiple commitments

These same colleagues do not doubt that Krens has the energy to maintain his commitment to MassMoCA, as well as to the Guggenheim Museum, where he is director, and to the college, where he still teaches one course and holds the title of adjunct professor.

Krens' name quickly vaulted the MassMoCA project into the spotlight, and his influence has already won the museum an amount of prestige. "If Tom Krens is behind it, it will generate interest anywhere," Michael Loeb, the executive vice-president of a New York art book publishing company, said to the North Adams Transcript.

Loeb was visiting North Adams to investigate the possibility of opening a shop in MassMoCA's commercial space. "We have to pay attention to whatever he does," he said.

"I don't see his failures. I don't think they exist," Buck concluded. "He can follow through with whatever he does. He works twice as hard as anyone I know."

The Williams College Museum of Art was renovated in 1986 under the direction of Thomas Krens. (WCMA photo)

Impact on North Adams

Can a museum be a city's economic savior?

by Justin Smith

In the last two decades traditionally industrial communities like North Adams have struggled to survive the de-industrialization of the American economy. Many rust-belt areas have sought ways to regain the prosperity of the past through urban revitalization projects.

North Adams' own revitalization project, MassMoCA, is touted by its supporters as an opportunity for the city to construct an economically brighter future. However, exactly what the economic impact of the museum will be on the lives of current residents is less than clear.

An initial feasibility study completed in March 1987 determined that the project would create roughly 606 full-time equivalent jobs for the area. Joseph Thompson, director of the MassMoCA executive planning group, said that operation of the museum itself would create between sixty and ninety new jobs.

North Adams Mayor John Barrett III is not sure that the museum will create that many jobs. "I don't pay much attention to those numbers; I just don't hang my hat on them. But if it has the potential that it creates 250 jobs, I will be happy."

Selling North Adams

"MassMoCA will make it easier to sell North Adams to businesses," Thompson said. "The subtlety of that is often lost."

"Having that sort of thing in North Adams will make North Adams a more attractive place for businesses to locate," Williams Associate Professor of Economics Ralph Bradburd, who reviewed the 1987 study, said.

However, Thompson acknowledged that revitalization and the creation of new jobs will not be immediate. "They're going to take four to five years to work through the system,

'Most of the 600 jobs they're talking about are retail jobs, waiters, etc. They are relatively poor-paying jobs.'

maybe even ten years."

Critics argue against the picture painted by Thompson, questioning whether the creation of service sector jobs is in the long-term interests of the town.

"My question would be, 'Are these jobs going to provide a living income for the area? Is it really going to be the kind that the working population really needs?'" said North Adams State Professor of Sociology Myrland Seider. "Most of the 600 jobs they're talking about are retail jobs, waiters, etc. The bulk of them are relatively poor-paying jobs."

Low supply

"I think it's inappropriate to think of some of

6/The Insider May 9, 1989

MoCA's Impact

M a s s
M o
C
A

$21 million in local spending increase

$7.4 million of above in profits and personal income

$471,000 in additional local tax revenue

606 new fulltime equivalent jobs

N o r t h
A d a m
s

those jobs as minimum wage jobs," Bradburd said. "Labor markets are very tight. Nevertheless, there is a substantial demand for certain kinds of labor. It's a low-supply situation."

Seider also claimed that many of the higher paying jobs are likely to be filled by outsiders. "There's no guarantee of affirmative action by locality... People may come in here [for the higher paying jobs] and they may not even pay property taxes in North Adams."

"I don't expect an influx of New Yorkers," Bradburd said. "But I would imagine that some of the higher-level jobs will be filled by people from other places."

In addition, there are concerns over the projected increase in tourism and the economic difficulties this could entail. Seider, for example, questions predictions of the museum's success.

"Are they overexaggerating the amount of tourists coming in the area? There won't be that much change of the exhibits, so there will be no need to come back every few months or so. What its impact will be is really questionable. What happens if there's a recession? What happens if there's an increase in oil prices? Tourist based economies are sensitive to that sort of thing."

Infrastructure

Another concern is whether or not the current infrastructure of North Adams is adequate to handle flocks of tourists. "Infrastructure" includes the transportation network, hotel accommodations, restaurants, landfill space, water supply, police and fire protection and other features of the town.

"I worry about fire, police, traffic, roads," Seider said. "We're having a hard time right now just paying the policemen a living wage."

"We've got a water problem in North Adams that's unreal," said Mike Wilber, a member of the North Adams Tenant's Organization. "We've got these old pipes that have been here for years, and we often have brown water."

Wilber claimed that the new hotel being planned to handle the new influx of tourists will place a heavier burden on the water system, as well as the landfill space.

"They had this money, it was for one item [MassMoCA], and that was it," he said. "They had no intention of taking care of the rest of the problems. They refuse to take care of it. Maybe we could have a few more dollars to do [MassMoCA] the right way. [The elected officials] don't want to have to answer all the questions."

Promises, promises

"They promise to do this, they promise to do that, but mostly we don't see anything," said Gary Hillard, another member of the tenant's organization.

However, Thompson said that some road and sidewalk improvements are planned, and a hotel will be built. He said that the road improvements will strengthen the link between the downtown area and the factory complex.

According to Gene Breda, the North Adams Commissioner of Public Services, roads in North Adams are in good shape. "We've just spent a barrel of money on the center of town in the last 4 or 5 years," Breda said.

He added that the Marshall street area has been improved in recent years but needs more work. "The sidewalk on the side of MassMoCA is deplorable. The sidewalk on the other side of Marshall was replaced last year. [Marshall street] is in good shape, it was resurfaced 4 or 5 years ago."

Breda explained that the street should probably be widened but this is not possible without alteration of the Sprague buildings along the road. He said he is waiting for consultants to make further recommendations.

"A beautiful place"

Thompson also maintained that most people ignore the aesthetic virtues of North Adams, which is an archetypical New England mill town. "It's a very, very beautiful place. The urban planning component is focusing on not changing that."

Despite such concerns about the nature of jobs created, the city's infrastructure, and gentrification (see article, next page), Bradburd said that MassMoCA may be the best of very few options for the North Adams economy. "You'd like to compare MassMoCA not to what you would most like to have, but to the next most likely alternative."

"We're not competing for the use of that plant. If Sprague had somebody to sell or rent the plant to, they'd certainly never give it to us," Krens pointed out. "There are two or three mill complexes in North Adams, and if you put MassMoCA in one, you increase the chances of getting manufacturing in the others."

"This is not manufacturing employment, but if manufacturers wanted to locate in North Adams, the space would never have been available in the first place," Bradburd said.

Other options

However, Seider disagreed about the lack of viable options for the city, claiming that alter-

'If manufacturers wanted to locate in North Adams, the space would never have been available [for MoCA] in the first place.'

natives to MassMoCA have not been adequately considered. "I think the city has to look at it another way. What else could be done with the space, what alternatives do we have to MassMoCA? There was little time to discuss what could be done. I think things happened really quickly."

Seider explained that the debate on economic revitalization completely changed focus after the initial MassMoCA proposal was made. From that point forward, he said, the city concentrated on getting the $35 million grant from the state.

"That was the whole focus without really saying, 'Is this good for North Adams?'"

Housing effect

Critics say MoCA will gentrify North Adams

by Justin Smith

The criticism most often voiced against MassMoCA is that it may contribute to the gentrification of North Adams. The city's property values are rising and rents are increasing, stirring up fears that MassMoCA will become a reality only at the expense of North Adams residents.

"Nobody wants to see people driven from their homes," Joseph Thompson, the director of the MassMoCA executive planning group, said. "There will be some upward pressure on housing prices if this works. Some say it's happened already. I don't believe that."

Thomas Krens, the museum's director and chairman of the MassMoCA Cultural Development Commission, said that rising prices are a consequence of any type of economic revitalization.

"Let's say it wasn't a museum, but a technology manufacturing center that was moving in there," he said. "Watch the real estate prices on River Street if it were manufacturing. They would jump faster than if it were a museum. I guarantee it."

Speculation

According to a recently completed study of housing in North Adams, there is evidence of speculation in the North Adams housing market. The report was prepared by David Taylor of the University of Massachusetts for the North Adams Office of Community Development.

"North Adams' declining population and economy, coupled with a scarcity of readily developable land, explains its low (housing) replacement rate of one percent," the report stated. "However, this trend may change as the result of two proposed projects: the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art and the Greylock Glen Development."

"Multi-unit housing prices have already begun to show an increase in market activity," the study continued. "The period between 1985 and 1987 saw the price of multi-unit structures increase dramatically and their days on the market decrease. These two factors indicate a housing market where speculation is occurring."

Williams Associate Professor of Economics Ralph Bradburd said that this speculation may not be due to MassMoCA. "I think there may be some speculative surge, but I doubt that's going to have any long-term effect. And don't forget that property values in North Adams were rising even before the idea of MassMoCA came on the scene."

Northeast surge

"Maybe in the past year (housing prices) have steadied a little bit," said Connie York, a sales associate at Harsch Associates, a North Adams real estate agency. "People are just unsure of the economy in general. (Real estate values) rose before MoCA was brought about, why I don't really know. The whole Northeast just seemed to surge."

Rental rates have mirrored the rising property values. "There's no question that rentals in the museum area, in fact the city as a whole, have gone up a lot," North Adams State Professor Maynard Seider said.

"People like to hide that fact, but it's not going to go away," said Mike Wilber, a member of the North Adams Tenant's Organization.

Forty percent of the total North Adams population lives in rented housing, according to John Taft, the code enforcement inspector of the North Adams Board of Health. In-

Speculators may be improving North Adams' housing stock. (Thomas) creases in rental rates, especially anomalously large increases caused by speculation, may make it impossible for many of the unemployed and working poor in the area to remain there.

"Can people who are going to be making six dollars an hour at MoCA jobs afford to live in the area near MoCA? My sense is they won't be able to," Seider said. "Where are all those people going to go once they get pushed out?"

Outside looking in

"If we don't address the housing question now, we're going to have a big problem in three or four years," Wilber said. "If residents don't wake up now, they're going to be on the outside looking in."

Although rental rates and the cost of living may nullify any increases in local income brought about by MassMoCA, some of the increase in rental rates may stem from improvements that new owners and speculators make. In part, landlords might be raising rents because such renovations are often made on credit.

Improvement of North Adams' housing stock would be a positive effect, especially since code violations are not uncommon in many structures in the community, and the housing replacement rate is only one percent.

However, Seider said, "There's some question about how much improvement has actually taken place. The rents are rising, but the places aren't being improved."

Low-income housing

Rising rental rates are likely to increase the need for low-income housing in the area, but it is unlikely that this increased need will be met.

The North Adams Housing Authority, a federal agency, currently owns 306 low-income dwelling units, and other low-income residents receive housing assistance through state and federal funding. In addition, some privately owned housing is available at below-market rental rates through developers who were granted low-interest construction loans by the government.

Housing prices on North Adams' River Street have been rising over the last few years. (Thomas)

However, it is unlikely that the Housing Authority will construct additional low-income housing units within the foreseeable future.

"All of that is controlled by the federal budget. At present, things look pretty dim," said William O'Brien, Director of Management and Operations at the North Adams Housing Authority.

In fact, the pool of low-income housing available might actually decrease in the next decade. According to O'Brien, developers who in the past constructed low-income housing units using low-interest government loans will be allowed to raise rents once these loans are paid off.

Back to market rents

"These units can revert back to market rents, but that's a concern that's common across the nation, not just in the Berkshire area," O'Brien said.

Renters in the Mohawk Forest and Brayton Hill apartment complexes in North Adams might be affected by the pay-off of government loans and an increase of their rents to free-market value. However, O'Brien said this all depends on the particular mortgage agreements that were made.

It is unlikely that the pool of available low-income housing will actually shrink, according to O'Brien. "We're basically going to sustain at these levels that we're at. I don't expect any significant growth. There are so many innovative ways of administering housing assistance. There may be opportunities available."

If many of North Adams' low-income residents are driven out because of rising housing costs, (17 percent of the population lives below the poverty line), who will replace them?

Studio space

"We've had a lot of queries from people out of town," York said, adding that out-of-towners, especially from metropolitan areas like New York and Boston, have heard about North Adams and the MassMoCA project through newspapers. "There have been a lot of artist type people looking for gallery space and studio space."

North Adams Mayor John Barrett III said he does not believe predictions that outsiders will buy up property. "Disney World in Orlando, did that drive up prices and drive up rents? No. Because people go there to visit; they don't want to live there. And they're not going to want to live in North Adams."

Bradburd maintained that rising real estate prices are not cause for alarm, but are rather an inevitable result of economic revitalization.

"There's been an awful lot of what I think is pretty foolish thinking about this. Let's assume no state or federal subsidies for low income housing. Given that, how would you have low-priced housing, rental rates in particular? And the answer is, 'Have a very depressed local economy.'"

World-famous contemporary art

by David Penney

Several major private collectors have agreed to place groups of art works with MassMoCA as gifts or as long-term loans with provisions for future donation or purchase. While the lists of works are not yet final, the character of the initial MassMoCA installations is emerging. In keeping with the original concept of the North Adams museum, the focus will be on art of the last thirty years, and the emphasis will be on depth of representation rather than on encyclopedic breadth—each artist will be represented by a comparatively large body of work. A number of artists have visited North Adams and hope to install their own work. Mario Merz, Francesco Clemente and Richard Long have identified parts of the complex where they would like to create new works, and other artists may add to the installations of their own work from their personal holdings.

The three collections under negotiation are most advanced for the Panza, Saatchi and Sonnabend collections. The three proposals are highly complementary. Giuseppe and Giovanna Panza di Biumo's proposal is very strong in American minimal and conceptual art, and includes characteristic works from the 1960s and 1970s by sculptors Donald Judd, Richard Serra, Dan Flavin, Robert Morris, Bruce Nauman and Carl Andre; painters Robert Rauschenberg, Robert Mapplethorpe, Robert Marden and Robert Ryman; and conceptual artists Sol LeWitt, Joseph Kosuth, Lawrence Weiner and Hanne Darboven. It also contains projects and completed installations by Doug Wheeler, Maria Nordman, James Turrell and Robert Irwin, artists whose work is based on space and light rather than on objects as such.

The Charles and Doris Saatchi collection is also strong in American art, with many minimal and conceptual works as well as pieces by John Chamberlain, Eva Hesse, Frank Stella and other artists who moved away from those idioms. The collection includes substantial holdings of American Pop Art and Postmodernist painting, and the Saatchis have proposed work by Andy Warhol, Agnes Martin, Julian Schnabel, Reinhard Mucha, Jennifer Bartlett, and Anselm Kiefer for North Adams. The proposal also includes eight of Frank Stella's aluminum relief paintings and Francesco Clemente's Fourteen Stations (1981-2).

The broadest in scope of the three, the Herta and Paul Amirson collection adds the work of European conceptualists and Arte Povera artist to that of the Americans. A substantial placement of the Sonnabend collection in North Adams would allow the work of Jannis Kounellis, Mario Merz, Arman, Vito Acconci, Giovanni Anselmo, and Christo to be seen along with the American works. These Arte Povera ("Impoverished Art") workers used cheap raw and found materials to make richly associative assemblages which evaded both the classic art media and monumental form.

The Sonnabend collection contains strong groups of work by Pop artists Jim Dine, Claes Oldenburg, Roy Lichtenstein and Andy Warhol, as well as significant pieces by Jasper Johns and Robert Rauschenberg. It also includes paintings by A.R. Penck, Anselm Kiefer, Jörg Immendorf, Albert Oehlen, Georg Baselitz and Peter Bommels, who were recently shown in the "Refigured Painting" exhibition at WCMA and the Guggenheim Museum. Ashley Bickerton, Meyer Vaisman, Haim Steinbach, Jeff Koons, Annette Lemieux, and Peter Halley bring the collection up to the late 1980s.

Minimalism

The proposed initial collections reflect

Francesco Clemente, The Fourteen Stations, 1981-2.

Giovanni Anselmo, Structure eating lettuce, 1968. From the Sonnabend collection.

8 / The Insider May 9, 1989

Robert Morris, Untitled (Five steel plate piece), 1969. From the Panza collection.

82. From the Saatchi collection.

the emphasis on unorthodox materials in American and European art of the last 30 years. Minimalist sculpture often used industrial materials such as steel, lead, concrete, rubber, felt, and fiberglass, and these typically with little manipulation, in ways that emphasized their essential qualities.

Richard Serra's One Ton Prop (1969-79) consists only of four sheets of lead, leaned together to form an open cube four and one-half feet high. Mario Merz has built igloos using metal rods and broken plate glass, while one Giovanni Anselmo piece in the Sonnabend collection, "Structure Eating Lettuce," is made from a granite block, sawdust, and fresh lettuce. Even paintings often have attachments, ranging from Jim Dine's shoes, belts, and neckties to Kiefer's lead sheeting and Schnabel's famous broken crockery.

Conceptual art

Conceptual art hardly uses materials at all. Sol Lewitt's Wall Drawings consist of instructions written by the artist for a draughtsperson who actually executes the work, when and where it is wanted. WCMA visitors will be familiar with Lewitt's "Wallworks" piece, a late addition to the Wall Drawing series.

A number of Lawrence Weiner pieces in the Panza proposal consist of phrases painted on the walls: ONE KILOGRAM OF LACQUER POURED UPON A FLOOR, THE JOINING OF FRANCE GERMANY AND SWITZERLAND BY ROPE. These are not proposals or records of actions taken, but concepts held up for consideration.

Space perception

Also in the Panza collection are many installation pieces which attempt to alter the viewer's perception of existing spaces or to create spaces that give rise to unusual kinesthetic experiences. Dan Flavin and Bruce Nauman work with fluorescent and neon light to distort space, while Doug Wheeler, Robert Irwin and Maria Nordman create spaces with walls or screens to control light from hidden sources, for similar effects.

Many of these artists worked in series, exploring the permutations of ideas or formal vocabularies. Their pieces are ideally seen as a group, something that can only be achieved with difficulty in most museums. The same is true of the room-sized environments and the large cycles of paintings and wall drawings. In the North Adams mill complex, these pieces will be installed in related groups and will be available to artists and students for long periods.

The pluralist era

Although minimal and conceptual art can provide rich perceptual experiences, they can also be austere. MassMoCA hopes to show in depth the work done by a number of artists seeking richer, more emotional idioms.

Even while the minimal sculptors were working, Stella's, Rauschenberg's and Johns' increasingly detailed and colored work led to what Corrine Robbins has called "The Pluralist Era," when there seems to be no dominant artistic style. The art of the 1980s tends to be visually diverse and highly theorized in relation to both "high art" and consumer culture.

Jeff Koons and Sherry Levine attempt to deconstruct notions of permanent value, fixed meanings and individual creativity, while Barbara Kruger and Jenny Holzer address cross-cultural politics. The new German and Italian expressionist painters have returned to highly personal idioms, but with added references to recent history, politics, and psychoanalytical work. The resulting mix defies a capsule summary, but makes for interesting exhibitions.

Even the best possible combination of installations from the three cornerstone collections would leave unrepresented a number of important artists. At this early stage that is unavoidable, as the museum must rely on private benefactors. However, it seems likely that a strong core such as that outlined here will generate additional loans and gifts. All things considered, the Panza, Saatchi, and Sonnabend collections offer a remarkable starting point for this project.

Barbara Kruger, Untitled, 1983.

David Penney is a first-year student in the Williams College Graduate Program in the History of Art. He has been working as an intern at MassMoCA.

A note on the photographs: As the arrangements for placement of art at MassMoCA have not been completed, it is not possible to illustrate works that will definitely come to North Adams. The pieces illustrated are typical of the artist's work and are under consideration for MassMoCA.

Frank Stella, President Brand, 1982. From the Saatchi collection.

OPINION

Don't depend on MassMoCA

The Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art promises to deck the halls of the abandoned Sprague Electric plant with the best of contemporary art. In a way, the museum itself has become an artistic vision: its creators and supporters have shaped the future of North Adams in a manner analogous to an artist shaping clay.

The changing concept of MassMoCA seems to have been motivated by a dichotomy between what planners wanted and what the realities of the situation were.

Contemporary art requires phenomenal amounts of space, so where can we put it? In a dying mill town conveniently close to Williams College.

How do we get people to come? In-clude conference speakers, secure never-before-seen collections of artwork, and make it the largest contemporary art museum in the world.

How do we sell it to the town? Change the focus from a museum to a commercial complex that will generate lots of jobs.

Despite the seeming deliberateness of MassMoCA's evolution, one cannot doubt that its organizers and supporters are sincere in their belief that the museum will truly help North Adams. A 1987 feasibility study predicted that MassMoCA will create, directly and indirectly, 606 new fulltime equivalent jobs in the North Adams economy. For residents who have watched the slow decline of their town since Sprague Electric moved out, it was the promise of manna from heaven.

Almost too good to be true, in fact. A few whispers of warning began when someone noticed that real estate prices were going up. Then someone else took a good look at the feasibility study and realized that over half of the predicted 606 jobs are "indirect"; that is, they are assumed to be created through businesses that will be attracted to the area by MassMoCA.

Of course, that won't happen right away, because no merchant is going to locate there until time determines MoCA's staying power. Predicted lag time? Two years before the businesses start coming, ten years before the full effects are felt. Ten years is more than long enough for the museum to fold, more than long enough for people to get pushed out of their homes because the rents are rising.

The gradual pull-out of Sprague nearly crippled the economy, and if MassMoCA doesn't fly, the pull-out won't be gradual.

And then a few brave souls started asking questions. How is an ex-Sprague worker with a high school education going to take a job as an administrator at the world's largest contemporary art museum? How, in fact, is he going to work at a MoCA branch of one of the nation's most famous art publications companies? How, in other words, is he going to be able to do anything besides clean the floors and make sure no one steals the art?

But MassMoCA has $35 million of the state's dollars, the solid commitment of Governor Michael Dukakis and local officials, and a man respected in the international art world as its creator and director. Barring disaster—which possibly could take the form of another $23 million underestimation of renovation and operating costs, Thomas Krens' dream is going to become a reality. The debate lost its significance the minute Dukakis signed the funding bill with his Papermate.

But no one likes to read criticism of what is essentially a fait accompli.

How about constructive criticism? Thomas Krens said in an interview with the Record that real estate prices would have risen if the city had succeeded in luring a manufacturing company to the Marshall Street plant. They probably would have risen even higher.

The only thing wrong with this defense is that a manufacturing company would have hired the people of North Adams, the people who really need the "revitalization" that has become one of the project's catchwords. And it would have paid them enough to keep them in their homes, to keep rising rents within their means.

That's still something of a moot point. North Adams didn't manage to lure industry into those 28 buildings, and MassMoCA was presented to the community as the only light in a very dim future. Art...art became the salvation of North Adams.

But one would hope that the city learned some hard lessons from the crisis that brought all this about in the first place. The gradual pull-out of Sprague virtually crippled the economy, and if MassMoCA doesn't fly, the pull-out won't be gradual. Besides, putting all your eggs in the basket of tourism is a risky thing to do. Tourists are affected by shifts in the economy just as much as North Adams residents are. Right now the region and the nation are doing pretty well, but should a recession hit, the three hours between MoCA and the big cities will suddenly be a lot longer.

What it all boils down to is not the value of paint splashed on canvas or metal twisted into sculpture. What will help North Adams, and the region as a whole, is long-term economic diversification. At no point in the future should the city be as vulnerable to MassMoCA as it was to Sprague. North Adams officials have to take a hard look at their options, few though they may be.

The problem is that in many areas what MoCA's planners are promising doesn't make sense. They say that people are going to come to MoCA because there are already swarms of tourists in this region anyway. But they also say that the new influx of tourists that MassMoCA is going to attract will make the region irresistible to investors.

In other words, we have tourists now, and Sprague is giving the plant to Krens and the Cultural Development Commission because no one else wants to use it.

MassMoCA can guarantee the city nothing except maybe higher real estate prices. The city has to explore other alternatives.

The cultural amenities argument, which assumes that businesses are attracted to areas rich in cultural resources, seems to be a little flawed. People have to stop being content with the belief that in 1994 (two years after MoCA is scheduled to open), all of their problems will be solved. MassMoCA can guarantee the city nothing except maybe higher real estate prices. We can hope, or alternatively we can doubt, all we want, but in the long run officials have to almost pretend it isn't even there. The city has to explore other alternatives and not depend on Thomas Krens' artistic vision for its future.

Opinions on MoCA

North Adams community reaction is mixed

by Ann Mantel and Bill Savadove

Local and regional newspapers have lately been saturated with articles examining whether MassMoCA will truly benefit the population of North Adams. But what do the residents themselves think of the museum?

"I get the sense that this project enjoys a great deal of support in North Adams from what I read in the newspapers and from the people I hear from and talk to," said Thomas Krens, the chairman of the MassMoCA Cultural Development Commission and the museum's creator.

Krens' sense of community support is shared by many North Adams officials. Tom King, the executive vice president of the Northern Berkshire Chamber of Commerce, said that North Adams residents "overwhelmingly" favored the project.

"They want this thing to work in the worst way," North Adams Mayor John Barrett said. "They're really excited about it and they have been excited about it since day one. They're excited in the sense that there is a tremendous amount of pride that this would be located here."

However, interviews with former Sprague Electric employees (a Sprague plant used to occupy the Marshall Street complex where MassMoCA will be) and other residents indicate a degree of opposition that has largely gone unnoticed.

Sprague ex-employees

Louis Thomas retired from Sprague Electric in 1981 after working for the company for thirty years. He said that when he began working for the company, the four North Adams Sprague plants employed some 4,200 people. We interviewed Thomas just outside the grounds of the Marshall Street plant.

'If it comes up to expectations, comes out what it's like on paper, it will help quite a few employees.'

"If it comes up to expectations, comes out what it's like on paper, it will help quite a few employees," he says, looking at the enormous brick buildings that will house some of the world's most famous pieces of contemporary art.

The complex is quiet, abandoned, almost run-down. "It used to take 20 minutes just to clear everyone out at lunchtime," muses another ex-employee of Sprague, facing the empty Marshall Street crosswalk. "Now cars go by here at 40 miles an hour."

While talking to him just inside the gate of the complex, a man driving a Saab with a New York license plate pulls up and asks, "Is this where that new art museum is going to be?"

At the Exxon station on the corner of Route 2 and Route 8, there are racks of pamphlets describing the tourist attractions of the Berkshires. Holice Belding, a station employee, says that the tourist flow through the region is steady enough to soothe worries that people will only visit MoCA in the summer.

All year round

Even in the winter, he says, eight to ten ski tour buses will gas up some nights. In the fall, leaf peepers journey to the Berkshires. And in the summer, of course, hordes of vacationers are attracted by Tanglewood, the Williamstown Theater Festival, the Clark Art Institute, and the Williams College Museum of Art.

Belding is the chairman of the annual North Adams Festival Parade, which will take place on October 1. The theme this year is "Art in the Berkshires."

"It might have been MassMoCA, it might have been the death of Nikos [former director of the Williamstown Theatre Festival] that influenced the decision," he said of the theme's inspiration, "but that's just one thing. I want to leave the whole concept open."

Belding said he represents people who think North Adams and the Berkshires are devoid of art. "A woman who works for the Springfield paper called me and asked, 'What art do you have in the Berkshires?' I told her, 'If I have to tell you, someone isn't doing their job.'"

King said that the projected increase in tourism is right in line with what he wants for North Adams.

A diverse economy

"We had started 5 years ago concentrating on attracting more people to North Adams. We don't think tourism will replace the lost industrial jobs. Tourism should be one of the foundations of the economy, but it shouldn't replace industry. It should be added as another part of the overall economy."

Ron Lepel, owner of the Boston Seafood Restaurant in North Adams, agrees that MoCA will indeed contribute to an economic turnaround through increased tourism. "I'm all for it. I think it's a chance for the town to pull itself out of the doldrums."

"Tourism does not pay as well as actual manufacturing," Thorman Hulse, director of the North Adams Help-line, says. "The more spinoffs that arise from MoCA itself, the more tourism itself, and you could wind up in a situation like Manchester, Vermont, where the whole town exists to sell things. That, frankly, scares the hell out of me about MassMoCA."

One former Sprague employee, at least, questions whether MassMoCA will really be the means for North Adams' economic revitalization. Asked whether the museum would help as many workers as the plant, he replies, "Not one-tenth -- it's not going to be a productive thing for blue collar people."

Service jobs

"They're going to drive the people that have worked here all of their lives out. Someone making $240 a week in a service job and paying $600-$700 for rent -- that's one hell of a chunk out of their pay. They won't survive."

"The types of jobs will be diversified," King maintains. "Some will be highly specialized, others will be service type. But the hope is that MassMoCA will create satellite businesses that will create more jobs." He says a 10 year span is projected before the full benefits of MoCA are realized, however.

Another concern often voiced by residents is the rising property values, which may or may not be due to MassMoCA.

Pre-MoCA turnaround

"That's just speculation, pure pie-in-the-sky conjecture," King said. "The real estate in Northern Berkshire County, with the exception of Williamstown, had been undervalued and underpriced for years. The turn-around started four or five years ago, before MassMoCA was even thought of."

Despite such reassurances, Terry Louison,

the director of Northern Berkshire Community Action, said she is worried about the housing situation. "Things have already started to happen with the escalation of rents, and there are a lot of rumors about what would happen, for instance, with the River Street section...if that area were to be used for tourism purposes and became a condominium area."

"What I would like to see, just once somewhere, is a feasibility study showing what is going to happen to the community if it does work," Hulse said. "If you can do a feasibility study on whether or not it is going to work, it seems to me you can do a feasibility study to show what will happen when it does work."

"We need [MassMoCA], but we need to look into the impact that the project will have on local residents," Louison said. "I wish them all the luck in the world as long as things are taken into consideration."

"Guggenheim North"

Hulse pointed to the MassMoCA warehouse benefit ball held February 11 as a lack of such consideration. "Marketing of MassMoCA seems to be primarily a New York City cultural play, Guggenheim North. The way it has been marketed up until now, the ball for example, infuriates me," he said.

"If a guy's working, how can he afford $50 for a ticket?" an ex-employee of Sprague said. "The women were coming in wearing mink coats. It was a big party for the people who had money."

Small Sprague electronic circuits were distributed to the guests as party favors. "I don't like to think of 13 years of my life as a party favor," said Hulse, who used to work for Sprague. "The whole ball concept -- we have a band, of course, a New York City band playing whatever the trendy New York stuff is."

'I don't like to think of 13 years of my life as a party favor...The whole thing struck me as condescending.'

these days, and we have trendy New York people up here. The whole thing struck me as condescending: 'Let's show these country folk a good time.'"

Whatever the objections, however, the ex-employee of Sprague says he doesn't think there are any other options for the buildings. "They're too obsolete for manufacturing. They can't even tear it down, it's so polluted. The way everybody puts it, [MassMoCA] is better than nothing."

He looks up at the old mill buildings and at the clock tower overhead, which he says is probably valuable, and laughs. "I looked at it for 35 years and, personally, I don't see any beauty in it."

MassMoCA will trap tourists, capture interest

by Soojin Kim

Supporters of MassMoCA have expressed hopes that the museum will lead to an economic resurgence for the formerly industrial city of North Adams. They say the museum complex may shift the city's economic focus from manufacturing to tourism.

Bill Wilson, executive director of the Berkshire Visitors Bureau, said that in 1988, tourism in Berkshire County generated $130 million from two million visitors, 40 percent of whom came in the summer.

He predicted that MassMoCA will draw 125,000 visitors each year for the first several years it is open, and said that the economic benefits from this influx of tourists will be extensive.

"Tourism creates jobs not only in the industry itself, but also in such dependent industries as insurance, real estate, wholesale, banking and contracting," Wilson said. "Without tourism, everything in Berkshire County would be on a smaller scale."

"MassMoCA will be a complement and an added dimension to the core of attractions that include a strong concentration of such world-class visual and performing arts as Tanglewood, the Williams College Theatre Festival and the Clark museum," he continued.

"The bottom line is that North Adams is located in Berkshire County, which is home to the Clark Art Institute, the Williams College Museum of Art, the new Rockwell museum, Tanglewood, Jacob's Pillow, and we even have a race track ten minutes away," North Adams Mayor John Barrett III said.

"Everything is located here, and I don't think that when someone wants to go to an art museum they're going to say, 'I don't want to go to North Adams.'"

People like to see contemporary art at the same time as they see the Renoirs and the Afro-American quilts.'

MoCA in the desert? "We're not talking about putting [MassMoCA] in the middle of the desert. If we put it in the middle of the desert, it wouldn't flourish," said Thomas Krens, the museum's creator. "With MassMoCA, this becomes a destination. People like to see contemporary art at the same time they see the Renoirs and the Afro-American quilts. I think the diversity is where the particular beauty of the situation is."

A natural concern over increased tourism is that it may shift the focus of the town to the outside. Many residents are afraid that the rustic Berkshires might be transformed into a tourist trap.

"That whole argument is a kind of relative one -- who are you going to make it against?"

Krens said. "There are always going to be those tensions in an economic development, where some people are going to say, 'I moved here because it was a quiet and small village.' And there are going to be other people who say, 'Yes, but I run the local clothes store or the local bakery, and I need those people.'"

Yuppies

"Everybody says a lot of funny people and yuppies will come here," Barrett said. "Their money is as good as everybody else's and if they want to spend it here, we don't have to take a backseat."

Figures from a 1987 economic impact report reviewed by economics professors from Williams College and Yale University indicate that the complex and increased levels of tourism may attract businesses that would generate 606 new jobs and $21 million annually in tourist spending.

Jennifer Trainer, public relations director for MassMoCA, said that the increased tourism would also provide North Adams with an increased opportunity for entrepreneurship.

"Whenever you have increased economic growth, you'll have entrepreneurs. In an area with a lot of people coming through, there's opportunity to make money."

'Everybody says funny people and yuppies will come here. Their money is as good as everybody else's...'

take place?" Krens said.

"I'm not saying that's the answer, but maybe five answers like that brought together would make sense."

Critics, however, claim that despite the increased tourism, the quality of life might actually decline for many city residents. Maynard Seider, a professor of sociology at North Adams State College, questioned whether the jobs generated by MassMoCA will really improve the standard of living when they are created in 1992.

"Rents have already gone up and even when the museum opens, the jobs at an average of $6 an hour will employ mainly dishwashers and museum guards," Seider said.

Housing crunch

He added that the excitement over MassMoCA has led to a rush for housing in North Adams. Currently, the proposed site of the museum is surrounded by low-income housing areas that are very densely populated.

"In anticipation of MassMoCA, there has been a lot of buying and selling of property, and low-income residents might be forced out. The project has not only not helped, but it has hurt," he said.

North Adams is following the lead of Berkshire County in its efforts to attract more tourists, which is something of a shift of focus for the old mill town. The Sprague Electric complex, which is the proposed site of MassMoCA, consists of 28 buildings covering 13.5 acres. As recently as the early 1980s, Sprague employed 4,000 workers from a total North Adams population of 45,000.

When Sprague began laying off workers in 1984, and ultimately moved to Greenwich, Connecticut, North Adams was hit hard. Unemployment rates soared into double digits. Efforts to attract manufacturing were unsuccessful, and the city's future looked bleak indeed until MassMoCA was proposed.

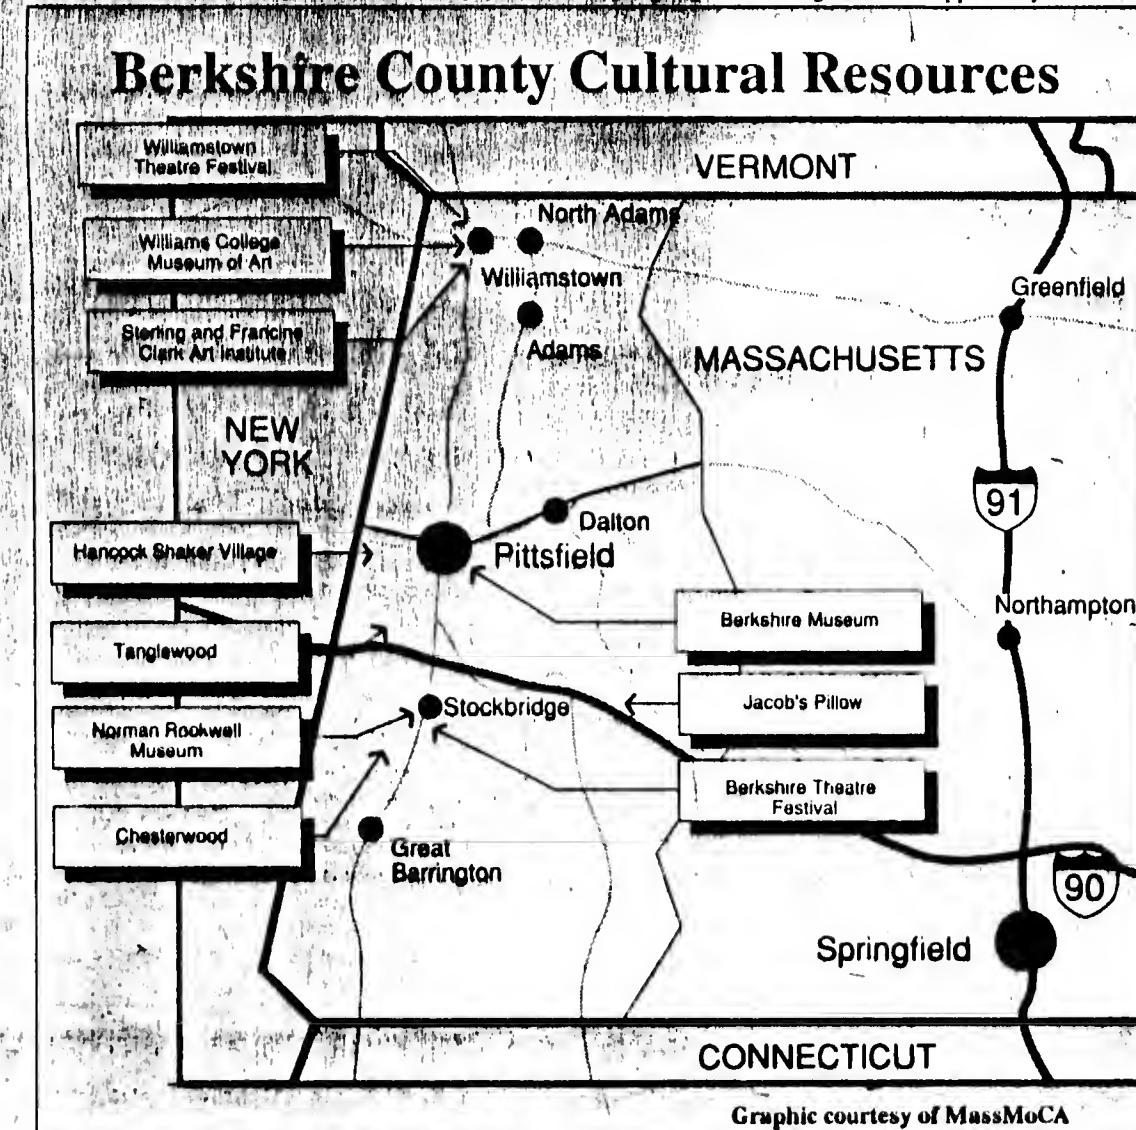

Other uses

Seider said he feels there are other uses that local residents might have preferred to pursue with the Sprague site and the $35 million that Massachusetts has committed to MassMoCA. Many, for instance, might prefer a project that would create new manufacturing, rather than service jobs.

"People here have a history of skills in the textile and manufacturing trades. Former Sprague workers were skilled in capacitors -- winding wire. Sprague and the X-Tyl Company, which had a military contract to make tents but which went bankrupt in 1985, were major employers," Seider said.

"There are three- and four-generation families [living in North Adams] -- some of them live in homes that their grandparents bought. They would find it difficult to find affordable housing elsewhere."

"So the 28 buildings on Marshall Street stand empty, waiting. Meanwhile, ideas like renovated housing, day care facilities and community centers are not coming to fruition."

Graphic courtesy of MassMoCA

Cultural mecca of the Berkshires

A city in transition

John Barrett III is the mayor of North Adams and vice-chairman of the MassMoCA Cultural Development Commission.

Record interview by Todd Owens

RECORD: Can you give us some background on the decision to go ahead with MassMoCA?

BARRETT: When Tom Krens came to see me in February of 1986 with this idea of an economic development package for the city, we had been going through a transition period during '84 and '85, and we had lost 1500 jobs or so in various businesses that were going down the tubes.

Basically he was looking at the formation of a museum that would be compatible with the Williams College Museum of Art as well as the Clark Art Institute, and that would make the Northern Berkshire area the destination point for people who go to art museums. The third component would be this museum of contemporary art on a much smaller scale.

And he had proposed housing it at the city-owned Windsor mill complex, which is about 180,000 square feet. Sprague at this point in the game wasn't even a thought. And that's the way that I proceeded over the next four or five months.

From there I thought he was a little crazy with his idea, but then I thought, why not? It's a unique use and it could happen, even though we're a blue collar city with an industrial nature and looked upon as a mill community.

Now June comes around, and Sprague makes an announcement that they're going to be leaving their plant and abandoning it. And we had named a commission prior to all this in the re-use of the Sprague facility. But again, no thought of MassMoCA, nothing. But when Sprague finally made the determination that they were going to get out of there, we said, "Well, Tom Krens, why don't you take a look at the Sprague complex?" He basically said, "No, this is much too big -- this is 780,000 [square feet]. I didn't want to go that big."

And we twisted some arms a little and said, "Listen, take a look at it -- this place is unique." He took a trip through there and saw the possibilities. That's how we got to Sprague being used.

RECORD: Were there any other options considered for the Sprague plant?

BARRETT: We found out the reason for the decline in the economy in this area was that there were not modern facilities for new businesses, especially those growth companies that could grow in the 80s and the 90s. We needed modern facilities. The Sprague complex just did not fit the mode for today's industries, and it would have been too costly. That's why Sprague was moving out of there. That's hard for people to understand, because they say why not bring in new industry?

Industry wasn't working. If industry had a chance to go in there, Sprague would have rented it and made some money. Sprague looked at ripping it down. It would have cost millions to rip it down mainly because of disposal. All those ideas were tossed down.

So you could either have one of the largest warehouses in the state of Massachusetts or you could have a museum.

RECORD: Do you think it's realistic to think that North Adams can become a cultural mecca of the Berkshires?

BARRETT: Well, I suppose that would be determined by what you considered culture to be. I happen to think we're a cultural mecca today. Maybe not in the true sense of what one might define culture to be, but I always thought we had a lot of culture that might be different from what other people might think. We may watch a lot of cable TV -- we may watch the Bruins and Red Sox and Yankees and stuff like that, and that's part of our culture.

North Adams has been put down and kicked

'North Adams has been put down and kicked in the butt for many years. We've been described as the Appalachia of the Northeast.'

in the butt for many years. We've been described as a dirty old mill town and the Appalachia of the Northeast.

I was interviewed in the New York Times and that author described me as ruddy and wearing a green polyester sports jacket, which is not the case. But they thought that was the image they should create of the mayor of North Adams, as being a K-Mart kind of a guy, in a K-Mart community with a K-Mart located in his main street.

So when you say cultural mecca, I say yes, we can expand our offerings to the city of North Adams, and there's no reason why a museum of contemporary art cannot be located here.

RECORD: Do you anticipate any problems with shifting the economy from a blue collar manufacturing base to a service base? Do you think that North Adams will have enough service workers, and do you think that that will have a negative effect on the economy?

BARRETT: I've heard the doomsayers say there are nothing but unskilled jobs that are going to be produced by MassMoCA, and they're going to be low-paying. That's not the case because what I cite, and I cite this to a lot of people, is that most of the jobs and the people that were hardest hit when we went through our difficult times in '83, '84, '85 were the unskilled workers. They were the ones that got belted.

In fact, of all those that were unemployed, 48 percent of them didn't even have a high school education, and those were the ones that registered at the worker's assistance center. And they didn't have any skills. The people who were laid off at Sprague and other places, who were machinists, who were welders, who were draftsmen -- they got jobs. They didn't have any problem.

In other words the unskilled worker didn't get anything. The unskilled worker that got hit hardest was making $3.75 to $4.25 an hour in '85. That same unskilled worker today is making $6.50, $7.00 an hour. Dishwashers are now being hired at $5.50 an hour. Now that doesn't seem like a lot of money, but that's an unskilled position that paid $3.75 an hour two or three years ago.

So, when you talk about service, when you talk about these service jobs coming in, they will, when they come to fruition, pay twice as much as what they paid four or five years ago. It'll be a doubling of their salaries.

There's nothing wrong with service jobs. They're not just chamber maids, they're not just custodians, and they're not cleaning ladies or whatever. Service jobs are in the hospitality area, those are well-paid positions.

There are those that want to croak this project, and they want to croak it by saying it's not to save northern Berkshire, North Adams. We accept that. We know that it's not. But also if we were to continue to believe that we could survive as just an industrial area, then we're smoking funny tobacco because that's just not the way it is anymore in North Adams, in Massachusetts, or in the United States. Industrial jobs are being reduced.

Our goal was to keep a good share of industrial jobs but at the same time, try to find good paying, service-related jobs. If we're going to have a solid economy. I tell you, if there's going to be a downturn in this economy we're going to be hurt, but not like we were before.

RECORD: Along the same lines of that, there's a lot of concern that MassMoCA will bring in a lot of outsiders that may drive up rents, that may drive up the cost of living in North Adams.

BARRETT: Absolutely absurd.

First of all, there's no place for them to live unless they buy existing housing. Why would they want to rent here? I mean, they're coming here not to work -- they're coming here to visit an attraction. It's not going to be a community that you can build a second home in.

'I tell you, if there's going to be a downturn in this economy, we're going to be hurt, but not like we were before.'

It's just impossible.

What drove up the rents in North Adams in the last couple of years, and they have stabilized in the last six months to ten months, was that the rents were so low here, and the speculators came in here and bought up property, and the rents went up.

But they didn't buy here because of MassMoCA. They bought the property because it's so damn cheap. Three years ago you could get a duplex in the city of North Adams for $60,000. There's no way, I'll tell you unequivocally without any doubt in my mind, that MassMoCA will drive up properties and will drive up rents. Why? Why would it?

John Barrett III (Transcript photo)

If the kind of people they say that are going to come to MassMoCA come here, they're not going to live in North Adams. That's what's so beautiful about this project. It's not going to hurt our schools, it's not going to hurt our water, it's not going to hurt our sewer, and it's not going to affect the housing stock in the city. It is going to improve the quality of the city I think and make it an attractive place, but I do not see it driving up the rents. Absolutely not.

RECORD: Do you perceive or expect any problem with transportation, or other components of the infrastructure?

BARRETT: The key to it is that when you talk about transportation, we had four thousand people in 1970 working at the Sprague complex. Four thousand people a day were going to that complex, which basically is 20,000 people a week. What's that? A million people a year who were going to that complex. And there were no problems.

We have a 102-room hotel sitting right there that I believe opened in 1973. It's been in bankruptcy three or four times. It's got more rooms, I think, than the Williams Inn and the Orchards combined.

RECORD: How do you respond to people who say that maybe this isn't the right thing for North Adams?

BARRETT: The ones who don't think it's right for North Adams don't live in North Adams.

RECORD: There are some blue collar workers who feel that it might not be the right kind of job, or the right kind of industry that would work in North Adams.

BARRETT: You know what I say to them? What do you suggest? I mean, you got any ideas, folks? It's easy to sit back and be critical of something, but those blue collar workers who say that -- I don't know who they are, but I do know that North Adams is a tough town to accept things, they are a tough audience, but the town has accepted this. It is the same thing we went through for Heritage Park. I wasn't too keen on it, but we're very happy with it. And I think when this is all said and done, they're going to be very proud of it too.

Environmental hazards may delay MoCA

by Mary Moulé

MassMoCA may be a nice place to visit and view contemporary art, but don't drink the water. The site of the former Sprague Electric plant in North Adams, where the museum will be located, is contaminated with environmentally hazardous chemicals which could affect the use of the area, according to the Department of Quality Engineering.

Investigators have identified sites contaminated by trichloroethylenes (TCEs) and polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) at the Marshall Street plant and at another Sprague plant on Brown Street.

The areas of concern include spills, leakages, and an underground cistern with a PCB-contaminated water supply, according to DEQE Regional Environmental Engineer John Higgins. "It is not clear how serious this is; they still need to do more testing," he added.

A recently published DEQE study said that brown trout taken in the nearby Housac River show PCB levels of 19 parts per million; the Environmental Protection Agency considers levels of over two parts per million to be unhealthy.

Toxic trout

"People shouldn't be eating the fish," Deputy Regional Environmental Engineer Stephen Joyce said.

Sprague Electric is currently doing a study to determine the extent of the problem so that a report can be sent to the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

"We're well into the definition of the problem at the site," Joyce said. Sprague is involved in phase two of the reporting, which includes a comprehensive investigation and risk assessment. Joyce said he is unsure how long it will take to proceed to phase three, in which directive action is taken to clean up contamination.

At a meeting on April 20, former Sprague union officials said that there are more toxic waste sites in Sprague's Marshall and Brown street plants than have been discovered so far, according to the Berkshire Eagle. The officials claimed that employees are afraid to speak out because they still work for Sprague or have relatives employed by the company.

Sprague filed an initial report with the DEQE in October, according to Jennifer Trainer, the Director of Development and Public Relations at MoCA. However, the DEQE claimed there was not enough information to determine how serious the problem was. "We sent back a report saying where there were deficiencies in the report," Higgins said.

DEQE investigators say the MassMoCA site on Marshall Street is contaminated with toxic chemicals. (Steinman)

The site study, written by Sprague consultants and outside professionals, contained a history of the Sprague Electric plant, a study of what kinds of chemicals had been used at the plant and information on when and for how long those chemicals had been used. The report also contained studies on possible environmental issues and proposals for a system to test these issues. In the event that testing did detect problems, the report proposed strategies for clean-up or remedy.

Definite contamination

"The first set of reports said that there were high levels of materials found at the Sprague site," Higgins said. He added that further studies of what was there and which way groundwater was flowing were necessary to determine the affect they will have on the museum location.

"After they define what levels of contamination exist, they will have to do a risk assessment," Higgins said. "The affect it will have on MoCA depends on that. It may have little impact, or it may be a very significant problem."

One of the main concerns right now is how financially involved MoCA will be, according to Higgins. "We talked to [Thomas] Krens and told him to make contracts with Sprague. We've tried to anticipate any problems to protect MoCA."

Trainer said that Sprague's responsibility for the clean-up of any hazardous chemicals was part of the understanding between MoCA and Sprague. "Sprague still owns the property," she said.

However, Higgins claimed that the issue was not that clear-cut. "Legally and technically, MoCA could be responsible for cleaning up the problem. But in all likelihood, they will not have to pay. Since it is probably Sprague's fault, we would try to make it their responsibility."

"Most times the responsible party takes care of it, because it is cheaper for them to do the work themselves," Higgins said. If the DEQE had to come in and take care of it, it would cost three times as much for those responsible, he added.

Delay for MoCA?

The possible environmental hazards could be a problem for MassMoCA, which is scheduled to open in the fall of 1992. "It could very possibly cause delays," Higgins said.

However, Trainer said that they do not anticipate problems on the environmental front. "Part of studying the feasibility is addressing these kinds of problems," she said. "There are many issues that could cause delays, but [the possible environmental impact] looks pretty good so far."

DEQE officials at the April 20 meeting told residents they would return in May with reports in layman's terms and large maps identifying waste sites. But until the site assessment is finished, the issue of environmental problems and their effects on MoCA hangs in the balance.

'Legally and technically, MoCA could be responsible for cleaning up the problem. But in all likelihood, they will not have to pay.'

Krens is unsure of museum's long-term effects

continued from page 4

here; it's not like we're building a very complicated rocket manufacturing center that is going to be looking to the city of North Adams for technological expertise.

RECORD: Do you ever see tourists coming into conflict with the residents of North Adams?

KRENS: That whole argument is a kind of relative one -- who are you going to make it against? The point is, there's always going to be those tensions in an economic development, where some people are going to say, 'I moved here because it was a quiet and small village.' And there are going to be other people who say, 'Yes, but I run the local clothes store or the local bakery, and I need those people.'

RECORD: A moment ago you said you're in the culture business. Is the business aspect as important as the art?

KRENS: Absolutely. You look at it in other ways, and also you have been for some time in the education business not on the administrative side. Every year one of the biggest issues of controversy is what the tuition will be at Williams; it's not a number that comes out of the sky. It's a number that's very, very carefully calibrated as a function of how successful we are at fundraising, how many students live off campus, the size of the faculty, the efficiency of our physical plant. All of those taken together produce a calculated number: the number of students versus the policies and financial aid. The point is, you bring all these things together. They are very complicated economic institutions and certainly museums are no different.

Beyond the Village Beautiful

Williams involves itself in MoCA planning

by Dan Skwire and Dylan Tweney

In recent weeks, Williams College has come under a great deal of criticism for what some people see as overzealous expansionism. Tired of seeing private homes turned into college offices, residents have pressured Williams into being more considerate and tactful in pursuing its manifest destiny.

The recent disputes over properties on Grace Court, for example, resulted in the college's decision not to convert Chandler House into office space. While Williams may be giving up some ground on local projects, however, it remains steadfast in pursuit of a more ambitious goal -- the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art.

"We gave birth to the project here," said Zelda Stern, the acting Assistant Director of WCMA. "I think the association with Williams helped it to get off the ground, as it would help anything."

The original idea for MassMoCA undoubtedly arose from Williams faculty, most notably Thomas Krens, formerly director of the Williams College Art Museum and current director of the Guggenheim Foundation in New York. No one really seems to be clear, however, on just how closely Williams is involved with the planning and building of MassMoCA.

College imperialism?

Some North Adams residents have gone so far as to suggest that the college is trying to take over their city, while college officials have said that they are only remotely involved in advisory positions.

According to Vice President and Treasurer of the College Will Reed, however, the official support that Williams gave to MassMoCA was never anything more than donating the staff time of Williams College employees -- including Krens and Joseph Thompson, director of the MassMoCA Executive Planning Group. Reed said that Williams had never directly contributed any money to the museum, and that the Planning Group is completely separate from the college.

Early newspaper reports of the MassMoCA project usually phrased the museum in terms of Williams College. "Williams may convert Sprague into art complex," read one Berkshire Eagle headline from 1987. A North Adams Transcript article, also from 1987, began with the sentence, "Williams College needs $72 million to turn Sprague Electric...into a world-class contemporary art museum."

A helping hand

According to North Adams Mayor John Barrett III, a little involvement from Williams College is just what his city needs. Barrett expressed amazement that people would criticize Williams for trying to help out.

'It was only in 1984 that, for the first time, Williams College came out of its ivory tower and really accepted the fact that they have a responsibility [to help North Adams].'

cize Williams for trying to help out.

"We have tried to get Williams interested in helping our area for the last 50 years now," he said in an interview with the Record. "It was only in 1984...that, for the first time, Williams College came out of its ivory tower and really accepted the fact that they have a responsibility [to help North Adams]."

"Williams puts one hundred times more into our community than it takes out. We are thrilled that they are involved. I am very pleased and very proud that they are part of our program." President of the College Francis Oakley is a member of the MassMoCA Cultural Development Commission, but he has said that he views his capacity there more as that of a citizen than a Williams College representative.

Benefits to Williams

Oakley said that MassMoCA will benefit Williams in two ways: culturally and economically. He referred to the college's "long-standing commitment to art history" as an obvious reason to support the museum. MassMoCA's possible contribution to the revitalization of the North Adams economy is another, according to Oakley, and the college's support of the museum is "simple good-neighbor policy."

From 1985 to 1987, two members of the Williams administration, Reed and former Provost Neil Grabois, also sat on Governor Michael Dukakis' Task Force on Economic Development for Northern Berkshire.

"We concluded that we weren't going to attract IBM," Reed said. "We had to build from talent that was already available in the area." Art was one of these resources.

The art talent pool contained a number of Williams College employees. Krens has been the catalyst for the entire project. Thompson and Michael Govan, now Assistant Director of the Guggenheim Foundation, are both former Williams College Museum of Art employees, as well as Williams alumni.

Stern served for a while as public relations director for the project, and she said that some of the secretarial and planning work was done at WCMA facilities. A feasibility study completed in 1987 was reviewed by economics professors from Williams and Yale.

Informal conversations

In fact, just about the only Williams people who haven't been involved are the faculty members of the art department. Associate Professor of Art Edward Epping, chair of the department, said that the faculty's role in MassMoCA had been very indirect, consisting of informal conversations, rather than actual consultation and planning.

"We didn't talk in ways that would even suggest it was a joint venture," he said. "I think the college has been rightfully careful about how it has aligned itself. It was appropriate to be supportive and to disassociate itself when it did."

Epping added that MassMoCA was not the college's sole, or even primary, interest at the time. "The museum is a thing that will be in the region and the college should be glad to have it, just as they are glad to have the Clark and the summer theater."

(l-r) Michael Govan '85, Joseph Thompson '81, Thomas Krens '69, and WCMA Acting Director Rod Faulk have been integrally involved in MoCA's planning. (Kuykendall)

MassMoCA chronology

1987

February 12 First press reports of Krens' concept of building museum.

May 5 Planners announce that $35 million will be sought from state through the Convention Center Bill.

September 1 Governor Michael Dukakis endorses project.

October 17 Saatchi collection acquired.

January 12 Governor Michael Dukakis files separate bill to fund museum.

May 25 North Adams City Council appoints Cultural Development Commission.

October 17-18 Commission selects Skidmore, Owings & Merrill, Frank Gehry and Robert Venturi as feasibility design team.

1989

January 24 Architects and planners participate in first design charrette. Initial concepts of site development and museum program formed.

July Projected completion date for feasibility study.

April 16 Two major collections acquired.

June 1 Economic development study completed.

October 16 Sprague agrees to donate site for museum.

1988

January 5 Convention center bill fails to pass.

March 14 MassMoCA legislation passes.

August 1-2 Commission passes feasibility study scope and creates Executive Planning Group.

October 29 500 people attend MassMoCA open house.

February 11 Over 800 people attend the MassMoCA Warehouse Ball.

October Major art collections secured.

The Williams Record

June 4, 1989

USPS 684-680

Graduation 1989

Cole, Graver speak at Commencement

Johnnetta Cole, the president of Spelman College and a noted anthropologist, educator and author, and Lawrence Graver, the John Hawley Roberts Professor of English at Williams, will be the two main speakers during this Commencement weekend.

Cole will speak at the college's 200th Commencement on Sunday, and Graver will speak at the Baccalaureate Service on Saturday.

Before becoming the first black female president of Spelman, the nation's first college for black women, in 1987, Cole served as a professor of anthropology at Hunter College and a member of the graduate faculty of the City University of New York. There, she also directed the Latin American and Caribbean Studies Program. She also spent 13 years at the University of Massachusetts, serving as associate provost for undergraduate education and as a professor of anthropology and of Afro-American studies. Cole has spent two winter study terms at Williams, teaching courses entitled "The Cuban Alternative" and "U.S. Black Women."

Cole received her B.A. at Oberlin College in 1957 and a Ph.D. at Northwestern University in 1967. Her specialties are cultural anthropology, Afro-American studies and women's studies. Her recent books include "All American Women: Lines that Divide, Ties that Bind" (1986), and "Anthropology for the Nineties," published last year.

In addition, she is president of the International Women's Anthropology Conference and a member of the Council on Foreign Relations. She is the first black woman to serve on the board of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and the Downtown Atlanta Rotary.

As far as publishing is concerned, Cole is also an advisor and contributing editor to The Black Scholar and a member of the editorial board of Anthropology and Humanism Quarterly.

Cole's honors and awards include the 1988 Elizabeth Boyer Award from the Women's Education Action League and the Woman of the Decade Award from The Women's Leadership Institute of Avila College.

Graver's Baccalaureate address is entitled "Steady Work." A member of the Williams faculty since 1964, Graver specializes in 19th and 20th century English and American literature. He has published books on Joseph Conrad and Samuel Beckett, as well as many essays and reviews of contemporary literature for publications including The New York Times Book Review, The New Republic and Saturday

Dr. Johnnetta Cole

Lawrence Graver

Review.

Graver is a 1954 graduate of the City College of New York and he received his Ph.D. from the University of California at Berkeley in 1961. He taught at the University of California at Los Angeles for three years before coming to Williams.

While at Williams, Graver has twice served as chair of the English department and has also twice been elected to terms on the Committee on Appointments and Promotions. He has also served as chair of the Committee on Educational Policy and co-chair of the Winter Study Program Review.

Norman E. Hugo

Anne Hawley

Dr. John A. Davis

Paul H. Nitze

Five receive honorary degrees Sunday

In addition to over 500 seniors who are receiving degrees at Williams' 200th Commencement, five distinguished individuals will be awarded honorary degrees at the ceremony Sunday.

President of Spelman College Johnnetta Cole, who is delivering the Commencement address, will be given a Doctor of Letters degree.

John A. Davis, Sr., a 1933 graduate of Williams and Professor of Political Science, Emeritus, at the City College of New York, will receive a Doctor of Laws Degree. Davis worked for the federal government on job discrimination issues, and is a founding member of the Black Academy of Arts and Letters and the American Society of African Culture.

In addition, he has served on the State Department's Advisory Committee on Africa and its Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. He headed New York State's Commission Against Discrimination from 1957-61 and in 1953 directed non-legal research for the NAACP's brief in the Supreme Court's landmark Brown vs. Topeka case. Davis served as a Williams trustee from 1972-77.

Anne Hawley, executive director of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, will be given a degree of Doctor of Humane Letters. She has overseen a ten-fold growth in the council's funding and has spearheaded many new arts programs and services in the state. In the early 1970s, she developed a consortium of museums and performing arts groups, the Cultural Education Collaborative, which brings together schools and cultural institutions and artists. She received the 1987 MassArt

Award from the Massachusetts College of Art, and a Lyman Ziegler award from the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation for outstanding service to the state.

Paul H. Nitze, chief arms control advisor during the Reagan Administration, will receive a Doctor of Laws degree. He was Secretary of the Navy from 1963-67, and Deputy Secretary of Defense for two years after that. From 1969-74, he was a member of the U.S. delegation to the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks. In Reagan's first term, Nitze headed the delegation to the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Negotiations with the Soviet Union, held in Geneva. In Reagan's second term, Nitze served as Special Advisor to the President and to the Secretary of State on Arms Control Matters. He was awarded the Medal of Merit by President Truman, and the Presidential Medal of Freedom by Reagan in 1985.

Norman E. Hugo, Williams class of 1955, will be given a Doctor of Science Degree. Hugo has done extensive research in the field of reconstructive surgery, and has been head of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center since 1982. Much of his work has involved the repairing of skin damaged by cancer, burns and other disease and injuries. During the Vietnam War he served for two years in the U.S. Army as assistant chief of plastic surgery at Walter Reed Army Hospital. Last year he was president of the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery, the largest organization of certified plastic surgeons in the world. Hugo has served on many other boards and councils active in the field.

Student awards and prizes:

Graduate Fellowships
Horace F. Clark, 1833, Prize Fellowship
Catherine C. Cocks '89

Hubbard Hutchinson, 1917, Memorial Fellowships
Paul D. Brainard '89
Lisa Yuk Kuen Yau '89

Charles Bridgen Lansing, 1829, Fellowships in Latin and Greek
Thomas P. Roche '89
Michael J. Zembrak '87

Dr. Herchel Smith Fellowships
Karen H. Constenbader '89
William C. Dudley '89
Douglas T. Northrop '89

Williams Teaching Fellowships
Sun Yat-Sen University of Medical Sciences, Guangzhou, (Canton) China
John P. Kelsh '89

United College, Chinese University of Hong Kong
Bethany P. Spalding '89

National Fellowships
General Electric Foundation Fellowship in the Sciences
Brian D. Fields '89

Mellon Fellowships in the Humanities
James W. Bailey '89
Kathryn R. Kent '88

Thomas J. Watson Fellowships
Matthew F. Daley '89
Mari C. Omland '89

General Awards
Allen L. Grosvenor, 1931, Memorial Award
Todd G. Owens '90

Some awards will be announced at the Commencement ceremony

Prizes
Academy of American Poets Prize
Linda A. Nulman '89

John S. Adriance, 1882, Prize in Chemistry
Jennifer L. Morris '89

Erastus C. Benefit, 1821, Prizes
In Biology
First Prize: Jessica R. McKibben '89
Second Prize: Kay Shou-Mei Fang '89

In French
First Prize: Claire G. Manwell '89
Second Prize: Diane I. Holtzman '89, Mirel A. Sayinsoy '89

In German
First Prize: Thomas B. Burke '89, Maureen A. O'Brien '89

In Greek
First Prize: Tamara L. Stone '90
Second Prize: Wendi A. Haugh '91, Leslie L. Pitner '90

In History
First Prize: Stephen M. Ritz '89
Second Prize: Catherine C. Cocks '89

In Latin
First Prize: Edward S. Lee '92
Second Prize: Sean P. Keilen '92
In Mathematics
First Prize: Kobsak Pootrakool '91

Gaius C. Bolin, 1889, Essay Prize in Afro-American Studies
Kirsten J. Lewis '89

Kenneth L. Brown, 1947, Prize in American Studies
Linda A. Fox '89

Sterling A. Brown, 1922, Citizenship Prize
Kevin N. Hinton '89

W. Marriott Canby, 1891, Athletic Scholarship Prize
Catherine C. Cocks '89

continued on page 4

Congratulations Seniors!

RICHARD D. SIMPSON G. VINCENT COUSSOLE

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-4808

CLARKSBURG BREAD CO.

PRODUCTS BAKED FRESH FROM SCRATCH DAILY

Coffee • Tea • Juice • Soft Drinks

OPEN EVERY DAY (413) 458-2251

the ORCHARDS

Williamstown, Massachusetts 01267

TODD OWENS, Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, CHUCK SAMUELSON,
ELLEN DROUGHT, Assistant Editors

KARL THOMAS, Photography Editor

KATE IVERSON, ANDY HODDICK, Advertising

the Cottage
GIFTS CLOTHING

CONGRATULATIONS!
Now that you've completed
your college education, you can consider yourself
truly erudite.

 Boynton

(You know: smart.)

South Street Pittsfield OPEN 7 DAYS Water Street Williamstown
SINCE 1969

Awards and prizes, continued

continued from page 3

David T. Clark Prize in Latin
Jessica L. Leiman '92

Class of 1925 Women's Scholar Athlete Prize
Lori B. Schaen '89

James Bronson Conant, 1893-Nathan Russell Harrington, 1893, Prize in Biology
Karen H. Costenbader '89

Henry Rutgers Conger, 1899, Memorial Literary Prize
Ernest C. Pascucci '90

Garrett Wright DeVries, 1932, Memorial Prize in Spanish
Catherine C. Cocks '89
Christina M. Manos '89

Sherwood O. Dickerman Memorial Prize
Robert J. Cro '91

Jean Donati Award
Susannah R. Everett '89

Henry A. Dwight, 1829, Botanical Prize
Martha S. Terry '89

Environmental Studies Director's Prize
Amanda C. Graham '89

Freeman Foote Prize in Geology
Benjamin M. Morris '89

Gilbert W. Gabriel, 1912, Memorial Prize in Theater
Caroline E. Boyden '89

Sam Goldberg Prizes
Computer Science: Janet L. Wiener '89
Mathematics: Mary Beth Moynihan '89

Arthur B. Graves, 1858, Essay Prizes
Art: Grace Mi-Young Park '89
Economics: Daniel A. Pryor '89
History: Elizabeth G. McKown '89
Philosophy: William C. Dudley '80
Political Science: Douglas T. Northrop '89

Religion: Eliza F. Kent '89, Jeffrey L. Kosky '89, Clark R. West '89

Graves Prize for Delivery of Essay
Maria T. Tejada '89

Frederick C. Hagedorn, Jr., 1971, Pre-medical Prize
Susan C. Northern '89

Thomas G. Hardie, III, 1978, Prize in Environmental Studies
James P. Power '90
Mary S. Richardson '91
James A. Simmonds '89

C. David Harris, Jr., 1963, Prize in Political Science
Alexander J. Rachmiec '91

Willard E. Hoyt, Jr., 1923, Memorial Scholar Athlete Prize
Joseph M. Thompson '89

Charles W. Hufford Memorial Fellowship
Siu M. Lung '90
John C. Stanley '89

Arthur Judson Prize in Music
Steven K. Burky '89
Michael D. Coyne '89

Arthur C. Kaufmann, 1899, Prize in English
Sarah Cole '89
John M. Faust '89

Richard Krouse Prize in Political Science
James W. Bailey '89
Douglas T. Northrop '89

Jack Larned, 1942, International Management Prizes
Karl L. Galle '91

Richard Lathers, 1877, Essay Prize and Medal in Government
David D. Beischer '89

Nathaniel M. Lawrence Traveling Fellowship

Wilson K. Clements '91
Claudia A. Pecor '90

David N. Major, 1981, Prize in Geology
Stephen M. Ritz '89

Leverett Mears Prize in Chemistry
Gillian Ladd '89

John W. Miller Prize in Philosophy
Hart H. Murphy '89
David J. Reiss '89

Richard Agcr Newhall Prize in European History
Sean P. Keilen '92

Purple Key Trophy
Melissa H. Crouchley '89
Nancy A. Hedeman '89
Michael E. Masters '89

James Lothrop Rice, 1854, Prizes in Classical Languages
In Greek: Thomas P. Roche '89
In Latin: Susan R. Pitcher '90

Sidney A. Sabbeth Prize in Political Economy
Robert S. Chase '89

Bruce Sanderson, 1956, Prize in Architecture
Essicka A. Kimberly '89

Ruth Scott Sanford Memorial Fellowship in Theatre
Stuart L. Gutman '90

Ruth Scott Sanford Memorial Prize in Theatre
Fausto I. Espinosa '89
Southy E. Walton '89

Robert C.L. Scott Prize in History
Christine M. Crowe '89
Stephen M. Ritz '89

Sentinels of the Republic Essay Prize in Government
David K. Sandford '89

Edward Gould Shumway, 1871, Prize in English
Farhan A. Haq '89

James F. Skinner Prize in Chemistry
Dawn M. Powers '89

Howard P. Stabler Prize in Physics
Brian D. Fields '89

Shirley Stanton Prize in Music
Shoko Kashiama '89
Sean A. Timmons '89

Stanley R. Strauss, 1936, Prize in English
Christopher S. Nealon '89

William Bradford Turner, 1914, Prize in American History
John C. Massaro '89

A.V.W. Van Vechten, 1847, Prize for Extemporaneous Speaking
David A. Niles '89

Benjamin B. Wainwright, 1920, Prize in English
William A. O'Brien '89

Harold H. Warren Prize in Chemistry
Lorraine C. Santy '90

Karl E. Weston, 1896, Prize for Distinction in Art
Stephen M. Best '89
William W. Lin '89

25 receive degrees from CDE program

Twenty-five men and women from nations around the world, all graduate students at the Center for Development Economics at Williams College, will participate in the Williams College Commencement on Sunday, June 4. Having successfully completed a year of intensive study, they will be awarded master's degrees in development economics.

The CDE program is designed for graduate students from developing countries. The Fellows already have professional experience in business or government in their home countries. While at Williams they concentrate on economic issues and problems of particular importance to developing nations. There are now more than 600 alumni of the program working in countries throughout the world.

The graduates, their countries and the positions they held before coming to Williams: Zainal Abidin, Indonesia, bank examiner, Bank Indonesia; Naveed Ahmad, Pakistan, manager, information system, Experts Advisory Cell; Anthony Joseph Balayo, Uganda, teaching assistant, Makerere University; Leya Cattleya, Indonesia, staff planner, National Development Planning Agency; Nemezius L. Chakame, Malawi, economist, Department of Economic Planning and Development; Rizal Anwar Djaafara, Indonesia, researcher, credit and development, Bank Indonesia; Shahid Hasan, Bangladesh, assistant commissioner of taxes, National Board of Revenue; Md. Altaf Hossain, Bangladesh, evaluation officer, Ministry of Industry; Tobias Otieno Konyango, Kenya, planning assistant, Ministry of Education; and Maria Lourdes C. Macaia, Philippines, specialist, National Economic and Development Authority.

Also given degrees: Eric Walter Matola, Malawi, economist, Department of Economic Planning and Development; Patrick Njuguna Muhia, Kenya, planning officer, Ministry of Planning and National Development; Kumbulani Haskins Munamati, Botswana, planning officer, Ministry of Finance and Development Planning; Gomathy Nambiar, Malaysia, assistant director, international trade division, Ministry of Trade and Industry; Titus Muthini Ndambuki, Kenya, economist/statistician, Ministry of Education; Sahala Benny Pasaribu, Indonesia, head, cooperative planning, Ministry of Cooperatives; Jurisita Maranan-Quintos, Philippines, chief economic development specialist, National Economic and Development Authority; Gladys Betty Quiroz Mora, Peru, director of investment, Institute Nacional de Planificacion; Jesus P. Sale Jr., Philippines, economist Central Bank of the Philippines; Jose Samaniego P., Ecuador, editor/economic researcher, Banco Central del Ecuador; Javaid Akhter Sheikh, Pakistan, deputy secretary, senate, Parliament; Guillermo Sotomayor Valle, Bolivia, section chief, Banco Central de Bolivia; Maria Paulina Vela Zambrano, Ecuador, analyst, Banco Central del Ecuador; and Fenglei Xia, China research fellow, Economic System Report Institute; Alexander Yap, Philippines, legislative staff officer IV, Congress.

Compiled from Williams College Public Information press release, May 26, 1989.

Williams grants 15 Masters of Arts

The following are the 1989 graduates of the Williams College Graduate Program in the History of Arts. They will each be given the degree of Master of Art in the History of Art at the Williams Commencement Ceremony on Sunday, June 4.

The students, and their place of residence: Heather M. Galloway, Clinton, New York; Laura D. Gelfand, Salt Lake City, Utah; Marion M. Goethals, Williamstown, Massachusetts; Jenine Gordon, Bedford, New York; Jennifer B. Huffman, Guilford, Connecticut; Marni R. Kessler, Brooklyn, New York; Shelley R. Langdale, Newton, Massachusetts; Brooke A. Marler, Rockford, Illinois; Rebecca E. Nanovic, Darien, Connecticut; Nora L. Nirk, Barrington, Rhode Island; Margaret J. O'Brien, Arlington, Massachusetts; Kathryn A. Potts, Great Barrington, Massachusetts; Paul R. Provost, Westwood, Massachusetts; Christina R. Yang, Morgan Hill, California; and Ellen Zieselmann, New York, New York.

NAPOLITANO'S
PIZZERIA

FEATURING FINE ITALIAN CUISINE - BEER & WINE SERVED IN OUR DINING ROOM

EAT HERE OR TAKE OUT

NOW OFFERING HOME DELIVERY OF PIZZAS, SUBS & DINNERS

— 662-2425 —

CLOSED MONDAY
SUN-3:30PM-MIDNIGHT
TUES-WED & THURS. 11AM-MIDNIGHT
FRI & SAT. 11AM-1AM

152-154 AMERICAN LEGION DRIVE at OASIS PLAZA II, NO ADAMS

TheLibrary

Open Every day from 10 AM to 8 PM
70 Spring St.
458-3436

Great Gifts for Graduation, Father's Day & Weddings:

(Small leather goods, jewelry, french pens, hand-made paper items, photo albums, etc.)

Many unique antiques from all over the world.

Come visit us!

CIGARETTES, VERMONT CHEESE, MAPLE PRODUCTS, SNACKS

Best wishes and success to the Class of '89

Next Door

BEER AND WINE INC.
VERMONT STATE LIQUOR STORE

ROUTE 7, POWNAL, VERMONT 05261
OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK

JOE AND JAN TORNABENE

802/823-7240

(413) 458-5768

The Willows Motel

RELAX AND ENJOY THE BEAUTIFUL BERKSHIRE HILLS

Owned and Operated by The Schlesinger Family

ON ROUTE 2 - 1 MILE
EAST OF ROUTE 7

480 MAIN STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE CLASS OF 1989

Thank you for your patronage

West
Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081

Alice Neal, The Mary Bright Commemorative Quilt, 1956, cotton cloth, 78 1/2 x 62 3/4". Collection Eli Leon, from the exhibition "Sitching Memories: African-American Story Quilts"

CURRENT EXHIBITIONS

Stop--Children at Play, Senior Studio Art Majors Exhibition

ART: AFRICAN-AMERICAN

3 exhibitions commemorating the Gaius Charles Bolin Centennial

FROM THE COLLECTION

American Modernism, Maurice & Charles Prendergast,
Art of Pre-Columbian America

WILLIAMS COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

Class of '89 Valedictorians

Catherine C. Cocks, Sarah Cole, Douglas T. Northrop (valedictory speaker, chosen by lot)

Typing & Word Processing Service

*Manuscripts *Papers

Office hours: 9-5 Monday-Friday

Main Street Secretarial Service

57 Main St., Rm. 225, North Adams, Mass.
(413)-664-7121

Where will you be in 10 years?

"Working for a law firm in L.A.; still a few years away from the possibility of making a partner." -- Matt McQueen

"I'll be walking through a field doing some environmental survey." -- Lisa West

"Playing professional basketball in Italy." -- Dan O'Connor

"Running a voluntary development agency in South Asia." -- Rob Chase

"Sipping Jack Daniels by the fireside." -- Jenny Payne

"We will be privy to a great becoming, yet recognize nothing." -- John Servin and Tony Fuller

"Right over...there!" -- Dave Allen

Arsonists appear at school

In scenes more reminiscent of Beirut than The Village Beautiful, arsonists struck twice during the school year, with results that could have been tragic.

In October, Williams security was alerted to an early-morning fire in the 85-car Mission Park parking lot. Three vehicles were set on fire and the gas tanks of eight others were punctured. However, neither security officers nor the firemen who were called to the scene realized that a 30-pound propane tank had been put into a jeep next to one of the burning cars. Had the jeep caught fire, the tank would have exploded, killing firemen and destroying the entire lot.

Then-Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zito, Jr., told the Record, "I don't know if the intent was to inflict bodily injury on anyone, but when you have a propane tank there, the thought's got to exist. . . . Whoever did it was real sick."

The arsonists also hotwired a school bus parked at the lot and drove it to block the entrance, forcing the firemen to climb in the lot over the fence.

The district attorney's office and the state fire marshal were called in to investigate, and though town police said in late October that they had several good leads, the arsonists were never apprehended.

In a similar incident, a car was set on fire last month on Southworth Street, near the college. Numerous sightings of people with gas cans in the area caused the Deans' office to send out an all-campus mailing in May urging students to report any such sightings or suspicious behavior.

A rash of thefts of unlocked dorm rooms in the fall also resulted in an all-campus mailing advising students to lock up whenever they left their rooms. Director of Security Ransom Jenks told the Record in October that these 'walk-ins' did not indicate a major increase in campus crime, and that just by locking their doors, students could bring these incidents to a halt.

College settles Bookstore suit

An embarrassing situation for Williams College was resolved late last month, as a settlement was reached in a lawsuit filed by Williams Bookstore owner Joseph Dewey against the school.

Dewey, a 1952 graduate of Williams, claimed that the school, by brokering a 1982 agreement that left him the sole textbook vendor in town, had in effect guaranteed him a monopoly for 10 years. But, he said, when the college cleared the way for Albion Books, an Amherst-based textbook store chain, to open a huge store in Williamstown, he would be driven out of business shortly.

As a result, Dewey felt entitled to profits that he would have earned for the next three years, the duration of the college-facilitated deal between him and Ralph Renzi, a former competitor. In return for a $100,000 payment from Dewey, Renzi agreed not to sell textbooks from his College Bookstore for ten years. Because of interest on the sum, Dewey still owed Renzi over $40,000 as of this year.

The college, while agreeing to its obligation to cover Dewey's payment to Renzi, felt it had no commitment to pay him the profits he might have earned. Dewey said that money was supposed to provide him a safe retirement income. Just how much money the college owed Dewey was the issue in the lawsuit.

Both Dewey and college Treasurer and Vice President William Reed, the Williams official who has dealt with Dewey since 1982, said they were pleased a settlement has been reached, and both expressed relief that the episode was now behind them. Dewey, however, said, "I am still concerned with my retirement income." In addition, he will be closing October 1, after he has had the chance to examine his inventory and determine how he will take care of it. He has said before that there was no way his small store could compete with Albion in a small college town.

Student dissatisfaction led to change

In response to several years of student and faculty complaints about the service, selection and prices at the Williams Bookstore, the school organized two committees last fall to look into ways to improve the store. An informal group, composed of Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards and then-College Council President Trace Blankenship '89, worked with Dewey on short-term solutions to improve service for students purchasing spring semester books in February.

By all accounts, the measures were a success: lines were shorter, more books were in on time, and students were shown publishers' prices on request to demonstrate that Dewey's markups were credible.

However, about the same time, the other college committee, given the task of finding a long-term solution, reached an agreement with Albion to bring that chain to Williams. Albion will be provided reading lists for all college classes, and will be moving into a partially-college-owned building on Water Street. The change was announced to the faculty February 15, shortly after students had bought their books for second semester.

Reed said it was an unfortunate coincidence that the college made the switch right after Dewey introduced reforms at the store, but said that those were short-term solutions and irrelevant to the greater problems of the Williams Bookstore. He said that Albion will have much more space and greater contact with textbook publishers, thus providing service to the students and faculty that Dewey cannot really match.

The lawsuit settlement contained a confidentiality clause that prevents either party from disclosing the amount of the settlement.

Images Cinema, Spring Street

A smaller Images will remain

Images Cinema, whose future as a theater has been uncertain all year, will remain in operation on a smaller scale next year.

Images was sold on March 17 to William, Thomas and James Elder, who have worked with actor Christopher Reeve, a regular at the summer Williamstown Theater Festival, to come up with a plan to keep the theater in operation.

Images is the only movie house in the area that specializes in first-run foreign and art films. Earlier in the year former owner George Mansour indicated he would not be seeking a new lease on the theater, and owners of the building doubted Images' ability to be a lucrative operation. Mansour pointed to the competition from North Adams, Pittsfield and the college as well as the declining interest in foreign and esoteric movies as reasons for some of Images problems.

When the Elders bought the Walden

Building on Spring Street, where the theater is located, they maintained that they would not run a theater themselves, but would lease it to a commercial operator. Now with Reeve's involvement and the upcoming ownership of the theater by the current manager, it appears that a solution has been reached that will guarantee Images' existence.

The Elders have decided to renovate the theater in the early fall, adding a new projector and restoring all the seats in the building. They hope to finance the estimated $40,000 cost of the renovations in part by donations of $100 per seat from Images supporters. In addition, Reeve has apparently agreed to form a citizens group which will raise funds for the costs.

The theater's rent will rise from $1000 to $1,500 a month beginning July 1. In response, Images will raise its admissions price to $5 on that date, according to Donald Fisher, presently the manager of the theater who will then become Images' owner.

Further, Reeve plans a six-show, three-day movie festival at the end of June featuring Williamstown Theatre Festival actors both in person and on film.

Students are sure to be enthusiastic about this solution guaranteeing Images' survival, despite the rise in ticket price. Rumors of Images' closing sparked discussion from the College Council as well as the general student body.

"It would be a cinematic tragedy if this lone pillar of excellence and good taste were to disappear for good. Quite simply, Images offers the only opportunity within a radius of several tens of miles to see first-run, first-rate films on a large screen," Philip J. Power, Jr., '92 said. It appears that with the action of Reeve and the Elders, this potential tragedy has been averted.

If It Doesn't Fit

Ship It.

Heading home for vacation? We will get your things there safer and faster and all in one piece! We will even pack boxes for you! Shipping boxes and packing supplies as well as storage available. Pick up service needed? Call or drop off at:

The Spirit Shop
280 Cole Avenue
458-3704

Shipping via U.P.S. and Emery etc
Shipping boxes for sale. Stop by Baxter May 15th
10 AM-2PM.

GATSBYS

"BLOOMIES OF THE BERKSHIRES"

25 RAILROAD ST.
GREAT BARRINGTON, MA 01230
(413) 528-9455

31 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN
458-5407

62 MAIN ST. LEE
243-3412

Ye Olde Country Shoppe

New England crafts, critters, cards, collectibles, and country edibles

896 Cold Spring Road
Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-9834

Open Daily 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

25 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01230
458-5407

Elysian Fields

... a paradise in the alley

Featuring a fine selection of Country Antiques, Handcrafted Jewels,
Textured Handweaves, Lovely Silk
Banks, Wearable Art, Fine Art, including Beautiful Berkshire Landscapes, Prints, Pillows, Sterling Silver and so much more.

GRADUATION WEEK SPECIAL
Come visit ELYSIAN FIELDS and receive
20% off

Selected jewelry and accessories
GRADUATES: Thank you for your tremendous support during our first year in Williamstown

CONGRATULATIONS!
Located in Eph's Alley (off Spring Street)
Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-4707

Hours: M-F 10-6 Sun 12-5

Multicultural center will be at Jenness

One year after the takeover of Jenness House by members of the Coalition Against a Racist Education, Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards announced that Jenness would become the site of the new multicultural center.

She told the Record that the center will provide two main purposes: "One, to provide support to minority and foreign student groups, and two, to help educate the community on multicultural issues."

Included in the center will be a resource library, a study room, a kitchen, and offices for the Asian, Hispanic and black student groups. The building will also have an office for the director of the center and an office for the International Club.

The college announced in February that a multicultural center would open in the fall, and considered several buildings as possible sites for the center. The reopening of Hopkins Hall after two years of renovation freed up several offices for use as the center, but the college decided upon Jenness, according to Treasurer and Vice President of the College William Reed, because of its size and proximity to other campus minority centers.

While college officials and students are pleased about the opening of the center, residents of Grace Court, where Jenness is, are upset about the decision. Mrs. John Miller, widow of a longtime Williams professor, said she was told by Reed and then-President of the College John Chandler that Jenness would return to residential housing after the building of the Chandler Gym. Reed said he regrets that the college had to change its plans, but constraints made Jenness the best choice for the multicultural center.

This decision came after a series of events that appeared to hurt town-gown relations. The college's plan to develop, over strong community objections, a large faculty housing development on Pine Cobble; the decision not to revert Chandler House, another college building on Grace Court, to residential housing and the lawsuit by Williams Bookstore owner Joseph Dewey (see related story) hurt the college's credibility in the eyes of many townspeople.

The college announced last month that it was delaying the decision to put the Personnel Office in Chandler House, and it later reached a settlement with Dewey, but the plans for Jenness House are proceeding apace.

This seniors-only Log party last Tuesday was a success, but efforts to revitalize the Log last year did not fare so well, as only "21 Nights" made any money for the Log.

21 Night, little else earning $$ for Log

The idea that the Log could still be a central student hangout after the drinking age was increased to 21 in Massachusetts was drowned in a keful of cold reality this year, as attempts to revitalize the Log met with little success.

The College Council voted in March to discontinue all Log functions except for 21 Nights and occasional Friday entertainment. 21 Nights, which are geared towards the drinking-age population at Williams, were the only events to make a profit for the Log during the year.

Last year, the council and an ad hoc Log Committee hoped that a weekly schedule of events, including board game nights, movie nights, and bands on Friday nights would keep the Log profitable. However, this arrangement proved unsuccessful.

The Log, which is run by Food Service, was left leaderless earlier this year when Dave Lamarre, a major supporter of the Log Committee's efforts, left Williams to work for The Orchards hotel. Faced with the problems of having no adult to oversee the Log's operation and declining bar receipts on any night but 21 Nights, then-council treasurer MaryEllen Sullivan '89 recommended that 21 Nights be continued on a weekly basis, and Friday entertainment on a bi-weekly basis. She told the Record that those 21 Nights generally made $500 for the Log, while Friday entertainment does not make enough to cover overhead costs.

Class of 1989 officers

Seated left to right--Missy Crouchley, treasurer; Susannah Everett, secretary; David Trattner, vice president; Trace Blankenship, president. Not pictured--David Allen, class speaker; Bethany Spaulding and John Kelsh, marshals.

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

131 Water Street, Williamstown, MA
413-458-5229

Specializing in jazz

Attention Grads!

Exclusive unisex Williams College Sweater

White 100% cotton with embroidered Williams logo

Sizes S, M, L, XL — $64.95
Size XXL — $69.95

42 Spring St.
(413) 458-3625

Hopkins reopens to mixed reviews

After nearly two years of construction, the new Hopkins Hall opened gradually this spring, with college offices moving back into their old haunt on a staggered schedule. Though the $9.3 million structure was completed ahead of schedule, the unusual design and high cost of renovating the building that will be 100 years old in 1990 generated fierce and often bitter debate on campus this past year.

While the new Hopkins may appear to simply consist of a new building stuck onto the north side of the old one, what people think of as the old Hopkins no longer exists. During construction, all that remained of the Hopkins Hall of yesteryear was the outside; the interior of the building was completely gutted from basement to roof.

Architectural Resources of Cambridge designed the 27,000-square foot renovation and a 16,750-square foot addition.

While Hopkins is still built more or less around a central staircase, oak, lights and mirrors now highlight the interior.

The administration has hailed the new Hopkins as a grand achievement, but not everyone is happy. During construction, townspeople complained that the college had not adequately informed the community of the environmental impact of the construction, and others believed that a building of historical significance had been destroyed without so much as a shred of regret.

Many students have said that they believe the structure is more grandiose and ostentatious than is really necessary for an office building. The tuition increase of 9.6 percent, announced in April, also made students (and some parents) think that their tuition money could have been better spent.

Open after nearly two years of construction, the $9.3-million new Hopkins Hall received rave reviews from administrators, but some students questioned the need for the new Hopkins' rather ornate interior.

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond"
Williams '88

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, by proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best.

We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and shoe and boot repair.

(413) 458-4321
66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
01267

The Springs Restaurant

Relax in our fireplace lounge. Then sample our continental menu, which features many exquisite items such as Sole Veronique, Osso Bucco, Tortellini Carbonara, and Prime Ribs au jus.

As fine a hostelry as The Springs is a restaurant • Located in a picturesque country setting • Between Tanglewood and the Williams-town Theatre Festival • Many golf courses nearby.

New Ashford, Massachusetts
Route 7, Between Pittsfield & Williamstown
Restaurant: 413-458-3465 Motor Inn: 413-458-5945
Breakfast Shop: 7-11:30 am.
Restaurant: 11:30-10 pm. 11:30-9 pm. Sunday.

Congratulations to the Class of 1989

Thank you for your patronage

Williams News Room

Telephone 458-2205 30 Spring Street
Williamstown, Ma. 01267

Three top hits from IBM

This offer is simply irresistible!

If it's value that counts, and it usually does, you can't afford to miss this offer on these IBM Personal System/2® models. Now—at a special campus price—you have your choice of three hit computers with high quality graphics to help you organize your class notes and write and revise papers. Check it out . . . three great computers . . . three fantastic prices! And selected software that's loaded and ready to go. So, come and see us today!

IBM

Model 30 286

Your Special Price*

$2,399

Model 50 Z

Your Special Price*

$2,799

Model 70 386

Your Special Price*

$4,449

*This offer is limited to qualified students, faculty and staff who order an IBM PS/2 Model 8530-E21, 8550-031 or 8570-E61 on or before June 30, 1989. Prices quoted do not include sales tax, handling and/or processing charges. Check with your school regarding these charges. Orders are subject to availability. IBM may withdraw the promotion at any time without written notice.

IBM Personal System 2 and PS/2 are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation. IBM Micro Channel Architecture is a trademark of IBM Corporation. Microsoft is a registered trademark of the Microsoft Corporation. hDC Windows Express is a trademark of the hDC Computer Corporation.

The men's lacrosse team won the Little Three and came in second at the ECAC tournament. The women's lax squad also won Little Three and was the runner-up at the ECAC. The women's track team won the NESCAC championship.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE CLASS OF 1989

CAR RENTALS,
TIRES, BATTERIES,
ACCESSORIES

TEL. 458-8269

B & L GULF STATION
100 Spring Street Williamston, Mass. 01267

SPIRIT SHOP

280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704

"Free Delivery"

Champagne
Domestic and Imported Beer and Wine
Congratulations, Class of '89!

Monday - Saturday 9am to 11 pm

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE CLASS OF 1989

Graduation Brunch
11:30 - 2:30
Dinner from 3:00
Reservations suggested

the Mill on the Floss

Self-Owned
Maurice Champagne
Jean Champagne
Route 7
New Ashford, NH
(603) 458-9123

WILLIAMS SHOP

- Traditional Williams Chairs by Bent Bros.
- Bookends
- Banners
- Reverse Weave Sweatshirts
- and much, much more

Goff's Sports, inc.

CONGRATULATIONS
CLASS OF 1989

15 Spring St., (413) 458-5885
Hours: Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30, Thurs. Till 8:30, Sun 12-4

J.P. Parisien '90 skis at the Williams Winter Carnival; the ski team finished ninth at the NCAA Nationals in Jackson Hole, Wyoming. In other winter sports, the women's squash team was eighth at their nationals and both hoops teams qualified for post-season tournaments. The men's and women's swim teams each won New Englands by a comfortable margin.

Megan Jacobson '91 rips the ball in a home contest against Wesleyan. The softball team finished at 8-2, but an inexperienced baseball squad struggled throughout a season plagued by poor weather.

Junior Dan Calichman weaves his ways around an opponent, during an across-the-board successful fall for Williams sports teams. Williams was 21-0 in Little Three competition as the men's varsity soccer team won its second straight ECAC crown, the football team rolled to a 6-1-1 record with shutouts in their last four games and the field hockey team cruised to an NIAC title.

The varsity women's crew, pictured above at the finals of the Dad Vail Regatta in Philadelphia, ended the season with a sixth place finish. The varsity men finished their season with a 22-4 record and the first heavyweight medal for a Williams men's crew squad. Strong showings from both the men's and women's novice crews promise fine varsity crews in upcoming years.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE
CLASS OF 1989

The House of Walsh

THE HOME OF CLASSIC
AND CONTEMPORARY FASHIONS
FOR MEN AND WOMEN

39 Spring Street Williamstown, Mass
413-458-5010

The Williams Record

VOL 103, No. 1

USPS 684-680

September 12, 1989

Joseph Dewey, owner of the Williams Bookstore will soon be closing up shop, following the opening of the Albion Bookshop. Dewey was compensated by the College and is now selling his remaining stock at a discounted price. Thomas

Albion Bookshop opens its doors, as students raid its open shelves

by Mary Moule

Albion Bookshop on Water Street opened early last month and began catering to student business for the first time at Williams College. Students expressed general satisfaction at this final solution to the textbook crisis of last year.

Problems such as long lines, lack of open shelving, and a short supply of trade books have been addressed by the new bookstore. The new system, including the promised changes, is working well according to students who have visited the operation.

"It seemed better organized than before because we're able to get our own books," Andrew DeGarmo '92, said. "It's a lot faster, and I didn't have to wait much at all." Many students have commented on the open-shelf system that allows students to pick out their own books for classes and frees employees to run four cash registers.

Despite a big rush on Tuesday and Wednesday before classes started, lines were relatively short, according to Albion's Williamstown manager Gary Allen. "There was never more than a 15-20 minute wait at most," he added.

continued on page 4

Smith starts tenure as associate dean

by Stephanie Jones

"I sound like a seasoned veteran, don't I?"

With these words, spoken at the junior class meeting last Wednesday, Preston H. Smith II, the college's new associate dean, introduced himself to the student body.

Smith is the first to serve in the new position.

He will oversee the administration of several programs, including the pre-freshman summer science program, the Ford-Mellon Research Scholars Program for Minority Students and orientation programs for minority students. He will also share in the comprehensive responsibility of the dean's office.

Preston H. Smith II

Smith has been an assistant dean and director of the Third World Center at Brown University for the past four years.

Woven through his many duties is a central theme: advising minority students. Smith will be an academic advisor to minority students; he will also work with the director of the new multicultural center and his work in coordinating programs that provide opportunities for minority students.

"I'd be happy if I felt minority advising was systematic, and the multicultural center was established at the end of this year," he said.

"This job attracted me for two reasons, the stature of the job as well as the size of the college, which allows me to have more impact," Smith said that the larger size of Brown and his broader responsibilities had limited his influence there. "I see a lot of potential here. I would want to work at Williams as long as I can do useful work."

Smith said he felt especially encouraged by President Francis Oakley and the high administration of the college.

"I think racial plurality is a real possibility here."

College responded to CARE.

Speaking about the college's most famous racial incident of the past several years, the Coalition Against Racist Education takeover of the Jenness House in 1988, he attributed it to a lack of communication on both sides. However, he praised the school's flexibility in responding to the takeover, and said the creation of his position showed the extent of the college's commitment to the welfare of minority students.

"Clearly the institution felt they needed to have a responsibility in this area. I think it is naive to believe that anything can be done unless it is somebody's job."

Smith said that one problem faced by minorities is that Americans lack a historical memory. People therefore do not see the justification for special programs for minority students, such as the black student orientation, which they may believe are unfair.

"People have asked why do they need those programs; my job is to help answer their concerns."

Smith said he is also excited about his work with the director of the new multicultural center. He said he hopes the Williams center will be different from the Third World Center at Brown.

"The center at Brown was really more of a place for minority organizations to be housed, and this will have more of an emphasis on resources for everyone." Smith said that the center will contain its own library, foreign language periodicals and videos but will not duplicate resources found elsewhere.

"I think it will be a place that is warm and welcoming to everyone. I would like to see courses that pertain to either racial minorities or third world issues held

continued on page 4

Justice Department opens investigation of Williams

by Robert Weisberg

During his tenure as U.S. Secretary of Education, William Bennett '68, now the nation's "drug czar," said many times that higher education should be run less by the whims of elite institutions and more by the laws of the free market.

Now, Bennett's wish may be coming to fruition, as the Justice Department has opened an investigation into the tuition, financial aid and scholastic practices of at least 14 prestigious colleges and universities, including Williams.

While antitrust experts say that it is extremely unlikely that President Francis Oakley will be led off to jail, the federal government could dictate changes that would affect the way these and other schools conduct much of their business.

Most students and their parents were informed of the investigation in an Aug. 16 letter from Oakley. A similar letter was sent one week earlier to faculty and staff members.

News Director Ellen Ilerick confirmed that on July 31 the college received a 14-page letter asking for a slew of information. "The request was very broad in scope, and a lot of college offices are involved," she said. "It will take a lot of time, money and personnel to fulfill it." Other Williams administrators categorically refused to comment on the investigation; all inquiries are now being handled through the news office.

In addition, Justice Department officials will not say what prompted the investigation; they would only confirm that requests for information had been sent to a number of institutions. College officials and attorneys representing Williams were similarly silent on what may have prompted such an inquiry.

"Without knowing more than we do now about the [Justice] Department's specific concerns, it would be pointless to make sweeping protestations of the

continued on page 3

Images will stay, but will shrink

by Ellen Drought

Images Cinema, whose future as a theater has been uncertain in the past, will close September 30 for a month-long renovation. After the renovation, the theater will reopen, smaller but hopefully better.

Action on the part of actor and part-time Williamstown resident Christopher Reeve and other concerned people from Williamstown and across the country have resulted in the necessary funds to allow the theater to function.

Images, the only movie house in the area that specializes in first-run foreign and art films, was sold last spring to William Thomas and James Elder after its former owner, George Mansour, indicated he would not be seeking a new lease on the theater.

Whether the building would continue to house a theater was unclear, as the owners doubted Images' ability to be a lucrative operation. Mansour pointed to the competition from North Adams, Pittsfield (where a new multi-screen complex opened at the Berkshire Mall) and the college as well as the declining interest in foreign and esoteric movies as reasons for some of Images' problems.

When the Elders bought the Walden Building on Spring Street, where the theater is located, they maintained that they would not run a theater themselves, but would lease it to a commercial operator. Since then, Reeve's involvement and the ownership of the theater by the former manager have resulted in a solution which will guarantee Images' continued existence.

The Elders have decided to renovate the theater next month, adding new projection equipment, a new screen and restoring all the seats in the building. After the changes, it will operate as a smaller theater, with 196 seats. The cost of the renovation will be financed by supporters of the theater who have donated to the Images Cinema Improvement Fund, organized by a citizens group which Reeve heads.

The group has come up with $34,656 to date with a goal of $50,000 for the needed changes, according to James Drummond, a custodian of the fund. That amount was raised in two ways: from a series of film festivals held over the summer and private donations to the fund.

continued on page 3

A Williams welcome ritual

Taking time out from iced tea and finger sandwiches, President Francis Oakley speaks with freshmen at the traditional open air reception on the lawn of his house. Thomas

Wassenar wins first non-academic Fulbright

by Sallie Han

Director of Physical Plant Winthrop Wassenar has been awarded a Fulbright Fellowship for Academic Administrators. He is the first director of physical plant to receive this award.

In the past, the Fulbright Fellowship for Academic Administrators has usually been received by college and university deans, admissions officers and business administrators. Four fellowships are awarded annually in the U.S., allowing for work and study abroad in countries such as England, Germany and Japan.

Wassenar will be working at the University of Warwick in Coventry, England, for three months this autumn. His project will involve a study of energy conservation, computerization of the physical plant, and planning and construction procedures.

Information exchange

"The project description in my case was to study and evaluate and to see what they're doing and contribute what I know in the areas of energy conservation and the use of the computer both in the maintenance and operation and also in the energy conservation and design and so forth," Wassenar said.

"There might be some energy conservation things they're doing over there that we for some reason haven't heard about over here. For example, particular kinds of equipment or processes."

Wassenar said that the University of Warwick had a very sophisticated computerized building management system, parts of which could be adapted at Williams. Yet, he added that he had knowledge that would be valuable on the other side of the Big Pond.

"For instance, we put a cogeneration system into our boiler plant two years ago and there may be some institutions over there considering that. And other things we've done [might be of interest to them], because we've done a fair amount on this campus," he said.

"One thing I also hope for is a general upgrading of the quality of the people in my profession. As campuses become more complex technically, colleges and universities realize they need someone more technically competent, qualified educationally and experienced [in] administration."

"I think it's important for people in my profession to get the recognition because quite often in many schools, people in this position are at the bottom of the totem pole," Wassenar said. "I think that it would be nice if more people in this field were given some recognition for the contribution that they make to higher education. So hopefully this will open the door."

Movie stars come out to save Images Cinema; Glenn Close may be next page 3

Record's general interest meeting tonight at 8 p.m. in Baxter B12

Ten faculty promoted, new staff members added: read all about it page 7

The Williams Record

Justice Department out of line

In a time of drug wars, government corruption and merger-mania, it seems odd that the Department of Justice has chosen to focus its limited resources on a small number of private colleges and universities. Invoking the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890, the Justice Department is investigating possible collusion in financial aid awards, tuition levels and administrative and faculty salaries.

What apparently drew the department's attention was an annual meeting of 23 prestigious institutions known as the Overlap Group. The group met to discuss, or as the Justice Department would have it, set strict limits on, financial aid awards. The group's meetings have been public knowledge practically from its inception over 30 years ago. Harvard University even mentions them in its literature for prospective students.

The Justice Department apparently feels that the financial aid agreements represent a restraint of free trade that harms students. Having it out in the open, they feel, doesn't make it any better.

But this view ignores the possible ill effects of disbanding the Overlap Group. The chance, however slight, that schools would begin offering all sorts of incentives to brilliant students at the expense of helping the rank and file matriculants far outweighs the ideological benefits of the investigation. For example, the Justice Department may have underestimated the willingness of some schools to pay for such things as a high number of National Merit Finalists in the freshman class. Such a bidding war would hurt the colleges as well as the students.

Williams, for instance, is hardly a poor institution, but it could scarcely afford to engage in a bidding war with Harvard, a much richer school, for a world-class violinist or a soccer star with 1600 SATs.

Also, as financial aid awards increase, so do tuition and fees. That is something no one wants to see. It would be ironic if, in giving away scholarships to superstars, colleges would make their less exceptional students suffer.

The Overlap Group, taken at face value, is a collusive organization. But when the Justice Department bares its big right arm at private schools, it is taking the risk of harming more students than it helps. Unless the federal government has persuasive evidence that the Overlap Group is deliberately holding down financial aid awards, and thus harming the majority of its students, it should stop the investigation now.

Number Games

- 33 -- Number of digits required to make a credit card call with the new telephone system at Williams.
- 51 -- Years that Whitney Stoddard has taught at Williams.
- 53 -- Combined number of years the entire Computer Science faculty has taught at Williams.
- 10.6 -- The percent by which Williams raised its tuition in 1988.
- 6.2 -- The average percentage by which Harvard, Yale and Dartmouth raised their tuition in 1988.

Source: The Wall Street Journal

On the Record...

"We still don't have any better idea...why they're investigating us. And that, too, is fairly usual."
--Thane Scott, chief of attorney, on the Justice Department's pending investigation.

"I really want students' input. If there's discontent, I need to know."
--Gary Aler, manager of Athlon Books.

"Condoms, AIDS, condoms, cocaine, condoms, dental floss, condoms."
--Director of Medical Services James Corkins, commenting on his usual speech topics at class meetings.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible and not more than 500 words. They must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. They must be typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-2289.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor STEPHANIE JONES, Arts Editor
DAN SKWIRE, Opinions Editor KARL THOMAS, Photography Editor
BILL PHILPOTT, Layout Editor

Assistant News Editors
ELLEN DROUGHT, JUSTIN SMITH, GREG HART
SALLIE HAN & RAJESH SWAMINATHAN
Assistant Sports Editors
KERR HOUSTON & JUAN ALONZO
Assistant Layout Editor
JANA SWAIL

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-antared at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Opinions

Open stacks are great, but where are the mysteries?

by Dan Skwire

All right, all right, I fell for it. I took the bait -- hook, line and sinker. I listened to all the stories and I believed every word. They sounded nice, make no mistake, but I should have known they were too good to be true.

"The New Bookstore will solve all your problems," I remember hearing last year. "The evil monopolist will be put in his place. Truth, justice and quality textbook service will come to Williamstown once again."

I was entranced. Here, I told myself, is everything that makes America great. Out with monopoly and in with competition. Take from the rich and give to the poor. I hummed the national anthem walking across campus. Lying in bed at night, visions of American flags, cheap textbooks and short lines danced in my head.

When I got to school this fall I couldn't wait to buy my books. My parents and I even stopped in for a visit on our way out to dinner the day they drove me up.

"Father," I said, "this is our New Bookstore. Look at the textbooks in open stacks. Note the many cash registers. Observe the courteous and efficient sales staff. This is the stuff that dreams are made of."

"Where are the mysteries?" Dad asked. "I don't see any mystery section. What kind of bookstore doesn't have any mysteries?"

In retrospect, that was an omen of things to come, but I was too blinded by the shiny new mystery shelves to see it. I tried to peepily Dad.

"Serious students do not have time to read mysteries," I said. He snorted and continued browsing through the "stray Agatha Christie volume he had unearthed

In the English literature section.

That was my first trip to the New Bookstore. The second came two days later when, eager to be the first in my dorm to have my new books, I ran in the door looking like a six-year-old on Christmas Day.

"I'm sorry," said Santa Claus. "We're not open for textbooks yet. Unpacking and all that. You understand. Could you come back Tuesday?"

'The books came from overseas. The dog ate our invoice. Can you come back Friday?'

I came back Tuesday. Trip number three. It was 10 a.m., prime shopping hours, but I wasn't worried. You see, I knew the service would be crisp and efficient. I knew the lines would be short and the prices low. I knew I had nothing to fear. An hour later, I was a changed man. Staggering away from the cash register, I wiped the sweat from my forehead and leaned against the wall. Opening the complimentary shopping bag, I saw that I now owned the books for exactly one and a half of my four courses.

"The professors ordered the books too late," they told me. "The books came from overseas. The dog ate our invoice. Can you come back Friday?"

I came back Friday. Trip four. And Monday. Trip five. By Monday afternoon, I was still missing half a dozen of my textbooks, and I had a stack of credit card slips adding up to two Ben Franklins and an Andrew Jackson to show for my labors. I had never spent less than twenty minutes waiting in line, and I had blisters on my toes from hiking to Water Street so many times.

A former Williams official, who asked not to be identified, said, "The alternative to this is really scary. It would be come just like schools competing to get aibles. It will drive up tuition."

Part of consumer market? He said one of the reasons that Overlap Group meetings were conducted so openly is that the member schools may never have thought of themselves as being bound by antitrust legislation.

"It's hard for colleges to accept that they're part of the consumer market," he said. "They see no possibility of a restraint of trade, but as more students see themselves as consumers, the question will be raised more often."

"Colleges, in their heart of hearts, still feel they are not industries," the former official said. According to Joe Paul Case, dean of financial aid at Amherst College (another member of the Overlap Group), the group began meeting in the early 1950s. He denies that the member schools agree on how much money to offer students; "it's just consultation on professional judgement," he said.

If that practice is abolished, some say, a bidding war for the brightest students could develop, similar to what has been seen in high-school college athletics. And if financial aid becomes the ammunition to lure such students, it will result in higher tuition for everyone; the argument goes.

But such a defense may not stand up in a civil case, according to remarks by a Justice Department official. Charles Rule, assistant attorney general for antitrust, said in a 1988 speech that while

News

The times they are a-changin'...

It may not rank up there with the construction of a new dorm on campus, but the transformation of Chapin Hall Drive into a one-way street has raised some eyebrows at Williams.

Images helped by all-star fundraiser

Continued from page 1

Stars come out

The festivals during the summer, called the Alumni Film Series for the Images Cinema Improvement Fund, featured stars who screened a movie of their choice and then appeared for a question and answer period. Those attending included many regulars of the Williamstown Theater festival such as Paul Newman and Joanne Woodward, Sigourney Weaver and Olympia Dukakis. Drummond said that for each $10 admission, $6 went to the improvement fund.

But the series may not be over yet. "There's a strong possibility Glenn Close will come at the end of September," Drummond said, adding that Reeve is currently negotiating to bring her here.

The rest of the money for the fund has come from private donations. Any contribution of $200 or more will allow the donor to have a seat with their name on a plaque in the theater. Drummond said that a lot of interest was generated by an article written by Lawrence Van Gelder, a movie columnist for the New York Times, who wrote about Images' plight in his column last June. Since then, contributions have poured in from all over the country.

"[Donations] came from everywhere from Maine to Washington. It was unbelievable," Drummond said. Supporters gave various reasons for their contributions, ranging from a Williams alum wanting to dedicate the seat to their ex-mate who died, to a Manhattan woman who was outraged that the community was in danger of losing its theater, Drummond said. He also encouraged Williams students to donate: "Ten kids can pay $20 apiece and we'll put all ten names on the chair."

New phone system to ensure individual billing

by Rajesh Swaminathan

The days of roommates squabbling over who made that 2:30 a.m. call to Singapore are over. The Williams College telephone system was modified this year to include personal authorization codes for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system. The codes were implemented to allow for individual billing and to eliminate the confusion that plagued the previous system.

Don't see how other people could get at it. I can see how other people can use the codes, but here in Fitch it's not terribly useful."

"I don't have to be seven digits but that's really not the point. It'll probably work out better and make it easier. There are four digits and now we don't have to develop the phone bill," Fernandez said.

"I've only had to use it once," Carter Smith '91 said. "As far as keeping people off my phone, it's nice. But since my phone's in my room, I don't see how other people could get at it. I can see how other people can use the codes, but here in Fitch it's not terribly useful."

"I don't have to be seven digits but that's really not the point. It'll probably work out better and make it easier. There are four digits and now we don't have to develop the phone bill," Fernandez said.

Williams under investigation for financial aid collusion

continued from page 1

College's innocence," Oakley said in both letters. He was concerned, he added, that the process of complying with the inquiry would be a great distraction for personnel at Williams.

A major focus of the investigation so far appears to be the practices of the Overlap Group, a loose consortium of 23 colleges and universities (including Williams), mostly in the Northeast, that meet every spring to discuss financial aid awards to students who have been accepted at more than one of the schools. All but four of the institutions that have admitted to being investigated are members of the group.

The idea -- and the defense the schools are likely to make, if necessary -- is that if a student receives similar aid at each of the schools, he or she will be more likely to use non-financial factors in deciding which institution to attend.

A former Williams official, who asked not to be identified, said, "The alternative to this is really scary. It would be come just like schools competing to get aibles. It will drive up tuition."

Part of consumer market? He said one of the reasons that Overlap Group meetings were conducted so openly is that the member schools may never have thought of themselves as being bound by antitrust legislation.

"It's hard for colleges to accept that they're part of the consumer market," he said. "They see no possibility of a restraint of trade, but as more students see themselves as consumers, the question will be raised more often."

"Colleges, in their heart of hearts, still feel they are not industries," the former official said. According to Joe Paul Case, dean of financial aid at Amherst College (another member of the Overlap Group), the group began meeting in the early 1950s. He denies that the member schools agree on how much money to offer students; "it's just consultation on professional judgement," he said.

If that practice is abolished, some say, a bidding war for the brightest students could develop, similar to what has been seen in high-school college athletics. And if financial aid becomes the ammunition to lure such students, it will result in higher tuition for everyone; the argument goes.

But such a defense may not stand up in a civil case, according to remarks by a Justice Department official. Charles Rule, assistant attorney general for antitrust, said in a 1988 speech that while

Don't see how other people could get at it. I can see how other people can use the codes, but here in Fitch it's not terribly useful."

"I don't have to be seven digits but that's really not the point. It'll probably work out better and make it easier. There are four digits and now we don't have to develop the phone bill," Fernandez said.

"I've only had to use it once," Carter Smith '91 said. "As far as keeping people off my phone, it's nice. But since my phone's in my room, I don't see how other people could get at it. I can see how other people can use the codes, but here in Fitch it's not terribly useful."

"I don't have to be seven digits but that's really not the point. It'll probably work out better and make it easier. There are four digits and now we don't have to develop the phone bill," Fernandez said.

Williams under investigation for financial aid collusion

continued from page 1

College's innocence," Oakley said in both letters. He was concerned, he added, that the process of complying with the inquiry would be a great distraction for personnel at Williams.

A major focus of the investigation so far appears to be the practices of the Overlap Group, a loose consortium of 23 colleges and universities (including Williams), mostly in the Northeast, that meet every spring to discuss financial aid awards to students who have been accepted at more than one of the schools. All but four of the institutions that have admitted to being investigated are members of the group.

The idea -- and the defense the schools are likely to make, if necessary -- is that if a student receives similar aid at each of the schools, he or she will be more likely to use non-financial factors in deciding which institution to attend.

A former Williams official, who asked not to be identified, said, "The alternative to this is really scary. It would be come just like schools competing to get aibles. It will drive up tuition."

Part of consumer market? He said one of the reasons that Overlap Group meetings were conducted so openly is that the member schools may never have thought of themselves as being bound by antitrust legislation.

"It's hard for colleges to accept that they're part of the consumer market," he said. "They see no possibility of a restraint of trade, but as more students see themselves as consumers, the question will be raised more often."

"Colleges, in their heart of hearts, still feel they are not industries," the former official said. According to Joe Paul Case, dean of financial aid at Amherst College (another member of the Overlap Group), the group began meeting in the early 1950s. He denies that the member schools agree on how much money to offer students; "it's just consultation on professional judgement," he said.

If that practice is abolished, some say, a bidding war for the brightest students could develop, similar to what has been seen in high-school college athletics. And if financial aid becomes the ammunition to lure such students, it will result in higher tuition for everyone; the argument goes.

But such a defense may not stand up in a civil case, according to remarks by a Justice Department official. Charles Rule, assistant attorney general for antitrust, said in a 1988 speech that while

Don't see how other people could get at it. I can see how other people can use the codes, but here in Fitch it's not terribly useful."

"I don't have to be seven digits but that's really not the point. It'll probably work out better and make it easier. There are four digits and now we don't have to develop the phone bill," Fernandez said.

"I've only had to use it once," Carter Smith '91 said. "As far as keeping people off my phone, it's nice. But since my phone's in my room, I don't see how other people could get at it. I can see how other people can use the codes, but here in Fitch it's not terribly useful."

"I don't have to be seven digits but that's really not the point. It'll probably work out better and make it easier. There are four digits and now we don't have to develop the phone bill," Fernandez said.

Williams under investigation for financial aid collusion

continued from page 1

College's innocence," Oakley said in both letters. He was concerned, he added, that the process of complying with the inquiry would be a great distraction for personnel at Williams.

A major focus of the investigation so far appears to be the practices of the Overlap Group, a loose consortium of 23 colleges and universities (including Williams), mostly in the Northeast, that meet every spring to discuss financial aid awards to students who have been accepted at more than one of the schools. All but four of the institutions that have admitted to being investigated are members of the group.

The idea -- and the defense the schools are likely to make, if necessary -- is that if a student receives similar aid at each of the schools, he or she will be more likely to use non-financial factors in deciding which institution to attend.

A former Williams official, who asked not to be identified, said, "The alternative to this is really scary. It would be come just like schools competing to get aibles. It will drive up tuition."

Part of consumer market? He said one of the reasons that Overlap Group meetings were conducted so openly is that the member schools may never have thought of themselves as being bound by antitrust legislation.

"It's hard for colleges to accept that they're part of the consumer market," he said. "They see no possibility of a restraint of trade, but as more students see themselves as consumers, the question will be raised more often."

"Colleges, in their heart of hearts, still feel they are not industries," the former official said. According to Joe Paul Case, dean of financial aid at Amherst College (another member of the Overlap Group), the group began meeting in the early 1950s. He denies that the member schools agree on how much money to offer students; "it's just consultation on professional judgement," he said.

If that practice is abolished, some say, a bidding war for the brightest students could develop, similar to what has been seen in high-school college athletics. And if financial aid becomes the ammunition to lure such students, it will result in higher tuition for everyone; the argument goes.

But such a defense may not stand up in a civil case, according to remarks by a Justice Department official. Charles Rule, assistant attorney general for antitrust, said in a 1988 speech that while

Don't see how other people could get at it. I can see how other people can use the codes, but here in Fitch it's not terribly useful."

"I don't have to be seven digits but that's really not the point. It'll probably work out better and make it easier. There are four digits and now we don't have to develop the phone bill," Fernandez said.

"I've only had to use it once," Carter Smith '91 said. "As far as keeping people off my phone, it's nice. But since my phone's in my room, I don't see how other people could get at it. I can see how other people can use the codes, but here in Fitch it's not terribly useful."

"I don't have to be seven digits but that's really not the point. It'll probably work out better and make it easier. There are four digits and now we don't have to develop the phone bill," Fernandez said.

Williams under investigation for financial aid collusion

continued from page 1

College's innocence," Oakley said in both letters. He was concerned, he added, that the process of complying with the inquiry would be a great distraction for personnel at Williams.

A major focus of the investigation so far appears to be the practices of the Overlap Group, a loose consortium of 23 colleges and universities (including Williams), mostly in the Northeast, that meet every spring to discuss financial aid awards to students who have been accepted at more than one of the schools. All but four of the institutions that have admitted to being investigated are members of the group.

The idea -- and the defense the schools are likely to make, if necessary -- is that if a student receives similar aid at each of the schools, he or she will be more likely to use non-financial factors in deciding which institution to attend.

A former Williams official, who asked not to be identified, said, "The alternative to this is really scary. It would be come just like schools competing to get aibles. It will drive up tuition."

Part of consumer market? He said one of the reasons that Overlap Group meetings were conducted so openly is that the member schools may never have thought of themselves as being bound by antitrust legislation.

"It's hard for colleges to accept that they're part of the consumer market," he said. "They see no possibility of a restraint of trade, but as more students see themselves as consumers, the question will be raised more often."

"Colleges, in their heart of hearts, still feel they are not industries," the former official said. According to Joe Paul Case, dean of financial aid at Amherst College (another member of the Overlap Group), the group began meeting in the early 1950s. He denies that the member schools agree on how much money to offer students; "it's just consultation on professional judgement," he said.

If that practice is abolished, some say, a bidding war for the brightest students could develop, similar to what has been seen in high-school college athletics. And if financial aid becomes the ammunition to lure such students, it will result in higher tuition for everyone; the argument goes.

But such a defense may not stand up in a civil case, according to remarks by a Justice Department official. Charles Rule, assistant attorney general for antitrust, said in a 1988 speech that while

Don't see how other people could get at it. I can see how other people can use the codes, but here in Fitch it's not terribly useful."

"I don't have to be seven digits but that's really not the point. It'll probably work out better and make it easier. There are four digits and now we don't have to develop the phone bill," Fernandez said.

"I've only had to use it once," Carter Smith '91 said. "As far as keeping people off my phone, it's nice. But since my phone's in my room, I don't see how other people could get at it. I can see how other people can use the codes, but here in Fitch it's not terribly useful."

"I don't have to be seven digits but that's really not the point. It'll probably work out better and make it easier. There are four digits and now we don't have to develop the phone bill," Fernandez said.

Williams under investigation for financial aid collusion

continued from page 1

College's innocence," Oakley said in both letters. He was concerned, he added, that the process of complying with the inquiry would be a great distraction for personnel at Williams.

A major focus of the investigation so far appears to be the practices of the Overlap Group, a loose consortium of 23 colleges and universities (including Williams), mostly in the Northeast, that meet every spring to discuss financial aid awards to students who have been accepted at more than one of the schools. All but four of the institutions that have admitted to being investigated are members of the group.

The idea -- and the defense the schools are likely to make, if necessary -- is that if a student receives similar aid at each of the schools, he or she will be more likely to use non-financial factors in deciding which institution to attend.

A former Williams official, who asked not to be identified, said, "The alternative to this is really scary. It would be come just like schools competing to get aibles. It will drive up tuition."

Part of consumer market? He said one of the reasons that Overlap Group meetings were conducted so openly is that the member schools may never have thought of themselves as being bound by antitrust legislation.

"It's hard for colleges to accept that they're part of the consumer market," he said. "They see no possibility of a restraint of trade, but as more students see themselves as consumers, the question will be raised more often."

"Colleges, in their heart of hearts, still feel they are not industries," the former official said. According to Joe Paul Case, dean of financial aid at Amherst College (another member of the Overlap Group), the group began meeting in the early 1950s. He denies that the member schools agree on how much money to offer students; "it's just consultation on professional judgement," he said.

If that practice is abolished, some say, a bidding war for the brightest students could develop, similar to what has been seen in high-school college athletics. And if financial aid becomes the ammunition to lure such students, it will result in higher tuition for everyone; the argument goes.

But such a defense may not stand up in a civil case, according to remarks by a Justice Department official. Charles Rule, assistant attorney general for antitrust, said in a 1988 speech that while

New dean eyes racial harmony at Williams

continued from page 1

In the multicultural center. I'm really excited about that part, I think it makes a statement about the serious academic purpose of the center," he said.

The center will also allow all the minority organizations to be housed together and Smith said he hopes this will help them to work together more.

He said he wants to ensure that all students receive all the opportunities for intellectual and social development at Williams. "It can be tough for a minority student from an urban area who comes here," he said.

"I just want to make sure that all Williams students are getting all that they can out of their Williams education. I hope that when people graduate they feel very good about Williams."

Junior polls students on recycling attitudes

by Rajesh Swaminathan

Starting this December, Williamstown law will require that all trash be sorted into three categories: paper, glass and cans; and all other trash. Failure to comply with the rule could result in a fine of up to $300.

The finer points of the Mandatory Recycling Bylaw are still being refined by the Board of Selectmen, the bylaw is not due for public release and implementation till late in the year.

Stacey Bond '91, a junior advisor in Morgan Mid East, conducted a survey in July 1989 to gauge student attitudes towards recycling. It was sent to 200 students by campus mail and also to 30 members of the Women's Crew Team; 76 were returned.

"I did it for a couple of reasons," Bond said. "To let people know that their input could help shape the upcoming mandatory recycling program, to start people thinking about recycling and to get some feedback on their attitudes." She said that the responses reflect a sense of awareness with regard to recycling and its importance.

Smith said that a goal of his is to continue what he considers great efforts at Williams. Four black tenure-track professors and one black visiting professor have been hired for next year, he said.

"Someone to relate to" "It is important for minority students to have someone to relate to," Smith said. He added that although he believes it is important for minority students to have minority faculty and administrators, not all minority faculty and administrators could relate to all minority students.

"There's a wonderful piece of graffiti at Hampshire that says, 'the tyranny of role models,'" Smith said, "but despite that iconoclastic urge on my part, I do believe role models are important."

While a number of students expressed irritation with the "pushiness" of the recycling measure, others indicated they strongly supported recycling.

"I did find quite a few surveys in the recycling bin," she said. Fifty-four students indicated that they would sort out their trash, the number of students who actively demurred was a negligible three. A large number of the students surveyed placed a substantial emphasis on individual fines (much like parking tickets) as a viable penalty for offenders.

The surveys did acknowledge problems with deterring offenders of the proposed law. For instance, many pointed to the violation of privacy entailed by checking on an individual's trash. But at the same time, the overall impression generated by the responses was one of support for the bylaw.

Bond said she was impressed with the response overall. "If it were reflective of the entire school, we would be recycling more than 3 1/4 of a ton per week," she said.

Colleges cut down on "sex" courses

College Press Service

Nassau Community College students won't be going to gay bars or chatting with prostitutes any more in their human sexuality course.

The Nassau County (N.Y.) Board of Supervisors threatened to reject the school's budget, and thereby delay the start of the fall semester, unless the homework was modified.

Also nixed from the class were assignments such as masturbating, taking a bubble bath, and viewing 80 slides of male and female genitalia. Students will get to see a film that explicitly portrays sexual intercourse.

This isn't the first time that such "sex" courses have gotten a rise out of school governing boards.

Last year at Villanova University, a Catholic school in Pennsylvania, a religious professor was criticized for allowing a student to show a sexually explicit video in a "Christian Marriage in the Modern World" course.

And in 1986 Cerritos College in California dropped two sex-relationship courses after a debate about whether the course material was "appropriate."

Other unusual courses already have raised eyebrows this year. The University of Nevada-Reno unveiled the first gambling institute July 1 where students can eventually earn undergraduate minor degrees.

The program is in response to the growing interest in gambling, with many states getting into gambling to generate government revenue.

San Francisco State University students this fall will be able to take a course titled "Homelessness and Public Policy," in which they can live on the streets for a while.

College/Campus Representative

Earn top $5,000 flexible hours. Fun. Enjoyable. Rewarding. Gross up to $20,000 per year by helping friends receive grants and scholarships.

For info please call (213) 967-2115

New bookstore still missing books

continued from page 1

Open shelving was one of the main concerns of the Bookstore Committee, chaired last year by Vice President and Treasurer Will Reed. The Williams Bookstore, where students have bought textbooks in the past, was too small for such a solution. Faculty members spoke of the need to examine the reading list for classes taught by other instructors, and students like this aspect as well.

"You get a sense of how big the class might be, and exactly what books will be read," John Scammon '91, said. "It's nice to know what courses have heavy reading loads. I'm not going to take four classes that all have a lot of reading."

Wanted more used books A few students were disappointed that the new bookstore did not have more used books for sale. The store does plan to place used books next to new books on the shelves. "I have five companions that deal in used books that I can call on," Aler said. "But it depends on what's available." He said that although there are used books available for several classes this semester, he was not able to get many this year.

"Once we get a history of classes and are able to start buying back books, storing and reselling them, we'll be able to resupply them to future classes," Aler said. Although he is not yet sure of the buy-back policy until he discusses it with Albion owner James Murphy, Aler suggested that they will start after the textbook rush is over and other problems have been ironed out.

After the end of the month, students will be able to bring books in at any time during the year. Each book will need to be priced, a process which might take some time, according to Aler. However, he also warned that some books, if out of print or no longer used, may be valueless and he will be unable to buy them.

Some students have wondered why the inventory bought from the Pooh Perplex last year has not appeared on the shelves. Albion acquired the student-run used-book business, thus fulfilling an agreement with the college, but all valuable books were immediately sold to used-book dealers so that they could break-even, explained Aler.

Aler suggested that it may take some time for the used-book situation to improve. In the meantime, some students already miss the Pooh Perplex. "I think the school should run its own used book supply," Todd Lowe '92, said.

Prices, prices In general, students found prices to be about the same as before, although a few books were available at lower prices. According to Aler, Albion's policy includes a 20 percent mark-up from the wholesale price, except where a cover price is listed. This margin is the same at Albion's other branches in the area, and where I used to work, they buy over time." "I really want student input," Aler said. "If there's a problem, they have the right to an explanation. If there's a discount, I need to know. We can make changes or at least give a reasonable explanation for situations."

Williams students honed in on Albion Bookshop, located on Water Street soon before classes started. Albion boasts open shelves and better facilities than its predecessor, the Williams Bookstore. Thomas

Dewey closing out Although much of the College community is pleased with the new bookstore, The Williams Bookstore will no longer be a fixture in student life. Due partly to lack of space, the Bookstore Committee decided to bring in another bookstore and make some compensation to Joseph Dewey, owner of the original store.

Despite some disagreement between Dewey and the college over an equitable compensation, a settlement was eventually reached out of court in early June, according to Dewey.

"The community has been very supportive," Dewey said. "That's been very gratifying. It allows me to finish up my business with a better feeling."

Elysian Fields
...a paradise in the Alley

Featuring handknit woolen and mohair sweaters, unique crafted jewelry, oversized shawls, silk pajamas, and this week only, 30% OFF ALL MMA Prints and selected summer items

OPEN 7 DAYS

Elysian Fields
a unique gift emporium

Eph's Alley, off Spring Street
Williamstown, MA (413) 458-4707

Elyse and Jonathan Meer '83 Proprietors

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS

Lowest Prices

on

LPs, cassettes, CDs and blank tapes

We also sell rock posters and guitar strings

We buy and sell good used LPs and CDs.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinema I, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179

Uncle Buck	7:05	9:20
Parent Hood	7:00	9:20
The Abyss	6:55
Casualties of War		9:25

Images

Do the Right Thing	September 12	7:00 & 9:15
La Letrice	September 13-14	7:00 & 9:00
Lethal Weapon II	September 15-16	7:00 & 9:00
Woodstock	September 17-19	7:30

North Adams Cinema

Parent Hood	7:00	9:00
Let It Ride	7:00	9:00
Reckless	7:00	9:00
Batman	7:00
Lethal Weapon II		9:00
Uncle Buck	7:00	9:00
Do the Right Thing	7:00	9:00

Pittsfield Cinema Center

The Abyss, Casualties of War, Batman, Parent Hood: 6:45 & 9:30.
Field of Dreams, Lethal Weapon II, Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade: 7:00 & 9:30.
Turner and Hooch, Uncle Buck, When Harry Met Sally: 7:15 & 9:30.

Berkshire Mall Cinema

The Abyss	12:40	6:40	9:35
Uncle Buck	1:20	7:20	10:00
Parent Hood	1:05	7:05	9:45
Dead Poets' Society	1:00	7:00	9:40
When Harry Met Sally	1:25	7:25	10:05
Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade	12:50	6:50	9:30
Lethal Weapon II	1:15	7:15	9:55
Batman	12:55	6:55	9:35
Honey, I Shrunk the Kids	12:45	6:45	9:25
Casualties of War	1:10	7:10	9:50

Bronfman Auditorium
Friday & Sunday at 7:00 & 9:00

Subject to change after Thursday

Arts In View

September 12: From 4:30 to 6:00 p.m., auditions for the Woodwind Ensemble will be held in the Instrumental Rehearsal Hall, Bernhard Music Center.

From 7:30 to 9:00 p.m., The Changing Faces of Williamstown, a slideshow featuring photographic and oral history of change in Williamstown since the turn of the century will be shown in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall.

September 13: From 5:00 to 7:00 p.m., auditions for the Williams Collegium Musicum will be held in Room 42, Bernhard Music Center.

September 15: From 12:00 to 5:00 p.m., auditions for Kuskila (formerly the Williams African Ensemble) will be held in Room 42, Bernhard Music Center.

September 19: At 8:00 p.m., Bernice Johnson Reagon will perform "Songs of Struggle" in the Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall.

"Virtue Rewarded" - a viewer's reward

by Tim Sellers

Unlike the extravagant birthday party Malcolm Forbes recently threw for himself, the paintings drawn from the Forbes Magazine Collection for the current exhibition at the Clark Art Institute show an awareness of the problems of the poor.

"Virtue Rewarded: Victorian Paintings From The Forbes Magazine Collection" includes more than 50 works from the largest collection of Victorian art outside Great Britain. It can be seen in the upper galleries of the Clark until October 15. The exhibition, which was organized in conjunction with the J.B. Speed Art Museum in Louisville, Kentucky, offers a peek into Victorian morality and culture.

Some of the paintings in the exhibition were intended to illustrate and provide models of acceptable behavior within the family and society. Other artists did not merely paint role models for the affluent minority of nineteenth century British society. Social realism and the depiction of the often romanticized down-trodden and poor, as seen in this show, reflect an awakening consciousness of great problems.

The precious, chaste purity of young women of means clashes with the helplessness of impoverished mothers and despairing young housekeepers. Whether the unfortunate people portrayed are suffering as a result of their own wrongdoings (a lesson for rich patrons), or the sad victims of hard times, is a question often left unanswered.

More modernism in sensibility and not typical of this Victorian genre is John

Frederick D. Hardy's After the Party (1876)

Collier's Trouble of 1908. It is a dark psychological drama of two working women, whose unspecified "trouble" originates somewhere outside the frame. Also not representative of the show is Thomas Sidney Cooper's beautiful painting of a flock of sheep in a graveyard. Paint is handled superbly and the image is memorable.

This exhibition, as a whole, breaks little ground in Williamstown, but it is an enlightening historical artifact and contains several great paintings.

The permanent collection at the Clark appears as it did last spring with a few changes here and there. The Clark is known for its collection of Impressionism, Post-Impressionism, and other late nineteenth century painting, which rivals even that of the Baxter art poster salesman.

Deciding which is the worst painting in the Clark's permanent collection is much easier than choosing the best. Several terrible paintings by Renoir later the galleries. Renoir's A Dog competes in the "worst" category with several of his wistfully etched, pastel colored bathing beauties.

Yet the worst in the collection is Death and the Maidens (The Reapers), painted by Pierre-Paul de Cuvannes in 1872. This is an awful work which must be seen to be appreciated fully. Sickening pictures, clumsy brushwork, and anatomical ignorance are all combined to produce this painting of heavy-handed melodramatic symbolism.

Fortunately, competition is stiff for "best" painting and I would not try to pick any single work. Renoir partially redeems himself with The Ombres from 1881 and Sleeping Girl with a Cat from 1880. No other contribution by Pierre-Paul de Cuvannes was found.

The next exhibition opening at the Clark is "Hiroshige: Famous Places in the Sixty-odd Provinces." This collection of Japanese woodblock prints will be on display from October 21 to December 17.

The Williams Trio, minus cellist Douglas Moore, played four works for the violin and piano in Brooks-Rogers last Friday. The remaining members of the Trio, Timothy Baker and Doris Stevenson, are shown above.

Concert exciting season opener

by Frederick Giersbach

Friday, September 8, marked this year's opening of the Williams Trio concert series in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. Violinist Timothy Baker and pianist Doris Stevenson shone off in a highly demanding concert, winning a roar of applause from the Williamstown audience.

The ensemble, playing without benefit of its third member, Douglas Moore, performed four works for violin and piano in a program which included Beethoven's Sonata in C Minor, Op. 30 No. 2, Saint-Saens' Sonata No. 1, Op. 75, Ravel's Tzigane, and a Vivaldi sonata.

The concert opened with Vivaldi's Sonata in A Major, Op. 2 No. 2, a substitution for the advertised Mozart sonata. The Vivaldi was a perfunctory opening for the concert; Baker and Stevenson mingled an imperfect dialogue which only warmed to the occasion in the final movement. Although more attention might have been paid to this sonata, which featured some rather progressive juxtapositions of major and minor for the early eighteenth century, Baker's oftentimes sound suited this brief work, and the duo's performance served as a light aperitif to the more demanding works which followed.

Beethoven's C Minor sonata for violin and piano built upon the Vivaldi and drew a resoundingly different sound from Baker and Stevenson. The work effused many characteristic Beethovenian elements - a full of Romantic passion and exuberant misgiving. The opening Allegro con brio revealed sufficient fire to warrant the rich Adagio cantabile which followed.

The final Allegro molto was excitingly executed, showcasing Baker's passionate exactness in the quick sixteenth-note duet with the piano.

The duo, however, celebrated the Scherzo and Finale too much; both final movements were too loud and the frequent and complicated climaxes showed little dynamic difference. Stevenson was heavy on the pedal, driving home Beethoven's depths a bit didactically and losing the subtlety of the low register rumblings which prevailed at the opening of the sonata. But Baker and Stevenson captured the sense of Romantic intensity in this sonata, making the performance of the Beethoven successful overall.

The second half of the concert began with the Camille Saint-Saens sonata, a markedly more refined and virtuosic work than the Beethoven. Baker and Stevenson played well together in this long and beautiful sonata, blending clear sonorities with dazzling displays of ensemble through rapidly articulated passages. The Allegro agitato was tastefully removed; Baker's entrances coincided nicely with Stevenson's lighter articulation.

The concert finished with another piece of virtuosity, Ravel's Tzigane. The work opened with an extended cadenza for solo violin. Baker's remarkable accuracy of pitch through the double-stop chords and gliding harmonies held the force of the fiery theme from the beginning. Stevenson conspired with Baker in the subsequent variations to outdo each other in the union passages and rising modulations.

The selection of works on the program allowed for more rhythmic variation in texture and color in the long phrases characteristic of the Romanticism. One could hear echoes of Carnival of the Animals in the middle movements; the sonata also sounded like a notebook for a Saint-Saens piano concerto. Of all the works on the program, the Saint-Saens exhibited the greatest degree of interpretive unity. The final Allegro molto was excitingly executed, showcasing Baker's passionate exactness in the quick sixteenth-note duet with the piano, Stevenson's flourish in the final moments filled the hall with an orchestral sound which closed the best ensemble of the evening.

The next Williams Trio concert will not be until February 4, when Susan St. Amour will be joining the ensemble for a Brahms piano quartet.

Sea Minos

by Steve Scoville

Can you write like this?

"Yet the most valuable aspect of their performance for the audience was the display of erotic power that can overcome both performers and listeners."

"You can ski, only to be chain whipped by a body nazi trying to get ahead of you in the life line."

The Arts section of the Williams Record is looking for reviewers and contributors to write on a free lance basis.

How're you going to do it?

"I guess it's just you and me, Coach.
Everyone else is at the IBM PS/2 Fair."

PS/2 it!

Come to the Fair and save on the IBM PS/2.

Meet the IBM Personal System/2® and find out how easy it is to use. With the PS/2®, you can get your work done and still have time for fun. You can organize your notes, write and revise your papers, and create smart-looking graphics to make a good report even better. And best of all, you can get a PS/2 at a special student price that's more than fair.

COME TO THE IBM PS/2 FAIR
SEPTEMBER 18 FROM 10-3 JESUP HALL

Professors advance, new staff hired in summer

During the summer, five associate professors at Williams College were promoted to the position of full professor. Gene Bell-Villada, Spanish; Edward A. Epping, art; Arden Fingerhut, theatre; Mark E. Johnson, geology; and Frank Morgan, mathematics, were promoted to full professor effective July 1, 1989.

Bell-Villada has taught at Williams since 1975. He specializes in modern Latin American literature, and is the author of the book, Borges and His Fiction: A Guide to His Mind and Art, published in 1981. His second book, García Márquez: The Man and His Work, is due out next February.

He graduated from the University of Arizona in 1963 and received his master's degree from the University of California, Berkeley, in 1967. Bell-Villada received a diploma in French language in 1966 from the University of Paris, and his Ph.D. from Harvard in 1974. Before coming to Williams, he taught at Yale and at SUNY, Binghamton. During the 1986-87 academic year, Bell-Villada was director-in-residence of the Hamilton College in Madrid program, a four college consortium of which Williams is a member. Epping has been a member of the faculty since 1977, and was named art department chair in 1987. He received his B.A. in 1970 from Western Illinois University, and completed his master's degree there one year later. In 1973, he was awarded an M.F.A. degree from the University of Wisconsin.

He had a solo show at the Williams College Museum of Art in 1987 entitled Notes Toward the Theatre of Memory, and has also had recent exhibitions in New York City and Indiana University. His work is in the permanent collections of a number of museums including the Detroit Institute of Art, the University of Michigan Art Museum, the University of Wisconsin Memorial Union, and the Williams College Museum of Art.

Fingerhut came to the college in 1984 as a visiting professor, and has been chair of the theatre department since 1985. Prior to joining the Williams faculty, Fingerhut taught for ten years at both the Tisch School of the Arts and New York University and Pottery Studio and Forum of Stage Design. She earned her bachelor's degree from New York University in 1967 and an M.F.A. degree from Columbia University in 1972. She has designed the lighting for, among others, the Broadway shows Driving Miss Daisy and Hay Fever. She has also done work off-Broadway, including productions such as Julius Caesar and The Haggadah for the New York Shakespeare Festival. Fingerhut has received an Ohio Award for Sustained Excellence in Lighting Design, a pair of Maharam Citations, and the Viliger Award.

Johnson has taught in the geology department since 1977, and specializes in rock formations of Silurian and Ordovician age. He has received a series of grants, including three research grants from the Petroleum Research Fund and a Fulbright-Hays Senior Research Fellowship. He received a two-year grant from the National Science Foundation which supported his project, in cooperation with a Chinese professor at the Nanjing Institute of Geology and Palaeontology, comparing Ordovician strata from China and North America.

After receiving his bachelor's degree from the University of Iowa in 1971, Johnson completed his Ph.D. in stratigraphy and paleogeology at the University of Chicago in 1977. He continues to write articles about his research in geological journals. Morgan joined the math department in 1987, and was named department chair in 1988. Before coming to Williams, he taught at MIT for ten years. Morgan has also taught at Rice and Stanford. He recently received a continuing grant from the National Science Foundation to study the behavior and structure of energy minimizing surfaces in all dimensions.

Morgan is the author of the book Geometric Measure Theory: A Beginner's Guide, which was released last year. He received an S.B. from MIT in 1974 and a Ph.D. from Princeton in 1977.

The college professors have been awarded named professorships, effective July 1, 1989, in recognition of their contributions to the college. Raymond Baker, professor of political science, has been named James Phinney Baxter III Professor of Political Science. Jean-Bernard Bucky, professor of theatre, has become William Dwight Whitney Professor of Theatre. Zarka Z. Filipezak, professor of art, is now Massachusetts Professor of Art. George R. Goehals II, professor of psychology, has been named Webster Atwell Class of 1921 Professor of Psychology. Daniel D. O'Connor, Massachusetts Professor of Philosophy, has become Mark Hopkins Professor of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy.

Baker has taught at Williams since 1973 and is currently chair of the political science department. A specialist on Arab and Soviet affairs, he is the author of the book Egypt's Uncertain Revolution Under Nasser and Sadat, and extensive political commentary in national newspapers and magazines such as The New York Times, The Christian Science Monitor and Newsweek. Baker's latest book, Sadat and After: Struggles for Egypt's political soul, is forthcoming from the Harvard University Press.

He has held a permanent position as an adjunct professor of political science at the American University in Cairo (Egypt) since 1985. He graduated from Ripon College in 1964 and completed his Ph.D. at Harvard in 1972.

Bucky has directed the Williams-Oxford program for the past two years. He has taught at Williams since 1974, and served as theatre department chair for ten years. He has directed many plays at Williams, including Waiting for Godot and A Midsummer Night's Dream. He has also been stage director for the Opera Company of Philadelphia, the Michigan Opera Theatre, the Williamstown Theatre Festival, and StageWest in Springfield.

Bucky graduated from Queens College in 1958 and earned his master's in mathematics for New York University in 1960. He received his M.F.A. degree in stage directing from Carnegie-Mellon University in 1966.

Filipezak joined the Williams art department in 1973 and served as its chair from 1984-87. She specializes in 17th century art, and has written a book, Picturing Art in Antwerp: 1550-1700. She lectures frequently at colleges and universities and has served on numerous college committees. Filipezak received her B.A. from Barnard College in 1964 and her Ph.D. in 1973 from Harvard.

Goehals has taught in the psychology

continued on page 9

PIP PRINTING
Camera Ready
Resumes
$0 for $17.70
Offset Printed in just
a few hours!
We do all types of printing
53 Main St.
North Adams, MA
663-3414

YOUTH THEATRE DIRECTOR,
ages 10-14, rehearsals Mon & Wed afternoons, Sat mornings, Oct-Nov.
Performances early Dec.
Salary $400. Call starlight Stage
458-4246

THE THREE R'S.
READING, 'RITING, AND REEBOK®

Reebok

$10 - $15 off
All men's and women's Reebok selected styles save 50%
Sale ends 9/16

42 Spring Street
458-3625

Salvatore's

Open 9:30-5:30
Thurs 9:30-8:30

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
Est. 1848

Course adoptions -- selected texts
Calendars -- Posters -- Cards
Large Literature Section
Science Fiction/Fantasy/Graphic Novels Philosophy -- Lit Crit -- Biography and lots more...

Right on Spring Street
visit us soon

Visa/Master Card
Personal Checks Accepted

The Cafe

Light Lunches
Imported Beer
Fine Wines
Munchies
Desserts

at the College Book Store
76 Spring Street
(413) 458-3350

HELP KEEP WILLIAMSTOWN'S IMAGES BRIGHT

Once every Main Street in America had a moving picture palace. The popcorn was hot and seats were comfy. In Williamstown, that image had outlasted time. But now time has caught up with Images. To preserve a slice of Americana on Spring Street, each of us must act now.

The building which houses Images Cinema has been sold. Renovations will begin in the fall. The rent is rising. Seats and projectors are in dire need of repair. Don Fisher, who runs the theater, needs our help to keep this business going. Seats must be removed and repaired, a modern projection system acquired, and new lobby counters constructed. A capital fund is needed if the region's only art, specialty, and foreign film house is to continue showing works of such quality and diversity.

The Images Cinema Improvement Fund has been endorsed by thirteen individuals as the only way to ensure the survival of Images into the 21st century. Images is a business; the fund is not a charity. As a contributor, you - or your group - may earmark the first $200 of your support toward a plaque on one of the renovated theater's 200 refurbished seats. In appreciation, you will receive four tickets to Images. Though this is not a return on investment, you will have the satisfaction of knowing that in a world dominated increasingly by an unbearable sameness, something of unique artistic value shall continue.

SPONSORS:
Dudley R. Bahlman
Bill Densmore

Maria P. Buoni
James S. Drummond
Gintare S. Everett

Don Fisher
Donna Fisher
James R. Heckin

Jane J. Heekin
Martha Lewis-Dietze
Christopher Reeve

Tim Sedlock
Mary Jane Sommerer-Piazza

RETURN THIS FORM WITH YOUR CHECK TO:

Images Cinema Improvement Fund
P.O. Box 652, Williamstown, MA 01267
(James Drummond, Martha Lewis-Dietze, custodians)

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

PHONE _____

INSCRIPTION ON PLAQUE:

☐ Attached is my check for under $200. I understand that my support is neither a tax-deductible contribution nor an investment and that I will receive no tangible benefit as an individual other than recognition as a patron of Images Cinema.

☐ Attached is my check for $200 or more. Please attach a plaque to a theater seat which my support will help to refurbish. I understand that my support is neither a tax-deductible contribution nor an investment and that it will be used solely for capital improvements to Images Cinema.

☐ You may publicly use my name and community of residence as a supporter of Images Cinema.

Vision

Skill

Daring

All the Excitement of the Circus!

Banking today calls for a sense of adventure. Bankers need uncanny vision, the skill to perform flawlessly under great pressure, and the daring to seize fleeting opportunity. A flair for the new and risky is also a real asset.

Do you crave that kind of excitement? Then you might fit right into our act! Chemical Bank welcomes wizards from all backgrounds—number crunchers, gene splicers, people who speak in tongues.

Come test your talents with an experienced performer! Accomplish great feats! We give you lots of different ways to shine.

And you can win a lot more than applause.

CHEMICAL BANK

Opportunities available in auditing, consumer service and sales, credit analysis (corporate finance), credit training (middle market or private banking), financial accounting, financial management, general management, real estate analysis, trust and estates administration.

College Relations Department, 222 Park Avenue, New York, NY 10017 212-310-6752.

More from the best of this summer's press releases

continued from page 7

department at Williams since 1970. He was chair of the department from 1982-85 and was acting dean of the faculty in 1987-88. He has written two books in collaboration with Stephen Worchel on adjustment and human understanding. With Worchel and Joel Cooper he wrote Understanding Social Psychology. He has also written a textbook, Psychology, in conjunction with three other members of the psychology department at Williams. He is currently a consulting editor for the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology. He earned his A.B. at Harvard in 1966 and his Ph.D. from Duke in 1970.

O'Connor has been at Williams since 1961, and served as chair of the philosophy department from 1976-78, when he was named dean of the college. He resigned that position three years ago to become the first resident director of the Williams-Oxford Program, a title which he held for two years. He is the co-editor, with Nathaniel Lawrence, of Readings in Existential Phenomenology, published in 1967, and also edited, in conjunction with Francis Oakley, the book Creation: The Impact of an Idea, published in 1969. O'Connor graduated from the University of Detroit in 1955 and earned his Ph.D. from Yale in 1961.

Williams College appointed a number of staff members to administrative posts over the summer. While two of them have been with the college for several years now, most of them are new to Williams.

Keith Finan, assistant registrar and lecturer in economics at Williams since 1987, was appointed assistant provost in June; he replaced Associate Professor of Economics M.O. Schapiro, who will now return to full-time teaching. Finan will be responsible, among other things, for policy analyses on budgeting and economic planning and for the development of a new economic information

Five faculty were made full professors and five were given prestigious named professorships system for the college.

As assistant registrar, he managed the student records part of the Student Information System and day-to-day registration and recording at the registrar's office. Before coming to Williams, he was manager of professional and technical support at Utilization Information Service, a company that provided New York State hospitals with information systems. He holds a B.A. from Miami University and an M.A. in economics from SUNY at Binghamton.

Replacing Finan will be Mary L. Morris-son joined the registrar's office on July 24 as assistant registrar. She will be responsible for the current development of the Student Information System and for statistical analyses of the student data base.

Morrison was a graduate student in business administration at SUNY, Albany, specializing in management information systems. She has had extensive experience with Albany's various computerized systems. She graduated from Mount Holyoke in 1974 with a degree in biochemistry.

Lee Dabzell, college reference librarian since 1974, was named head of the reference department at the Williams library on July 1. She will oversee reference service, interlibrary loan service, government documents, computer search services, and programs of library instruction.

As reference librarian, Dabzell was instrumental in automating the interlibrary loan service and developed instructional programs on the on line public catalog to the campus. She graduated from Smith College in 1960 with a B.A. degree and from Simmons College in 1974 with a master of library science degree.

Ruby Hobson joined the college also on July 24 as assistant director of financial aid. She will be determining student need, packaging awards, and counseling students and parents regarding financial matters.

Since 1982, she was with the financial aid office at the University of Colorado, Boulder. She was in charge of system software implementation verifying applicant data and student budget determination. She has just graduated from the University of Colorado, Boulder, with a bachelor of arts degree in business administration and finance.

Elizabeth Wright was appointed associate director of major gifts in the college development office on July 10. Together with her colleagues, she will be responsible for a major fund-raising campaign in conjunction with the 200th anniversary celebration of the college.

Before joining Williams, she was director of development for the Hartford Symphony Orchestra for three years; she was recently responsible for a successful $3 million endowment campaign. From 1983-86, Wright was associate campaign director at the Northfield Mount Hermon School; she worked with development programs for the Appalachian Mountain Club and the Action for Nuclear Disarmament

Fund, Inc., as well.

Lisa Cash was appointed by the College as assistant director of alumni relations, effective July 1. She is to promote and manage alumni events, with particular emphasis on the Black Alumni network; she will also be responsible for the nine youngest classes during the annual Giving campaign.

Prior to joining Williams, Cash was an art teacher at Hoosac School, in Hoosick, N.Y. for four years; she has also taught art and English at the Highcroft School in Williamstown. She graduated from Howard University and holds a B.F.A. in Art History from the University of Cincinnati.

Compiled from News Office press releases by Greg Hart and Rajesh Swaminathan.

West

Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown

Phone: 663-6081

Low Every Day Keg Prices

No Monkey Business

O'Keefe Canadian Polar mixers $11.99/case + deposit $6.90/case (of 12) + deposit and of course much more, including...

Ambassador, Blue Min. Arts, 1st Side Greeting cards, Dozens of soft, furry creatures from Dakin, Applause and North American Bears. Great advice on matters large and small. Courteous, almost professional service

For Sale

Spinet-Console Piano Bargain

Wanted: Responsible party to take over low monthly payments on spinet-console piano. Can be seen locally. Call Mr. White at 1-800-327-3345 EXT. 101.

START WRITING!

Enter the Playboy College Fiction Contest

Join the ranks of great writers who have appeared in Playboy—including John Updike, Joyce Carol Oates, T. Coraghessan Boyle, Bob Shacochis, Elmore Leonard and Ray Bradbury

1st Prize: $3,000 and publication of your story in the October 1990 Playboy

Read this year's winning story—and find out more about the College Fiction Contest in the October Back to School issue of Playboy. (On Sale August 29)

Send an original, unpublished story. Maximum length: 25 typed pages (double spaced). Contest open to all college students, regardless of age. Send your manuscripts and a 3x5 card with your name, permanent address, phone number and college affiliation to:

Playboy College Fiction Contest
910 North Michigan Avenue
Chicago, IL 60611

YOU SAW IT HERE FIRST.

For the past nine years Specialized has lived by those words. By building a bike that year in year out shows how much better we know the terrain. This year, 1988 NORBA World Champion Ned Overend helped us cover even more ground. The '89 Stumpjumper proves nobody's caught up with us yet. And nobody builds a bike that's faster or more fun to ride. From its shock-absorbing Direct Drive fork to its custom designed, triple-butted frame. See the Specialized Stumpjumper here first. While they last.

the Mountain Goat

"The Complete Outdoor Shop"

130 Water St., Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-8445

#1

ISN'T ALWAYS THE BEST

Birth defects are our nation's number one child health problem. You can help prevent them.

Support the March of Dimes

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

Tooling Along

BY FRANCES HANSEN/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maesaka

- ACROSS
- 1 Israel's Abba
- 8 Police group
- 10 Sense by feeling
- 14 Norman town
- 16 Gambling game
- 18 Ecuador's capital
- 20 Cupid
- 21 Brazilian state
- 22 Carpenter's partner
- 23 Court decree
- 24 Gaze intently toward
- 27 Feed on the sea
- 28 City of last Lincoln-Douglas debate
- 29 Concerning "Superman"
- 30 Christopher
- 31 British P.M. 1945-52
- 32 Lint-collecting material
- 33 Frost's "In the
- 34 Redheaded Arlene
- 35 Barber's dinner course?
- 36 Palindromic Cambodian
- 37 Like some Lon
- 38 Spid, with "down"
- 39 Cakes' unlikely partner
- 40 Patched
- 41 Gudrun's husband
- 42 Dos Passos trilogy
- 43 Gardener's direction?
- 44 "Borstal Boy" playwright
- 45 Coloring substances
- 46 Domain
- 47 Negative verbal construction
- 48 She was a lady, in song
- 49 Like a certain Ranger
- 50 Grand—, Evangelist's home
- 51 Tailor, facetiously
- 52 Mason's discouraging advice?
- 53 Property claim
- 54 Tiddit for Dohin
- 55 "Hume, Sweet Home," e.g.
- 56 Coyor
- 57 Descartes
- 58 Polite Italian word
- 59 Get— on (find a clue)
- 60 Stitch again
- 61 Kate's TV friend
- 62 Total
- 63 Arktobones
- 64 Ditchdigger's knightly period?
- 65 River deposits
- 66 Billiard shot
- 67 Pitcher Ryan
- 68 Flash
- 69 Untouchables, e.g.
- 70 Comedian
- 71 Rikidog meets
- 72 Eagle's penitence suite
- 73 "Bei— Bist Du Schuen," 1897 hit
- 74 Hunter in the sky
- 75 Dished out the soup
- 76 Nicholas Gage best seller
- 77 Like some cigarettes
- 78 Pivotal
- 79 Kind of process, in chemistry
- 80 Northern wind of southern France
- 81 "— baby!"
- 82 "And to Think That I— on Mulberry Street"
- 83 "Yeeh!"
- 84 Leather-worker's dictum?
- 85 Take out, editorially
- 86 A— (sizeable amount)
- 87 Hunter in the sky
- 88 Dished out the soup
- 89 Field mice
- 90 Ath adjunct
- 91 Sadr, exiled Iranian
- 92 John or Bo
- 93 Steak cut
- 94 Blow hot— (vacillate)
- 95 Pivotal
- 96 Reapers' span?
- 97 Doves
- 98 Shankar, the star player
- 99 Hackneyed
- 100 "L—, c'est moi!"
- 101 "The Banana Boat Song," familiarly
- 102 Oil-carrier acronym
- 103 Male and female
- 104 Britain's "blonde bombshell"
- 105 Writer Bagnold
- 106 Bristling with weapons
- 107 Marie Antoinette, notably
- 108 Memorable "Mack the Knife" singer
- 109 Grable, White
- 110 Ike's wife
- 111 Jack Benny's exclamation
- 112 Southwestern lagniappe
- 113 Rid of eavesdropping devices
- 114 Rand's shrunger
- 115 Western resort

- 1 Sing the praises of
- 2 Martida or Ananias
- 3 Twisted wicked tutor
- 4 Prospero, e.g.
- 5 Loved not wisely, but too well
- 6 Rand's shrunger
- 7 Western resort
- 8 "A year, a month, —"
- 9 "Hooked"
- 10 Luther, Larry and Polly
- 11 Wandering
- 12 Vital space-shuttle part
- 13 Twister, e.g.
- 14 Take a gander
- 15 Fabulous treasure city
- 16 Glib or camp
- 17 Among the quick
- 18 Tack up
- 19 "— deer, a female"
- 20 Wrap with ropes, at sea
- 21 "— he in England"
- 22 Browning
- 23 Limerick man
- 24 N.Y. times
- 25 Wilson's dog
- 26 Sibling of Sis
- 27 Galena or haughty
- 28 Dilemma

Answer on page 7

The Williams women's cross-country team competes in last weekend's alumni meet. Both men's and women's teams will be travelling to Middlebury for an away meet this weekend; the Williams Invitational will be taking place next weekend at Mount Hope Farm, beginning at noon. (K. Thomas)

Golfers have high hopes for '89 season

by Rhonda Goodman

Prospects for the 1989 men's golf season are good, according to Coach Richard Pohle, incoming freshman this year.

man recruits John McCormick and David Frechette, who have both been acquaintances of Pohle's for six years. McCormick, native talent from Mount Greylock Regional High School, has qualified twice.

"We want to win the Little Three and place first at NESCAC's" make up for the loss of last year's seniors. "The freshmen offset the seniors who left because they're pretty good," junior co-captain Sean Seguin agreed. Pohle and Seguin are referring to fresh-for the State Golf Championships. Frechette, younger brother of top-ranked Williams golfer Tim Frechette, has shown talent as a top junior golfer at the Weston Golf Club in Weston, Massachusetts.

Both golfers, Pohle said, fit the team. "McCormick should cover well for Tim [Frechette]," he said. "And David [Frechette] is a bonus." The fact that David Frechette can't play until spring due to an injured shoulder doesn't bother Pohle. The six returning golfers and McCormick, he maintains, have the experience necessary for a strong season. Strong enough, perhaps, to accomplish team goals.

Ambitious goals
And just what are those goals? "We want to win the Little Three and place first at NESCAC's [New England Small College Athletic Conference]," Seguin said. Last year, the team placed third at NESCAC's, and the Little Three Invitational was cancelled because of a rain-storm.

The Eph golfers will make their debut this season at the Williams Invitational, to be held on September 16th and 17th. Pohle expects the team to place in the top four. Altogether, fifteen schools will be participating in what will be the first obstacle the team must hurdle to reach its ambitious goals.

Crew teams hope to repeat past success

by Asli Ball

Preseason training is already underway for the men's and women's varsity and novice crew teams, who are eagerly eyeing a season which promises to surpass last year's successful campaign. The men's and women's varsity crew teams both enjoyed unprecedented success last season. The men's eight finished third in the Dad Vail League's Division II Championships and, as a result, participated in the Henley Royal Regatta held this summer in Henley, England. The women's varsity finished with a 8-1 record, the lone blemish coming at the hands of UMass. A good deal of this success may be attributed to last year's seniors on the teams. However, both teams are confident that they will be able to compensate for the loss of last year's seniors with talented underclassmen.

Men's team loses seniors

The men's varsity crew team lost 13 seniors from last season's roster, but only four of the seniors were in the first boat.

Although the loss will be a significant one, co-captain Mark Cullen '90 commented, "For men's crew, the talent of underclassmen -- especially the sophomores, who show the greatest potential of any class in the team's past -- will make the difference to replace the key rowers who were lost from last year's graduating class."

The men's team had an excellent opportunity to develop its strengths this past summer when it attended the Henley Regatta in England. The Ephs were invited to this prestigious international event as a result of their standing at the end of last season. Out of the 72 boats which competed, Williams placed in the top eight, capping the best season the squad has ever had. The team says it intends to enter this season with the spirit it had over the summer. The Ephs' primary goal is to surpass last season's performance, and they seem confident that they will.

Five members of this season's first boat are returnees: Michael Mader and Mark Cullen, senior co-captains, Todd Owens '90, John Kennel '91, and Kate Iverson '90, coxswain.

The fall season is comprised of head races, which are generally three to three-and-a-half miles long and last about 18 minutes. The team competes in three races in the fall, spending the majority of its time with technique work and drills in preparation for the spring season. The spring races are generally six-minute sprints.

Women's team has good prospects
The women's varsity crew team did not suffer as heavily from senior loss as the men's team. Only three rowers graduated, and an additional rower who had been an exchange student from Wellesley also left at the end of last year's season. The team leans heavily on this year's senior class, with eight returning seniors on the team. Among the returning seniors are co-captains Joanna Lowell and Megan Ouchterloney, coxswain.

The women's crew roster is not yet final; there are 22 members on the team, but among them many say they are debating whether they can balance practice with academics. The first boat's rowers also change from practice to practice and will probably only be set before each race.

Despite this uncertainty, the team expects to do very well. Having lost only four members from last year's unit, the majority of the team has had a great deal of experience working together and has a good deal of depth.

The one weakness the team is feeling is a lack of coxswains; however, it plans to recruit experienced coxswains before the first regatta in October.

"the sophomores show the greatest potential"

"We have great potential to be successful this year, having lost only three rowers from the first boat and having so much experience on the team," co-captain Lowell commented.

Coach Chris Cruz, who is equally optimistic, said, "I am more excited about this season than any before it -- we have an extremely strong crew with eight seniors, six of whom have four years of experience on the team. They will bring the team a long way this year along with the support of talented underclassmen."

The women's team is scheduled to compete in the Mount Hyde women's regatta on October 7th, the Head of the Charles on October 22nd, and may go to the Head of the Fish in Albany or the Dartmouth Invitational.

Novice teams led by newcomers
Novice coaches Molly Donovan and Hans Feige are both new faces at Williams, but promise to produce successful novice teams. The novice teams have already begun their training with tank sessions and are showing considerable potential, according to the two coaches.

Athlete of the Week

This week's Athlete of the Week is senior Mike Grow, who is still recuperating from his effort in Saturday's Bud Lite Endurance Triathlon held in Sunapee, New Hampshire. Mike was one of more than 300 entrants (professional and amateur) in the event, which involved a 2.5-mile swim, a 112-mile bike, and a 26.2-mile run. Twelve hours and 45 minutes later, he crossed the finish line, and although he "wasn't cognizant at the time," he later learned that he had finished in the top 75. Congrats, Mike!

ACT IN TV COMMERCIALS! HIGH PAY!
NO EXPERIENCE . . . ALL AGES
KIDS, TEENS, YOUNG ADULTS, FAMILIES, MATURE
PEOPLE, ANIMALS, ETC. CALL NOW!!!
CHARM STUDIOS 1 (800) 447-1530 EXT. 7831

PART-TIME TEACHING POSITION
4-8 HOURS A WEEK (EVENINGS, SOME WEEKENDS)
COACHING LOCAL H.S. STUDENTS FOR MATH & VERBAL SECTIONS OF SAT AT NORTH ADAMS STATE COLLEGE.
RESPONSIBLE UPPERCLASSMEN PREFERRED. CALL ROBERT
PAOE IMMEDIATELY AT THE STANLEY KAPLAN
EDUCATIONAL CENTER, AMHERST (413) 549-5780

CLARKSBURG BREAD CO.

PRODUCTS BAKED FRESH FROM SCRATCH DAILY

Coffee • Tea • Juice • Soft Drinks
Open Monday - Saturday
8 AM - 6 PM

37 Spring Street, Williamstown, MA
(413) 458-2251

Vincent '60 succeeds Giamatti

Men's soccer seeks balance

by Juan Alonzo

Coming off a 17-1 season and an ECAC regional championship, the men's soccer team plays its first regular-season game Saturday against Hamilton at Cole Field at 2:00 pm.

The graduation of two of the top players last year makes this a year of great transition for the team.

The loss of Michael Masters '89, who scored a record 19 goals last season, has caused a change in attack strategy. Whereas Masters was the spearhead of the team's attack in the past, Coach Mike Russo sees a need for diversity.

"We are looking for balanced scoring. It must come from Doug Brooks '90, Robert Lake '91 and Laurin Laderoute '92," commented Russo.

The graduation of goalie Robert Blanck, Jr. '89, whose save percentage last season was above 94 percent, has also affected change for the coming season. As of yet, Coach Russo has not named a starting goaltender. Sophomore Charles Goldfarb and Freshman Bill Hennig are both in the running.

"I'm still in the process of making a decision. They both looked good in the pre-season," commented Russo. Captain Dan Calichman '90, along with Steve Bailey '91, John Kennel '91 and Rob Swann '90 are players that will solidify the defense.

"The team will need midfield strength and punch. Andrew Stern '90, Peter Lyn '91 and Sam McIvlin '90 will provide it," said Russo.

A new face on the team is Orlan Iult '92, a transfer student from Norway. Coach Russo feels that "although he has been hurt, he looks like a very promising player."

The class of 1993 has also brought in some talented players, among them Shawn Allen.

Vincent may have been assisted. . . by Steimbrenner

Exchange Commission, and had been president of Columbia Pictures.

The Advocate reported that Vincent was a long-time friend of Giamatti's, and speculated that he may have been assisted in gaining his new position by George Steimbrenner, owner of the New York Yankees and also a Williams alumnus. An instrumental figure in preparing the case against Pete Rose, Vincent has a promise of being necktie-tight commissioner.

---From the Advocate

New recruit Orlan Iult '92, a transfer student from Norway, goes up for a header in September 3rd's game against the Southern Amateur All-Star Team from England. The game ended with a 1-1 tie. The Ephs play Hamilton at home next weekend to start off the regular season. (K. Thomas)

Seniors convocate, as scholars discuss crisis

Seniors begin final year as Ephs

by Linda Good

"Most of the best work in the humanities today is interdisciplinary." This was the theory propounded at this Saturday's annual Fall Convocation address by Werner Gundersheimer, the director of the Folger Shakespeare Library. In his address entitled "Our Battles Join'd: The Struggle For the American Mind," Gundersheimer explored the question of whether there is, in fact, a "Crisis in the Humanities," and suggested possible roots of this crisis.

Werner Gundersheimer, director of the Folger Shakespeare Library, continued questioning the idea of a crisis in the humanities in the annual Convocation address. Thomas

'Change is the only constant within existing academic disciplines'

Gundersheimer, an alumnus of both Amherst and Harvard, began with an account of The Great Defection, when fifteen students who left what he called the "moral and theological laxity of Williams," to enroll in the "more austere, Christian community of Amherst."

However, the students who came later to Williams (and even Amherst) he said, "accepted new subjects and approaches in their curriculum after a great deal of thought." Gundersheimer suggested that at Williams today "we are enriched by this diversity in the ranks of our faculty and administration, as well as our students."

Diversity a key to success Gundersheimer offered diversity as a key to success in the humanities. He stated, "When I arrived at the University of Pennsylvania back in 1966 as an assistant professor, I discovered that I was only the third Jew ever hired for that position." Further, "there were no blacks, Asians, or Hispanics, and certainly no women."

In contrast, he said that "Williams has chosen a very propitious moment to inaugurate a center for the humanities and social science, for this is a time of reevaluation in the liberal arts, as well as excitement and challenge."

"Change," he added, "is the only constant within existing academic disciplines." He added, "What is needed is a setting where vital issues can be settled among people in many fields." Gundersheimer concluded his talk with four axioms regarding the humanities: "they thrive on difference," "complexity in the world of ideas isn't scary, it's fun,"

Panelists debate state of humanities

by Soojin Kim

Discussing subjects from Jesse Helms' indecent art bill to the dangers of deconstructing history, a six-person panel tackled the question of a "Crisis in the Humanities?" at last Friday's convocation panel.

Houston A. Baker Jr., Jacques Derida, Werner Gundersheimer, Gertrude Himmelfarb, and E.D. Hirsch Jr., along with Professor of English and Chair of Women's Studies Linda Bundzen, fielded prepared questions and each other's comments for nearly two hours in front of a capacity crowd at Chapin Hall. Professor of Religion Mark Taylor moderated the panel.

"Humanities has been indicted for weakness and authors like Allan Bloom have charged that one consequence of the crisis in the humanities has been the moral breakdown of American society," said Taylor in his opening remarks.

While the exchange was pointed, and at times heated, most of the members agreed that the subject of the discussion transcended higher education. Society's social and political stakes are framed in the context of its understanding and definition of the humanities.

Bundzen attacked the tradition of white male dominance in the humanities and the prominence that their histories, even those involving women, have in higher education. She maintained that "surely there were some women somewhere who did something of note."

But Himmelfarb responded that Bundzen and other feminist revisionists tend toward "a premature politicization of issues." Himmelfarb, professor emerita of history at the graduate school of the City University of New York, lambasted the way in which anything labeled 'conservative' was considered evil by people in higher education.

"How unfortunate that the term conservative has been introduced in the context of this debate. It's a political term; there are radicals who take conservative views," she said. "So we shouldn't illegitimize people who question the modes of supporting the humanities"

Bongo-Bonga Innd

But others did not seem to share her views. Baker, professor of english and Albert M. Greenfield professor of human relations at the University of Pennsylvania, expressed concern that anti-intellectual movements supported by the government could hurt higher education.

Himmelfarb noted that the Center for the Humanities and Social Sciences had been partially funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities, an office of the very administration that so many in the higher education field were criticizing.

However, Baker responded angrily that "we in this room do not vote for the head of the NEH." The head of NEH is an appointive position and thus is run by the whims of whatever administration, in this case one that appears hostile to higher education, is in power, Baker said.

continued on page 3

Stricter cookout policy adopted

by Mary Moule

A new policy requiring that individual students register for house cookouts has been instituted this fall by Williams College Food Service. The policy is intended to reduce the waste historically generated by low cookout attendance.

According to Karl Kowitz, Associate Director of Food Service, the policy will allow Food Service to set up a cookout for fewer people. The college has traditionally provided food for all students in the house, regardless of how many planned to attend the event.

"The whole premise is that if we're providing a cookout, it is in lieu of a regular meal," Kowitz said. In the past, many students went to the dining halls instead. Food Service thus provided redundant meals.

Kowitz said the new policy will also save labor since cookout preparation is an additional task that Food Service must undertake. "It takes less labor to produce fifty extra portions than to set up a cookout," Kowitz said.

When arranging a cookout, Food Service will require students to give their student identification number, and the meal will then be deducted from their board plan for the week. This will prevent students from going to regular meals in the dining halls in addition to the cookout they have signed for. Kowitz said Food Service is aware of that practice, but that it was not a major factor in the decision to change the policy.

The new policy will also force house officers to be more strict about who attends the events. Food Service will only send enough food for the number of students signed up, and a shortage could result if non-registered students attend the cookout. In the event of a shortage, Food Service would not allow registered students to attend a dining hall.

The new policy may cause cookouts to decline in popularity. "That is certainly not our intent," Kowitz said. "I'd have to guess about fifty percent or under [of house members have been signing up for cookouts] so far this year. It will require more work on the part of social chairpersons. We still encourage them to do it."

First health educator sets agenda

by Greg Hart

Following Director of Health Services James Corkins' stated concern about alcohol abuse, Donna Denelli-Hess, Williams' first health educator, plans to

Donna Denelli-Hess joins Williams as its first health educator. Alcohol abuse and human sexuality are two areas she plans to focus on in her first year. Thomas make alcohol-related issues some of her major priorities this year.

She will be responsible for planning and implementing health education programs aimed at the whole college community. Some of the major areas which Denelli-Hess will focus on from her new position include alcohol and drug abuse, AIDS and human sexuality issues, and nutritional problems.

"We will be dealing with a lot of health issues concerning not only students but faculty and staff as well," Denelli-Hess said.

One of the biggest issues which Denelli-Hess will deal with is alcohol abuse. She said she hopes to sponsor, in conjunction with student groups such as the College Council and Peer Health, a week-long series of activities during the National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week in October. Her alcohol awareness activities will not be limited to that week, however.

"Our efforts won't be confined to particular weeks. We will be stressing a number of health issues year-round," Denelli-Hess said.

Denelli-Hess also plans to attack the drug problem at Williams through education and awareness programs. She said, "I have heard it said that the college isn't doing enough [in regard to substance abuse]. The college's drug policy won't change, but I plan to improve

continued on page 3

Nine months to go...

Seniors left Chapin Hall after the annual fall convocation. The next time they will wear caps and gowns will be the last time (for their undergraduate careers): at Commencement in June. Thomas

Local activist tackles nuclear waste disposal
Page 3

Spike Lee does the right thing in his latest film
Page 6

Men's soccer humiliates Hamilton in season opener
Page 10

Joseph Pechman: economist, lecturer

by Rajesh Swaminathan

Professor Joseph A. Pechman, renowned economist and Barnard Professor of Economics at Williams, passed away on August 19, 1989 at the age of 71 in Washington, D.C. While at Williams, he taught a course in Public Sector Studies and organized a series of public lectures on social policies for the 1990s.

Joseph A. Pechman

One of the nation's foremost tax economists, Pechman was a Senior Fellow in the Economic Studies Program of the prestigious Washington-based Brookings Institution since 1960. He was also Director of the Economic Studies Program and Executive Director of Government Finance Studies at Brookings. He was one of former President Jimmy Carter's closest advisers and a principal contributor to Carter's 1978 tax reform.

According to Charles L. Schultze, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers and current Director of the Economic Studies Program at Brookings, Pechman was "the intellectual father" of the 1986 Tax Reform Act. In keeping with Pechman's principles, the Act allowed for a broad tax base with few exceptions or loopholes. At the time of his death, he was also President of the American Economic Association.

"He was probably the leading figure in the economics of taxation in the U.S. He was the principal architect for the Brookings Program in Economic Studies. [Brookings] had an enormous influence on public policy in the 1960's; Joe was right at the heart of that. He was responsible for making Brookings a prominent institution," Professor Michael McPherson, chairman of the economics department at Williams, said of Pechman.

"He was a remarkably vibrant presence at the department and on campus. He went to dinner with students, he participated in lectures. It's a great loss."

Schools struggle with new aid rules

continued from page 3

ernment has taken enormous losses. This year alone, it will pay banks $1.8 billion to cover bad student loans, or about 37 cents for every dollar Congress appropriated for student aid.

Fast efforts to get more students to repay their loans have helped. On August 10, the U.S. Department of Education, which oversees most federal education programs like Stafford Loans, reported the default rate fell four percent, to 17 percent, from 1987 to 1988.

But the new anti-default rules have a tougher side. They demand that some 1,803 schools that have default rates higher than 20 percent immediately formulate new loan collection programs. Starting in October, 1,040 schools with rates above 30 percent must wait to release loan funds to first-time borrowers until those students have gone to class for 30 days.

Many schools have complained that such measures will discourage poor and lower-middle class students from taking out loans to finance their educations. Beginning in January 1991, schools with default rates above 60 percent and those above 40 percent that don't cut their rates at least 5 points a year, could be booted from the guaranteed student loan program altogether.

Effort can save $44 million. Meanwhile, the Education Dept. figures the new counseling effort can save $44 million if it cuts the default rate by just 1 percent.

Aid officers are willing to help. They complain, however, the government didn't give them enough time to install counseling procedures.

The National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators, a trade group based in Washington, D.C., lobbied for a delay. Under the Higher Education Act, it pointed out, new regulations affecting the 1989-90 school year were supposed to have been published by last December.

Loan counseling, though, is a "big-ticket item," explained Roberta Dunn, the department's deputy assistant secretary for student financial assistance. "The secretary is encouraging everyone to do their best, but we have some sympathy for the schools."

Some aren't even sure counseling will do any good.

"There's no evidence to show that a particular form of counseling is more effective than other forms," said NASFAA director Dallas Martin. "People are either going to pay back loans or they're not," asserted Baylor's Bond. "It might keep a few (from defaulting), but I can't see how it would have a huge effect."

Baylor has a default rate of just 3.6 percent, but Bond takes no credit for the scarcity of default borrowers. "It's nothing particular that we're doing."

6 A.M. to 3 P.M. Daily

27 Spring Street, Williamstown, MA 01267

It's back: College Council sets priorities for 1989-90

by Ellen Drought

The College Council kicked off the new year by discussing several areas of major concern, including the youth of Williamstown, the housing system and the new bookstore.

President Sumind Raghunandan '90 announced that this year the council's major project concerning Williamstown would involve the youth of the community. Interaction will take place primarily with the youth center and with youth athletic leagues. Raghunandan asked council members to get their constituents involved as coaches of the various teams.

Another topic stressed was the housing system. "This year, we're going to take a complete look at the housing process, from summer housing to freshman inclusion to pick swaps," Raghunandan said.

"We'll have open forums so students can tell their housing traumas; we want to hear them all." He added that a housing handbook would be put out as a result of the project.

Other issues the council will address this year include the new multicultural center, the effect of the faculty course load reduction, and any problems with the new bookstore. Raghunandan said he would speak to the head of Albion Books after getting feedback from the students; so far, many students have acknowledged the overall better situation at Albion, but have been disappointed with the availability of textbooks. "We want to prevent the same problems next semester," Raghunandan said.

The council also voted on two new policies regarding elections to the council. Regarding the housing representative category, the council approved the new rule that a student must be living in that house the following year to hold the position. In addition, a new position was created to give the Old Infirmary house a representative.

'We'll have open forums so that students can tell us their housing traumas...'

Bradburd, Spear, Kavanaugh promoted to full professor

Eight have now become full profs this year

Three more faculty members have been elevated to the rank of full professor: Ralph M. Bradburd, economics; Robert D. Kavanaugh, psychology; and Thomas T. Spear, history.

That brings to eight the number of professors who have been made full professors since the beginning of the summer. Bradburd came to Williams in 1976. He specializes in industrial organization and applied microeconomics, and has written extensively on the subject of Medicare reimbursement practices with respect to durable medical equipment.

He received his B.A. from Columbia College in 1970 and his Ph.D. from Columbia University in 1976.

Kavanaugh has also taught at Williams since 1976, and is currently the resident director of the Williams-Oxford Program in Oxford, England. A developmental psychologist, his research exam-

Three more faculty became full professors recently; all are in division two disciplines ines only social development and the acquisition and development of language in young children. He has co-authored a psychology textbook, Pay-chology, now in its third printing. He graduated from Holy Cross College in 1967 and received his M.A. from the University of Windsor, Ontario, Canada in 1970. He also received his Ph.D. from Boston University in 1974.

Spear has taught history at Williams since 1981, and currently serves as chair of the African and Middle Eastern studies program. An expert on African history and culture, he spent the 1987-88 academic year in Tanzania doing field work on agricultural development among the Meru and Arusha peoples. He has written three books as well as many monographs, articles, papers and reviews.

He graduated from Williams in 1962 and received his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin at Madison in 1974.

Compiled from a news office press release

Some tricks they'll never learn.

If animals were responsible for their own birth control, there might not be a need to kill 13.5 million unwanted dogs and cats each year. That's the cost of not having your pet spayed or neutered. Fixed!

Even bringing a litter of puppies or kittens to an animal shelter is no guarantee they'll find a home before room has to be made for more. Having your pet spayed or neutered is the only way to reduce the sad number of ownerless dogs and cats destroyed this year. And it will also increase your pet's chances of living a longer and healthier life. That responsibility is yours alone.

You'll never stop your pets from acting naturally. But if you love them, you'll have them fixed. Talk to your veterinarian. Or contact the MSPCA for a free information packet on birth control for your pet.

MSPCA on the move for animals

Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals
550 North Huntington Ave., Boston, MA 02116 (617) 552-7700 for the Springfield area; call (413) 746-2992 for the other chapters and a free copy of our magazine. Animals & all of us make the difference.

If you can find a Macintosh in this room, we might put one in yours. Free.

In what will surely be the easiest test of your intellect this term, Apple invites you to try winning a free Apple® Macintosh® Plus personal computer merely by finding it in this drawing.

We'll even give you a hint: It's not the table, the lamp, or the chair. Now you're on your own.

To register, look for contest details where Macintosh computers are sold on your campus. Oh, all right, we'll give you a hint for that, too: Look at the bottom of this ad.

But do it really, really fast. Because only one Macintosh is being given away on this campus, and it's going to happen soon.

Soon, as in right away. Pronto. Quick like.

But hey, you can take a hint.

Somebody's going to win a free Macintosh.

Enter September 11th-October 9th
Jesup Hall Lobby

© 1989 Apple Computer, Inc. Apple, the Apple logo and Macintosh are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Illustration © 1989 Matt Groening. One entry per person please. Williams students, faculty, and staff are eligible to win.

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 455-0800

LARGEST BOOK INVENTORY IN STORE HISTORY!!!

MYSTERIES - NEW HARD COVERS - The Old Silent by Martha Grimes - Silent Partners by Jonathon Kellerman... PAPERBACKS - HUGE SELECTION - Black Lizard: IPL - Trevayne by Robert Ludlum - much more... SCIENCE FICTION AND FANTASY - NEW by Raymond Fiest - Prince of the Blood - M.G. Coney - King of the Sceptered Isle - Sherri Tepper - Grass... PAPERBACK CLASSICS - Mists of Avalon - Dragonlance - Zelazney - Silverberg - Douglas Adams - NEW Diane Paxton - White Raven, Carroll and Graf Reprints... GRAPHIC NOVELS - Roxanne - Coro Maltese - Terry and the Pirates... SPORTS - Progress of Seasons - Summer of '49 - Heart of the Order - NON-FICTION - Our PHILOSOPHY and LIT CRIT sections are overflowing with paperbacks from Yale - Cambridge - Oxford - NOW IN STOCK. We have Ulysses: the Corrected Text - Lolita - 100 Years of Solitude - Raymond Carver paperbacks - Norton Critical Editions... CALENDARS - Datebooks - 16 and 12 Month Styles - POSTERS - Wall and Door sizes - AND DON'T MISS - History, Sociology, Poetry, Cookbooks, Cliff Notes... NEW STOCK DAILY!!!

Come in and see us on Spring Street, right next to The Log - Stop in for coffee, light lunch or dessert at The Cafe... Check your S.U. box for our flyer and get 10% off with our coupon - Offer good until September 22 on Calendars, Posters, and Books, including texts and course adoptions...

We offer open charge accounts and take special orders
Visa and Mastercard accepted

COME DOWN AND EXPERIENCE!!!

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinema I, II, III Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8170
Sea of Love	7:00	9:20
Parent Hood	7:00	9:20
Uncle Buck	7:05	9:20
Images Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
Getting It Right	September 20-21 7:00 & 9:00
The Navigator	September 22-26 7:00 & 9:00
North Adams Cinema Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Parent Hood	7:00	9:30
Edie and the Cruisers II	7:00	9:30
Milnerium	7:00	9:30
Hitman	7:00
Lethal Weapon II	7:00	9:30
Uncle Buck	7:00	9:30
Kickboxer	7:00	9:30
Pittsfield Cinema Center Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
The Abyss, Casualties of War, Parent Hood: 6:45 & 9:15. Field of Dreams, Lethal Weapon II, Sea of Love: 7:00 & 9:30. Relentless, Getting It Right, Uncle Buck, When Harry Met Sally, Turner and Hoock: 7:15 & 9:30.
Berkshire Mall Cinema Rte 8, Tannersburg, 499-2558
Sea of Love	1:00	7:00	9:40
Uncle Buck	1:20	7:20	10:00
Parent Hood	1:05	7:05	9:45
Dead Poets' Society	12:50	6:50	9:30
When Harry Met Sally	1:25	7:25	10:05
The Abyss	12:40	6:40	9:35
Lethal Weapon II	1:15	7:15	9:55
Turner and Hoock	12:55	6:55	9:35
Honey, I Shrunk the Kids	12:45	6:45	9:25
Casualties of War	1:10	7:10	9:50
Bronfman Auditorium Good Morning Vietnam Friday & Sunday at 7:00 & 9:00 Subject to change after Thursday

New lecture series tribute to professor

The Williams College Graduate Program in the History of Art and the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute have initiated a lecture series to honor Professor of Art, Emeritus, George Heard Hamilton, a founder of the graduate program and former director of the Clark.

Hamilton is a distinguished scholar of nineteenth and twentieth-century European and American art. He first came to Williams as a Robert Sterling Clark Visiting Professor of Art in 1963-64. He returned in 1966 as professor of art and director of the Clark Art Institute, a position he held for 11 years.

During his early years in Williamstown, Hamilton helped establish the graduate program in art history and served as its first director when it opened in 1972. He also oversaw the construction of an addition to the existing Clark Art Institute, needed to implement the graduate program, and played an important role in assembling a research library for the program.

Hamilton received his bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees from Yale University, and taught art there from 1936 to 1966. During much of this time he was also associate director and curator of modern art at the Yale University Gallery.

Hamilton was Slade Professor of Art at Cambridge University in 1971 to 1972, and was the Samuel H. Kress Professor in Residence at the National Gallery of Art in 1978-1979. He received the Withers Lucas Cross Medal for Distinguished Service to Graduate Education, awarded by the Yale University Graduate School, and the Association of Art Dealers of America award for Distinguished Achievement in Art History.

Williams awarded him an honorary degree in 1977. In 1979 he was elected to the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and in 1973 was named a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts in London.

Hamilton has served as president of the College Art Association, vice president of the ILLI-Stad Museum, and vice chairman of the Hirschhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden in Washington, D.C. He has also been a trustee of the Museum of Modern Art in New York City, and of the Association of Art Museum Directors.

Although he officially retired in 1975, Hamilton has returned to Williams several times as a visiting professor and, in 1980, as acting director of the graduate program he helped establish.

This article was compiled from a News Office press release.

CLARKSBURG BREAD CO.
PRODUCTS BAKED FRESH FROM SCRATCH DAILY
Coffee • Tea • Juice • Soft Drinks
Open Monday - Saturday
8 AM - 6 PM
37 Spring Street, Williamstown, MA
(413) 458-2251

West Package and Variety Store
Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081
Low Every Day Keg Prices
No Monkey Business
O'Keefe Canadian $11.99/keg + deposit
Polar mixers $6.90/keg (all 12) + deposit
and of course much more, including...
Ambassador, Blue Min. Arts, Far Side Greeting cards,
Dozens of soft, furry creatures from Dakin, Applause and North American Bells. Great advice on matters large and small.
Courteous, almost professional service

Movie Review: Lee dares to be different

by P.E. Ponce

In a summer of sequels and cinema silliness, Spike Lee has dared to be different. His disturbing new film, Do The Right Thing, picks up where his previous movies left off.

Lee's Do The Right Thing is a surprise, low-budgeted but three years ago, redefined the black presence on screen by incorporating, for the first time, three-dimensional characters rather than Hollywood stereotypes into a race, adult film. School Daze, Lee's next film, dealt with the problems of blacks assimilating themselves into an oppressively white society.

While Lee was aiming at deep social commentary in the latter film, it left a less than lasting impression. Perhaps the only memorable aspect of School Daze was its soundtrack, which included the infectious hit single "Do It Right." While

Do The Right Thing has an equally great set of background music (particularly, the funk group "Fight the Power") this time, it's not even the bouncy soundtrack that makes it easier to digest.

The film is a meandering slice-of-life story, concerning one very hot day in the heart of Harlem, New York City. Despite this format, Lee manages to keep it from succumbing to formlessness. Even the smaller characters are fleshed out, and three unidentified elderly gentlemen are used as a connecting device in the film. These men are completely believable as they spew out their criticism of what their neighborhood is coming to (with white cops as their oppressors and Koreans as their business competitors). Some of these being racial comments are hilarious, but others serve Lee's darker second purpose—setting up the racial tensions that explode by the movie's end.

The day begins with Mookie (Spike Lee) making his way to work at a local pizzeria. Mookie has a lover and a child, and he supports his fragile family on his low salary as a delivery boy. Mookie is resigned to his lifestyle, even as his friends protest the subtle manifestations of racism in their neighborhood. These include the pizzeria owner's prejudiced against loud soul music and his refusal to put up any pictures of black heroes on his all-white Wall of Fame.

The owner (played by Ray Liotta) is a character that illustrates the most disturbing points of Do The Right Thing. While he is apparently amiable and compassionate, his personal prejudices are just beneath the surface, ready to explode whenever the tensions of racial conflict become too much. And as the day proceeds, these tensions and prejudices are gradually exposed until they climax in a frenzy of racial violence that devastates the entire neighborhood—white, black, Hispanic, and Korean.

In the middle of the movie, the neighborhood patriarch, Mayor, gives Mookie some advice, "Always do the right thing." In an era of token tolerance for minorities and the increasingly vocal expression of old prejudices, this is one of the most difficult rules to follow. Should the black people of this country tolerate racism or actively fight it? And can the seemingly impossible problem of racism ever be solved? Spike Lee doesn't have an answer for us.

Do The Right Thing is a difficult film to understand. But whether you love it or hate it, it will not be easily forgotten. It will leave you asking questions, questions that have gone unanswered for far too long.

President Yo La Tengo: a wildly exciting ride

by Eric Fredericksen

Yo La Tengo -- President Yo La Tengo (Coyote records, dist. by Twin/Tone)

I let me tell you, it's a thousand long writing a Yo La Tengo review. This is a band which defies all the sick generalizations record reviewers slap on little-known bands. Not to say that the critics haven't tried to classify them. Yo La Tengo has been considered a Velvet Underground clone.

This is unfair in the extreme—the work of some cheesehead critic, trying desperately to describe the group, sweating in front of a computer terminal with a few hours until deadline, suddenly slipping his forehead with an every-day epiphany, "Hey, Yo La Tengo's voice is in normal register does sound a lot like Lou Reed's. Three-chord songs, a basic pop sensibility, whiggish guitar feedback in places—Yo La Tengo's even got a girl drummer that sings!" Then, immensely pleased with himself, our imaginary critic proceeds to dismiss the band with a paragraph or two and moves on. I may be letting my imagination get away from me, but my basic point is that any comparison between this band and Lou Reed's admittedly great early combo is superficial and beside the point. Unfortunately this comparison has stayed with plugged the band ever since. Truth be told, there is very little else with which to compare Hoboken's second most famous band. The group simply demands to be judged on its own merits.

President Yo La Tengo is a wildly exciting ride, erratic stylistically but not qualitatively, yet another proof of the transcendence capabilities of guitar/bass/drums lineups and the aforementioned three-chord songs. The band shifts gears constantly, with a self-assurance that allows the listener to place total trust in the band. Example: "Barnaby, Hardly Working," the side one opener.

The song starts out with feedback—a two note drone which repeats throughout the song. The band kicks in, guitar/singer/husband Ira Kaplan playing steady eighth-note chords (three chords, of course), drummer/wife George Hubble lying down an off-balance, push-pull drum part, and bass player Stephan Wiedenhaupt playing one note, in time with the drums.

The elements of the song are simple, skeletal even, but the song is perfect—one of those songs where every note belongs. I listen, entranced by the flow of the song, by the subtle changes which, after the fact, I believe I could have predicted, as if every change was utterly necessitated by the song itself. This is one of the songs which promote belief in the muses.

Completely won over by this opener, I find myself rushing fully in the fact that this band will not let me down. They don't. This short EP (just over 30 minutes) covers a lot of ground—from the beautifully lecherous "Drug Test" (a duet between Ira and Georgia), a band covers Antietam and Bob Dylan, and even remakes one of their own songs from their earlier album Ride The Tiger not once, but twice.

This song is called "The Evil That Men Do" and Yo La Tengo's treatment of this song is demonstrative of the spirit and confidence of the band, as well as their sheer diversity. "Craig's Version," on side one, exploits the surf rock tendencies of the original with a two-and-a-half minute Ventures send-up. "Pablo's Version," on side two, transforms the song into a ten minute exercise which demonstrates, in the words of their press release, "Ira's occasional inability to keep his guitar from feedback during concerts".

The second version was recorded live at CBGB's, and, pop-tendencies on the rest of the album aside, Kaplan gives the Steve Albini's of the world a serious kick in the teeth on this cut.

Despite all the changes of pace, style, and Kaplan's singing voice (from Reel-like monotone to manic bellowing to a low Lloyd Cole croon) the album holds together as one piece of work—a testimony to the integrity of the Yo La Tengo. Their name translates as "I have it" and is completely accurate. This band makes not one misstep, pulling off every song with complete grace. This record does everything but levitate.

by Steve Scoville

Sea Minos

Christian songwriter to perform at Williams

On Thursday, Ken Medema, an internationally acclaimed Christian pianist, vocalist, and songwriter, will return to Williams, where he gave a well-received concert last year.

Medema describes his music as "the classically tinged jazz and rock style." Although his songs are primarily concerned with the gospel, his most recent work has focused on a range of social issues.

"I'm trying to get church people to listen to the gospel they've been hearing their entire lives and see if they can hear something there that they've never heard before," Medema said in an October 1989 interview in Sojourners.

Medema began his career as a music therapist in a psychiatric hospital, where he started writing songs for his patients. One of Medema's current social concerns involves a shelter program for Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugees. He recently worked on an album with other artists for Initiative for Humanity and has performed benefits for Bread for the World and for World Concern.

The concert is sponsored by the Williams Christian Fellowship, the Student Activities Council, the chaplain's office, and the music department.

This article was compiled from a News Office press release.

ARTS IN VIEW

September 19 At 8:00 p.m., Bernice Johnson Reagon will perform "Songs of Struggle," in Brooks-Rogers.

September 20 At 8:00 p.m., "Vernacular Culture and African-American Literature," a reading and commentary by Michael Harper with an introduction by Professor of English D. L. Smith will be in Room 231, Lawrence Hall.

September 21 At 4:00 p.m., auditions for the Williams String Orchestra will be held in the Instrumental Rehearsal Hall, Bernhard Music Center.

At 7:30 p.m., Austin Pendleton, 1989 artistic director of the Williamstown Theatre Festival, will give a lecture, "On Acting Hamlet," on Mainstage, Adams Memorial Theatre.

At 8:00 p.m., a concert with Ken Medema, "A Challenge for a World of Justice and Peace," will be in Brooks-Rogers.

At 8:00 p.m., the first of two George Heard Hamilton Lectures, "Art in the Late Eighteenth Century: David versus Goya," will be given by Robert Rosenblum in the Clark.

September 22 At 4:00 p.m., auditions for the Williams String Orchestra will be in the Instrumental Rehearsal Hall.

At 8:00 p.m., the second of the George Heard Hamilton Lectures, "Art in the Late Twentieth Century: The Fall and Rise of Historicism," will be given by Robert Rosenblum in the Clark.

September 23 At 2:00 p.m., a symposium in connection with the "Virtue Rewarded" exhibition will take place at the Clark, followed by a reception at 5:00 p.m.

At 8:00 p.m., the Max Roach Jazz Quartet will perform in Chapin Hall. An introductory lecture and post-concert discussion will be led by Professor of Music Ernest Brown.

September 24 At 3:00 p.m., Marcia Lane will present "A Victorian Entertainment," a combination of stories and music from the Victorian period, in conjunction with the "Virtue Rewarded" exhibition at the Clark.

YOUTH THEATRE DIRECTOR
Rehearsals Mon & Wed afternoons, Sat. mornings,
Oct-Nov. Performances early Dec.
Salary $400. Call Starlight Stage 458-4246

Women's Soccer team seeks first win

by Kevin Greenberg

The Williams women's soccer team started the season with a pair of 1-0 losses to North Adams State and the State University of New York at Albany (SUNYA) last week.

Williams traveled to North Adams State last Wednesday. The team felt that they outplayed the Mohawks, but 10 minutes into the second half a North Adams striker scored on a breakaway.

"Their topscorer came through and we didn't pick her up. We missed her," co-captain Susan Piper '90 said.

The Ephs suffered another defensive lapse late in the game against SUNYA on Saturday. At 21:40 of the second half, an Albany corner kick bounced in front of the net. The ball careened around in the goalmouth momentarily before an Albany player scored.

The defense has otherwise been superb, according to Coach Lisa Melendy.

The Ephs held SUNYA to just three shots and only allowed nine to North Adams.

Offense sputters

Williams, however, has been taking plenty of shots, cranking out 21 against Albany and 13 against the Mohawks.

"We outplayed them but we just didn't get the last punch we needed. It's just that finishing punch that we're missing," Piper said.

"We're definitely not fine-tuned [in terms of shooting]," Melendy concurred. "The shots were a little high, a little wide, and just off of the net. They were not all great shots."

The coach says she is not sure who will step forward to fill the offensive gap left by the departure of last season's top two scorers, striker Lori Schach '89 and midfielder Lala Grandison '91, who is spending a year in Australia.

Co-captain Jeanette Owen '90 says she expects a large part of the burden to fall on two younger players, sophomore striker Liz Nasser and freshman midfielder Sharon Glick.

"Liz Nasser scored a lot of our goals last year and will probably be a big scoring leader," and Sharon [Glick] will probably score most of our goals."

The Williams defense is also relying on freshmen. Fullback Linda Allen '93 is replacing injured player Brienne Cully '91 and freshman goalkeeper Sara Trewoy and Alexandra Novitski will anchor a position that was relatively weak last season.

"We didn't really have a keeper last year," midfielder Lynn Brenner '90 said. "We talked somebody from a different sport into playing goalie."

Post-season possibilities

Trewoy will be starting for a team that will have to be almost perfect the rest of the way to make the playoffs. Because of a revised playoff format, nine

Cyclists travel to Sunapee

by Juan Alonzo

Members of the Williams College cycling team traveled to Sunapee, New Hampshire on Saturday for the Mount Sunapee Road Race. Cloudy skies and temperatures in the sixties, ideal cycling conditions, made for a competitive and exciting race.

While all the men in purple-and-yellow jerseys finished their respective races competitively, Seaman and DeGarmo turned in especially strong performances.

Seaman finished 20th in a field of about 50 while DeGarmo climbed to 12th in a field of around 70.

"It wasn't a great race for me because there were no long, steady, climbs. It wasn't bad, but it wasn't an ideal course," commented DeGarmo, known for his superiority in tackling hills.

"I felt strong and had a couple of good breakaways," he added. "But I couldn't really get people to work together to get ahead. Still, I was pleased that I was able to hold the breakaways."

"In the final hill, I felt like I was dying. I slid back a little and realized I was in the

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS!!!

Our office is conveniently located at the end of Spring St. across from the Gulf Station

We are open Monday-Friday 9 to 5.
Thursday until 8
Saturday 9 to 12 pm

We guarantee THE LOWEST AIRFARES, subject to availability, anywhere.

We sell Amtrak, make hotel reservations, and help you with all your travel needs!

THERE IS NO CHARGE FOR OUR SERVICES

Call us and find out about our FREE WEEK IN ST MAARTEN, and FREE T SHIRT!!!

We're the exclusive AMERICAN EXPRESS TRAVEL REPRESENTATIVE for the area.

We sell traveler cheques in US and foreign currency, take passport pictures and wire money worldwide.

FOR ONE STOP TRAVEL CALL 458-5786

TRAVEL STORE, INC.
109 SPRING STREET • WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267 • (413) 458-5786

Spikers victorious over Trinity, Clark

by Rhonda Goodman

The Williams women's volleyball team opened their 1989 campaign with victories over Trinity (15-6, 15-11) and Clark (15-6, 15-6) despite the fact that two starters didn't play because of injuries.

Even though only three of the starting line-up played together last year, Coach Nancy Roberts said that her team was "repeating ducks for the other teams," she said.

Johnson said that the Ephs confirmed yesterday that no team will beat them easily. "I think we proved we'll be a hard team to beat, no matter what."

Maybe that attitude will also help them reach the team goal of hosting NIAC's, an honor granted the top-seeded team at the end of the regular season. Roberts said she would also like to see the team reach the East Coast Athletic Conference Tournament for the first time. Despite the team's optimism, however, Roberts remained cautious, maintaining that it's too early to say whether the team can achieve these goals.

"Tonight at Amherst, the Ephwomen's opponents will be Smith, a team who beat them last season, and the Lady Jeffs, who they hope to beat again."

The team is starting the season as the defending NIAC Champions. Roberts said that although the team has a lot of confidence, repeating last year's feat will be hard for the Ephwomen to do.

"Repeating will be harder because we're sitting ducks for the other teams," she said.

Johnson said that the Ephs confirmed yesterday that no team will beat them easily. "I think we proved we'll be a hard team to beat, no matter what."

Maybe that attitude will also help them reach the team goal of hosting NIAC's, an honor granted the top-seeded team at the end of the regular season. Roberts said she would also like to see the team reach the East Coast Athletic Conference Tournament for the first time. Despite the team's optimism, however, Roberts remained cautious, maintaining that it's too early to say whether the team can achieve these goals.

"Tonight at Amherst, the Ephwomen's opponents will be Smith, a team who beat them last season, and the Lady Jeffs, who they hope to beat again."

MAIN EVENT

RESTAURANT • BANQUETS • CATERING
ROUTE 2 WILLIAMSTOWN
FOR RESERVATIONS CALL 458-4208

COME WATCH THE GAME AT THE MAIN EVENT.

WHATEVER YOUR INTERESTS ARE, COME ENJOY THE GAME WITH US. WE HAVE FIVE TELEVISIONS INCLUDING A LARGE SCREEN TV.

CONTESTS, PRIZES, DRINK SPECIALS, SPECIAL MENU
WE HAVE IT ALL
NEED A MEETING PLACE? WE CAN HELP YOU OUT.
CALL 458-4208 FOR INFORMATION.

WALL - NUTS FRAME & ART inc.
Framing
Art Supplies
Drafting Supplies

WALL - NUTS FRAME & ART inc.
Custom Framing & Fine Art
Conveniently located in Caldwell Shopping Center,
228 Main St., Williamstown, Mass.
Open Mon. - Fri. 10-5 Sat. 10-2
(413) 458-4264

Toonerville Trolley Records
JAZZ cassette sale

The largest assortment of good jazz on cassette at $3.99 & 4.99. Mark Miles, Duke Armstrong, Walter, Cotton, Bird, Basie, Mingus, Billie Holiday, Sonny Rollins, and more!

31 Water Street 458-5229

BACK TO SCHOOL?
RUM DOODLE RUCKSACK

- Two front pockets secured with buckles.
- Heel loop.
- Padded adjustable shoulder straps.
- Top loading with adjustable drawstring closure.

DARWIN FIELD BAG

- Inside zipper pocket doubles as organizer divider.
- Inside key clip.
- Outside snap closure pocket.
- 10 MODELS IN STOCK

PACK TO SCHOOL!

the Mountain Goat
Water Street, Williamstown
Extended Hours Open 7 Days 458-8415

SPIRIT SHOP
OF WILLIAMSTOWN

FREE DELIVERY
"YOUR PARTY STARTS HERE"
MEGABUCKS
REDEMPTION CENTER

ONE OF THE LARGEST BEER WINE LIQUOR RETAILERS STOP BY AND SEE OUR MANY IN-STORE CASE SPECIALS
OPEN MON THRU SAT 9AM-11PM
458-3704
280 COLE AV WILLIAMSTOWN
We also offer package and shipping services via UPS

the Mountain Goat
Water Street, Williamstown
Extended Hours Open 7 Days 458-8415

How're you going to do it?

PS/2 it!

Close a deal on an IBM PS/2 before the semester closes in on you.

Before you find yourself in deep water this semester, get an IBM Personal System/2.® Choose from five different packages of hardware and software—all at special low student prices. Each system comes with easy-to-use software loaded and ready to go! What's more, when you buy your PS/2,® you can get PRODIGY,® the shopping, information and entertainment computer service, at less than half the retail price. And for a limited time, you can get special savings on your choice of three IBM Proprinter™ models.* Don't miss the boat. Come in today.

*This offer is limited to qualified students, faculty and staff who order an IBM PS/2 Model 8525-001, 8530-E21, 8550-031, 8555-061 or 8570-E61 on or before October 31, 1989. Orders are subject to availability. IBM may withdraw the promotion at any time without written notice.

IBM, Personal System/2 and PS/2 are registered trademarks, and Proprinter is a trademark, of International Business Machines Corporation. PRODIGY is a registered trademark of Prodigy Services Company, a partnership of IBM and Sears. © IBM Corp. 1989

Ephmen rugby players Dave Outcalt '90 and Greg Norton '86 race towards the ball during the annual autumn tournament, held here last weekend. The team hosts UVM at Cole Field next Saturday. (J. Jackson)

Both X-country teams bury opponents

by Heather M. Smith

Last Saturday's meets in Middlebury marked the beginning of a potentially tremendous season for both the men's and women's cross-country teams. The men's team outpaced the Middlebury Panthers to win the meet 20 to 41 (low score wins). The women's team likewise conquered their opponents, Middlebury and Bates, winning with 23 points. Middlebury and Bates piled up 57 and 55 points respectively.

At Middlebury, Williams' Dylan Cooper '91 led his team, placing first in 29:13. He was followed closely by Brian Coan '92, captain Dale Johnson '90, Steve Lane '93, and Luke Shullenbeyer '93. Even with two of their top runners not competing Saturday, Williams brought eight competitors across the finish line before Middlebury's third man. Such depth could prove to be a cutting edge this season.

The women's team Saturday also turned in exciting performances. Running as a pack during the beginning of the race, the Williams team demonstrated that their ability to run "smarter" has not dulled over the summer. Anne Platt '91, finishing second in 19:57, was the first Williams runner to cross the line. Andrea Cady '91 followed soon after in third, with Molly Martin '91 in fourth, Lindsey Hall '93 in fifth, and Ann Dannhauser '90 in ninth.

Looking ahead
The men's team this year is supported by a strong returning team. Losing only one of their top seven runners to graduation, last year's top five varsity runners have returned. Veteran competitors this year include Johnson, Cooper (who qualified last year for Nationals), junior Mark Heine, and sophomores Coan and Bill McKinley. The men's team placed third in the 1988 NCAA Championships. That performance gave them their highest New England finish ever, but this year an already strong men's team could be made even stronger by incoming freshman.

During the 1988 season, the women's team won every meet except an early season loss to Bates. This year, the 1988 New England Champions could be even more dominating. The team this year, the largest in Williams history, recently received the top ranking in a preseason list that ranked New England teams on the basis of last year's results and the expected composition of the returning team. "I think we have the strongest returning team in New England," Coach Larry Bell said, concurring with the list's ranking.

Last year the women's team lost only two of their varsity squad to graduation. Returning competitors this year include Platt, a 1988 cross country All-American, and Dannhauser, 1500 National Champion and All-American. Also, sophomores Martin, who only narrowly missed qualifying for Nationals last year, and Cady, who consistently placed highly for the Ephs in 1988, return to the team. Cherie Macauley '93, Gwen Nagy '92, Heidi Beebe '91, and captain Stacy Smith '90 will contribute additional strength and experience to the squad. With the preseason ranking now published, Williams no longer enjoys the luxury of being a dark horse.

"The key is to keep the fun in it and focus on the end of the season," Bell said.

An early season showdown
Next Saturday, an estimated 20 men's teams and 22 women's teams will arrive at Mount Hope for the Williams Invitational. Top-ranked New England teams will go head to head in the new, highly challenging Mount Hope course. The invitational will offer Williams a preview of this season's competition and an opportunity to rank itself among that competition.

WRFC opens with Old Farts Weekend

by Chris Blackburn

The Williams Rugby Football Club opened its 31st year last weekend in traditional style, as Old Farts Weekend united the Club with its past.

On the pitch, this year's A-side faced a stellar side from recent years in Saturday's first half. The young scrum stood up well against the likes of Greg Norton '86 at second row and Gene "Honky VIII" Mazzaro '87 at flanker, but it was the running, quick passing, and solid tactical kicking of the A-side centers Jim Kaufman '92 and Steve Linn '90 that kept things tight.

An early try by Norton off a breakthrough by Steve Patterson '87 was answered by a textbook overload by the white loose forwards that resulted in a try for Matt "Engine" Conlin '91; the White Dogs tied the score 6-6. Near the end of the half, however, Williams scrum half S.B. Hopkins, obviously thinking of the alumni's recent pecuniary and intellectual contributions to the Club, donated a try to Kurt Oeler '88. The Old Farts won the first half, 10-6.

Dazzled but wiser

On to the pitch came the C-side, but waves of fresh talent did not daunt the crafty but sore veterans. Just as before, good and tight rugby was played, but the indomitable Hogan once again scored the lone try. Steve LeNeuhock '93 who suffered a knee injury while making a brilliant saving tackle on ex-line captain Mark Tompkins '86 to prevent a try.

In the fourth half it was time for school, as the youth corps of the WRFC had their first real taste of play against rugby past. Dazzled but somewhat wiser, the entire WRFC now faces its first Division I test of the fall, UVM at Cole Field on Saturday.

W. tennis drops to 1-1

by Dan Silverman

Williams women's tennis suffered a 6-3 defeat Saturday at the hands of the Tufts Jumbos. The match, bringing together two of last year's top New England squads, was decided when Tufts' depth proved to be more than the young Williams squad could manage.

The Ephs were, however, playing short-handed. The Williams team missed the play of his year's number two singles player Penny Foss '93 and last year's number two singles and number one doubles player Hillary Cairns '92. Foss was out because of an illness and Cairns has taken this season off.

Williams top seeds tough
Williams was, regardless, tough at the top. Number one singles was won by Eph captain Amy Davidson '90 who defeated Tufts' Dina Esterowitz '91 in straight sets (6-1, 6-2). Davidson, a member of the final four at last year's New England Championships, controlled the match from its beginning. Esterowitz's strong backhand was not nearly enough to combat the consistently deep groundstrokes of cagey vet Davidson.

In number two singles Ephwoman Katherine Stearns '91 was too tough for the powerful Tufts lefty Kris Schraffa and tamed the Jumbo in straight sets (6-4, 7-6). The match featured Schraffa's booming serve and ground strokes and Stearns' amazing consistency and footwork.

The second set tested Schraffa's grit; she said her goal for the day was "to beat the [expletive deleted] out of Williams." After losing a break to make the score 5-"Positive vibrations"

Eph coach Gail Ramsey is confident, however, that this loss will be merely a minor setback. In pummeling North Adams State '90 last Tuesday, Ramsey said Williams "completely dominated" and showed a great deal of potential. She says she has noticed "a lot of positive vibes from everyone," and sees doubles play as the only question mark for this year's squad.

Coach Ramsey's feelings were reiterated by Davidson, who thinks this year's team will be even better than last year's group, which ended up fourth in New England.

Freshman phenomenon Foss seems to have also felt the "positive vibrations," saying, "I'm sure we're going to do well. I can just tell."

Everyone on the squad seems to agree that there are bigger and better things to come from Williams women's tennis beginning this Sunday against Connecticut College.

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

"Bless it, Agnisi! ... If you're going to put your cold feet on me, you could at least dry them first!"

"I think we should let this flock pass on by."

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Weekly Tabloid Editor's Dreams

BY BERT H. KRUSE/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Malachuk

- | | | | |
|---------------------------------|-------------------------------------|-------------------------------|---------------------------------|
| ACROSS | 34 Stopped at a motel | 04 "Bus Stop" playwright | 94 Fall on Broadway |
| 1 "Ike" button | 30 Beat pounder | 05 Egalist ties his knot | 96 Crosstie |
| 6 A son of Jacob | 37 What a Mexican whistles | 08 Goddess of victory | 97 Judicial attire |
| 10 Make sense | 39 Cries of joy | 09 Devil | 98 Kind of song |
| 15 Flutters the sheets | 40 Concorde bows to big birds! | 100 Actress's love | 99 Pants maker |
| 16 Luster | 42 Switches | 72 Intensifying agent | 103 Budget concern |
| 17 Publication makeup | 44 Roh — Woo, President of S. Korea | 74 Dolce — niente | 104 Nigerian city |
| 19 Ceremonies | 45 God, to Verdi | 75 Twin City suburb | 105 "bleu!" |
| 20 Precocious Ivy Leaguer! | 46 Certain goals | 77 Refrain start | 107 Cheryl Tiegs, e.g. — time |
| 23 Alt. | 48 U.S. Open tennis champ: 1986 | 79 Moved like a chickadee | 108 (never) |
| 24 Connery and Penn | 52 Rimsky-Korsakov's "Le — d'Or" | 80 Karate play | 109 Vehicle made of bulletproof |
| 26 New Orleans' hoopla word | 54 Command at sea | 82 Some Bx trains | 113 Inlet in SE Conn. |
| 27 Buttons, for one | 55 — Mahal | 84 "Blame It on —," 1984 film | 115 Valla figure |
| 28 Writer Earl — Biggers | 58 Snowman | 85 Like deciduous trees | 117 Steps for pairs |
| 29 Like many valuable paintings | 60 Armor plate on the thighs | 87 Snowman | 118 Type of dancer |
| 31 Alias | 62 Rollo's men | 89 Globetrotters' home | 120 Aromatic compound |
| 32 Béte — | | | |
| DOWN | 13 U.S. draft program | 35 Understandings | 58 Dust-up |
| 1 Hospital person | 14 New England football pro | 36 Cato's "Got!" | 59 Ancient Thracians |
| 2 Paris art palace lifted! | 15 Wild pink; catchfly | 39 Sharpen | 01 Turkish inn |
| 3 "Rosemary's Baby" author | 16 Like some Gospels | 41 In Hades | 03 Gigantic citrus produced! |
| 4 Five-time Horse of the Year | 18 Insignificant ones | 42 Comedy title | 06 Variety of neck |
| 5 Heart | 19 Excavate again | 43 Variety of neck | 07 Partner of hopes |
| 6 — apo | 21 Hogarth's progress maker | 44 In Yorkshire way | 70 Western capital |
| 7 Moray, e.g. | 22 Keats' feast | 45 Blake's burns | 73 Nosy one |
| 8 Kind of sign | 25 — would sink a navy | 51 Polished, in a way | 76 Consider properly |
| 9 Director — Bergman | 26 — Shik | 52 One of five, for short | 80 Mazuma |
| 10 Valuable Nigerian tree | 28 Point — | 53 Threelined | 81 Sports site |
| 11 U.S. publisher | 29 TV series | 54 Bid's market companion | 83 Put up with |
| 12 Great Lake being emptied! | 33 Endings for ball and harp | 57 Scott | 85 Actress famed judge |

- | | | | |
|-------------------------|----------------------|------------------|---------------|
| 86 Composer | 93 Tore | 110 Sidekick | him |
| 88 Wane | 94 Arrow part | 111 Greek letter | 114 Rock star |
| 89 Cuban province | 95 Foo yong, for one | 112 Harding beat | Adam — |
| 90 One fostering | 99 Checks over | 101 Native of | |
| 91 Michael Chang's game | 102 Inventor | 103 Musical | |
| 92 Renaissance sword | 106 Where Brunel is | | |

CROSSWORD PUZZLE
ANSWER ON PAGE 7

Football looks to match '88 success

by Kerr Houston

While I lived to myself, while a light breeze carried me over the ocean, My little boat of existence glided through peaceful waters.

-- from Ovid's Tristia, Book III, 4:15

It takes a good car, perhaps, but if you listen closely you just might be able to hear some of the sounds of the approaching 1989 football season. Gradually, the rustle of pinebrushes on the grass of Weston Field, the metallic click of clashing helmets and pads, and the grunts of linemen in the weight room are growing louder, and they will reach a climax this Saturday when the Ephs kick off their 109th campaign with a trip to Hamilton.

Underdogs no more

The Ephs might be looking backward as well as forward, though, as they enter the contest fresh off a 6-1-1 season that included five victories and four consecutive shutouts. Due to this success, Coach Dick Farley has adopted a wary outlook, noting that "we sneaked up on some people last year and we are not going to be able to do that this year. There's no such thing as an upset anymore. We know that other teams are going to be gunning for us and we'd better be ready to play a good football game every Saturday."

With fourteen starters from last year's squad returning, the Ephs appear ready to do just that. Although quarterback Scott Kennedy received job offers this fall instead of a playbook, Chris Hevesy '91 and Dan Dwyer '92 seem ready to inherit Kennedy's position in the huddle. Neither has seen varsity action at Williams, but Farley appears satisfied, commenting that "we're not looking for a quarterback to carry the team... We're talented and experienced at other positions, so we just need our quarterback to execute and make good decisions."

Notes about the O's...

The Ephs will line up in an I-formation once again this year. The backfield should be solid as Farley plans to platoon Neal Chesley '90 and Jerry Procanik '92 in the tailback slot. Lars Hem '90 will see time at fullback.

The offensive line looks strong, as is anchored by All-NECAC tackle Andy Allen, a junior who has started in each of his two years. Although captain and former tackle Brian Stevens '90 finds himself on the other side of the ball this year as a defensive tackle, Scott Ryne '90 will return as center and Matt Fehr '91 and Jim Roy '91 bring experience to the guard positions. The Eph receiving game should be strong once this year, as Chris Towle '90 and Matt Moynahan '92 return at tight end, and Scott Shean '91, last year's leading receiver with 16 catches for 336 yards, and Todd Streiter '90 bring experience to the wing slots.

...and the X's

When the Ephs find themselves on defense, they will be led by junior defensive end Ted Rogers, who registered a team-best 15 sacks last year and contributed 71 tackles, and honorable mention All-America defensive back Rich Williams '90. Ken Dorian '91 will don the cleats of the other defensive end, while Dan Newhall '91 and captain Stevens, who started his career in purple on defense, bring experience to the tackle positions. Finally, Mike Abbruzzese '91 should complete the line as noseguard, although classmate Cliff Wright, coming off consecutive broken ankles, has issued warning that he may see playing time.

In the defensive backfield, Williams and Mike Hyde '91 are certainties, although Farley, unsure of his other two backs, may do some experimenting. Bodhi Amos '92 and Bob Nicholson '90 appear to have the edge in the two open deep back positions.

Junior Bill Crowley will juggle his responsibilities as both placekicker and punter, while the kick-off specialist is as yet undetermined.

A ship ready to sail

Thus, the squad appears geared up and ready to put their five-game winning streak on the line. Farley sees the first few games as a good test for his disciples, noting that "we open with three very tough games against teams that we were 1-1-1 with a year ago. We'll have some headaches after the first three weeks, but we'll know where we stand in 1989."

—compiled with the help of the Football Prospectus

Williams rugbys Cathy Paper '89, Kristin Moomow '90, Sue Pitcher '90, Wendy Lipp '90, Christy Johnson '92, and Amanda Gallagher '90 struggle with each other in last weekend's alumni tournament. (J. Jackson)

Bagges shut out WWRFC by 14-0

by Kristin Moomow

This weekend the WWRFC opened its season with a home match against the alumnae. Twenty former women's rugby players, affectionately called Used Bagges, returned to the Purple Valley to attend the annual game. The Bagges won by a score of 14-0.

Steph "Evil Otto" Jacon '87 was in rare form, putting in vicious tackles and long runs

The A-side held the Bagges scoreless, a difficult task in the face of legendary figures. Steph "Evil Otto" Jacon '87 was in rare form, putting in vicious tackles and long runs. The Bagges were unable to score, however, as junior fullback Katie Carr booted the ball out of the danger zone for the Williams team. Liz Martin '90 made a dazzling run for the A-side, but the Williams team was unable to capitalize on this run due to tenacious defense from fullback Mary Petersen '87.

The B-side entered the game for the second half. After their warm-up against the A-side, the Bagges were ready for action. Jacon opened the scoring for the alums. Ann Marie Plantey '87 followed suit shortly afterwards by touching down a loose ball in the try zone. Petersen converted the try, bringing the score to 10-0. Jean Janson '88 ran the ball down the field and dished it off to former housemate Sharon Burke '88 for the final try of the game.

The C-side line paired with an A/B scrum was also able to hold the Bagges. Particularly notable were the novice front line combination of Nickie Bouvier '92 and Margaret Wang '93. Next week the WWRFC will take on the St. Paul girls of UNH at home.

Taking time to remember

About 50 people turned out on Saturday to witness the dedication of the new Williams crew tank, named after Katherine "Kippy" Liddle '82. It is the first Williams athletic facility to be named after an alumna. Liddle, whose parents made the journey from Salt Lake City, Utah to attend Saturday's ceremony, rowed while at Williams and then coached at the Brooks School in New York, where she died in a tragic accident on the Schuylkill River Falls. President Francis Oakley spoke at the dedication and women's crew coach Chris Cruz described the ceremony as "a very good way to remember a very special person."

Men's soccer demolishes Hamilton

by Jeff Merritt

The goals came almost as frequently as the raindrops at Cole Field on Saturday, as the Williams men's soccer team, led by Coach Michael Russo, posted a convincing 5-0 victory over Hamilton. The Ephs combined a balanced offensive attack with solid defense in winning their season opener.

Williams controlled the offensive flow for much of the game, beating the Hamilton squad to most of the loose balls and passing very smoothly. Doug Brooks '90 began the onslaught about midway through the first half with an assist from Ambi Stern '90. Brooks drilled a hard shot into the lower corner of the net to give the Ephs an early lead.

With under five minutes left in the half, Robert Lake '91 added to the lead, taking a pass off the foot of Sam Melvoin '90 and netting it from in close.

"With the loss of Mike Masters, we have to be looking for a more balanced scoring attack, and it really worked out well."

Behind a veteran defense anchored by senior captain Daniel Calichman, goalkeeper Charles Goldfarb '92 was called upon to make just four saves in the first half. He was in serious trouble on only one occasion. Soon after the first Williams goal, Goldfarb misplayed a ball at the side of his net. He was then tested twice in rapid succession and came up with two strong saves.

Strong second half

The Eph booters continued their domination of the game in the second half, and looked stronger and more confident in doing so. After a good Hamilton scoring chance went wide in the first minute, the Ephs silenced the Hamilton attack for the rest of the game and set up many chances of their own.

With six minutes gone in the half, Lake took a pass in front of the net from topjun Hult '92, but his soft shot was turned away by the Hamilton goalkeeper. Stern had a great opportunity from in close just nine minutes later, but he could not put it in either.

Just after Stern's attempt, though, senior defender Robert Swann scored the first goal of his Williams soccer career to make the score 3-0. The play was set up by Calichman, who blasted a shot from outside which the Hamilton keeper knocked down but could not control. Swann pounced on the rebound and quickly put it away.

Stephen Bailey '91 gave the Ephs a four-goal lead about midway through the half after a corner kick off the foot of Brooks. The Hamilton defense had trouble clearing the ball and Bailey capitalized on this opportunity, knocking it in from directly in front.

Stern drove a shot off the post just minutes later, and then with about nine minutes left in the game, completed the scoring with an assist from Melvoin. The goal came against the backup Hamilton goalkeeper, who had entered the game just minutes earlier to replace the beleaguered Hamilton starter.

Men's golf takes 4th at tourney

by Augusto Torres

The men's golf team took a respectable fourth last weekend in the Williams Invitational Golf Tournament, held at the Taconic Golf Course. The very competitive field included Division I golf powerhouse the University of Maine and the tough Division III Salem State squad.

The University of Maine took the two-day tourney with the low combined score of 608.

Freshman John McCormick lived up to high expectations by leading the team with a score of 154 for 36 holes. Coach Richard Pohle was not surprised.

"John is very capable. I'm glad he responded to the pressure of the mystique of his first college tournament," he commented. McCormick himself simply commented on his performance, "I made the putts I had to make."

Although the team fulfilled its expectations of placing within the top four, Coach Pohle believes the team can do better.

"The biggest thing we have to learn as a team is the game of golf isn't just a game played for four hours on the course," he commented. "You must prepare physically and mentally in the proper way, and not just show up." The team's next tourney is the Duke

"With the loss of Mike Masters [who scored 19 goals last season] we have to be looking for a more balanced scoring attack, and it really worked out well today," he said.

Indeed, five different Ephs scored in the game, and the team was playing without one of its main offensive cogs, Laurin Laderoute '92, who is resting a sprained ankle and should be ready for Saturday's home game against Middlebury.

"We just have to play relaxed, confident soccer and we'll be fine," Lake commented when asked about the team's chances for the season ahead. If the team continues to get scoring from so many different sources, it will no doubt be another successful men's soccer season at Williams.

Carter Brothers '90 chips a shot in last weekend's Williams Invitational. The Ephs placed fourth in a field that included Division I University of Maine. (K. Thomas)

Nelson Invitational, to be held this Saturday at Middlebury. With a capable performance under its belt, the team expects another fine showing.

When the Dust Settles

by Marlan Naficy

The publicity is impressive for an Eph team: articles run in The New York Times, The Financial Times (London, UK), The Boston Globe, The Baltimore Sun, The San Diego Times, and other newspapers. By now, everybody in the Williams community knows that the Ephs' varsity crew team defeated Harvard this summer at the Henley Royal Regatta in Henley, England. But what really went on behind the scenes?

The Ephs arrived in England on June 14, and according to one team member, did the following every day while waiting for the Henley to begin: "got up, rowed, ate lunch, napped, rowed, ate dinner, pubbed."

The Henley began on June 28. Those who actually raced were the men's varsity eight: Seth Burns '89, Mark Cullen '90, Andy Hoddick '89, Kate Iverson '90 (coxswain), David Katz '89, John Kennel '91, Jeff Kip '89, Michael Mader '90, and Todd Owens '90.

Fiercely individualistic, according to Owens, the varsity eight members didn't really row well together but pulled off good performances due to their collective strength. This strength gave them easy victories on June 28 against Nottingham University (UK) and on June 29 against Waseda University (Japan).

With Williams and Harvard lining the banks of the Thames, the two schools squared off on the afternoon of June 30. Harvard, Owens said, was very cocky coming to the line: "They rowed up to the line and said to us, 'So, which one of you guys is going to break first?'"

What happened next, of course, is known. Williams' advantage of 19 pounds per man over Harvard made them lower in the water and thus more aerodynamic against the strong headwind present during the race. The Ephs, in a boat aptly named The Dark Horse, took the lead and never gave it up. They ended up beating the Crimson by 3/4 of a boat length, a hard-fought race.

"Before we left for the trip, we were thinking about what was the best thing that could happen, and we said that it would be to race Harvard," Owens said. The Ephs obviously got that wish -- and much more.

Bagpiper tours moors behind Greylock

by Dan Silverman

When a cool mist had settled down over the moor and the Hound of the Baskervilles was heard howling in the distance, the soulful cries of a bagpipe were carried by a crisp fall wind to the ears of the student folk. But this wasn't Barney and that wasn't Olaf blowing mournfully into his pipes. This was the swamp behind Gladden House and that was John Adams '92.

Adams has been heard several times this fall practicing his bagpipe outside the Greylock quad, sharing time with the Springsteen and Pink Floyd blasted from quadrophonic speakers in the dorms.

The enormous volume of the bagpipes and resulting complaints from family and roommates have forced Adams to practice outside. "If it's one thing, it's an outdoor instrument," Adams said.

Adams began playing the bagpipes in fifth grade when his parents strongly suggested he take up an instrument. "I had to play something and I didn't think they'd be able to find a bagpipe teacher in Des Moines," he said.

Family tradition

Family tradition also played a significant part in Adams' decision to take up the bagpipe. His father, uncle, several cousins and, most importantly, his Irish-born grandfather all play the pipes. The satisfaction Adams gets while playing the bagpipes with his grandfather is one important reason he has stuck with what is generally considered a very difficult instrument.

Adams gave other reasons for his fascination with the instrument, such as the diversity of the music. "You can go from a foot-tapping reel to a mournful dirge." He also cited the tremendous power of the sound; "there's no way to describe that sound."

John Adams '92, bagpiper extraordinaire, gives "regimental" in less-than-traditional blue jeans. Adams' playing has invigorated the musical cacophony that is the Greylock quad. (Thamas)

But does the average Eph appreciate the fine nuances and delightful complexities of this much-maligned instrument? The answer to that question seems mostly to be yes. The majority of people who were asked said they enjoyed Adams' piping.

Listener reactions range from mild irritation to the rapture of one Gladden lass who said, "I was spellbound, entranced and engrossed by the music." Matthew Patrick Moynahan '92 said, "The sound of the pipes warmed my heart. Every time I hear it I start singing 'tura lura lura'."

Perhaps the most common reaction to any bagpipe player is the puzzlement over what he or she is wearing underneath the kilts. Adams insists one must go "regimental" when wearing a kilt. He was unclear as to the exact meaning of "regimental" but implied it was a bit chilly.

In the future, Adams said he hopes to continue playing the bagpipe both at Williams and back home where he is a fixture at the annual Felix Grundy Days Parade and other events in Des Moines. Adams also said he has plans to continue taking bagpipe lessons from Nancy Crutcher Tunnicliffe, a professional musician in Lanesboro, Massachusetts. Tunnicliffe, one of only a few Americans making a living from the pipes, made a solo appearance last May with the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington D.C.

For those readers who have yet to hear Adams play out at Gladden swamp, you had better catch him before it gets too cold because at that point he goes into piping hibernation in the private Bernhard Music Center.

Seven students arrested; one faces serious charges

by news staff

Early last Wednesday morning, Williamstown Police arrested seven Williams College students for possession of marijuana. One of the students was also charged with several other counts stemming from a break-in at the Faculty House.

Tim Moore '90 was arrested during a police stakeout of the Faculty House, located behind Dropper House off Route 2. The police had been called in after two previous break-ins which resulted in a total loss of $340 in cash, $220 in liquor and an unestimated amount of property damage, according to Williams College Director of Public Information

Jim Kolesar. Williamstown Chief of Police John Kennedy said, "We're still waiting on an estimate for the damage." Moore was charged with breaking and entering, larceny, possession of stolen property and wanton destruction of property. All are felonies under Massachusetts law. He will be arraigned tomorrow in Northern Berkshire District Court in North Adams.

Six others arrested

The police went to Moore's room at Susan Hopkins House, searching for evidence of other thefts he may have committed. Upon reaching the house, they found six Williams seniors, Joshua Glenn, Christopher Blackburn, Paul Faraci, Daniel Foote Jr., Christopher Page and Seth Kaplinsky smoking marijuana. All were charged with possession of a class D substance, a misdemeanor under current Massachusetts law.

"There was not a large quantity of marijuana there," Kennedy said. "There were five or six plastic bags with a small quantity in each. Not a lot by any means."

Police also confiscated from Susie Hopkins several empty liquor bottles, apparently stolen from the Faculty House, and two bongos. In addition, the Berkshire Eagle reported Friday that two crowbars, a pair of pliers and a chisel

continued on page 5

Wesleyan senior files lawsuit against Williams, 11 others

by Robert Weisberg

Williams College's legal troubles increased last week as a Wesleyan University senior filed a class action lawsuit against a dozen schools, including Williams.

The suit claims that the institutions -- the eight Ivy League schools, the Little Three and Stanford University -- have artificially set tuition and financial aid awards, thus eliminating the benefits of free market competition for applicants.

"For a number of years, the exact dates being currently unknown, the defendants have engaged in a conspiracy to fix or artificially inflate the price of tuition and financial aid," the suit states.

It is a similar argument to what may be behind the U.S. Justice Department's investigation of these schools. According to Director of Public Information James Kolesar, the number of schools that are now being investigated has risen to over 40.

The Wesleyan student, Roger

Kingsepp, was unavailable for comment, but his lawyer, Stuart Kramer, said, "It is our understanding that these schools are participating in meetings in which price information is exchanged."

He added, "We are maintaining that tuition levels are also discussed." While most of the schools named in the suit admit meeting annually (in the Overlap Group) to discuss financial aid awards to students accepted at more than one of the institutions, no such meeting on tuition levels has ever been acknowledged, or even reported.

'Confidential' memo

That part of the lawsuit was prompted by a Wall Street Journal article this spring, which revealed a Wesleyan treasurer's document outlining proposed tuition increases at several northeastern schools. The memo was marked "confidential," though it apparently has been read by many officials in the Wesleyan administration.

According to the suit, "[The tuition increase] figures [in the confidential memo] turned out to be exactly right or within a half-percentage point of each school's actual increases, even though those increases had not yet been publicly announced."

The document stated that Williams would have a 10.2 percent tuition increase; the actual rise of 9.6 percent was announced in April, one month after the memo's date.

However, the actions of the Overlap Group per se do not appear to have led to the filing of the suit, even though all of the schools except Stanford are in the group. In fact, Kramer, who admitted that he suggested the idea of the suit to Kingsepp, said he was not aware of the existence of the Overlap Group.

A class action lawsuit differs from a single-party one in that the filer claims to represent a large number of potential defendants. The twelve schools named in the suit enroll over 125,000 students per year.

Normally, the statute of limitations on

continued on page 4

Three students assaulted Fri. night

by Ellen Draught

Three Williams students were allegedly assaulted by two North Adams residents last Friday.

The students, two freshmen and a junior advisor, had crossed Route 2 late Friday on their way to East College when the incident occurred.

According to one of the students involved, the three were part of a larger group of about ten who were crossing the road. They had crossed the first lane and were about to cross the second when a car appeared. They waited to let it pass them, after which the car turned right into the College Art Museum parking lot.

"It was going about 20 [mph], pretty fast. It almost hit a couple parked cars," the student said.

The car then stopped, and the driver and two passengers got out. The driver and one of the passengers then approached the three students, who had kept walking. "One grabbed my shoulder and turned me around. He punched me in the neck, and [another student] in the jaw [who] fell down in the road." The third student was hit on the side of the forehead.

The alleged assailants left after seeing the second student on the ground. The students took down the car's license plate and description and then called the police.

"I don't know what provoked them," the student said. "They said we had run into the road in front of them."

He added that because the alleged assailants were wearing Williams sweat-shirts, the students initially thought they were Williams students as well.

According to Williamstown Chief of Police John Kennedy, police are seeking a complaint of assault and battery against James Barbuto and of assault against Jeffrey M. Loholdt, both of North Adams.

continued on page 4

Posters proposing boycott torn down

by Jennifer Austin

At September's class meetings President of the College Francis Oakley began the academic year with a plea for open exchange of political beliefs. Nevertheless, pro-choice posters which support a boycott of Domino's Pizza Incorporated were ripped down almost as soon as they appeared.

"I'm really disappointed that people can't tolerate this kind of dialogue; not just as a pro-choice person but as a Williams student," Marlam Naficy '91, a founder of Williams For Choice, said.

The organization distributed the posters, which were created by the National Organization for Women. The boycott of Domino's was conceived as a response to Domino's refusal to allow NOW to speak outside the pizza corporation's facility in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

"That space has traditionally been offered to any organization wishing to engage in public debate. However, Thomas S. Monaghan, owner and former president of Domino's, reneged on his agreement to allow NOW to respond to an anti-abortion rally held there. Domino's Pizza Inc. has acknowledged that this decision was based on Monaghan's position on reproductive rights.

In 1988, Monaghan donated $50,000 to fight the NOW-sponsored referendum which would have allowed tax-funded Michigan clinics to provide abortion services. The Domino's Foundation, supported by the Monaghan family and Domino's corporate gift-giving committee, continues to finance several organizations which, according to Domino's spokesperson Molra McDermott, promote "ethics in regard to the Catholic faith."

"At the informational stage" Because these actions are unacceptable to those in the pro-choice movement, boycotts of Domino's Pizza franchises have been mounted in several cities across the nation, with the largest responses occurring in college communities.

continued on page 8

Vandalism and intolerance have surfaced at Williams; Williams for Choice posters calling for a boycott of Domino's pizza have been repeatedly torn down. (Taylor)

Jennifer Sargent (left) '93 and Theresa Maturino '93 oversee the last shift of the annual Canned Food Drive, organized by the Williams Coalition Against Hunger and Homelessness. According to Steven Branoff '90, the drive, held at the Williamstown Grand Union from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, collected well over 100 cans, in addition to many bags of flour, sugar, paper goods and other items which will be donated to the Berkshire Food Project. "We got a great response," said Branoff. (Thamas)

Rogers 8, Hamilton 6!
Football wins opener
Page 12

Parenthood -- A movie that should have been planned.
Page 6

End of an era --
Kennedy replaces
Zoito as police chief.
Page 4

The Williams Record

Rugby club should try diplomacy

The decision of the Dean's Office to move the Williams Rugby Football Club's Friday afternoon "beer practice" from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. has sparked an argument between the college administration and the club's leaders. Stripped of all rhetorical elegance, the discussion can be reduced to one simple disagreement: the administration and the New England Small College Athletic Conference wish to exercise more control over the rugby teams, while Williams club members wish to remain as independent as they have been in the past.

The administration is concerned with several problems. First, the athletic department objects, as a matter of principle, to the close association of alcohol and athletics on the rugby team. The traditional weekly beer practice is the primary example of this. Acting Director of Athletics Robert Fisher contends that the 4:00 Friday "practice" interferes with the legitimate practices of other teams.

In addition, NESAC is considering implementing regulations that will require the league's rugby teams to have a coach and limit their play to a single season. The college seems to feel that this would be most easily achieved by transforming rugby from a club to a varsity sport.

Members of the club are adamantly opposed to all of these suggestions, however. They don't want a coach, they don't want to cut back their season, and they don't want to delay their beer practice. At the same time, club president Chap Petersen '90 has said he is upset that

Fisher won't support the rugby club in the face of NESAC's latest considerations.

Both sides have raised valid points. On one hand, the rugby club should certainly be allowed to retain its current status as a club. On the other hand, the athletic department has legitimate concerns about the relationship of alcohol and athletics, and the disruptions caused by beer practice.

The rugby club must realize that the college is holding all the trump cards. If they decide they feel strongly enough about it, they have the power to severely limit the team's activities, or even disband it entirely. By refusing to negotiate, and Petersen has termed some issues to be "unnegotiable," the club cannot expect to win any sympathy from the college.

If, however, the club was willing to make concessions on some of the smaller issues, the college might be more willing to protect the club status of rugby and stand up to NESAC. Such compromises might include moving beer practice to a less disruptive location and cutting down on some of the more conspicuously outrageous behavior.

By stubbornly refusing to negotiate with the college, the rugby club is signing its own death warrant. They have very little to win, after all, but a great deal to lose. Until Petersen and the other club leaders realize that diplomacy is their best approach, the future of rugby at Williams is tenuous at best.

On the Record...

"They say, 'We don't like beer and practice together.' That's just ignorance. There is no practice, no rugby, on Fridays."

-- Chap Petersen '90, president of WRFC

"I had to play something and I didn't think [my parents] would be able to find a bagpipe teacher in Des Moines."

-- John Adams '92, the bagpiper of Gladden Swamp

"Who really wants a piece of a rotten, carcinogenic pie?"

-- Dr. Ynestra King, in her lecture on ecofeminism

NUMBER GAMES

3.1 -- Default rate of Williams College students on repaying their student loans.

84.4 -- Default rate at Carlinshar institute in Illinois.

8.5 -- Thickness, in inches, of the assigned readings in History 301.

0.25 -- Thickness, in inches, of the assigned readings in Math 301.

$60.50 -- Average tuition paid by Williams students for one hour of classroom instruction.

Sources: Chronicle of Higher Education, Course Bulletin

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters and submissions from all interested readers. Letters should be legibly written and no longer than 500 words. Articles must be typed or word-processed. All materials must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday before publication. We reserve the right to refuse submissions and to edit them for length. Questions should be directed to Dan Skwire at (413) 597-2400.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
MARIAM NAFCY, Sports Editor STEPHANIE JONES, Arts Editor
DAN SKWIRE, Opinions Editor KARL THOMAS, Photography Editor

Assistant News Editors
ELLEN DROUGHT, JUSTIN SMITH, GREG HART
SALLIE HAN & RAJESH SWAMINATHAN
Assistant Sports Editors
KERR HOUSTON & JUAN ALONZO
Assistant Layout Editors
JANA SWAIL, SCOTT PAULIN
Assistant Photography Editors
MIRIAM MARCUS, AMY BELIVEAU

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

"Quick! While everything's covered with snow and ice. Get a shot of how thorough the cleanup looks!"

Letters

Death row prisoner seeks pen pal

To the editor:
I am a prisoner on death row now at the Arizona State Prison, and I was wondering if you would do me a favor. I have been here for thirteen years and have no family or friends on the outside to write to. I was wondering if you would put an ad in your campus newspaper for me for correspondence. I know that you are not a pen-pal club or anything like that, but I would really appreciate it if you could help me.

Death row prisoner, Caucasian male, age 42, desires correspondence with either male or female college students.

Wants to form a friendly relationship and more or less just exchange past experiences and ideas. Will answer all letters and exchange pictures. Prison rules require your full name and return address on the outside of the envelope.

Jim Jeffers
Box B 38604
Florence, AZ 85232

Medema's new vision has old stereotypes

To the editor:
I was very disturbed when I left the Ken Medema concert last Thursday night in Brooks-Rogers. Medema, in "Singing forth [his] new vision," recalled

some age-old stereotypes about Jews. During the concert, Medema related the story of the salvation of Zach the Hebrew tax collector, a short, small misfit unable to play basketball, interested only in the accumulation of money and the exploitation of good men.

The audience received this story enthusiastically. The humorous presentation of this story to beautiful music made me, one of few Jews in the audience, quite uncomfortable. The ease with which Medema presented the song and the ease with which the audience received it revealed a gross insensitivity to the danger of perpetuating such negative stereotypes, and ruined an otherwise enjoyable concert for me.

I do not believe that Medema or his fans are "anti-Semitic" per se, and I bear no resentment toward the Christian community on campus. I only wish to voice my concern over the naive expression and reception of such historically dangerous stereotypes.

Rachel Trill '90

Students should do their (jury) duty

by Alexis Pollock

Something has been finding its way into S.U. boxes and it's making students angry -- notification of juror service. A common (prudent) reflex is, "How do I get out of this?" This seems to be rather hypocritical from a campus where frequent criticism centers around campus insularity. Although it often blissfully seems so, we are not just "at college." We are in a country and a state, and Williams students cannot claim exemption from the law.

I will not dispute that serving on a jury in Pittsfield would be an inconvenience. On the rare occasion that you should actually be impaneled for a multi-day trial, academic, athletic and social careers could suffer. Yet this should not bias you against jury duty itself.

Serving on a jury is an opportunity to perform a necessary role in our judicial system. Whether or not you approve of it, you will gain a better understanding of trial procedure. You may even enjoy yourself.

No, I have never been summoned -- so yes, perhaps it is easy for me to be a juror advocate. However, as a judge's clerk this summer, I had daily contact with jurors and saw that they really do work.

In one case, it was quite obvious that the accused was guilty. A police officer testified that he had purchased crack cocaine from him. The identification seemed concrete because of the unusual appearance of the defendant. However, the jury hung twice before convicting him. The prosecutor, having the burden of proof, really did not provide much more than the officer's testimony. The jury was hesitant to convict without more evidence.

We had our share of panel members who were not exactly thrilled to be in court. As I was leading one jury out of

The courtroom, one man took me aside and asked, "Are you sure this trial is only going to last one day, as the attorneys said?"

Naturally, I had no control over the situation, so I explained that he might have to return the next day for deliberation. He was furious and muttered something about his schedule as he stomped into the jury room. Conspicuously late the next day, he was greeted by an impatient judge with phrases like "conspiracy of court" and "county jail."

That same juror, upon the conclusion of the trial, was churlish about his experience. In fact, all of the jurors I saw over the summer had only positive things to say about jury duty -- I know because I read their post-service questionnaires.

If I have not convinced you, remember that it is called jury duty; you are expected to serve if summoned. Unfortunately, some of us, some day, will be parties to a case. If your case is to be decided upon by a jury, which would you prefer: a jury consisting of open-minded people concerned with providing the fair trial guaranteed to you by the Constitution, or one with seven or thirteen people gazing longingly at the exit?

This is not a circumstance in which we think, "It doesn't apply to me." If the law does not apply to me, think of the Golden Rule we all learned in elementary school: do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

In Other Ivory Towers

Dartmouth College

Dartmouth junior Sandy Kopanov was not fazed at all when she found a worm-like organism in her tap water. She took it directly to the Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center to have it analyzed. The lab told her the organism was a mosquito larva, but said there was nothing to worry about. "They said it would add protein to the water," Kopanov said. As a result of complaints from Kopanov and other students, however, a new water filter has been installed and officials hope that it will clean the bugs out of Dartmouth's water system. "The filter" completely strains and purifies the water," said Mike Garner, a Dartmouth official, "plus it improves the taste."

Worcester Polytechnic Institute

It's cold shower time for students at WPI as the school has experienced unexpected delays in installing their new condom machines. The eight machines were supposed to have been installed by August 28, but the vendor prematurely withdrew from his contract, leaving the college high and dry. As soon as a suitable vendor is found, however, the machines should be ready for action in two weeks, offering packages of one condom for 50 cents or three for $1.50. The eight machines represent a ratio of one machine for every 420 students, so eager shoppers should plan ahead to avoid long lines at peak hours.

Oral Roberts University

In 1987, evangelist Oral Roberts raised $8 million for his medical school by claiming that God would "call him home" if the money were not found. Now, however, Roberts' ministry is facing a $25 million deficit, and he has announced that he will close his medical school and the hospital affiliated with it by the end of this school year. Roberts said that the closing of the complex could only be prevented by the development of a $50 million endowment, and did not rule out the possibility that "some miracle" could occur.

--Compiled from college papers and The Chronicle of Higher Education.

We asked you: What is your worst nightmare?

Not being in love with food -- John Rogers '92

Waking up and realizing I'm back in high school -- Rebecca Borden '91

Waking up in a bed full of snakes -- Travis Rundlet '92

Being attacked by the flying monkeys from The Wizard of Oz -- Beth Broadrup '90

Route 2 at midnight -- Evan Driscoll '91

Coming home after a long night and finding that someone had peed in your bed -- Adena Testa '91

photos and questions by Amy Beliveau and Miriam Marcus

News

Soviet Georgians visiting Williams

by Tom Dupree

With the rusting of the iron curtain well underway, a group of Soviet Georgians arrived on Saturday. Unlike the East Germans who have recently made their way to the West, however, these students are only here for a two-week stay.

This trip is one in a series of Williams-Thilisi exchanges. Thilisi students visited here last September; Williams students traveled to Soviet Georgia in January 1988 and January 1989 as a Winter Study project. The trip is also offered to Williams students for the 1990 Winter Study.

The size of the Thilisi group, twenty-one students and four administrators, is considerable (Williams sends fifteen, plus three faculty). Whereas last year the administrators lived in private homes near the campus, this year the entire delegation will live in Mission Park, and eat their meals in the campus dining halls.

This is the students' first trip to the United States. They have all completed three of five years of university study, although they do not share a common major.

Ben and Jerry's pit stop

Four days later, the group will travel to Vermont to meet with Governor Madeleine Kunin, then return to Williamstown after a pit stop at the Ben and Jerry's cream factory in Waterbury. The itinerary also contains several trips closer to home, including a visit to the Clark Art Institute and a "trip to Burger King meet with manager and then have lunch."

The delegation will leave Williams on October 8, and return to Moscow via JFK two days later. However, two students, Nito Silagidze and Georgi Khvaradze, will remain until the semester's end.

The two-student exchange is unprecedented at Williams. The exchange will be completed in 1990, when Lisa Kneiser '91 and Todd Fernandez '91 spend Winter Study and Spring semester at Thilisi State.

School wants WRFC to toe the line

by Damon Hemmerlinger

The Dean's Office has ordered the Williams Rugby Football Club to move its Friday afternoon "Beer Practice" from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m.

The Athletic Department has registered complaints with the Dean's Office in the past. Acting Director of Athletics Robert Fisher, Jr. said that the coaches whose teams practice on Cole Field are bothered by noise coming from the landfill where beer practice is held.

"The coaches have never been happy with beer practice. As professionals, we don't like the idea that beer and athletics go together," Fisher said. "We don't have a problem with either, but they should be separate."

However, WRFC President Chap Petersen '90 said, "It's patently untrue that we interfere with practice. Second, they say, 'We don't like beer and practice together.' That's just ignorance. There is no practice, no rugby, on Fridays."

Yet there is concern within the Dean's Office that this social event needs to be divorced from athletics.

Athletic practice or social event? "We are concerned about the purpose of beer practice, whether it's athletic practice or a social event," Assistant Dean of the College William Darrow said. "If it is a social event, it shouldn't take place during athletic practice time. Beer practice is going to be allowed to continue at 6:00."

Members of WRFC are not satisfied with this solution.

"If we wait until six o'clock, it's not

'We are vehemently opposed to cutting back a season. That is unnegotiable' beer practice; it's a party. The whole idea of beer practice is to have a nice afternoon. The ability to have a good time and laugh at yourself is really one of the most important parts of undergraduate life. Coaches and administrators at this school take themselves so damned seriously. They can't step back and see that we have fun," Petersen said.

"On the field, against other schools, we're very competitive. Off the field, we're all friends," WRFC Treasurer Matt Conlan '91 said.

The Dean's Office plans to take no more steps against beer practice. Assistant Dean of the College Andrew Hernandez would not comment on WRFC but confirmed that the Dean's Office does not intend to change the college alcohol policy.

A meeting of the New England Small College Athletic Conference on October 2 will discuss the future of the rugby teams in the conference. NESAC is considering requiring rugby teams to have official coaches and cutting play from two seasons to one.

"Williams has one of the only rugby teams without a coach that doesn't plan to get one. The college presidents may charge the athletic directors with getting coaches," Fisher said.

"The club is against having a coach," Conlan said. "It has traditionally been a student-run organization."

"Why won't he support us?"

Petersen said, "The thing that really upsets me is that it doesn't seem that Fisher wants to support us within NES-CAC. Why can't he say, 'This is how we run it at my school, and we like it?' He's our athletic director; why won't he support us?"

Mark Eftefene '91, a member of WRFC, disagreed. "The College has always respected our desire to stay student-run. They've always been supportive on that," he said.

Members of WRFC are most upset about the proposed cutback in play. "We're vehemently opposed to cutting back a season. That is unnegotiable," Conlan said.

Fisher explained, "Within NES-CAC, all sports have limited seasons. Football teams can't practice in the spring even if the players want to. All sports are treated in this way. The question is why should rugby be different?"

"We're not a varsity sport. We're like the sailing club, the outing club and the chess club. It is going to limit their seasons. I don't mind that rugby is the lowest man on the totem pole. But when we get all the restrictions of varsity sports and none of the benefits, I do mind. It's a double standard," Petersen said.

Petersen will meet with Dean of the College Stephen Fox and Fisher later this week.

Volunteers put books on tape for blind

by Sallie Han

Through the help of Williams students and volunteers nationwide, Recording for the Blind has made it possible for 150,000 blind and physically handicapped people to read by ear.

RFB, a non-profit volunteer organization, provides tape-recorded educational books free-of-charge to blind and visually impaired students of all educational levels. It has a master tape library of more than 75,000 recorded textbooks, the world's largest collection of its kind.

Four thousand RFB volunteers nationwide add more than 3,000 titles to the collection annually. RFB does not already have a requested text available on tape volunteers will make a recording.

The books range from general texts and works of literature, including Shakespeare's complete works on tape, to books required for additional career training and specialized books on chemistry, computer science, mathematics, physics and foreign languages.

Since its founding in 1948 by Anne T. Macdonald, who wished to help blinded World War II veterans attend college, RFB has circulated more than a million books on tape to over 150,000 people, primarily students. It has grown out of its Princeton, N.J., headquarters into a national network of 31 studios in 15 states and the District of Columbia.

Berkshire County has three studios, including one at Mount Greylock Regional High School in Williamstown. Sixty volunteers work at the Williamstown studio. Members of the administration and faculty, their families and Williams students are among those who volunteer their services to RFB. "About 50% of our volunteers are in some way connected to the college," Margie Chamberlain, a studio director, said.

Over the years, she said, Williams students have expressed great interest in RFB.

Karl Galle '91, who is acting as a liaison for RFB on campus to help coordinate volunteers, said that about 35 students had signed up with him to help out.

Beth Galle and Chamberlain said that the main problem they have with recruiting Williams faculty and students is transportation to and from the high school. "It was easy when we were right there," Chamberlain said.

The Williamstown studio was started in 1966 and located on Water Street. Two moves later the RFB studio has settled at MGRHS and has been there for two years.

"We are interested in trying to find space at Williams College," Chamberlain said. "We spoke to President Oakley and Will Reed. They told us that unfortunately there is no space."

"We find students a very reliable resource," Chamberlain said, adding they were generally quick to pick up on studio operation and eager to help.

Chamberlain said that the national RFB organization has been given a grant to read and record science texts and that she thought that Williams faculty and students would be excellent sources for volunteer specialty readers.

"We see the college as a tremendous resource," she said.

The Williams Record

Rugby club should try diplomacy

The decision of the Dean's Office to move the Williams Rugby Football Club's Friday afternoon "beer practice" from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m. has sparked an argument between the college administration and the club's leaders. Stripped of all rhetorical elegance, the discussion can be reduced to one simple disagreement: the administration and the New England Small College Athletic Conference wish to exercise more control over the rugby teams, while Williams club members wish to remain as independent as they have been in the past.

The administration is concerned with several problems. First, the athletic department objects, as a matter of principle, to the close association of alcohol and athletics on the rugby team. The traditional weekly beer practice is the primary example of this. Acting Director of Athletics Robert Fisher contends that the 4:00 Friday "practice" interferes with the legitimate practices of other teams.

In addition, NESAC is considering implementing regulations that will require the league's rugby teams to have a coach and limit their play to a single season. The college seems to feel that these ends would be most easily achieved by transforming rugby from a club to a varsity sport.

Members of the club are adamantly opposed to all of these suggestions, however. They don't want a coach, they don't want to cut back their season, and they don't want to delay their beer practice. At the same time, club president Chap Petersen '90 has said he is upset that

Fisher won't support the rugby club in the face of NESAC's latest considerations.

Both sides have raised valid points. On one hand, the rugby club should certainly be allowed to retain its current status as a club. On the other hand, the athletic department has legitimate concerns about the relationship of alcohol and athletics, and the disruptions caused by beer practice.

The rugby club must realize that the college is holding all the trump cards. If they decide they feel strongly enough about it, they have the power to severely limit the team's activities, or even disband it entirely. By refusing to negotiate, and Petersen has termed some issues to be "unnegotiable," the club cannot expect to win any sympathy from the college.

If, however, the club was willing to make concessions on some of the smaller issues, the college might be more willing to protect the club status of rugby and stand up to NESAC. Such compromises might include moving beer practice to a less disruptive location and cutting down on some of the more conspicuously outrageous behavior.

By stubbornly refusing to negotiate with the college, the rugby club is signing its own death warrant. They have very little to win, after all, but a great deal to lose. Until Petersen and the other club leaders realize that diplomacy is their best approach, the future of rugby at Williams is tenuous at best.

On the Record...

"They say, 'We don't like beer and practice together.' That's just ignorance. There is no practice, no rugby, on Fridays."

-- Chap Petersen '90, president of WRFC

"I had to play something and I didn't think [my parents] would be able to find a bagpipe teacher in Des Moines."

-- John Adams '92, the bagpiper of Gladden Swamp

"Who really wants a piece of a rotten, carcinogenic pie?"

-- Dr. Ynestra King, in her lecture on ecofeminism

NUMBER GAMES

3.1 -- Default rate of Williams College students on repaying their student loans.

84.4 -- Default rate at Carlinshar Institute in Illinois.

8.5 -- Thickness, in inches, of the assigned readings in History 301.

0.25 -- Thickness, in inches, of the assigned readings in Math 301.

$60.50 -- Average tuition paid by Williams students for one hour of classroom instruction.

Sources: Chronicle of Higher Education, Course Bulletin

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters and submissions from all interested readers. Letters should be legibly written and no longer than 500 words. Articles must be typed or word-processed. All materials must be received by 3 p.m. the Friday before publication. We reserve the right to refuse submissions and to edit them for length. Questions should be directed to Dan Skwire at (413) 597-2400.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor STEPHANIE JONES, Arts Editor
DAN SKWIRE, Opinions Editor KARL THOMAS, Photography Editor

Assistant News Editors
ELLEN DROUGHT, JUSTIN SMITH, GREG HART
SALLIE HAN & RAJESH SWAMINATHAN
Assistant Sports Editors
KERR HOUSTON & JUAN ALONZO
Assistant Layout Editors
JANA SWAIL, SCOTT PAULIN
Assistant Photography Editors
MIRIAM MARCUS, AMY BELIVEAU

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williams, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williams, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williams, MA 01267.

"Quick! While everything's covered with snow and ice. Get a shot of how thorough the cleanup looks!"

Letters

Death row prisoner seeks pen pal

To the editor:

I am a prisoner on death row now at the Arizona State Prison, and I am wondering if you would do me a favor. I have been here for thirteen years and have no family or friends on the outside to write to. I was wondering if you would put an ad in your campus newspaper for me for correspondence. I know that you are not a pen-pal club or anything like that, but I would really appreciate it if you could help me.

Death row prisoner, Caucasian male, age 42, desires correspondence with either male or female college students.

Wants to form a friendly relationship and more or less, low exchange pen pal experiences and ideas. Will answer all letters and exchange pictures. Prison rules require your full name and return address on the outside of the envelope.

Jim Jeffers
Box H 38604
Florence, AZ 85604

Medema's new vision has old stereotypes

To the editor:

I was very disturbed when I left the Ken Medema concert last Thursday night in Brooks-Rogers. Medema, in "Singing forth [his] new vision," recited some age-old stereotypes about Jews. During the concert, Medema related the story of the salvation of Zach the Hebrew tax collector, a short, social misfit unable to play basketball, interested only in the accumulation of money and the exploitation of good men.

The audience received this story enthusiastically. The humorous presentation of this story to beautiful music made me, one of few Jews in the audience, quite uncomfortable. The case with which Medema presented the song and the glece with which the audience received it revealed a gross insensitivity to the danger of perpetuating such negative stereotypes, and ruined an otherwise enjoyable concert for me.

I do not believe that Medema or his fans are "anti-Semitic" per se, and I have no resentment toward the Christian community on campus. I only wish to voice my concern over the naive expression and reception of such historically dangerous stereotypes.

Rachel Trill '90

Students should do their (jury) duty

by Alexis Pollock

Something has been finding its way into S.U. boxes and it's making students angry -- notification of jury service. A common (printable) reflex is, "I would get out of this!" This seems to be rather hypocritical from a campus where frequent criticism centers around campus insularity. Although it often blissfully seems so, we are not just "at college." We are in a county and a state, and Williams students cannot claim exemption from the law.

I will not dispute that serving on a jury in Pittsfield would be an inconvenience. On the rare occasion that you should actually be impeached for a multi-day trial, academic, athletic and social careers could suffer. Yet this should not bias you against jury duty itself.

Serving on a jury is an opportunity to perform a necessary role in our judicial system. Whether or not you approve of it, you will gain a better understanding of trial procedure. You may even enjoy yourself.

No, I have never been summoned -- so yes, perhaps it is easy for me to be a jury advocate. However, as a judge's clerk this summer, I had daily contact with juries and saw that they really do work.

In one case, it was quite obvious that the accused was guilty. A police officer testified that he had purchased crack cocaine from him. The identification seemed concrete because of the unusual appearance of the defendant. However, the jury hung twice before convicting him. The prosecutor, having the burden of proof, really did not provide much more than the officer's testimony. The jury was hesitant to convict without more evidence. We had our share of panel members who were not exactly thrilled to be in court. As I was leading one jury out of the courtroom, one man took me aside and asked, "Are you sure this trial is only going to last one day, as the attorneys said?"

Naturally, I had no control over the situation, so I explained that he might have to return the next day for deliberation. He was furious and muttered something about his schedule as he stomped into the jury room. Conspicuously late the next day, he was greeted by an impatient judge with phrases like "contempt of court" and "security jail."

That same juror, upon the conclusion of the trial, was ebullient about his experience. In fact, all of the jurors I saw over the summer had only positive things to say about jury duty -- I know because I read their post-service questionnaires. If I have not convinced you, remember that it is called jury duty; you are expected to serve if summoned. Unfortunately, some of us, some day, will be parties in court cases. If your case is to be decided upon by a jury, which would you prefer: a jury consisting of open-minded people concerned with providing the fair trial guaranteed to you by the Constitution, or one with seven or thirteen people gazing longingly at the exit? This is not a circumstance in which we can think, "It doesn't apply to me." If the law does not persuade you, think of the Golden Rule we all learned in elementary school: do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

In Other Ivory Towers

Dartmouth College

Dartmouth junior Sandy Kopanov was not fazed at all when she found a worm-like organism in her tap water. She took it directly to the Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center to have it analyzed. The lab told her the organism was mosquito larvae, but said there was nothing to worry about. "They said it would add protein to the water," Kopanov said. As a result of complaints from Kopanov and other students, however, a new water filter has been installed and officials hope that it will clean the bugs out of Dartmouth's water system. "The filter" completely strains and purifies the water," said Mike Garner, a Dartmouth official, "plus it improves the taste."

Worcester Polytechnic Institute

It's cold shower time for students at WPI as the school has experienced unexpected delays in installing their new condom machines. The eight machines were supposed to have been installed by August 28, but the vendor prematurely withdrew from his contract, leaving the college high and dry. As soon as a suitable vendor is found, however, the machines should be ready for action in two weeks, offering packages of one condom for 50 cents or three for $1.50. The eight machines represent a ratio of one machine for every 420 students, so eager shoppers should plan ahead to avoid long lines at peak hours.

Oral Roberts University

In 1987, evangelist Oral Roberts raised $8 million for his medical school by claiming that God would "sell him home" if the money were not found. Now, however, Roberts' ministry is facing a $25 million deficit, and he has announced that he will close his medical school and the hospital affiliated with it by the end of this school year. Roberts said that the closing of the complex could only be prevented by the development of a $50 million endowment, and did not rule out the possibility that "some miracle" could occur.

--Compiled from college papers and The Chronicle of Higher Education.

We asked you: What is your worst nightmare?

photos and questions by Amy Beliveau and Miriam Marcus

Not being in love with food --John Rogers '92

Waking up and realizing I'm back in high school --Rebecca Borden '91

Waking up in a bed full of snakes --Travis Rundlett '92

Being attacked by the flying monkeys from The Wizard of Oz --Beth Brondrup '90

Route 2 at midnight --Evan Driscoll '91

Coming home after a long night and finding that someone had peed in your bed --Adena Testa '91

News

Soviet Georgians visiting Williams

by Tom Dupree

With the rusting of the iron curtain well underway, a group of Soviet Georgians arrived on Saturday, unlike the East Germans who have recently made their way to the West, however, these students are only here for a two-week stay.

This trip is one in a series of Williams-Tbilisi exchanges. Tbilisi students visited here last September, Williams students traveled to Soviet Georgia in January 1988 and January 1989 as a Winter Study project. The trip is also offered to Williams students for the 1990 Winter Study.

The size of the Tbilisi group, twenty-one students and four administrators, is considerable (Williams sends fifteen, plus three faculty). Whereas last year the administrators lived in private homes near the campus, this year the entire delegation will live in Mission Park, and eat their meals in the campus dining halls.

This is the students' first trip to the United States. They have all completed three of five years of university study, although they do not share a common major.

"Take the Initiative"

According to Assistant Professor of Russian Daria Goldstein, one of the trip's coordinators, the goal is to provide the students with a real Williams experience. "Williams students will have to take the initiative in inviting them to parties and generally integrating them into Williams life," she said. "The trip provides an excellent opportunity for enriching the Williams community," Goldstein added. "It will bring diversity to campus. The students, though, will have to be open to it."

During the course of their stay, the students will be attending a variety of classes. Each has been given a course catalogue, a class meeting schedule, and the freedom to attend whichever

School wants WRFC to toe the line

by Damon Hemmerdinger

The Dean's Office has ordered the Williams Rugby Football Club to move its Friday afternoon "Beer Practice" from 4:00 to 6:00 p.m.

The Athletic Department has registered complaints with the Dean's Office in the past. Acting Director of Athletics Robert Fisher, Jr. said that the coaches whose teams practice on Cole Field are bothered by noise coming from the landfill where beer practice is held.

"The coaches have never been happy with beer practice. As professionals, we don't like the idea that beer and athletics go together," Fisher said. "We don't have a problem with either, but they should be separate."

However, WRFC President Chap Petersen '90 said, "It's patently untrue that we interfere with practice. Second, they say, 'We don't like beer and practice together.' That's just ignorance. There is no practice, no rugby, on Fridays."

Yet there is concern within the Dean's Office that this social event needs to be divorced from athletics.

Athletic practice or social event? "We are concerned about the purpose of beer practice, whether it's athletic practice or a social event," Assistant Dean of the College William Darrow said. "If it is a social event, it shouldn't take place during athletic practice time. Beer practice is going to be allowed to continue at 6:00."

Members of WRFC are not satisfied with this solution.

"If we wait until six o'clock, it's not practice or a social event," Assistant Dean of the College William Darrow said. "If it is a social event, it shouldn't take place during athletic practice time. Beer practice is going to be allowed to continue at 6:00."

A meeting of the New England Small College Athletic Conference on October 2 will discuss the future of the rugby teams in the conference. NESAC is on hand," he said.

Members of WRFC are most upset about the proposed cutback in play. "We are vehemently opposed to cutting back a season. That is unnegotiable," Conlan said.

Fisher explained, "Within NESAC, all sports have limited seasons. Football teams can't practice in the spring even if the players want to. All sports are treated in this way. The question is why should rugby be different?"

"We're not a varsity sport. We're like the sailing club, the outing club and the chess club. Is he going to limit their seasons? I don't mind that rugby is the lowest man on the totem pole. But when we get all the restrictions of varsity sports and none of the benefits, I do mind. It's a double standard," Petersen said.

Petersen will meet with Dean of the College Stephen Fox and Fisher later this week.

"Why won't he support us?" Petersen said. "The thing that really upsets me is that it doesn't seem that considering requiring rugby teams to have official coaches and cutting play from two seasons to one. "Williams has one of the only rugby teams without a coach that doesn't plan to get one. The college presidents may charge the athletic directors with getting coaches," Fisher said.

"The club is against having a coach," Conlan said. "It has traditionally been a student-run organization."

The Dean's Office plans to take no more steps against beer practice. Assistant

Dean of the College Andrew Hernandez would not comment on WRFC but confirmed that the Dean's Office does not intend to change the college alcohol policy.

A meeting of the New England Small College Athletic Conference on October 2 will discuss the future of the rugby teams in the conference. NESAC is on hand," he said.

Members of WRFC are most upset about the proposed cutback in play. "We are vehemently opposed to cutting back a season. That is unnegotiable," Conlan said.

Fisher explained, "Within NESAC, all sports have limited seasons. Football teams can't practice in the spring even if the players want to. All sports are treated in this way. The question is why should rugby be different?"

"We're not a varsity sport. We're like the sailing club, the outing club and the chess club. Is he going to limit their seasons? I don't mind that rugby is the lowest man on the totem pole. But when we get all the restrictions of varsity sports and none of the benefits, I do mind. It's a double standard," Petersen said.

Petersen will meet with Dean of the College Stephen Fox and Fisher later this week.

"Why won't he support us?" Petersen said. "The thing that really upsets me is that it doesn't seem that considering requiring rugby teams to have official coaches and cutting play from two seasons to one. "Williams has one of the only rugby teams without a coach that doesn't plan to get one. The college presidents may charge the athletic directors with getting coaches," Fisher said.

"The club is against having a coach," Conlan said. "It has traditionally been a student-run organization."

The Dean's Office plans to take no more steps against beer practice. Assistant

Dean of the College Andrew Hernandez would not comment on WRFC but confirmed that the Dean's Office does not intend to change the college alcohol policy.

Volunteers put books on tape for blind

by Sullie Hun

Through the help of Williams students and volunteers nationwide, Recording for the Blind has made it possible for 150,000 blind and physically handicapped people to read by ear. RFB, a non-profit volunteer organization, provides tape-recorded educational books free-of-charge to blind and visually impaired students of all educational levels. It has a master tape library of more than 75,000 recorded textbooks, the world's largest collection of its kind.

Four thousand RFB volunteers nationwide add more than 3,000 titles to the collection annually. If RFB did not already have a requested text available on tape, volunteers will make a recording.

The books range from general texts and works of literature, including Shakespeare's complete works, to books required for additional career training and specialized books on chemistry, computer science, mathematics, physics and foreign languages.

Since its founding in 1948 by Anne T. Macdonald, who wished to help blind World War II veterans attend college, RFB has circulated more than a million books on tape to over 150,000 people, primarily students. It has grown out of its Princeton, N.J., headquarters into a national network of 31 studios in 15 states and the District of Columbia.

Berkshire County has three studios, including one at Mount Greylock Regional High School in Williamstown.

Sixty volunteers work at the Williamstown studio. Members of the administration and faculty, their families and Williams students are among those who volunteer their services to RFB. "About 50% of our volunteers are in some way connected to the college," Marge Chamberlain, a studio director, said.

Over the years, she said, Williams students have expressed great interest in RFB.

Karl Galle '91, who is acting as a liaison for RFB on campus to help coordinate volunteers, said that about 35 students had signed up with him to help out.

Both Galle and Chamberlain said that the main problem they have with recruiting Williams faculty and students is transportation to and from the high school. "It was easy when we were right there," Chamberlain said.

The Williamstown studio was started in 1966 and located on Water Street. Two moves later the RFB studio has settled at MGRHS and has been there for two years.

"We are interested in trying to find space at Williams College," Chamberlain said. "We spoke to President Oakley and Will Reed. They told us that unfortunately there is no space."

"We find students a very reliable resource," Chamberlain said, adding they were generally quick to pick up on studio operation and eager to help.

Chamberlain said that the national RFB organization has been given a grant to read and record science texts and that she thought that Williams faculty and students would be excellent sources for volunteer specialty readers.

"We see the college as a tremendous resource," she said.

Reagon's "Songs of Struggle" entertains and inspires audience

by Beth Neely

Bernice Johnson Reagon and "Songs of Struggle" created a wide, warm sense of unity in the audience that nearly filled Brooks-Rogers last Tuesday evening. This singer was able to take the concept of the song back to its origins and orally passed on choruses and hand-clapping rhythms to an audience that was immediately hooked.

Reagon's offerings ranged from gospel songs to the Civil Rights Movement, but they were all linked by the theme of struggle, the struggle of overcoming barriers. Her resonant contralto voice alternated with her powerful words as she urged students to find their own agenda of social and political aims for which to work.

Reagon is one of those people whose work is too intriguing and eclectic to be summed up neatly in one title. As one of the black Americans who fueled the Civil Rights Movement, Reagon has traveled to become a nationally respected singer and historian who pursues many avenues.

She began her singing career when she left college at nineteen to join the S.N.C.C. Freedom Singers. (She later received a B.A. from Spelman College and a Ph.D. from Howard University.) Sixteen years ago she founded the group Sweet Honey in the Rock, a female sextet which includes a singer for the deaf. This group, based in Washington, D.C. but renowned throughout the world, sings a cappella songs from the fields, streets, and churches.

Reagon ties her music to social, historical and political contexts, areas she also supports through her skills as an administrator and researcher. Her influence as a curator and as director of the black American culture program at the Smithsonian has helped the institution to reach beyond white history to the history of women and minority groups. In addition, she is an avid researcher of oral history and has pursued field research in Africa, South America, and in the United States. Her publications are as numerous as her songs.

As one listener put it, "Bernice Reagon breaks down all the 'isms' you can think of." This statement rings true in all Reagon's lines of work.

Upon meeting Reagon before her concert last Tuesday evening one could immediately sense her self-possession, quiet intensity, and unflinching vision. In the short space of an hour her agenda included a trial run with the stage microphone system, a look at the art exhibit on black history at the College Museum, and this short interview, but Reagon acted as if she had all the time in the world to speak candidly.

Bernice Johnson Reagon (pictured above) performed in Brooks-Rogers last Tuesday. The diverse works which constituted her program were unified by the underlying theme of struggle. (Isackson)

Record: How long have you been singing?

Reagon: Singing was a part of my growing up. It was everywhere: in school, on the playground, and in church, which was very important in my family and in my community. I don't know when I wasn't singing.

Record: Your daughter Toshli was once quoted as saying, "She sometimes gets tired during her mission, but I don't think she ever gets tired of her mission." Could you describe what your mission is in your singing, and is that the same mission which fuels all your other activities and positions?

Reagon: I don't know if I think of it in terms of a mission. I've worked to do. My work centers on the history of African-Americans, especially the cultural history of African-Americans, and that part of the culture that has always been oriented towards change and struggle. This is where I've spent a lot of time.

I'm very interested in the relationship between African-American spiritual tradition and the ability to survive hardships and being disadvantaged. To do this work I used skills as a singer, composer, historian, and administrator. I think that's the way I see it.

Record: Do you sing much in the South today? What are the reactions of the people you sing for there as opposed to other parts of the country?

Reagon: I was born in Albany, Georgia. When I think about the South and my work I am much more of a cultural scientist. So when I think about the South, I don't think as much about how they react to me singing as I think about what is going on in African-American communities which I as a scientist and a curator can help to document and preserve.

For instance, I spent six weeks in southwest Georgia during the revival meeting season documenting services and marveling at how rich some of the older practices are. Even in churches that have twentieth century gospel music there are still members who continue to practice older repertoires dating back to the early nineteenth century. Here we are at the end of the twentieth century, and as a researcher and a collector I'm looking at parts of our communities who are practicing traditions that are going on two hundred years old.

I occasionally have a chance to sing before those audiences, and they are kind. They appreciate me. Most of the time they look at me and see me as a younger person. I'm almost fifty. They are always glad when they see someone choose to honor older traditions. That's one response.

There's another response. For instance, if I sing in a city like Atlanta, Georgia; Durham, North Carolina; or Nashville, Tennessee, I'm in very urban areas. Audiences are mixed. I sing in the major concert halls of those cities. I find that more people in the audience have moved in the cultural communities from which some of the sounds I am making come than would have if I were singing in Wyoming. There is a difference. There's a stronger identification because so much of my sound is out of the South. When you get to the big cities you really do get a mixture.

Record: Often in discussing black writers such as Toni Morrison or Alice Walker one realizes that these writers face the double challenge of being a woman and of being black. Do you feel you face this double challenge as well in the work you do?

Reagon: I guess one could discuss it in some way. I think the work that I do -- the singing that I do -- is a black woman singing. That I'm black and I'm female are not obstacles to me when I'm doing my music or when I'm doing my research. At the point where I have to interface with society's institutions, you can then have the discussion.

When you talk about the writers it is an advantage to be black, female, and a writer. It's an advantage to be black, female, and a singer. It becomes a challenge when you try to find a publisher. But in terms of writing and getting the work out and being creative the black female experience is just a rich reservoir to draw from as an artist. I'm not sure I would want to be anything different.

So the challenge comes when you meet with the society. Some of us are trained or socialized to understand that there are people who think it's unusual to have a black person in certain places or to have a woman in certain places. Some of us are socialized to understand how to meet those kinds of challenges. We do with them the best we can.

It does not interfere with whether you are going to do your work or not. I could not be at the Smithsonian. I still would be a singer, and I would still be researching black American culture. I don't see myself as ever not doing this work, no matter where I am. The work might be smaller or it might be bigger, but I would be doing it.

Roach provides amazing musical experience

by Tammie Smith

The Max Roach Quartet took Williams by storm Saturday, playing to an audience that packed Chapin Hall. The stage was alternately flooded with light and consumed in shadows as the soloists improvised, contrasting light and dark with both upbeat and mournful sounds which filled the hall and thrilled the audience.

"This music is alive. It's about the present. It's about the future."

"This music is a democratic music... This music did liberate, did free musicians," Max Roach said about jazz during a question-and-answer period after the concert. Roach, an internationally acclaimed percussionist and composer, helped create the contemporary shape of American music. "All of us here came from the conservatory of the streets," Roach said, referring to his lack of classical training. This statement included the other members of the quartet: Cecil Bridgewater on trumpet, Tyrone Brown on electric bass, and Odean Pope on tenor saxophone. The group opened with a piece by Bridgewater entitled "Scott Free."

The selections were full of meaning as well as sound. Roach explained that the second tune, "Calvary," was based on the "sorrow songs" of the plantations. Other pieces included "I Wanna Talk About You," a ballad for the tenor sax, "Effie," a piece in three-quarters time, and the Monk classic, "Run Midnight," whose title alone elicited cheers from the audience.

The quartet's performance marked the opening of this year's Thompson Concert Series and the one-hundredth anniversary of the graduation of the first black student at Williams. In an introduction to the concert, Professor of Music Ernest Brown said the group represented a tradition in black music. "This music is alive. It's about the present. It's about the future," he said.

With this in mind, when Max Roach recited part of the poem "Six Ill Blues," by Langston Hughes, the audience prepared for an especially meaningful tribute. The tribute, also called "Six Ill Blues," featured the entire ensemble. The number began with the raucous, strident sound of Bridgewater's trumpet, creating the atmosphere of a dark alley. Most of the audience could not resist moving to the music during this piece.

The tribute got out of hand, however, during Cecil Bridgewater's improvisation using his hands, and perhaps his trumpet mouthpiece, to imitate the sounds of human intercourse. Members of the band and parts of the audience giggled as the human-like moans resounded. One may wish to pause and consider the musical validity of the improvisation. It made a mockery of Brown's reference to Frederick Douglass' famous statement, "These songs speak to the heart and to the soul of the thoughtful." Roach's candor and commentary, however, were greatly appreciated both during the concert and during the post-concert question-and-answer session. His personal anecdotes about Buddy Rich, Elvin Jones, and Charlie Parker alone would have made the concert worthwhile.

The Roach Quartet's renditions of "Cherokee" and Roach's solo for high-hat symbol elicited two standing ovations from the crowd, moved by the sharp, upbeat, staccato rhythms being played. It is easy to see why Max Roach has become part of jazz history, and Williams was indeed lucky to have the chance to see him perform. As Roach left the stage, he said to the audience, "You made us feel really, really good." So might we have said to him.

Waste as art?

by Jodi Arai

Like many other students, Patrick Gilmarin '90 spent part of last week working on a project for class. More unusually, however, he kept his sealed with duct tape in plastic containers in his room.

"What I'm doing is saving all the waste I produce in a week, everything from paper waste to feces and urine," Gilmarin said.

For his junior seminar in studio art, Gilmarin carried this waste down to the community landfill and water treatment plant Monday morning. He was fulfilling an assignment to create a post-modern work of art that would address a social concern relevant to American society.

Gilmarin said that he is making both a social and an environmental statement.

"The image of people as consumers is very popular, but we must also be aware of the wastes that we are continuing to produce as a result of that consumerism," Gilmarin said.

In addition to the performance part of the project, Gilmarin created a painting that addressed this issue for his Drawing II class.

According to Gilmarin, he came up with the idea for this project while traveling in Europe last year. He said he applied for a Warren traveling fellowship and the application process made him seriously consider his own beliefs and concerns about society. Then, while in Europe, he observed workers in an automobile factory.

Gilmarin said this experience left a lasting impression. "It made me feel so close to the abstract principles of 'industry' and 'economy.' They were right there in every movement a person made... It was like a dance," Gilmarin said. This feeling was what he was trying to recapture in his project, the almost physical closeness to an abstract concept through art.

by Steve Scoville

Movie review: Parenthood -- plan not to see it

by Robert Weisberg

Parenthood was not a movie destined for success. It has several things going against it: an ensemble cast, a sappy subject, and one of the stupidest finales of any film to be made in the last several years. Not even a fine performance from Steve Martin can turn this movie into a winner.

The problem with ensemble casting is that it is always difficult to integrate the disparate plot lines into the main picture. As a result, many directors tend to emphasize a single character, thus creating more of a supporting cast than an ensemble one.

Parenthood is such a film. While the list of lead characters is long, it is really Martin's movie. As a result, most of the other plot lines suffer. In addition, director Ron Howard does a poor job of bringing it all together. The movie follows several weeks in the life of an extended family: Martin, his three siblings (Dianne Weist, Tom Hulse, and Harley Kozak) and their families, and his father (Jason Roberts). When you add in the spouses and children of all of these small families, you have a very large cast indeed.

Nothing emphasizes the problems of Parenthood better than the birthday party of Martin's oldest child. He is supposed to be a big family gathering, but once Martin goes off on his shuck, you lose all interest in the other characters. Until Martin gets back on screen, you are simply bored.

It is unfortunate that this happens because there are many good performances in Parenthood. Hulse, Roberts, Weist, and Rick Moranis (Kozak's on-screen husband) all stand out, but they are on screen all too rarely. As a result, you don't get a feel for this entire family; it's like you're watching several hour-long television shows (perhaps four or five weeks of thirtysomething).

Even worse, the movie takes an awful turn in its attempt to tie all the families together at the end. I won't give it away, but Planned Parenthood cannot be pleased.

Another weakness is the plot, which revolves around the trials and tribulations of raising children. I understand, of course, it is 2020, but you'd expect a talented group of filmmakers would have realized that family life is generally a very poor subject for a movie, for the simple reason that it is too complex to appear convincing.

As a result, many of the nuances of relationships between different family members are lost. And most of all, all the problems in this movie are all worked out happily. Most of us know by experience that this scenario is a rare one.

Another odd thing about Parenthood is its adult nature. While the movie is rated PG-13, the two best jokes in the film concern masturbation and oral sex. Can PG-13 be far behind?

The point may be tiresome, but it is unfortunate that Howard could not work better with this large cast. He should have taken a lesson from history: The Godfather, the best ensemble film ever made, lasted almost four hours. Parenthood, at about half that length, is just a wasted mess searching for some coherency.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinemas 4, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179

Black Rain	7:00	9:20
Parenthood	7:00	9:20
Uncle Buck	7:05	9:20

Images

Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612

The Navigator	September 26	7:00 & 9:00
How To Get Ahead In Advertising	September 27-28	7:00 & 9:00
Parenthood	September 29-30	7:00 & 9:00

North Adams Cinema

Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873

Parenthood	7:00	9:15
Fright Night II	7:00	9:15
The Package	7:00	9:15
Ghostbusters II	7:00
See No Evil		9:15
Uncle Buck	7:00	9:15
Kickboxer	7:00	9:15

Pittsfield Cinema Center

Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639

The Abyss, Black Rain, Parenthood, Dead Poets' Society: 6:45 & 9:15.

Field of Dreams, Lethal Weapon II, Sea of Love, Millennium: 7:00 & 9:30.
Relentless, Uncle Buck, When Harry Met Sally: 7:15 & 9:30.

Berkshire Mall Cinema

Rte 20, Lenox, 499-2558

Sea of Love	1:00	7:00	9:40
Uncle Buck	1:20	7:20	10:00
Parenthood	1:05	7:05	9:45
Dead Poets' Society	12:50	6:50	9:30
When Harry Met Sally	1:25	7:25	10:05
The Abyss	12:40	6:40	9:35
Lethal Weapon II	1:15	7:15	9:55
Turner and Hoosh	12:55	6:55	9:35
Ghostbusters II	12:45	6:45
See No Evil		8:50
Black Rain	1:10	7:10	9:50

Bronfman Auditorium

High Anxiety Friday & Sunday at 7:00 & 9:00

Subject to change after Thursday

Shearer to guide museum

by Michael Furlenito

As the Williams community embarks upon another year, a new dawn is revitalizing and changing the Williams College Museum of Art. This change has come in the form of Linda B. Shearer, the Museum's new director.

Shearer, who began her new position on July 1, took over from Thomas Krens, who was known for his emphasis upon the expansion and the national role of WCM.

Before coming to Williams, Shearer had been an active member of the New York City art world for twenty years, most recently working at the Museum of Modern Art.

Shearer said that her decision to come to Williams was influenced by lots of factors, both professional and personal. "It was time for a change," she said.

"My interest in this kind of a place has to do with the commercial emphasis that has been put on art... It's particularly appealing to be in a more intellectual and questioning environment," Shearer said. She added that she does not fault the larger institutions for their attention to fiscal necessities.

"The idea of a college museum has had a very particular appeal to me," Shearer said. "Professionally, I'm particularly interested in what a smaller institution can, in fact, accomplish."

"I'd really like to see the museum become an integral part of every student's experience of the campus," Shearer said. "I'm very interested in trying to come up with ways to generate interest in the museum in students who aren't interested normally."

Shearer said that another one of her goals is to maintain WCM's important role in the region and the nation. She said she sees great potential in the community and compared the role of the museum to that of the Convocation panel.

"I'd like to see the museum also become a forum in which kinds of conflicts and debates can be worked out and evolved in a different way," Shearer said that possibly her most difficult job is to preserve the dual role of WCM as both a college and a national museum.

Linda B. Shearer (shown above in a photograph by Roger Mapplethorpe) succeeded Thomas Krens as the director of WCM last summer.

"The challenge I feel is how to maintain the quite delicate balance between the intimate teaching museum that Williams' museum, at its very core, is, and a museum in the world today that has a much larger audience than just the college community."

According to Shearer, the new director of an art museum is often saddled with the necessity of hiring the physical plant up to par, a problem which does not exist at WCM.

"I feel enormously privileged that I can come and have this fabulous place," Shearer said. She added that she is excited to have this freedom to concentrate on other priorities, such as examining the collection and determining what the museum needs and where it should be headed.

As a member of the art community and as a specialist in contemporary art, Shearer said she is particularly worried by the recent attempts of government officials (such as Senator Jesse Helms) to dictate this process to museums. She said that she believes this will fall as the general public loses censorship. She added, however, that the issue is related to that of abortion and the growing conservatism of this country and will not simply disappear.

Shearer said that it is difficult to guide a museum in this volatile age of protest and boycotts in the art world. "You just pray to God that you make the right choice... It's very hard to recover from mistakes, and it's very easy to make mistakes."

Review: Steel Wheels lean, tough

by Christopher Lawrence

The Rolling Stones -- Steel Wheels (Columbia)

"Hold on to your head, hold on to your hat," snarls Mick Jagger halfway through the first side of the Stones' latest, Steel Wheels. It's a fair warning, though a little late -- by the time the lyrics roll around the listener has already been assaulted by what is certainly their best music since 1978's Some Girls.

Listen closely and it's almost possible to smell Keith's Marlboro.

The Eighties have not been kind to the Rolling Stones. Creative lethargy and advancing years have taken their toll while bickering between Jagger and songwriting partner Keith Richards has threatened to tear "The World's Greatest Rock N' Roll Band" apart. After 1986's lackluster Dynasty, it seemed as though the songwriting team that defined rock with anthems like

"Satisfaction," "Jumpin' Jack Flash," "Honky Tonk Women," and latter-day hits like "Beast of Burden" and "Start Me Up" might finally be finished. But old habits die hard and lured by what Richards called "the glory," as well as an unprecedented payoff, the Glittering Twins rallied the troops and headed for the West Indies to construct a comeback.

Steel Wheels is the result of a nearly maniac effort and, even on a first listen, it's clear that the Stones have paid a long overdue visit to the spiritual basement where "Exile on Main St." was born. At its best, the new album has the raw energy of that record. "Hold On To Your Hat" and "Sad Sad Sad" are the sounds of a hungry band.

Richards and guitarist Ron Wood dig in hard and come away with audible blood and guts. Listen closely and it's almost possible to smell Keith's Marlboro as he pumps rhythm into "Mixed Emotions" -- a single to match the classics.

But we've seen some of this stuff before. It's true. Steel Wheels is exceptionally inspired competence. While the scope and strength of that inspiration and the competence which creates great records is often staggering, it's a poor substitute for wholesale originality.

Steel Wheels is a great album, but it is not Rolling Stones. Where Jagger's renaissance, the new effort is more a consolidation of well-known strengths and a reminder of why the Stones were hailed as "World's Greatest" in the first place.

Jagger, Richards, and Co. have successfully, even brilliantly, recast their legend in a new mold. For a band with a quarter-century of musical baggage, that is no mean feat.

Like the ad says, "Oh yeah, there's this tour..." This fall the Rolling Stones are winging their way across North America, swaggering onto stadium stages with both a middle-aged sensibility and a renewed sense of purpose. Steel Wheels ensures that the exercise is more than nostalgic.

When Jagger says "I'm darker than a bat/I'm friendly as a bear/And tougher than a rat" you can believe him. Rock's "soul survivors" are hitting the road to support a lean, tough album. Steel Wheels confirms and sometimes even extends their myth.

INDIAN BLANKET
Camera Ready Resumes $50 for $17.00
Offset Printed in just a few hours
We do all types of printing
53 Main St.
North Adams, MA
663-3414

LOOKING FOR A BURIED TREASURE?

COME DISCOVER

ELYSIAN FIELDS

...a paradise in the Alley

featuring the LARGEST SELECTION OF JEWELRY IN THE AREA.

Additional items include silk scarves, hand-painted ties, mohair and wool sweaters, shawls and scarves, pleasure frames, chintz pillows, hair accessories and affordable antiques.

ELYSIAN FIELDS
Eph's Alley (next to the Record Store)
off Spring Street
Williamstown, MA (413) 458-4707
OPEN 7 DAYS Jon Urban & Elise Meer 83

MAIN ★ EVENT

RESTAURANT ★ BANQUETS ★ CATERING

ROUTE 2 WILLIAMSTOWN

FOR RESERVATIONS CALL 458-4208

COME WATCH THE GAME AT THE MAIN EVENT.

WHATEVER YOUR INTERESTS ARE, COME ENJOY THE GAME WITH US.

WE HAVE FIVE TELEVISIONS INCLUDING A LARGE SCREEN TV.

CONTESTS. PRIZES. DRINK SPECIALS. SPECIAL MENU

WE HAVE IT ALL.

NEED A MEETING PLACE? WE CAN HELP YOU OUT.

CALL 458-4208 FOR INFORMATION.

Kennedy willing to leave tailgates alone

"If you need ignorance to support your position, that's sad," Williams For Choice member Lisa Kaestner '91 said. "I'm not a poster."

WEDNESDAY at DRIS
12:00-1:30 pm

COLL LOUNGE

37 Spring Street
(413) 4

et, Williamstown, MA
8 . 2251

Compiled by Bridget McManus from the Berkshire Eagle

For more information call OCC at 597-2311.

Bring your books during our buyback hours:
12 - 6:00 PM
Mon. - Sat.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY®

and of course much more, including...
Ambassadors, Blue Min. Aris, Far Side Greeting cards,
Dozens of soft, furry creatures from Dakin, Applause and North American Bears. Great advice on matters large and small Courteous, almost professional service

MORSELS

Gourmet Take-Out • Bakery Catering

100 Water Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
(413) 458-2524

Open at 10 AM. Closed Monday

continued from page 12

much with a 15-9, third-set triumph. Headman said the team was ecstatic about their victory over Smith because the way the Ephwomens fell to the winners last year in a painful, 15-4, 15-10 loss. "We were excited to beat them because of the way they killed us last year," she said.

Tonight's match against Harvard, a Division I team whom the Ephwomens beat last year in a five-set match, and Thursday evening's matches against Connecticut College and Mount Holyoke have Hiedeman wondering if the squad can carry an untarnished record to the Bates Invitational next weekend.

"It looks like we could keep this up a little longer," she said. "The Bates Tournament will be tough because we will be playing teams we usually don't play during the season. If we perform well, it will help us in rankings."

INDIAN BLANKET

Special Offer Free Shipping $50.7595 And Offer $10.00 Buy One Get One Free
 Design Each One Person's Blanket By One
 Our Specialty Man And Girl's Blanket
 Reservation $10.00 Value For One $10.00
 Sanitation Covered The One Blanket
 Offered To The Public Issued by Indian Medicine Man And Girl's Blanket
 Urgent Needed by First Name Write One
 While Our: Drawing Card Reservation $10.00
 100, Madison, N. C. 28364

100% cotton in various styles;
stripes, checks, and
Bedford Cord.
Sizes 3 to 13.
Values to $42.00

NOW ONLY $29.95

Salvatore
42 Spring St.
Williamstown, Mass.
Monday-Saturday 9:30-6:30
Thursday 9:30-8:30

458-3621

- ✓ Programs in London, Bonn, Paris, Madrid & Brussels
- ✓ A wide range of placements – semester and summer
- ✓ Full academic credit – financial aid may be applicable
- ✓ Board and Lodging refund included in fee

The Study Abroad or International Programs Office on campus has full details, or contact:

Study Abroad Office, Lattimore 312,
University of Rochester, Rochester NY 14627 (716) 215-2354.

The Williams men's golf team competed this past weekend at the prestigious Duke Nelson Invitational hosted by Middlebury. Considered one of the "majors" of the fall season, the Invitational brought together an extraordinarily large field of 23 teams.

Division I Dartmouth won the tournament with a combined low score of 308. Play was limited to Sunday due to foul weather caused by Hurricane Hugo.

The Ephs placed a respectable seventh overall and third in Division III in this highly competitive field, tallying a score of 329.

Although the weather was still very windy at the beginning of play on Sunday, the team performed well under adverse conditions. Leading the squad, Sean Segun '91 finishing with an 80, which placed him 11th out of the field of 115 players.

"We thought we played well...most of the teams that beat us were Division I schools," Segun commented on the team's performance.

Other players who others also fared well, finishing 12th overall with an 81. Brothers commented on the poor conditions which marked the beginning of Sunday's play: "The fierce wind made play difficult for the first few holes. But as the morning continued, the wind stopped, and I was able to get into a pretty decent groove for the final 14 holes."

Contributing to the team's fine showing were Iao Lapey '90 and John McCormick '93, who both scored 88's. Unfortunately, Jeff Alexander '91, a steady player, was feeling ill, which may have adversely affected his performance.

"I just wasn't myself out there," he commented.

The team's next journey is tomorrow's Skidmore Invitational. With another respectable performance under its belt, the team confidently expects a finish among the top three.

IM Soccer Report

Team
 Maroon: 1W, 0L, 0T, 2P
 Royal Blue: 1W, 0L, 0T, 2P
 Gold: 1W, 0L, 0T, 2P
 Light Green: 1W, 0L, 1T, 3P
 Purple: 1W, 0L, 1T, 3P
 White: 1W, 1L, 0T, 2P
 Red: 0W, 0L, 1T, 1P
 Grey: 0W, 1L, 1T, 1P
 Black: 0W, 1L, 0T, 0P
 Dark Green: 0W, 1L, 0T, 0P
 Light Blue: 0W, 2L, 0T, 0P
 (W=wins, L=losses, T=ties, P=points)

Scenes from week one...

- Amy Bellevue '91 notching an assist on senior J.P. Parisien's winner in Purple's 1-0 triumph over Dark Green.
- Jonathan Lindley '92 rolling the winner into the net in the final seconds of Royal Blue's victory shorianded White.

SKIS X-C and Telemark	BICYCLES Mountain Bike Specialists	HIKING Boots, Bags, Tents

the Mountain Goat

Manchester Center
Vermont
(802) 382-5159

Open 7 Days

Water Street
Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-8445

SPIRIT SHOP

OF WILLIAMSTOWN

FREE DELIVERY

"YOUR PARTY STARTS HERE"
- MEGABUCKS
REDEMPTION CENTER

ONE OF THE LARGEST BEER

RETAILERS STOP BY AND SEE OUR MANY IN-STORE
CASE SPECIALS

OPEN MON THRU SAT
9AM-11PM

458-3704

280 COLE AV WILLIAMSTOWN

We also offer package and shipping services via UPS

How're you going to do it?

"My chem lab report is due Monday.
My English lit. paper is due Tuesday.
My economics paper is due on Wednesday.
And the big game's tomorrow."

PS/2 it!

Now, super savings on PS/2's.

Be ready for this semester with the IBM Personal System/2.® Choose from five complete packages of hardware and software—all at special low student prices. What's more, when you purchase a PS/2,® you can get the exciting new PRODIGY® service at less than half the retail price.* Strike while the prices are hot. Pick the PS/2 that's right for you.

	Model 25 8525-001	Model 30 286 8530-E21	Model 50 Z 8550-031	Model 55 SX 8555-061	Model 70 386 8570-E61
Memory	640Kb	1Mb	1Mb	2Mb	4Mb
Processor	8086 (8 MHz)	80286 (10 MHz)	80286 (10 MHz)	80386SX™ (16 MHz)	80386™ (16 MHz)
3.5" diskette drive	720Kb	1.44Mb	1.44Mb	1.44Mb	1.44Mb
Fixed disk drive	20Mb	20Mb	30Mb	60Mb	60Mb
Micro Channel™ architecture	—	—	Yes	Yes	Yes
Display	Monochrome	8513 Color	8513 Color	8513 Color	8513 Color
Mouse	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes
Software	DOS 4.0 Microsoft® Windows/286 hDC Windows Express™	DOS 4.0 Microsoft Windows/286 Word 5.0* hDC Windows Express hDC Windows Manager™ hDC Windows Color™	DOS 4.0 Microsoft Windows/286 Word 5.0* Excel* hDC Windows Express hDC Windows Manager hDC Windows Color	DOS 4.0 Microsoft Windows/386 Word 5.0* Excel* hDC Windows Express hDC Windows Manager hDC Windows Color	DOS 4.0 Microsoft Windows/386 Word 5.0* Excel* hDC Windows Express hDC Windows Manager hDC Windows Color
Price	$1,499	$2,299	$2,799	$3,499	$4,699

IBM Printers Proprinter™ III w/Cable (4201/003) $369
Proprinter X24E w/Cable (4207/002) $499
Proprinter XL24E w/Cable (4208/002) $669

*Microsoft Word and Excel are the Academic Editions. This offer is limited to qualified students, faculty and staff who order an IBM PS/2 Model 8525-001, 8530-E21, 8550-031, 8555-061 or 8570-E61 on or before October 31, 1989. Prices quoted do not include sales tax, handling and/or processing charges. Check with your institution regarding these charges. Orders are subject to availability. IBM may withdraw the promotion at any time without written notice.

IBM, Personal System/2 and PS/2 are registered trademarks, and Proprinter and Micro Channel are trademarks, of International Business Machines Corporation. Microsoft is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation. PRODIGY is a registered trademark of Prodigy Services Company, a partnership of IBM and Sears. hDC Windows Express, hDC Windows Manager and hDC Windows Color are trademarks of hDC Computer Corporation. 80386SX and 80386 are trademarks of Intel Corporation. © IBM Corp. 1989

Women's soccer splits pair of contests

by Kevin Greenberg

The women's soccer team came out of a drought in wet weather caused by Hurricane Hugo last Saturday afternoon.

The Ephs did not score a goal since the beginning of the season when they took on Smith Saturday at Cole Field. Their previous three games were all 1-0 losses. Williams almost broke out of its slump late in the first half when Audra Mazder '91 poked a shot past fallen Smith goalkeeper Leigh Serner, but the goal was called off. However, a successful attempt by Kelly Collins '90 with 2:34 remaining in the game downed the Pioneers.

Collins took a direct kick from just outside the penalty zone after Smith was called for tripping. Her shot ricocheted off the head of a Pioneer defender, she then one-kicked the ball past the goalie into the corner of the net.

Lost goal
"I'm glad we came out with the win. It would have been a heartbreaker to lose or tie that game after losing a goal," said coach Lisa Melendy, referring to Mazder's annulled goal.

The official said he called off the first goal because the Smith goalkeeper was injured on the play, although she was not touched by a Williams player.

Jeannette Owen '90 fights a Smithie opponent in last Saturday's game at Cole Field. The game broke a scoring drought for the Ephs, who won 1-0. (Belliveau)

The ball was played out of the corner towards the net, where Mazder, Serner, and a Smith defender converged on it. Mazder kicked the ball at the same time that Serner attempted to cover it up. The goalkeeper landed on the ball momentarily and then lost control of it. Mazder stepped back, then realizing that the play was not dead, kicked it into the net.

"We were both going for the ball at the same time. She fell on the ball and rolled off of it. I think I heard the ref say 'play on' and I kicked it in," said Mazder.

The referee signaled a goal but reversed his call after a heated discussion with both coaches and the two line men, saying that the keeper was injured. (Serner) fell on the ball and stayed there for a minute. The Williams player even backed off. Then the goalkeeper rolled off of the ball and the goal was scored," the official said. "There's a lot of equity in soccer — if the ball had ricocheted right off of her it would have been a goal, but it didn't."

continued on page 9

Rugbers face UVM, emerge with two wins

by Chris Blackburn

The WRFC played its first Division I match of the season in the cold rain and wind on Cole Field on Saturday and suffered a numbing 9-7 loss to UVM. Although they did not allow a try to be scored (indeed the entire club, through four matches, held UVM tryless), the White Dogs only managed one try and a penalty kick themselves.

In the first half, the wet ball and the changing UVM forwards kept Williams at bay. Sloppy mental play by the Williams side resulted in three penalties for UVM, all successfully converted. In the second period, with the wind at their backs and the UVM players tiring, the Williams line started to move.

The try came on a kick into the box by Steve Linnen '90, a bit too far for Phil Jack '90 — or was it? He scooped up the ball two meters out and fought off two defenders until three Williams forwards arrived to drive him into the try zone for the score. Despite being inside the UVM 22-meter line for nearly the entire second half, Williams had to settle for a penalty kick and the loss.

The B-side had already offset that loss, however, having beaten UVM 9-0 in the first match of the day. Stern defense by both sides was the order of the day, and the Williams line and scrum were unyielding, shutting down nearly everything UVM tried. Crafty play by scrumhalf prodigy Mike Iron '91, playing in his B-side debut, stopped many Vermont chances as they started, and second half by Higgins. The B-side forwards dominated play, driving over whatever Red "Red" Faye '90 didn't steal in the set serum, and rucking and mauling effectively as well.

Team future dominates
The C-side match, a well-played 8-0 victory, again displayed superior forward play for Williams against a larger side. Lock Ian Gallagher '92 drove at will on his opponents. The experienced line ran brilliantly, as John Hattjen '91 touched down a dramatic try. In the C's game, the club's youth corps tested its first true rugby and came away liking the experience with a 6-0 win. The young line ran and kicked like old hands against the Vermont rookies, exploiting the green fullback's poor positioning with effective deep kicks. The Ephs scored a beautiful try to break the 0-0 deadlock late in the second half, and the Williams rookies found themselves undefeated.

Next weekend the WRFC resumes the mantle of the roadshow, traveling up Route 91 to face bitter rival (and national powerhouse) Dartmouth in what is sure to be an extreme test for the club.

the club's youth corps tasted its first true rugby and came away liking the experience with a 6-0 win the sure foot of Jim Higgins '91 kept the UVM side pinned. Fullback O. Bedini '90 pounded in the only try of the match. The other score came on a lily-gilding drop-goal in the

Sports

Cycling rides to success at Schnectady Criterium

by Juan Alonzo

"It was a fun race even though conditions were terrible. It was a real challenge," commented John Seaman '91, captain of the Williams cycling team, referring to Saturday's Tour of Schenectady Criterium.

The twisting, veering circuit, temperatures in the 40s, and driving winds and rain challenged the cyclists to muster every bit of skill. The half-mile course covered six sharp turns, including a 180-degree turnaround.

"It was a very technical course. There were manholes at every turn. If a rear wheel went over one, the cyclist could very easily slip," said Josh Brumberg '92. The first riders to go off in the 50-lap Category three and four race were Seaman and Brumberg. With $2000 in prize money, the race offered the riders extra incentive to win. Placing second in lap 25, Seaman picked up $20. Although he rode fast and hard, Seaman ran into trouble in the end. In the penultimate lap, he tried to move up on turn number six. Due to the slick course, his rear tire went out and he skidded on the drenched road bed.

Down but not out
Showing grit and persistence, Seaman got back on his bike and was able to finish with the pack, which was traveling at speeds in excess of 26 mph. "Going into the last lap I was fifteen places back, and I wanted to be in the top five for the sprint."

"I accelerated hard into the corner and took it too fast and too tight. The next thing I knew I was on my butt, skidding. I'm not really disappointed with my fall. I had ridden a good race up until the end. I had to get in position to win. I had to take a chance."

The next group of riders to go off in the 10-lap Citizens race were Chris Sheridan '93, Kent Wosepka '92, and Mary Moule '91. Moule chose to ride in the men's race simply because it was more challenging.

"One of the race coordinators was asked if I wanted to race for a team that he's forming," Moule said. In the Citizens race, Wosepka led a strong effort, finishing seventh in a field of 25. Moule also finished well, in 16th, while Sheridan finished 17th.

With the postponement of the Mount Greylock race until October 15, the team will travel to Danbury, Connecticut next week for the Danbury Criterium.

Athlete of the Week

This week's Athlete of the Week is junior defensive end Ted Rogers, who played a major role in the football team's 16-6 victory over Hamilton. Rogers ran a blocked punt three yards for a first-quarter touchdown, and later downed the Continental quarterback for a safety, thereby singlehandedly accounting for half of the Ephmen's points. Rogers also pitched in a sack and six tackles in sparking Coach Farley's troops to a season-opening victory.

Sports Quiz

Win a $15 gift certificate from Goff's — enter the quiz

- 1) Ernie Banks couldn't do it. Phil Rizzuto couldn't do it. But one Oriole recently became the first shortstop in baseball history to dub at least 20 homers in eight consecutive seasons. Name him.
- 2) Rynce Sandberg recently popped his 30th dinger of the year to become the first second sacker in ten years to hit 30 homers in one season. Who was the last player to accomplish such a feat?
- 3) How many National League clubs have changed managers this season?
- 4) Name the last NFL team to participate in consecutive Super Bowls. Send your answers to Mariam Naficy at SU 1871 by Saturday. In case of a tie, the winner will be chosen in a random drawing.

MARK YOUR CALENDAR

-SKI SALE-

Mon., Oct. 2 thru Sat., Oct. 7
20 - 60 % OFF

GOFF'S SPORTS, INC.
15 Spring St.
458-3605

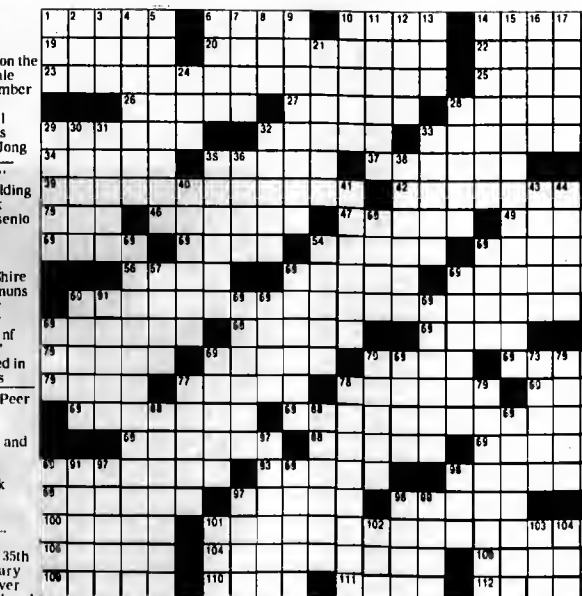

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

Sci-Fi - Fantasies

BY JOHN M. SAMSON/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

- ACROSS
- 1 Milady
 - 6 Author: Rivabella
 - 10 Epic
 - 14 Avow
 - 19 Berries
 - 20 Divergence
 - 32 Roo's mom
 - 33 Wells sequel to "Jude the Obscure"
 - 35 Garret
 - 36 Genet play, with "The Bribed"
 - 38 "Storm" novelist
 - 39 Winged fruit of the maple
 - 32 Planist Peterson
 - 33 Trilled like a grasshopper
 - 34 Old French coin
 - 14 Activity in which camels may be executed
 - 3 Alas, to Arndt
 - 3 Cutting tool
 - 4 Aesopian characters
 - 5 Minnie turrets
 - 6 "Amores" poet
 - 7 "Exodus" hero
 - 8 Part of a cell
 - 9 Roman burial stone
 - 10 Marksmen Prod
 - 11 "Veronica" Wells book
 - 35 Drawing rooms
 - 38 E. E. Smith cousin of "I Am a Camera?"
 - 42 Manhandle
 - 45 Bustle
 - 46 S. C. river
 - 47 Throw nut
 - 49 Holm or key
 - 51 Fissure
 - 53 Doggonet
 - 54 Sprightly
 - 55 Rose's enemy
 - 56 Sacred
 - 59 Hollondaise, e.g.
 - 59 Zealous
 - 60 Ende book that's hard to put down?
 - 65 Rabbits
 - 40 Scoops for soups
 - 41 Chilean poet
 - 43 End of n Poe title
 - 44 "Historia naturalis" author
 - 49 "Leon quered," to Caesar
 - 50 S. C. summer time
 - 53 Lem novel about Mike Tyson
 - 54 Danza's "Taxi" role
 - 55 "Thru" lady?
 - 57 Wrennet in "ner"
 - 59 Sonnet unit
 - 59 Pustulate
 - 99 Danube tributary
 - 97 Marilyn who was Carmen
 - 83 Walking on the Rue Royale
 - 85 Of the number six
 - 70 Beau Brummell
 - 72 Lille's department
 - 78 Slove or Slovak
 - 77 John Ridd's Lorna
 - 78 Cable company
 - 80 Resort of SW France
 - 81 Idle hours
 - 83 Tolkien book
 - 84 Bedouins
 - 88 N. Y. city
 - 90 King in "Peer Gynt"
 - 61 Dike, Eumonia and
 - 62 Parroted
 - 63 Hold back
 - 64 Judge, in Judges
 - 65 Same A. L. batters
 - 69 Gift for a 35th anniversary
 - 70 Fussled over
 - 71 Meat packers' union
 - 73 "Werther," for one
 - 74 Less manifold
 - 75 Rhodes of Polo Grounds fame
 - 77 "La Dame aux camelias" playwright
 - 96 Country in Netwiser
 - 91 Rice field
 - 93 Lyrical poem
 - 84 Embodiment of love
 - 85 — Dhya, U.S.R. river
 - 97 Author: Wortman
 - 98 Vientiane locale
 - 98 "Cumus" composer
 - 101 Marcean character
 - 103 Nashville col
 - 103 U.N. agency
 - 104 Veto
 - 105 Author: Talese

SEE ANSWER ON PAGE 9

Women harriers first, men fourth at Williams Invitational

by Heather Smith

Last Saturday the rain poured, the wind blew, and the temperature dropped, yet the Williams cross-country teams once again turned in remarkable performances at the Williams Invitational, held at Mount Hope Farm. The women's team, led by Anne Platt '91, trampled its opponents to win with 30 points. Smith, the second place team, was substantially behind with 73 points. The men's varsity team also showed its strength by placing fourth in a field of nineteen teams.

The start of the women's race was at 1:00 PM after both the men's freshman race and the men's varsity race had run the muddy course. The conditions at the women's start were therefore particularly treacherous.

Platt, Cherie Macauley '92, Molly Martin '92, and Lindsey Hall '93 formed a solid lead pack for Williams in the beginning of the race. Platt placed second out of the over 180 runners in the race, finishing the 3.1-mile course in 19:45. Macauley, in excellent form, placed third for the Ephs. Only moments behind her were Martin, sixth, Hall, eighth, and Helene Wilburn '93 in ninth place. Even before the points were tallied, it was clear that Williams was the dominating team.

"Our top five [runners] were in the top 10 [overall], and our top 14 were in the top 50 -- [the Invitational] showed the depth of our team, which is our strong point," commented Eph runner Katie Quency '92.

The men's varsity squad also competed on a newly mapped course at Mount Hope this weekend. Mud-covered Mark Beitz '91 led the Ephmen over the 5-mile, hilly course to place third in 27:27. Captain Dale Johnson '90 followed, placing 13th for his team in 27:54. Brian Coan '92 placed 26th while Nate McVey-Finney '90 and Sam Coffin '91 wrapped up the scoring to earn Williams 154 points.

Testing their speed and endurance against other freshmen, the Williams men from the class of 1993 opened up Saturday's competitions at Mt. Hope. The freshman race covered the same 3.1-mile course as the women. Tony Werner '93 earned top honors completing the course in 17:08. Luke Shulenburg '93 was close behind, racing to his third-place finish in 17:24. Greg Bicer '93, Seth McClennan '93, and Mark Mayall '93 crossed the line in seventh, eighth, and ninth places respectively. The Williams freshman beat out their competition to win the race with 30 points.

The Williams Invitational was the first and last home cross-country meet this season; the Ephs travel to NYU next weekend for the NYU Invitational, the first in a long stretch of away meets.

Eph harrier Anne Platt '91 cruises toward the finish line in last weekend's Williams Invitational. Platt placed second out of over 180 runners, leading the women's team to first place. The men's team finished fourth overall, out of 19 teams. (Thomas)

A-side rugby Sal Vaul '91 breaks for a long run in fine form during last weekend's game against UVM. While the A-side lost 9-7, the B- and C-sides both won their matches. See story on page 11. (Marcus)

The beat goes on: football drubs Hamilton 16-6 in season opener

by Kerr Houston

There came a soldier marching down the high road... He had his knapsack on his back and his sword at his side as he came home from the wars.

— Hans Christian Anderson, "The Tin Soldier"

To get to Clinton, N.Y. from Williamstown, you take Route 2 west toward Troy, jump on Route 90 near Albany, and then head towards Ulster on the New York Thruway. In all it's about a three-hour drive, but those three hours can seem a good deal longer on a cold, wet afternoon, especially if you've just found yourself on the losing end of a football score.

Fortunately for the Williams gridiron squad, the miles passed by pretty quickly as they returned from Saturday's contest in Hamilton, a fact that was doubtless due to the squad's 16-6 dismantling of the rival Hamilton Continentals. With the triumph, the Ephmen kicked off their most recent campaign on a strong note, in the process extending a six-game winning streak and sending notice to the rest of New England that Coach Dick Farley's troops must once more be regarded as one of the premier teams in the area.

Tough conditions

Saturday's clash was governed in many ways by the awkward weather conditions, which included a light drizzle, muddy fields, and freezing winds. Farley, noting that the field "was in atrocious condition," maintained that "the weather conditions were such that [the game] was bound to be a defensive struggle."

And a defensive struggle it was, as the Williams offense, playing its first game with Dan Dwyer '92 behind the center, could muster only 182 yards in adhering to a conservative running attack, while the Continentals were held to a lethargic 151 total yards.

The teams spent most of the first quarter getting a feel for each other and for the inclement weather, until Dwyer scored his first varsity touchdown on a four-yard option run with just over four minutes to play in the first stanza. Although the extra point sailed wide, defensive end Ted Rogers '91, playing perhaps the game of his career, soon added to the Eph bulge when he blocked a punt and jogged the pigskin into the end zone. Moments later, Dwyer nailed junior tight end Rick Bates for the two-point conversion, and Williams led 14-0.

After a scoreless second quarter, Hamilton finally lit up their half of the scoreboard, as Nate O'Steen booted a 34-yard field goal. The score gave the chilled fans at Steuben Field a little something to cheer about, and also brought an end to Williams' streak of 19 consecutive scoreless quarters. Minutes later, a second O'Steen kick cut the margin to eight, but the Ephmen then firmly grasped the reins, refusing to yield the big play.

In fact, it was Rogers who submitted the final points of the afternoon. After the Continentals held tight on a fourth-down, goal-line stand and thus assumed control on their own one-yard line, Rogers stormed through the Hamilton line and dumped quarterback Kieran Clark in the end zone for a safety and a ten-point cushion. Rogers' safety proved to be the end of the scoring, as the Ephmen used good field position and the running of Jerry Procanik '92, who ended the day with a solid 53 yards, to wind down the clock and seal the win.

"I was happy overall with our play," noted Coach Farley, "although I'm still not sure where we stand. We had some question marks that still remain question marks after today due to the weather." Coach Farley also maintained that the sloppy field conditions turned the game into one that magnified mistakes.

"We didn't make the big boo-boo to speak of," he observed. Maybe we just got the breaks, but we didn't do anything stupid today."

Finally, Farley expressed satisfaction with the work of his younger players, some of whom stepped onto the field to assume important spots. "I was happy with the play of the younger kids," he said.

Dwyer, for example, played consistently in the mud, although he admitted that "I was as nervous as hell the whole week. I really didn't know what to expect." Procanik also turned in a steady performance, and Lindsey Vaughan '92 appeared comfortable in the punter's uniform.

The Ephs will not have long to rest on their laurels, however, as they hit the practice fields this week with their eyes on Saturday's matchup against Tufts, who run out of the rather unfamiliar wishbone formation. Farley stated that the Eph defensive corps will attempt to ready themselves for the Jumbo bone, although he noted that "it is almost impossible for us to simulate in practice." Regardless, the Ephmen have already made their first step of the year a positive one, and, as Farley observed, "it'll obviously be a little nicer in practice this week, and around my house, since my wife and kids won't have to listen to me cuss all day."

Women's tennis downs three teams, takes record to 4-1

by Dan Silverman

Williams women's tennis swept through a killer schedule this week and upped their record to 4-1, earning wins over Connecticut College, Vassar and Smith by scores of 7-2, 6-3 and 5-4 respectively. Each match was won by Williams' superior consistency and mental toughness.

The week finished Saturday with the Ephs sneaking past Smith 5-4, a victory determined by the final match of the day. This was an important match in Williams' plans for a successful season.

"We knew it would be close but we hoped we'd have an easier time than we did," Eph coach Gail Ramsay said.

The Williams squad traded wins with Smith in the singles play, scoring victories in the second, third and sixth seeds. Penny Foss '93 and Kristin Daley '93 were impressive in their second and sixth seed wins, taking their opponents 6-0, 6-4 and 6-2, 6-0 respectively. Both had to contend with Smith players whose strategy was described by their coach, Chuck Johnson, as "the bore-you-to-death technique." Smith's looping topspin shots were not nearly enough, however, to combat the consistent strokes of Foss and Daley.

Down to the wire

After singles and the second and third seeded doubles matches the score was tied at 4-4. The Ephs number-one doubles team of Amy Davidson '90 and Beth Laxson '91 faced a Smith pair including Bollettieri-trained Jen Beindorf who had defeated Davidson in singles earlier.

Davidson proved to be too tough mentally for the Smith women. Rising above her previous loss and an LSAI-filled morning she played a superior game and inspired fantastic play from Laxson. The Williams pair showed amazing doubles team play and won a three-set thriller 6-2, 3-6, 6-4.

The Vassar match on Wednesday was a much easier victory for the Ephs, who won 6-3. Assistant coach Ed Grees said, "We expected Vassar to be tough but we played them very well." The match pivoted on the consistent and concentrated play of Daley and Lisa Brayton '91, who both won their singles matches and topped a tough Vassar team at third seeded doubles 7-5, 7-5.

Camels no problem

The Ephwomen proved too talented up and down the ranks for the Connecticut College Camels and won that match 7-2 on Sunday. The only hump disturbing Williams was Camel number one singles player Sarah Hurst, who won both her singles and doubles matches. The Ephs are hopeful that their tenacity will continue to lead them to success next week when they hit the road against Mount Holyoke and Wesleyan.

Volleyball undefeated at 6-0; torches Hamilton 15-9, 15-4, Skidmore 15-5, 15-3

by Rhonda Goodman

The women's volleyball team pocketed two more wins last week, rolling over Hamilton 15-9, 15-4 and Skidmore 15-5, 15-3, and in the process raising their record to an unblemished 6-0.

Holly Hedeman '92 led the team with six kills and three aces, while Katherine McConnell '91 pitched in with five kills in the first match against Hamilton. Hedeman and McConnell continued to dominate in the Skidmore match, as the sophomore notched seven kills and five aces, and the junior contributed four kills and one ace.

Coach Roberts said that although Hedeman and McConnell led the way statistically, no one person carried the team. "One person picks up the slack where someone else slips off," Roberts

"[Hamilton and Skidmore] weren't too challenging. It was a letdown after Tuesday" said. Hedeman said neither team was competitive compared to Amherst and

Smith, who on Tuesday had given the Ephwomen all the team could handle. "If Hamilton and Skidmore weren't too challenging," she said. "It was a team effort, but it was a letdown after Tuesday."

Indeed, Tuesday's matches had provided enough fireworks to make any subsequent match seem a bit of a letdown. After beating archrival Amherst 15-10, 15-8, the team jumped out to a quick lead in taking the first set from Smith 17-15. The squad seemed to lose, as they wound up on the team end of a 14-16 score, only to regain it to pull out the

continued on page 9

Field hockey opens season, crushing Vassar 9-0, Smith

by Kevin Greenberg

The field hockey team, defending NESCAC champions, continued its winning ways last week with triumphs over Vassar and Smith, its first opponents of the '89 season.

The Ephs opened the regular season last Wednesday with a 9-0 blowout over Vassar at Cole Field. Williams outshot the opposition 35-1 on the way to an easy victory. Co-captain Mo Flaherty '90 led the way with three goals and Alex Hyde '93 tallied two more. Also scoring were Ashley Edgar '92, Amy Honigfeld '91, Amy Kershaw '90, and Co-captain Beth McNulty '90.

"It was a combination of Vassar not being too strong and everything going perfectly for us," McNulty said, explaining the team's success.

The nine goals were a good sign for the team, according to Flaherty.

"We had a hard time scoring last year so when we beat them 9-0 it was very exciting," she said.

"I wouldn't really say we had a scoring problem last year, it's just that field hockey is a low scoring game," said Coach Chris Mason. "But if the team is trying to make a low scoring game into a high scoring game, that's fine with me."

But the scoring trend did not continue into Williams' game against Smith on Saturday. In the torrential rain the Ephs scored two early goals and hung on to knock off the Pioneers 2-1.

Honigfeld opened the scoring against Smith when she flicked in a ball that had rebounded off of the goalie's pads about seven minutes into the game.

Shortly thereafter McNulty scored when Flaherty got a free hit to her at the top of the circle. McNulty one-timed the ball past the Smith goaltender.

Williams held on to that 2-0 lead until Smith scored with about 10 minutes left in the first half. "They bombarded us at the end of the first half but we held them off," said McNulty.

Neither team scored in the second half. "Smith pretty much dominated it. Our defense was strong and aggressive and fought them off until the last five minutes of the game when we kept the ball in their end," Flaherty said.

The Ephs face Mount Holyoke today and Little Three rival Wesleyan next Saturday, both away games.

An Ephwoman battles her Vassar opponent in last Wednesday's game at Cole Field. Williams won 9-0, outshooting their opponents 35-1. (Bellevue)

School struggles with booze rules

by Evan Preisser

"The college expects students to observe the Massachusetts law which prohibits the consumption of alcoholic beverages by persons under 21 years of age..." policies on alcohol, from the Williams College Student Handbook. "[Alcohol] is always very accessible, thank God." — Jay Venkatesan '93

Along with the adjustments freshmen make every year, the class of 1993 has had another change awaiting their arrival: a new alcohol policy. Instituted in January by the college, the new regulations are designed to decrease the amount of freshmen drinking by altering the type and location of freshmen parties.

Over the past few years, the college has been restricting the size and type of parties on campus for all classes. The class of 1990 can remember when, as prospective, they attended 25 keg campus-wide parties. During the '87-'88 school year, however, a maximum limit of eight kegs was set for parties.

Freshmen in particular have been affected by recent changes in the alcohol policy. Before the latest changes, any freshman dorm found with a keg was fined $50, paid equally by each entry member. With the new policy, the Junior Advisors rather than the entry are fined $50. And with each additional entry party discovered, the fine goes up $25. Fined parties in March or April, the college could conceivably cost J.A.s several hundred dollars.

"I see it as a necessity to provide an insurance buffer for Williams," Steve Martin '91, president of the J.A.s, said. He added that the policy changes have had an effect: "J.A.s seem to be buying less alcohol for their parties than before."

Kristen Trost '90, president of Dodd House, also saw the policy as an effort to reduce the college's liability. "The college is kind of scrambling to cut alcohol use by freshmen and encourage alcohol awareness. We are not heading toward a dry campus, but should an accident happen because of the regulation's laxity the school could be sued."

Liabilities
Dean of Freshmen William Darrow said, "Obviously, the rules started tightening up when the drinking age went up and the threat of liabilities increased. Our primary goal is an educational policy which will accomplish three things: one, provide safe contexts for students who consider drinking; two, give force to the student majority who think that drinking couples too large a focus; three, to do what we can for the students who have an alcohol dependency."

Students have differing opinions as to how serious the college intends to enforce the new policy. Jennifer Galbraith '93 said, "Officially they try to follow the policy, but they really don't want to be that harsh on students." Mike Cole '91, president of Agard House, agreed: "The school is trying to keep as laissez-faire an attitude as possible."

Martin had a different opinion. "I don't think that the college is merely posturing with this policy. They are serious and committed to it." Other students agree, citing occasions where security officers have investigated freshmen parties which had loud music and groups of

continued on page 4

As director of the new Multicultural Center, Nura Dualeh '85 will coordinate the activities of many campus groups that will use the Jenness House building for meetings. (Sabin)

Dualeh sees mission for new center

by Justin Smith

Imagine being born in West Germany, growing up in Egypt, Yemen, England, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, and subsequently attending college in the United States. That is exactly the kind of multicultural experience that Nura Dualeh '85 will bring to Williams as director of the newly-created Multicultural Center, located in Jenness House.

"My own background is a multicultural one. I grew up in many, many different cultures, so in my personal life I've always been comfortable dealing with all kinds of different people. Cross-cultural exchange and the ability to get people talking to each other is something that I can bring to the position," Dualeh said. "I think knowing Williams College helps." Dualeh added, "As a foreign student, and also as a black student here, I bring a lot of, I think, understanding of what that process was like," she added.

After graduating from Williams in 1985, Dualeh, who majored in political science with a concentration in African relief studies, worked in Washington D.C. as a researcher for the American

Middle East Educational and Training Services. She later worked for the Rockefeller Foundation in New York.

According to Dualeh, the mission of the Multicultural Center is manifold. "The mandate is broad. The mandate is to promote cross-cultural exchange," Dualeh said. Principally, the purpose of the center is to provide support to minority and foreign student groups and to help educate the community on multicultural issues. Dualeh will help student groups coordinate and schedule events and make suggestions for planning and funding such activities.

The center currently affords office space for ASIA, the Black Student Union, Vista and the International Club. "The four organizations will have an office each, there is a lounge room that is common space, and there is a reading room or study room," Dualeh said. Audio-visual equipment should soon be available. "What we plan to do is provide the center with a television and VCR," she said.

The center also includes classroom

continued on page 5

Art makes study of hairy honeysuckle

by P.E. Ponce

If you're looking for a modern version of the David-and-Goliath battle, few things would fit as well as the recent war between Williams College and the hairy honeysuckle.

As part of the bargain to keep the Pine Cobble subdivision proceeding apace without too much town opposition, the college agreed to have Professor of Biology Henry Art study the plant.

Few people could be better for the job. The Biology Department chairman is, above all, an ecologist and his concern for the environment has shown itself throughout his career.

Art grew up in suburban Chicago. He began his undergraduate education at Dartmouth College as a pre-medical student. After two years, however, he realized that his interests lay in ecology and botany. After graduating from Dartmouth, he attended Yale University, where he received a doctorate degree in Forest Ecology. He joined the Williams faculty in 1971.

The research for his dissertation culminated in a book concerning the ecology of the Sunken Forest, a coastline forest located on Fire Island, New York. Art found that, contrary to popular belief, "nutrients introduced to the environment through meteorological events such as rain and sea spray actually had a beneficial impact on the [Sunken Forest] ecosystem."

Art's most recent published works ("A Garden of Wildflowers" and "The Wildflower Gardener's Guide") concern growing wildflowers not only from an aesthetic standpoint but from an ecological one as well. He is presently working on an entire series of books devoted to this subject.

His ecological last year was centered on the study of ecological history in

Professor of Biology Henry Art poses with "the plant that brought down a college," the hairy honeysuckle. Art is studying the endangered plant, which has repeatedly held up the college's Pine Cobble development. (Sabin)

Cambridge, England. Working with well-known ecological historian Oliver Rackham, Art found an entirely new way of looking at nature. "The largest change in my attitude and outlook came from the realization of a different perspective."

"Ecologists in North America are looking at pristine natural environments that haven't been touched by humans. [In England] the term 'natural' includes humans; [the forests] have been used for many millennia, since the Stone Age. There is no such thing as a virgin forest over there. You just accept human uses of the landscape, a stimulating concept to grab onto."

"If you look at Hopkins Forest, [humans] played a definite role in it, although it is more difficult for ecologists to analyze this. I found being over there was quite beneficial in gaining a greater appreciation of the integral role of human acts in maintaining the biological landscape."

Perhaps his most well-known work at Williams College centered around the hairy honeysuckle and the Pine Cobble development controversy. Last year, development of some 212 acres of this land for faculty housing was held up because of concern about the effects to the hairy honeysuckle population. While by no means rare, the plant's density in the Pine Cobble area was found to be the highest for the entire state.

Art said, "We are on the edge of a range of a species that can't be considered, in global sense to be endangered, [however], one has to make a stand when it comes to preservation of a species so that the range doesn't become restricted over time."

"There's [also] a pressing argument that can be made in Berkshire County, since this is where it was originally found and described in scientific terms."

Tests of the area
Since the controversy began, Art and his colleagues have done many tests, concerning the environmental significance of the honeysuckle, involving soil samples, drainage, and transplanting. He was also instrumental in working out a compromise concerning the development in a meeting with the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs in Boston.

"It came about because the state had waived the college's obligation to do an environmental assessment. [Meanwhile] the Massachusetts National Heritage Program was informed and an agreement had to be reached," he said.

"The agreement allowed road construction and preliminary development of a suitably sized habitat was preserved for at least five years," Art added. "The natural life of the species could then be studied in detail. The college set aside seven plots and salvaged existing patches if they were in the road alignment."

continued on page 10

Williams encounters numerous problems with Pine Cobble plan

by Damon Hemmerdinger

Unusually heavy spring rains have led to an outpouring of problems with the college's Pine Cobble faculty housing development. The slumping of a 400-foot section of land on the subdivision's upper slope has heightened fears of widespread landslides and erosion resulting from the 70-lot development.

In late August, as construction crews cut into the slope to build the 50-foot road which is to weave through the development, large amounts of water bled out of the hillside. Almost immediately, a portion of the slope began to sink. Current measurements indicate the ground has sunk seven to nine feet.

"It's still moving. Slowly, we hope, but probably a few inches a day," Assistant Professor of Geology David Dethier said. "You could have guessed that there'd be slides somewhere because of how deep the cuts are and how steep the slopes are. You hope the college was prepared."

Since the slide, efforts on site have focused on stabilizing the slope. Geotechnical engineers from the construction firm of Goldberg, Zolno and Associates have made borings to determine how to prevent further sinking.

Building a trench
"They've come up with a solution," Assistant Director of Buildings and Grounds Antonio Janairo said. "We will install nine finger drains which go down the face of the slope. If this is not enough, we will install an interceptor trench across the top of the slope."

Problems such as this arise in most hillside construction jobs, Janairo said. "It's fair to say that this project receives a lot of publicity, and its many problems are generally no different than what another developer in another hillside location would encounter."

"Because it's so big and because it's Williams College, it's in the public eye," Dethier said. "Every time something sneezes on Pine Cobble, the community knows. The college is operating in this weird light."

This latest problem capped a host of concerns after an unusually wet spring created more runoff difficulties than anticipated. The muddy water was flowing directly into a nearby wetlands area, posing a deadly danger to the plants there. Such areas are protected under Massachusetts law.

In June, an ecologist was called in to determine what should be done next. He

continued on page 10

Ground was broken last week on the new Jewish Center. Associate Chaplain Rabbi Alan Berg, Professor of Chemistry Lawrence Kaplan, Chad Asarch '91 and Jennifer Eisenberg '90 get things going at the construction site on Boston Court. The $1 million center is to be ready by next fall. (Thomas)

College increases
Dartmouth College
Playhouse

Williams College
Playhouse

Williams College
Playhouse

The Williams Record

Deans should end their silence

